He was lucky at cards and lucky in love as well.

Feature These Players: Mr. Kerrigan as Jimmy.
Lois Wilson as the gambler's daughter.

Stunt Suggestions: Place a pack of playing cards at the foot of a card lettered, "The turn of a card might have cost him his fortune. Instead he won the gambler's money and his beautiful summer home. In the end he won the gambler's daughter, but not on The Turn of a Card. See J. Warren Kerrigan in his second big Paralta production at (house and date). It will keep you guessing. It will keep you entertained." Decorate the lobby with playing cards. Place a pack of cards on a table, each having a brief "fortune" written on it. Use a card, "Jimmy Farrell won a house, a fortune and a wife on The Turn of a Card. Turn the cards and see what your fortune is."

Advertising Aids: Two designs each one and three-sheets. One six-sheet. Thumbnail and one to three-column cuts in electro or mats. Press book.
Released Feb. 15.

"THE SONG OF THE SOUL."

Vitagraph Presents Alice Joyce in the Five-Part Blue Ribbon Feature by Shannon Fife Telling of a Woman's Regained Happiness.

Cast.

Ann Fenton.....Alice Joyce
Fenton .....Percy Standing
Dr. Evans.....Walter McGrail
Olsen .....Bernard Siegel
Butch .....Barney Randall
Ruth .....Edith Reeves
Billy .....Stephen Carr

Directed by Tom Terriss.

The Story: Young, innocent, confiding, it is a shock to Ann Fenton to learn that her supposed husband is not a business man, but a gambler, and that her marriage is bigamous. The child is taken from her by a Helping Hand Society and apprenticed to a brutal farmer. She is left upon her own resources. Seven years later Fenton again crosses her path, but she finds happiness in honorable marriage while her betrayer is taken away to face a murder charge, and the Song of the Soul now rises in full, pure tones from the breast of the happy wife and mother.
For the Program: An unwise marriage that led eventually to happiness.
The song of the soul is the song of clean love.
Advertising Phrases: Young bride is shocked to find her husband a gambler and a bigamist.
Sent child into slavery because his father was a bigamist.
Feature These Players: Alice Joyce as Ann.
Percy Standing as the gambler.
Walter McGrail as the doctor.
Stunt Suggestions: The story does not suggest easy stunts. Work with the window cards. Have small throwaway cards printed up, "Learn to sing The Song of the Soul. It brings success and happiness. You can learn it at (house and date). Alice Joyce will teach you." Decorate the lobby frame of stills with cards and chips and use a card, "She thought her husband was a business man until the police told her he was a gambler and a bigamist."
Advertising Aids: One design each one, three and six-sheets. Window cards. Lobby displays, 11x14 and 22x28. Heralds. Slide. Plan book. Press sheet.
Released March 4.

MUTUAL WEEKLY.

ISSUE NO. 8 (Feb. 18).

Chicago, Ill.—Hands up! Buy a War Savings Stamp.

San Francisco, Cal.—A crack troop of Uncle Sam's cavalry in action. True to tradition, cavalry regiments distinguished themselves in the recent drive of Col. Byng at Cambrai.

Cincinnati, O.—Ice jams and flood conditions cause havoc along the Ohio river. Steamers and barges carried away when ice breaks.

San Francisco, Cal.—"Parlez vous Francais?" Y. M. C. A. instructors are teaching our boys the French language.

Boston, Mass.—Fighting the coal shortage. Hotel guests start wood sawing class. Subtitle: At New Orleans scrap wood is given to children of the poor.

Yountsville, Cal.—Heroes of other wars closely follow events in the great war of today. "We would fight again if Wilson wants us," say the old veterans. Subtitle: The arrival of The Bulletin is the big event of the day.

Brockton, Mass.—A municipal fish pond. Workless Mondays bring out shoe operatives to angle for pickerel.

San Francisco, Cal.—Twin Peaks tunnel is open to traffic. Mayor Rolph acts as motorman on first official run of city-owned car line.

Junction City, Kansas.—School children exert power to secure new school building. They win $100,000 from city fathers.

El Monte, Cal.—From farmer to consumer in two hours. What Uncle Sam can do if he wants to.

Off the Irish Coast.—U-boat sinks steamship "Tuscania" loaded with American troops. Nearly all saved on account of calm sea and nearness to land.

The war in Morocco. Regiments of engineers are building roads to connect eastern and western Morocco. Subtitle: Gen. Lyantey, resident general, reviews the troops.

RAMBLES 'ROUND FILMTOWN

WITH WALTER K. HILL

Is intended to become a department of general interest, NOT locally restricted. Exhibitors, Press Agents, Players, Directors—EVERYBODY—will find their contributions welcomed—and printed.

Educate Your Audience to Help Fight Censorship

Introducing a bill providing for the Censorship of Moving Pictures is a favorite indoor pastime in legislative halls throughout the country. Eternal vigilance is the price of the Exhibitor's mere safety if not his success.

Presented in the proper manner, the Censorship of Moving Pictures is just as obnoxious to the Exhibitor's audiences as it is to the Exhibitor. And public opinion aroused in behalf of moving pictures and against their unfair and discriminatory control is the surest weapon to defeat Censorship.

The Management of this Theatre desires the co-operation of its patrons in providing good
clean entertainment.
We want no "legalized" censorship of moving pictures

We have prepared a series of nine different stereopticon slides which crystallize the argument against Censorship; one of the slides is shown herewith.

These slides shown repeatedly in any theatre cannot fail to influence public opinion in that locality against Censorship. They will line up the general public on the side of the Exhibitor.

You Ought to Be Showing Them Now! Legislatures Everywhere Are Convening

Set of Nine Slides, carefully packed, will be sent postpaid on receipt of $1.00

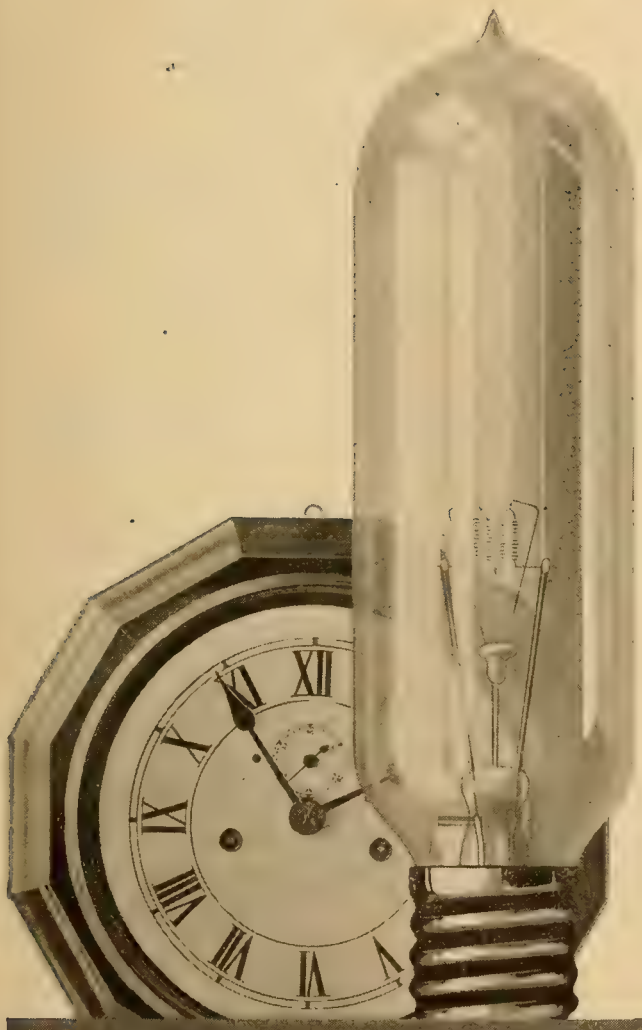
No Adjustments—Save Time

Nothing to Watch but the Film



You know what it means in the booth to have "no adjustments" to make—an end to all the fussing and regulating of sputtering carbons! It means an operator with time to watch the film. It means a reasonable booth temperature and other conditions right, so the operator can operate!

NATIONAL MAZDA projector lamps not only require no attention after they are once focused, but they do away with flickering light. They improve the pictures! They dispense with the breaking of carbon-jaws and lenses.

And they save current!

They save TWO-THIRDS of the current. They effect so great an economy that within a few months they entirely repay the cost of rebuilding your apparatus. Exhibitors who want to save trouble—who want to please their audiences with better pictures—or who want to make more net profit—will get in touch at once with their nearest supply house—or Nela Specialties Division, National Lamp Works of General Electric Co., 104 Nela Park, Cleveland, Ohio.

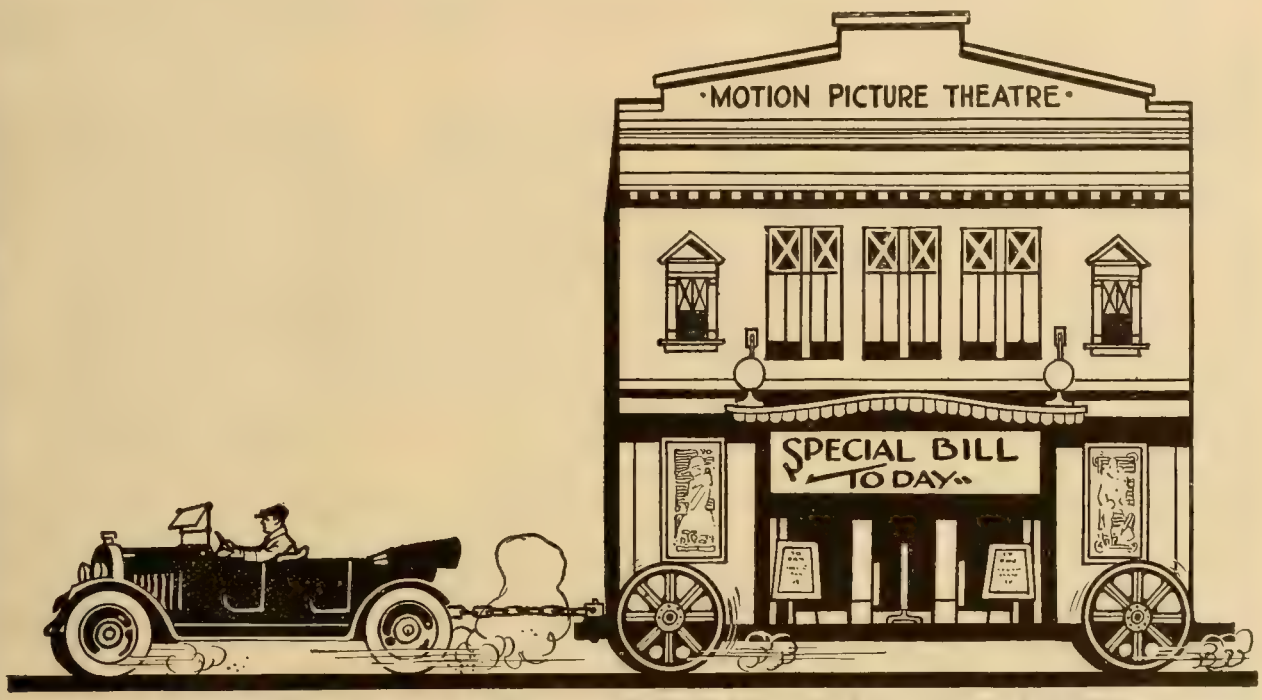
Simplex



IF YOUR HOUSE WERE ON WHEELS YOU COULD GET A NEW AUDIENCE EVERY DAY

But—it is NOT!

Consequently, it's up to you to put on a show that makes repeaters.

Good subjects alone won't do that. Imperfect projection will shake the drawing power out of the best pictures.

So don't go half-way. Don't be like the restaurant man who served excellent food in dirty dishes.

He wondered why people didn't come back.

Now apply that to your own business and serve your good pictures the Simplex way.

The House with the eye-delighting Simplex-projected pictures needs no wheels

Foreign Buyers

This old and well established concern, wishing to extend facilities to the foreign buyers in their relations with American Film Producers, has recently opened a special department for the purchasing and exporting of Moving Picture Films. Through this special department it will be possible for you, on a very reasonable basis, to purchase your films and other articles in the moving picture line to much better advantage than could be done directly by yourself.

For this very complete service, backed by our thorough knowledge of American conditions, you pay us only a commission.

Saving Owing to the fact that our purchases are very large, we can give to you the benefit of the lowest prices. We are holding out no profit for ourselves on the purchase prices, whatever we save is for our customers.

Satisfaction Our main object is to satisfy our customers in every possible way, not only to be able to save money for him, but to buy the best the market affords; and keep him posted regularly as to what is going on in the film industry as regards new productions.

Shipments In connection with the film department you will also have the advantages of our well operated shipping department, thus you are assured of the careful and proper handling of all goods, which means for you Prompt Delivery.

Confidence You will deal with a concern with unquestionable financial standing.

Commercial
Motion Picture Laboratories
CULVER CITY, CAL,

Best in the World

In addition to having the largest and most completely equipped laboratory on the coast, we now have the exclusive use of the marvelous Handschiegl Color Process which is installed in our plant.

A demonstration of this color work will convince any producer that no really large production is complete without it.

By this process we place from one to four colors in the film, lightening up different parts of the sets in the color required.

The effect on the screen is truly startling.

Inasmuch as our capacity in this class of work is limited, it will pay you to get in touch with us immediately.

Conservation and Economy in Alternating Current Projection

The trend of times has produced the watchwords—conservation and economy. To the wide-awake exhibitor and operator these watchwords suggest the use of

WHITE A. C. SPECIAL CARBONS

These carbons improve the quality of the light, give a perfectly steady light, reduce the power costs, and reduce to a minimum the eye fatigue of the audience. The change from the old A. C. carbons to the White A. C. Specials requires no change in equipment, no extra wiring and no addition or replacement of lamp house, lenses, or screens.

FOR DIRECT CURRENT PROJECTION

Obtain the maximum economy by trimming your lamp with the

SILVERTIP NEGATIVE CARBON

(Attention Mr. Hibbard)

Dear Sir:

I am sending you a picture of a portion of my booth, as I promised to do when you were here a long time ago. It was impossible to get it all in the picture, but perhaps I got the part that interests you most.

I wish to call your attention to the unusual way of placing the Hallberg Motor Generator. The reason for hanging it up in this way was because the floor of the booth was not built solid enough for it. By hanging it up, we have done away with all noise and vibration. I also wish to say that the Hallberg Motor Generator sure is a fine working machine, absolutely no trouble, and there every minute.

Yours very truly,

(Signed) R. F. DENNIS,

CALLS "RUGGLES OF RED GAP" A SCREAM

The Exhibitor's Trade Review says: "The story and dramatization of 'Ruggles of Red Gap' were a scream. The acting of Taylor Holmes and Frederick Burton alone is worth going to see, but there are other things which make the picture unusual. The scenes in the Grand Canyon are wonderful and the photography very superior."

The Universal Film Manufacturing Company invites all of the producers named above (as well as other producers too numerous to mention) to CLOSE THEIR STUDIOS AND MAKE ALL OF THEIR PICTURES AT UNIVERSAL CITY, CALIFORNIA.

This we regard as the most practical step toward eliminating waste and duplication and thus bringing down the cost (and therefore the renting price) of all moving pictures produced in this country.

. . . .

Universal City is acknowledged to be not only the largest but the best equipped studio in the world. It can easily be made to accommodate ALL OF THE PRODUCING COMPANIES IN THE UNITED STATES.

. . . .

Its equipment is the finest that can be had. It represents the investment of vast fortunes in cash as well as years of study, experimenting and improving—all with a view to making the best possible pictures at the slightest possible cost.

. . . .

It is ready for you to use immediately. Simply close your own studios, send your producing staff to Universal City and START MAKING PICTURES WITHOUT THE LOSS OF AN HOUR OF TIME; and without having to divert your mind from producing to the worries attendant upon running the mechanical end of the studio business.

. . . .

Several suggestions have been made by various men in the trade as to the best method of effecting needed economies in picture making. Some have suggested mergers, but there are so many obstacles in the way of satisfactory mergers that much time will be lost before any merging can be done on such a scale as to help the whole trade.

Under our plan, as suggested above, the economies can be made effective IMMEDIATELY. The closing of the large and small studios represented by the above list of names would so reduce the cost of picture producing that all producers taking part in the movement could IMMEDIATELY turn part of their savings over to the exhibitors in the form of lower rental prices, Universal City contains EVERYTHING you can possibly need to make the finest pictures in the history of the trade. It is complete. It is convenient. It is far too large for the needs of any single concern. If, by chance, it should need more artificial lighting equipment than it has at present, we could remove the lights from your own closed studios and transfer them to your stages at Universal City. The same idea could be applied to props, scenery, electrical equipment and so on, although the equipment already on hand is vast.

We invite every producer to give this the most serious thought. We ask each and every one to realize what a boon such a move would be to the whole trade, provided enough of you take advantage of the offer.

. . . . .

We invite Mr. William A. Brady, as president of the National Association of the Moving Picture Industry, to use his good offices to bring about this tremendous good for the whole industry.

. . . . .

We invite Mr. Lee Ochs, as president of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League of America, to use his good offices to help accomplish this almost limitless economy by which THE EXHIBITORS WOULD BENEFIT DIRECTLY. In no other practical manner that we know of can he do so much to HELP THE EXHIBITORS AT A CRITICAL TIME IN THEIR AFFAIRS.

. . . . .

We are ready to arrange the most reasonable rates for the rental of space and facilities at Universal City—and naturally the more producing companies the more reasonable the rates.

. . . . .

War conditions have caused all producers to give more serious thought to their producing costs than they have ever done in past years. A year ago we do not believe such an invitation as this would have met with favor; but now WE BELIEVE IT TO BE THE MOST LOGICAL, THE MOST NATURAL AND THE MOST PRACTICAL SOLUTION OF THE BIG PROBLEM THAT CONFRONTS THE WHOLE TRADE.

. . . . .

If we have seemed selfishly to reserve the great benefits of Universal City to ourselves in the past, it was only because we have never felt that the time for real co-operation was ripe until now.

. . . . .

Those of you who have suffered from annoying restrictions placed upon studios, either in New Jersey, New York or the city of Hollywood, California, may be pleased to know that there are no such restrictions in Universal City where we are virtually "a law unto ourselves."

By the overwhelming odds of 8 news scenes to 1

The Universal News Weeklies beat all other news weeklies on the market put together, at Rothapfel's beautiful Rivoli Theatre this week. All the salesman's talk in the wide world falls flat alongside of an accomplishment like this. What does it mean to you Mr. Exhibitor? Simply means that in the largest and finest New York theatre, the Universal News Weekly subjects always take the lead.

Manager Rothapfel buys all the news weeklies issued every week from all the film concerns producing these news weeklies each week. He picks only the best subjects, assembles them and projects them under his own News Reel—"The Topical Review." Rothapfel Picked 8 of the Universal subjects to 1 of ALL THE OTHERS COMBINED. The only subject we did not show was a funeral, which we had but did not use because The Universal News Weeklies do not show funeral processions.

Two weeks ago the Universal's wonderful Liquid Fire pictures set the whole trade talking. Nothing like them ever has been shown.

Week before last the Universal's marvelous X-Ray pictures amazed the country. Every week we score a beat. If you want these scoops—if you want the biggest picture news of the whole world, as picked by the greatest Theatre expert in America—do as Rothapfel does—use Universal Animated Weekly-Screen Magazine and Current Events—every week and be the first with the BIG news of the world in your house.

TRIANGLE

To think

—while you still have the God-given privilege—

Brains, backbone and money must be hitched to the pen that dictates the policy of successful motion picture concerns these "hot" times.

This is an age of split second watches.

When fast manufactured munitions and gigantic guns grow out of date before they even get to the firing line,—

When war is costing the world almost a million a minute in cash and "NO MAN'S LAND" is making all other battle grounds look like faintly remembered "pikers,"—

When American business takes a holiday every week just to add another million tons of coal to the choking of the intolerable Hun,—

When General Pershing's daily report is being read by Secretary Baker and the war department in Washington almost before the ink is dry on the original document in France,—

When General Sherman's everlasting epigram is coming home with new force and meaning at every tick of the clock,—

When wheatless days, lightless nights and common sense are asking every patriotic American to KILL WASTE—to STOP THE LEAKAGE,—

TRIANGLE

—why don't you hitch your check writing arm to your brain?

Quit flirting with the Sheriff and his FOR SALE sign if you expect that theatre of yours to feed and clothe the wife and baby during the rest of the year 1918.

Triangle dollars are spent so efficiently that they get right through to your screen 99% strong.

We've cut the corners, but we've saved the meat for you. There isn't a ten thousand dollar a week star on our pay-roll. Our department heads and managers are business men with a product that was designed as systematically as ever Ford built an automobile.

Triangle days may not be the largest box office days in your town, but at the end of the month your Triangle contract will help you pay back some of the money you gambled away with other pictures.

We expect to make more pictures of high quality and box office value in 1918 than all the rest of them put together—the Triangle machine is oiled, steam is up—are you ready to ride?

There's a Triangle Exchange just at the other end of your telephone—and we pay the war tax.

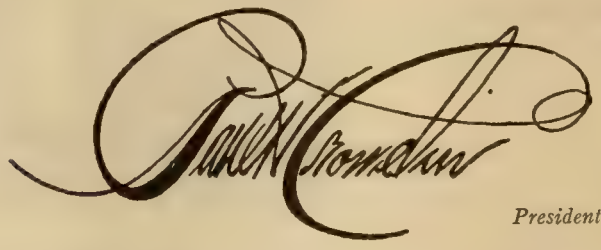
Shipping Conditions in War-Time

By



President

A 1917 factor in Inter-Ocean's success has been its keen knowledge of the varying shipping conditions caused by the Great War. Our energies and methods have been on a war-time basis! All sorts of shipping "switches" occurred last year, but—due to our intensive watch—we ANTICIPATED ALL OF THEM. Our customers reaped the spectacular benefit! They received their American films, altho competitors suffered all sorts of disappointment. Small wonder these buyers have become our warmest boosters. They swear by the Inter-Ocean system that guarantees satisfaction under any and all conditions, even those of war-time. They swear by Inter-Ocean's market knowledge —the knowledge that tells us what sort of productions that theatres the world over are MAKING MONEY WITH. These films are selected by us from the following list of material, which we exclusively represent in the foreign market.

52 World Films (Brady-Made) a year; featuring Ethel Clayton, Clara Kimball Young, Alice Brady, Carlyle Blackwell and June Elvidge; 24 Paralta Plays a year; featuring Bessie Barriscale, J. Warren Kerrigan, Henry B. Walthall and Louise Glaum; the great features "Whither Thou Goest," "To-day," "Mad Lover," "Hunting Big Game in the Frozen North," "The 13th Labor of Hurcules;" the surefire comedy brands, Vim, Black Diamond, Bingo, "Charley" (Mabel and Fatty) cartoons.

We have told you the full and truthful story of the new Pathé serial

"THE HOUSE OF HATE"

We have called your attention to the extraordinary box office value of

PEARL WHITE

We have shown that the phenomenal success of her past serials should be exceeded by this, since it has a better story, written by the man who wrote "The Exploits of Elaine;" better production, with the most costly feature sets; better direction, by the man who directed "The Fatal Ring" and who wrote the scenarios of all three of her greatest serial successes; and a better leading man, for she has been given a star who is one of the most popular in the business—

ANTONIO MORENO

And we have said: All the facts demonstrate that beyond doubt this is GREATEST PEARL WHITE SERIAL!

NOW IT IS YOUR MOVE!

The mere announcement of a new and bigger Pearl White serial has been followed by a raft of bookings from exhibitors who have "cleaned up" on her in the past and KNOW that she, in a Pathé serial, is the BIGGEST of all box office attractions.

The release date, March 10th, is near at hand. If you want the best business-getter of 1918 you must act quickly. Ask the nearest Pathé exchange to screen for you the special information reel—the first episodes. ANY exhibitor who sees them will recognize the one best bet in pictures today.

"THE EAG

The Story of the Imperial German

By WILLIAM J. FLYNN recently retired

The Public Wants to See It

Despite the fact that New York was in the grip of one of the worst blizzards of this winter; that 10,000 soldiers from Camp Upton were parading Fifth Avenue less than a block away; that every theatre in the city was given a special holiday matinee, more than 1,600 people crowded into a room which was prepared for 1,000. More than 1,200 eager guests permit them to enter the ballroom of the Hotel Biltmore, where there was an unadvertised showing of the first three episodes of

"THE EAGLE'S EYE"

The Public Will Know Where to See It

More newspapers have been given contracts for space in which to advertise it, and the theatres booking it, than have ever been used in exploiting any serial. More helps to exhibitors in gaining their local publicity at little, or no cost, have been prepared for it than for any other serial. The importance of the subject, the authenticity of it, the general public interest in it, all advertise

The Public Should See It

It is the only authentic revelation of the activities of the vast spy-army of the Imperial German Government in America. It is based upon actual facts furnished by the greatest authority on the subject, William J. Flynn, recently retired Chief of the United States Secret Service. Twenty reasons why this country is at war with Imperial Germany—one vital reason exposed in each episode—makes this the most damning indictment against the Kaiser that has ever been prepared for the public, as shown in

"THE EAGLE'S EYE"

Help the Public to See It

The exhibitor is the man to whom the public must look for the opportunity to see it. Aside from the importance of the subject its picture value sets a new pace for serials. The situations are thrilling. The romantic interest is sustained and exciting. The acting is superb. The impersonations are marvelous. Further, it is timely, topical and patriotic in its appeal. The public want to see it. The public should see it Satisfy and gratify your patrons by booking to get rid of the staggering expenses and ruinous waste that threaten to strangle the industry.

THE time has come for plain words. Unless this plan of concerted operations be adopted, the business of motion picture exhibition faces the direst and blackest disaster in the history of commercial amusements. War caused practically all the producers and 25 per cent. of the picture theatres of England and of France to close. Expenses must be cut—middlemen eliminated—exhibitors' rentals reduced—cash paid producers so they will dare make bigger and better pictures—all this can be accomplished—but only by exhibitor co-operative buying.

The Old Way

1. Overproduction and consequent waste of negative and positive.
2. Useless competition of distributors' exchanges.
3. Millions wasted in home office overhead.
4. Big salaries to stars who are not stars.
5. Charging what the traffic will bear, meaning UNLIMITED PROFITS.
6. Contracts hog-tying the exhibitor, thus rendering him helpless.
7. Anarchy and haphazard profiteering.

The New Way

1. Production only at exhibitor demand.
2. No costly exchanges—merely inexpensive service depots.
3. Overhead cut down to a tiny fraction of film cost.
4. Careful selection of stars of proved drawing power.
5. Charging only the CERTIFIED COST plus a reasonable percentage for producer's profit.
6. Easy agreements, in the framing of which the exhibitor-stockholder has a share.
7. Helpful, friendly co-operation and profit-sharing between producer and exhibitor.

Eliminating the waste of competition

Motion Picture Proprietors of the Nation

Now Is the Time to Assert Your Collective Buying Power

Study carefully the differences between the present out-dated distributing system and the new way which we outline.

THE most trusted leaders of exhibitor-activity and exhibitor-organization are concerted in this plan. Do not be fooled by words and names. Co-operation cannot proceed from the producers or distributors—that has been tried and failed. The only true and economical co-operation is among yourselves—in the exercise of your united buying power.

We are in this campaign with good will to all and malice toward none. Producers will experience the benefit of the plan because the enormous waste due to the present hurried and mechanical manufacture and the present uneven, unscientific and unsatisfactory method of distribution will be eliminated. The producer will always find an excellent market for his standardized product with us, a product that will be distributed in all sections of the country with equal thoroughness, and the prompt payment for which will enable the producer to do away with financial worries and the making of pictures by the clock or the calendar.

Fill out and mail the blank to-day, and we will explain in detail how you can enroll in this great, nation-wide movement.

Facts and Comments

WHEN we suggested last week that exhibitors could find a way to aid in the prosecution of the great battle for democracy now being waged by our country by holding a "Liberty Bond Night" at their theaters we did not anticipate that the idea would be so warmly received by the trade as is now indicated. We learn, further, that already plans are being formulated by a committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, of which Adolph Zukor is the chairman, to provide slides, posters, and other material to be used by the theaters, plans for the distribution of which will be made public presently now that the date of the next Liberty Loan is announced. A large number of subjects are also being assembled by the Government, which will be distributed gratis to help raise the loan. It will be seen that an abundance of material will be at hand for "Liberty Loan" programs, so that picture theater managers will have every opportunity to demonstrate their patriotism.

The point we want to emphasize is this: This is an exhibitors' movement; this is the time that the exhibitor comes in for his proper share of the honor and distinction of giving aid to the Government in its time of need. Heretofore others have claimed the credit of all that has been done by the motion picture trade in support of war measures. This is the opportunity of the exhibitor to show what he can do. The MOVING PICTURE WORLD believes that he will improve that opportunity to the last man. Now let's prove it. Representatives of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD will call upon as many exhibitors as possible within the next few weeks to urge them to hold a "Liberty Loan Night" in their houses, and the Roll of Honor will be started as soon as the returns begin to come in. Do not wait to be solicited; send in your consent to co-operate at once. The date of the third loan has been announced to begin April 6. You have until then to make your plans. Let everybody get busy.

AS a result of the dissatisfaction among exhibitors with present trade conditions and methods there has sprung up several schemes which have for their purpose the elimination of a large percentage of the cost of service of the various items supplied to picture theaters, especially pictures. It is a new movement in the trade, and is receiving some attention because the promoters promise that their plans will save money for the exhibitor. The purpose of these proposed organizations is commendatory, but before exhibitors sign up with any of them or pay real money for the stock that is to be offered for sale they should give those plans careful scrutiny. Ask yourselves a few questions; namely, are the men behind the scheme strong enough to put it over; have they anything to sell besides promises, and, if so, can those promises be performed?

Without singling out any one of these several plans suppose we consider the broad question of co-operation and the elimination of the expense of distribution as applied to the picture amusement business. The general principles of co-operation in commercial lines are pretty generally understood. There we have a standardized commodity sold to established retail houses by a central distributing company, which is able to save in costs to the retailer by reason of buying in large quantities and the elimination of the middle-man's profit. In such cases the commodity dealt in is fairly uniform in quality, and is a necessity. Then, again, the retailer who is served in a commercial co-operative project is established in his community and has a definite business of providing his patrons with the things they need—things they must have. When such elements as these enter into a co-operative proposition the plan is as simple as one, two, three, and the benefits are manifest.

The amusement field does not offer so simple a problem for co-operation for the reason that the elements are not stable in character. The product or commodity is not a necessity of life, it is not of uniform quality or unvarying in supply, and must change as the tastes of the public change. The theater to which the product is sold also lacks stability. Thus far in the motion picture game we have seen many changes in ownership and character of houses, as well as in the character and desires of their patrons. Altogether the combination does not provide a firm foundation for a plan of co-operation.

Probably the greatest opposing force to any plan of co-operation between producers and exhibitors of motion pictures will be the producers and the exhibitors themselves. On the one hand the producer will oppose it first, because he already has his plan of distribution in which he has invested large sums of money. This investment would be a dead loss if he were to turn his product over to some other distributing organization, as would necessarily be the case if the co-operative plans we have heard about are to live up to their promises. When one realizes that there is something more than $15,000,000 invested in film exchanges there would be about fifteen million reasons why the plans are not feasible, insofar as the producers who operate exchanges are concerned. It is only a few weeks ago that a plan to bring five of the largest producers together in a common distributing project failed of completion because a common agreement could not be reached. It may be possible that outside interests can bring the same factors together in a co-operative plan, but the same objections would have to be overcome.

On the part of the exhibitor there is the constantly varying demand for this or that subject. The exhibitor is never entirely satisfied with the subjects offered to him by any one producer, and, as a rule, demands freedom of action in the selection of his program. Under such conditions it will be extremely difficult for any co-operative distributing organization that does not control the entire output to satisfy the demands of the exhibitor.

Taken all in all it appears to us that any co-operative plan along the lines of those already proposed must of necessity be compelled to operate with a very limited product, and will not be able to secure the pictures that have the vogue at the present time. There is one certainty, should the promoters of any one plan succeed in securing the co-operation of any single one of the greater producers it will not be able to secure any of the others, and thus it will become a mere adjunct to the company which favors its plan.

The Moving Picture World offers these observations for the guidance of its patrons with the additional advice that they "look before they leap." We are not going to condemn any of the plans that have been brought to our notice. All have their good qualities, and will succeed, possibly, if they can be put over right. Likewise all have their defects, and may not be as fine or as foolproof as they will be painted by an enthusiastic promoter. So look them over carefully, and do a little thinking for yourself.

WHEN Manager Rothapfel wrote to President R A. Rowland, of Metro, protesting against the withdrawal of the Drews from the screen he sounded a note that will bring hearty response from exhibitors and photoplay goers everywhere. Mr. and Mrs. Drew have given us a distinct brand of entertainment—wholesome in the best sense, and all the more so because it is human. The Drews have portrayed the well-to-do couple of today, making no attempt to conceal the shortcomings of the head of the house in his associations with his intimates. Perhaps Mr. Drew has not shown us a husband who would be accepted as a model by the more straitlaced, but he has given us a most lifelike counterpart of the men we meet every day—of the men who have the faults of their virtues maybe, but of sham and humbug a thing apart. Mrs. Drew is a splendid example of the American wife, one whose hands may be full at times keeping track of a spouse who will get tangled up with the boys, but who nevertheless is sure that she owns a mate who has got just a shade the best of it on any other man she knows. May the Drews return to us and remain on the screen for many years to come.

Defining "Modern Drama"

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

THERE is no change in drama so far as it stirs man's feelings and stimulates his thought, but he has grown, and it must grow with him. All the old primeval emotions are his today, but he has become acquainted with the control of emotion by intelligence and power of will, and it was inevitable that his mental advancement should strongly affect stories concerning his nature and destiny. The drama still portrays the spirit of man, whether in his suffernig or in his lighter moods, but the tremendous reconstruction going on in his own character through constant enlightenment could not do other than reshape dramatic content.

It is an easy matter to say that we are very much the same as people in the dark ages, but a clean-minded, wholesome and vigorous man of today has only to come in close touch with ignorance and brutality to appreciate the vast difference made by the civilizing influences of education. Only a little common sense is needed to perceive that whatever we are and aspire to be must communicate itself to what is conceived to be a storied phase of our lives. Then there is nothing eternally changeless in our methods of living, as clearly evidenced in recent transformations, and those going on in our political and social existence.

It may be plausibly maintained that we should abide by the traditions of drama. Stout-hearted old farmers, good men and true, stood out bravely for awhile against automatic seeders, reapers and twinebinders. So we find men of earnest conviction standing out against replacement of the idea that serious drama means the attempt on the part of individual will to transgress some unrelenting law of nature, or of society, in which the man who commits an error is bound to suffer the consequences.

Our aches and pains might forever vanish if we understood the laws of nature. As for those of man, he has been trying to make them for two thousand years, and he is still at it. They are merely adjustments to human action or intended to influence it rightly, but a very large part of them act as obstacles, rather than as incentives, to progress. The idea of liberty for which we are fighting means that the natural play of social forces shall be unimpeded by arbitrary force. We are right up against an autocratic attempt to suppress freedom of thought, an evil force of dogmatic control arrayed against allied enlightenment.

Keeping between the oceans which bound our country east and west, we are aware that mandatory laws are constantly being enacted which are sometimes successfully enforced. If they were always contributory to our common benefit we should have no reason to rebel against them, but they too often compel us to do useless things, or they forbid us to do harmless things which we might greatly enjoy. Then we are aware that a very large proportion of them are enacted at the dictate of pecuniary interest. The mere existence of any human law is no proof of value.

We know the value of "Oedipus," "Othello" and "Wallenstein," if we know anything at all about the drama. The principle involved in all great classics is more or less the same. It can be used if necessary to keep away from the meaning of immediate experience, but not to compel or suppress what is vital to the impassioned soul of our times. To show profound admiration for the finest classics is one thing, to anchor in their waters quite another. We may still love to kneel before the altars of other days and seek rest in their twilight influence, but we may better enjoy the blue sky infinity of outdoor today.

"Modern drama" exacts nothing, but it recognizes that each individual acts in harmony with a very complicated character, made into one or another unique compound by the initiative of hereditary impulse and the influences of environment from earliest childhood. "Modern drama" has less to do with hero and heroine than with mortals. No longer are we impossbily good, no longer irretrievably bad. It is the story of our inmost souls, of our foibles, of our weaknesses, of our self-struggles, of all we deem worth considering in the world each one of us makes for himself. We venture into a field beyond our strength and come back defeated, perhaps to find opportunity was knocking at the back door while we were looking for it at the front, perhaps to discover compensation for lost effort in the unexpected.

There may be a law of retribution—there often seems to be—but it is not to be grasped and used by mortal hands as yet. It is as intangible as the laws which govern the varied movements of planets throughout the universe. "Modern drama" does not attempt its rigid enforcement, but deals with what we know of ourselves, of our conditions, of what is to be enjoyed, of what endured. It seeks to portray some fragment of what life is, with a basic truth of some kind on which to build an absorbing romance.

So far as the structure is concerned, no one need hesitate to rearrange the order of actual experience to suit the need of sustained interest. There must always be considered that state of uncertainty in the audience mind, accompanied more or less by anxiety as to the outcome of events in the story, but that is a matter of technique. Whatever that technique involves, from a large grasp of some vital subject to concentration upon the needs and deeds of one character, it is merely a matter of manipulation.

"Manipulation," or whatever the artistic arrangement may be called, has its own methods, principles and varied forms. It is of value to the extent that it is responsive to the end in view and to the "vision of life" creative genius attempts. That of today almost instinctively rejects the devices of tradition. The application of ancient artifice to modern situations is worse than futile—it is very often destructive. It leads into the useless and strangles the effective. Therein lies the weakness of many modern novels, quite as well as those of other days.

The effect of modern drama on an audience may only be that of diversion from weary commonplace. It may relax, or it may stimulate, but its effect upon the spirit of those in front is the more powerful that they are not sitting at the feet of ancient wisdom. The author does not advise human beings who strive and suffer. He does not intrude his personality upon the illusion at all. The idea is not to uphold some supposed immutable law, like that of retribution. You need not think—it is enough that you feel. If you are unaffected, the play is a failure.

It is not a question of realism and romance. Realism may be merely offensive, a pale attempt at the plausible, while romance may arouse a fascinating sense of mystery, lead us completely away from humdrum experience into the spell of a strange bit of life we are viewing. As much as we have been told about that dominant influence, love, it is still unmasked. In us, all around us, it remains an unsolved mystery, a strange whispering from the Infinite. It is so with modern drama. It powerfully affects us, yet it seems beyond analysis. We cannot force its shape to our wills. It affects us most deeply when some spirit derived from our best selves enters to make it beautiful.

As They Happen

By Sam Spedon.

WHEREVER we go we hear the same old, old story. Every organization proclaims it. The few who have the interest of the industry at heart are obliged to take the burdens of the many on their shoulders, while the majority proceed in the even tenure of their ways, hoping to enjoy the fruits of the labor of the few. The boys at the front and the slackers at home are often quoted as a parallel. We are told that the shirkers not only fail to give their services, but they fail to contribute their mite to aid those who are fighting their legislative and other battles to save them from annihilation and bankruptcy. They talk co-operation like a preacher and practice it like a human incubator of the hookworm.

Consistency, Thou Art a Jewel.

Here is a funny one: A bill for state censorship was before one of the state legislatures, with a fair chance of becoming a law. Two or three exhibitors thought they would take time by the forelock and apply for a job on the board of censors. While it would be an excellent idea to have any capable exhibitor as a member of a board of censors, it would be wise to wait until it became a law, before applying for a berth on it. Such premature action looks like an endorsement of legalized state censorship and favoring its adoption, against the wishes and interests of the whole country.

Any member of the industry who carries "safety first" to such a point, comes under suspicion and is liable to internment. If we were to take the will for the deed, he might be adjudged a traitor and shot at sunrise. Fortunately the bill did not become a law and their ambitions were nil.

A "Crazy Theater" Manager of the Right Sort.

This man has the qualifications of a real manager. Listen to what he says:

"Your letter to the 'Crazy Theater,' Mineral Wells, Texas, has reached myself, the present owner of this theater, the twelfth owner during the past few years. I know I am going to stick because I love the business. I am giving the people here a regular show, which you know is bound to succeed. Am passing the first year in the business and the hard bumps have been smoothed over, at least it is coming much easier now than six months ago."

This statement embodies all the essentials for success. He loves the business; he is a sticker; he gives the people a regular show and he knows he is going to succeed. These three declarations show enthusiasm in what he is doing, which is another big factor that means success and a real showman. This man displays a spirit that makes good and builds up the business and will establish the business and industry on a firm basis. Such a spirit is contagious and infuses others with a like spirit and interest in the man who possesses it. Where eleven fail such a man succeeds. Wish we had more like this "Crazy Theater" manager.

There Are Others.

By such communications as this, we are convinced that there is a general movement among the exhibitors to keep up with the progress of the industry. Be that as it may, here is a live one who evidently watches the trend of things and is not going to leave anything undone to win patronage—not if he knows it. In other words, he's a live wire and isn't going to be found wanting. Here is what he says:

"We are decorating and remodeling the theater now and when completed I can safely say that the Pastime theater will be one of the finest little theaters devoted to motion pictures in the Loop, as we realize the moving picture industry from manufacture to exhibitor will mean the survival of the fittest and we are going to be classed among the fittest."

Keeping Up with the Pictures.

The pictures have made the industry, the pictures have made the stars, the pictures have made the theaters what they are today and are setting the standard for what the theaters must be. No matter how small the house of the silent drama, it must be the setting for the pictures. If the theater is cold and cheerless the picture will be a frost. If the entrance is uninviting and unattractive, the picture will suffer by comparison and fail to draw. If the music is out of tune with the picture, there will be discord. Instead of pleasing your patrons it will spoil the picture and their pleasure. Even the manager and attendants must keep up with the picture. Don't take our word for it, ask the best and most successful showmen in the business.

When we had poor pictures, we had poor theaters. Everybody in the industry, everything in the industry has got to keep up with the pictures. You wouldn't hang a beautiful oil painting, a masterpiece with a gold frame on it in a shack and expect people to appreciate it; it would make them laugh at its surroundings. The pictures have shot ahead so fast it has required some hustling to keep up with them. Many have fallen by the wayside and there are more to follow. The producer of any old kind of a picture is a thing of the past and he wonders why.

Why Is a Continuity Writer?

By Edward Weitzel.

THE moving picture is a great educator, and in nothing is this more clearly shown than in its ability to teach the value of its own product. This frank self-revelation is the chief cause of its rapid improvement in technic during the last three years. There is no way of covering up a weak situation or a bad bit of construction on the screen. The banalities of both are heightened and intensified to the same degree that strong and convincing reflections of life are made the more impressive. The unnecessary incident is also revealed for the awkward intruder it is, and all attempts at padding are shown to be nothing but padding. With such a fierce light beating on his work it is easy to understand why the scenario writer is continually striving to build his stories more compactly and with firmer dramatic force. Continuity, however, is a technical point that still admits of improvement.

In the early days most continuity writers employed what may be termed the "words of one syllable" method. Some of them still cling to this method. The development of their plots is like that of a child's story book: "Do you see the cow? It is a red cow. It has four legs; one on each corner." These industrious but misguided toilers evidently labor under the impression that all persons have seven-year-old intellects or that the more mature mind does not attend the screen theaters. They are, apparently, not aware that it requires but little cleverness to take the outline of a plot and tell every incident that happens to the characters in a given time; that the trick is to pick out those events that will best bridge over the wide gaps in an unbroken narrative that add nothing to the force and clearness of the theme.

Construction is a question of selection and, although a play is like an argument—no good unless it convinces the other fellow—it is always as well to give this same "other fellow" credit for a fair amount of perception. Also, that he is willing to take a large number of things for granted, provided he can find no flaw in the material shown him.

Pictures have been released that contained continuity of this description: Word is brought to the villain of the story that the heroine he imprisoned has escaped. The spectator is aware of this fact and has followed her flight from the moment she outwitted her captor and got away, yet the continuity insists upon showing the enraged villain pursuing the lady and searching anxiously in places where the spectator knows she isn't. Such a method may do for the novelist, who is not restricted as to time and may meander along at will. But it is the business of the dramatist to make drama; and a photoplay should move with sufficient speed to keep ahead of the spectator's ability to anticipate.

Up to the present there has been no highbrow screen drama, intended to appeal to a few cultured mortals whose tastes run to the sordidly realistic or the unusually erudite. But all good drama contains the same essential elements—simplicity of theme, progressive action and constant growth of interest. These rudiments cannot be present if the continuity writer insists on leaving nothing to the imagination and the director attempts to stimulate interest by introducing an oversupply of "long shots" whose only merit is pictorial beauty. A continuity writer who speaks, in a recent article, of what he terms "direct action continuity," and says "I want to tell my stories in fewer episodes, and without the multiplicity of photographic transgressions which render many photoplays so utterly mechanical," is on the right track.

However great the dissension on other questions appertaining to the photoplay, there is one point upon which every practical mind in the art—or industry—is agreed: The story is the real foundation of a picture's success. They also know that the public will pay any price for what it considers is novel—and that the strictly "original" story is not to be had. Fortunately, this condition is not beyond repair. While the demand for story material makes it obligatory that the screen avail itself of every source of supply and utilize the novel, the stage play, and newly prepared stories on well tried subjects, there will be no cry against worn out material so long as the screen dramatist, director and the members of the cast have the skill to create a new interest in an old theme.

The one remedy for the dearth of original plots is a newer and better technic in telling the old. The sum of human experience is the same in all ages. It is only necessary to follow the changes in outward appearances and take advantage of the latest discoveries in art expression as it relates to the screen.

At the present time there are on exhibition in New York two examples of drama which substantiate the claim just made. One drama is a spoken play; the other is a product of the silent stage. Both are noteworthy specimens of their respective schools of mimetic art. And both owe their success to the same causes: The quickening into new interest of old material by the magic of the playwright and the acting of the star and the supporting company. It is safe to maintain that not one of the spectators at either entertainment will ever give a thought as to how often the theme has been used before. They will witness lessons in nobility of soul that will drive everything else from their minds, for the time being, and leave the knowledge that they have seen something very much worth while.

Romance and Realism

By Robert C. McElravy.

WHO Will Rescue Cody?

The above question is flying across the moving picture screen at the end of each two-reel installment of a new serial called "The Bull's Eye." And a very interesting serial it is, being filled with tense, exciting situations of the red-blooded type, mirrored forth in sharp, clear photography which very frequently catches in the back ground much of the panoramic splendor of the Western plains.

Some women of the Board of Review have expressed at times considerable agitation at the end of installments as to whether anybody would be able to rescue Cody, suggesting that perhaps he had at last got into a predicament from which no human being could rescue him. The blasé critics, however, and the secretary of the board, are inclined from past experience to regard the situation with more complacency. They have no doubt in the world that Cody will be rescued, whether he is hanging by his eyelids over the edge of a cliff, or is sitting bound and gagged over a keg of powder, to which is attached a lighted three-minute fuse. Someone or other is bound to rescue Cody, and if everyone fails, at the last second he will contrive to rescue himself! For the Cody of this serial is portrayed by no less a person than Eddie Polo, who has perhaps survived as many ticklish situations as any other screen performer.

Eddie Polo and other players of his intrepid type, both men and women, among whom may be mentioned Marie Walcamp, who played with him in another serial called "Liberty," succeed very frequently in accomplishing the seemingly impossible. They risk their lives gladly in efforts to provide new thrills for screen patrons. There was a time indeed when conscientious critics felt impelled to inveigh against this reckless disregard of life and limb, but it was of no avail. It seemed to be on the cards that moving picture players should do these daring things for the entertainment of the public, and they have carried them out with a fearlessness that shames criticism. They have made the improbable probable; they have turned romance into realism.

What is romance with which we think adventure fiction may be safely classified anyway? Is it nothing but realism walking about in a long coat and a high hat, lurking behind a smiling camouflage of fiction which is after all fact? Is romance really a true picture of life as well as the sterner form of writing?

There used to be an old warfare between these schools of fiction. The romanticists contended that they were entitled to first credit because they dressed the hard facts of life up in pleasant attire; the realists contended that they came first because they did not hesitate to expose the bones and sinews of life as they went along.

It begins to look as though the two are identical at bottom, and that the moving pictures have proved it. Certainly the adept scenario writer seems to have no hesitation as he digs out the salient features of either school of fiction. However high-flung the improbabilities of the romantic writers may be, he will find some way of getting convincingly upon the screen. He has at his disposal trained screen performers who will carry out his bidding at almost any risk. It would be practically impossible, for instance, to pick up a wilder or more unlikely story for screen purposes than Edgar Rice Burroughs' "Tarzan of the Apes," and yet it has been transferred to the screen today, and the general verdict seems to be that it lacks nothing in conviction.

What are you going to do about it? You say, as you read a story, that this thing or that thing is impossible, that it could never have happened in real life. Yet when you visit the moving picture theater you see the thing itself happening, through the agency of real human beings. You see Eddie Polo swinging from the top of one cliff to another by a lariat attached to a tree in the middle of the canyon; you see young Tarzan clambering through the tree tops among the apes, both real and assumed, with an assurance that goes far to support the familiar Darwin theory. In what way is your romance distinguished from realism?

It has been the custom in past years to deplore the character of our robust western tales, as they appear in Adventure, The Popular, The All-Story and other publications devoted to this vigorous and enjoyable type of fiction. It has been said frequently that fiction cowboys are an unreal lot, that real cowboys never went about doing the highly-colored stunts attributed to them by the authors of these wild and woolly yarns. Perhaps they didn't, as they probably had other work of more importance to do, but we liked to read about it and to believe that these things were true. And now the moving pictures come along and prove that if these very interesting things never happened, they at least might have happened.

The answer to the old controversy seems to be that romance has its basis in real life as well as realism; that it must be just as firmly, if not as visibly, anchored in plausibility as the latter.

Keeping Your Ear to the Ground

By Sam Spedon.

WITHOUT multiplicity of words we give you as briefly as possible the result of our observations of present business conditions and the prevailing thoughts among those engaged in the industry.

Legislation Uppermost.

The introduction of bills on censorship, Sunday opening and the exclusion of children from theaters unaccompanied by parents and guardians are uppermost in the minds of the exhibitors.

In New Jersey the state censor bill, similar to Virginia, has been tabled in the House by a vote of 28 for and 32 against. In Maryland the repeal of the State Board of Censors is still under discussion and the exhibitors are to be given a hearing this week, also a hearing on the bill excluding children under 14 years of age from theaters if unaccompanied by parents or guardians. This is looked upon as a move to offset the attempt to repeal state censorship.

The board of censors has become so firmly established in Maryland as an essential part of political patronage that it looks like a Herculean task to displace it, although no effort will be spared to accomplish its abolishment. In Maryland there is talk by the legitimate theater of introducing a bill favoring Sunday opening. Many exhibitors in the state are well satisfied with a day of rest each week while others favor Sunday opening. The people in the larger cities, especially the manufacturing communities would welcome it. The bill excluding children, unaccompanied, from the theaters is something new to Maryland and it is the first time the question has ever been raised.

Virginia and Alabama.

In Virginia the exhibitors are leaving no stone unturned to defeat the state censor bill and from latest reports there is every reason to hope that it will be so modified that it will not be as drastic as it first appeared and there is yet a possibility that it will be defeated. A great many of the films shown in Virginia are censored in Maryland, which should be sufficient endorsement for Virginia. The Maryland censorship saves Virginia an extra tax on its exhibitors, but is deprives Virginia of political patronage at the expense of the exhibitors. All state boards of censors are unnecessary when the films are passed by the "National Board of Review." There isn't any political patronage in the "National Board of Review." It's a voluntary body. In Alabama the exhibitors and the people want Sunday opening, but their wish is opposed by the less liberal-minded, who have introduced a bill to make it illegal, and so it goes all along the line.

New York.

The convention of the New York State branch of the National Exhibitors' League of America was held at the Hotel Astor, New York City, on March 5 and 6 to discuss New York State legislation, touching upon and appertaining to motion pictures. The principal question debated was Sunday opening and we promise to give you a full report of the proceedings as participated in by the National League officers and heads of the "National Association of the M. P. I." who were in attendance, as well as the views of the exhibitors themselves. We may not tell you all they said, but we will let you know in a general way. O, yes; other subjects were dealt upon, but the main question, law and legislation, received much attention.

Other Current Matters.

Production and distribution are full of promise, which always follows in the natural course of events. The topics most discussed are those which concern the elimination of waste and equalization of cost to exhibitors, as set forth in direct plans between producers and exhibitors and co-operative booking. Another matter of rumor, which has been interpreted as a threat, is the five years' contract for the booking of certain products which is also interpreted as a domination or monopoly of the industry. We believe there is no such animal and if there is such a one being created, it will die in its infancy, unless the exhibitors are like the Bolsheviki leaders, willing to sell their liberty for comouflaged bait that conceals an inextricable book. All these matters are under process of consideration and development, some probable, some possible, but they all have a direct bearing on the future of the industry. Therefore, it is well to keep them in mind; to keep ourselves posted and prepared to meet them.

Malitz's Appeal for Lower Bail Refused

Federal Judge Chatfield Recommends District Attorney to Consider Advisability of Interning Film Men.

FEDERAL Judge Chatfield, in New York, on February 28, refused to reduce the bail of $20,000 jointly fixed in the cases of Felix Malitz, president of the American Correspondence Film Company of 2 Rector street, Manhattan, and his secretary, Gustave Engler, who are indicted for attempting to take contraband goods abroad for use by the Germans. The court, after hearing sensational charges concerning the alleged German propaganda activity of the accused pair, recommended that United States Attorney France consider the advisability of interning both men.

According to the investigation made by the Neutrality Squad, in charge of Lieutenant George Busby, both Malitz and Engler appear to be dangerous aliens. Since the outbreak of the war they have been, to outward appearance, peaceable and "neutral." Before the war the record showed them affiliated with the most notorious of the German propagandists.

Malitz is an officer of the Second Company, Fusileer Regiment of Prince Heinrich of Prussia, and reported every year at the cantonment at Mainz, Germany, until the summer of 1913, when he came to this country. Engler served with the Heavy Artillery, Thirteenth Corps, of the German army. Both are highly intelligent.

Cardinal Wins Infringement Verdict

District Court Awards Decree in Suit Over Copyright of "Joan the Woman."

THE Cardinal Film Corporation was awarded a decree in the United States District Court recently by Judge Augustus N. Hand against Fred Beck, Louis Weiss, Leo Singer and others adjudging the defendants guilty of infringement of copyright in connection with the photoplay entitled "Joan the Woman."

The defendants contended that under Section 62 of the copyright law the rights of the plaintiff company to exclusive commercial use of the photoplay were nullified by reason of the fact that there had been no publication prior to the date on which copies of the photoplay were deposited with the Librarian of Congress.

"Section 62 of the copyright law, which provides that the date of publication in the case of a work, of which copies are reproduced for sale or distribution, shall be held to be the earliest date when copies of the first authorized edition were placed on sale, sold or publicly distributed by the proprietor of the copyright, or under his authority, was an enactment to fix the date from which the copyright term should begin to run and not a general definition of what constituted publication," Judge Hand decided.

The film company also lodged a complaint against the individual defendants named with the United States District Attorney's office and they were indicted on a charge of violating the criminal law in pirating films owned by the plaintiff. The indictments are still pending.

TO REGULATE ATTENDANCE OF CHILDREN.

An amendment to the Penal Law regulating the children's attendance at moving picture theaters unattended was introduced in the New York State Senate on February 12, 1918, by Senator S. A. Cotillo of New York City and referred to the Committee on Codes. The amendment provides as follows:

"The penal law is hereby amended by inserting therein, after section four hundred and eighty-four, a new section, to be section four hundred and eighty-four-a, to read as follows:

"No. 484a. Permitting children to attend moving picture houses in certain cities during certain hours unattended. The provisions of subdivision one of section four hundred and eighty of this chapter shall not apply in cities of the first class having a population of one million or more, to children under the age of sixteen years unaccompanied by their parents or guardians admitted to a moving or motion picture performance on any day of the week between the hours of three and six in the afternoon, provided a suitable separate part of the building or structure in which such performance is held, is set apart for their exclusive use and a female attendant is in charge of such separate part of such building and structure during such hours. Such attendant shall be furnished by the bureau of licenses of such cities and the expense thereof, which shall not exceed twelve dollars per week, shall be paid by the owner or proprietor of such moving or motion picture performance.

"No. 2 This act shall take effect immediately."

BIG W. H. PRODUCTIONS-SELECT DEAL.

As the result of practically an all-night session, a big deal has been consummated between Louis J. Selznick of Select Pictures, and H. Winick of W. H. Productions, by which the latter concern secures the exclusive rights to all of the Select Pictures for a number of foreign countries. Further details will be announced later; however, the total amount involved is said to run into seven figures, while the deposit which has been put up, runs into six figures.

VIRGINIA CENSOR BILL PASSES SENATE.

The motion picture censorship bill drawn by the Rev. James Cannon passed the Virginia State Senate March 1 by unanimous vote and will now be presented to the House before the day of adjournment on March 7. The Virginia exhibitors who have succeeded in securing some amendments from the Senate still have small hope for ultimate victory. There is a possibility that Governor Davis will veto the bill.

Now For "Liberty Loan Night"

April 6, the First Anniversary of Our Entrance Into the War, Will Witness the Opening of the Third Liberty Loan Campaign—Producers and Exhibitors Indorse World's Suggestion for Concerted Trade Action.

APRIL 6, 1917, has already been entered upon the record of this United States as a never-to-be-forgotten date in the annals of our country. It was upon that date that we, as a Nation, entered upon the greatest and most cruel war that the World has ever known, and with the most noble purpose—the saving of the World for democracy and from the evils and oppression of Teutonic autocracy and militarism. Since that date we have raised many billions of dollars and have trained, armed and equipped many thousands of fighting men—the flower of the youth and manhood of our country, many of whom are now on the fighting line striving and dying to maintain the principles that have been enunciated by us.

Our task in this war is a great one and one that cannot fail, because it is right, but before we shall prevail, more billions will have been spent and thousands of our sons and brothers will have laid down their lives on the battlefields.

Those who have gone to the trenches and to man our ships are giving their all—their lives—more than that no man can give to his country. To those of us who are to keep the home fires burning remains the task of supplying the sinews of war; we must raise the money required to feed, clothe and arm our boys "over there."

Already we have answered the summons to that task in a manner that has challenged the admiration of our Allies, but more and still more will be required before this big job is finished. This brings us to the subject of the Third Liberty Loan, the date of which has been announced by Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo as April 6—the first anniversary of the Declaration of War against Germany.

In making the announcement Secretary McAdoo said:

"April 6 will forever be a consecrated day in American history, and it seems peculiarly appropriate that the opening of the second year of our participation in this war for the honor and rights of America and the freedom of the world should be celebrated with a nation-wide drive for another Liberty Loan.

"The campaign should begin with great demonstrations of patriotism in every city, town, and hamlet in the country that will truly express the spirit of aroused America. On this date every American should pledge anew to his Government the full measure of his resources and resolve to make every required sacrifice in the same fervent spirit that impels our gallant sons in the trenches of France and on the waters of the Atlantic to shed their blood in America's sacred cause."

What Prominent Film Men Say

Speaking to the exhibitors of the United States the Moving Picture World asks: What are you going to do?

It has been suggested in the editorial columns of the World that exhibitors show their loyalty by holding a "Liberty Loan Night" in their theaters during the campaign, giving programs calculated to arouse the patriotism of their patrons. Since that suggestion was made various men in the trade who could be quickly reached have been sounded on the proposition and their indorsements are printed herewith. Because of the position of Adolph Zukor as chairman of the special committee of the N. A. M. P. I., appointed to co-operate with the Secretary of the Treasury in collecting material to be used in picture theaters to further this loan, his letter heads the list. Mr. Zukor writes:

Whole-Hearted Indorsement by Zukor.

New York City, February 28, 1918.
Editor, Moving Picture World,
New York, N. Y.

Dear Sir—Permit me to indorse whole-heartedly and congratulate you on the plan of a Liberty Loan Night in every motion picture theatre in the United States, outlined in your issue of March 9th, in your editorial columns. As chairman of the Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, appointed to co-operate with the Treasury Department, such a suggestion meets with my unqualified approval, and the article referred to has been sent to Washington for information

On the occasions of the First and Second Liberty Loan Campaigns, as well as the War Savings Stamps Campaigns, Secretary McAdoo found opportunity to express his appreciation of the co-operative efforts of the motion picture industry. He and his assistants have found the industry ready and willing to aid in every possible manner.

Plans for an extensive motion picture campaign in connection with the Third Liberty Loan drive have been approved by the Treasury Department and the details of which will be announced coincident with the announcement of the date and details of the Third Liberty Loan.

Suffice it to say that in the Third Liberty Loan

Campaign the exhibitors of the country will be called upon again by our Government to aid in the great patriotic work. The manner in which they have supported these endeavors in the past is an indication that the suggestion of the Moving Picture World will be received with enthusiasm.

Sincerely yours,
ADOLPH ZUKOR, President.

We are encouraged by the hopeful words of Mr. Zukor and, from other information learn that much labor and care has been given to the preparation and selection of material which will be available for "Liberty Loan Night" programs.

What the Universal Will Do.

Heartily indorsing the editorial request contained in last week's issue of the Moving Picture World, to the effect that exhibitors give the forthcoming Liberty Loan drive their fullest co-operation, Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, has written this publication of his organization's intention to throw its entire weight back of the World plea.

Letters have already gone forward to all exchange managers from Universal's home office, directing them to exert every effort to get exhibitors to give a "Liberty Loan Night." Showmen who express their desire to be of special assistance will be put in touch with the "Four Minute Men" organization and so given an opportunity to help win the war.

Orders have also been issued to the advertising department that the slogan, "Are you Giving a Night for the Liberty Loan?" be inserted in the trade paper advertising placed by Universal. This will be varied by such slogans as "What Are YOU Doing to Help the Liberty Loan?" "How great a part is YOUR theater playing in the Liberty Loan Drive?" etc.

Universal's screen publications—the Animated Weekly, Current Events and the Screen Magazine—will contain Liberty Loan propaganda each week throughout the duration of the drive and for a period just previous to its commencement. These releases played important roles in the first and second Liberty Loan campaigns. Mr. Laemmle wrote as follows:

The Universal Film Manufacturing Company is proud to indorse your patriotic request to exhibitors on behalf of the forthcoming Liberty Loan drive. More than this, the organization I represent desires you to know that we propose to do everything in our power to help bring your request to the attention of every showman in the country.

Universal exchange managers have already received letters directing them to give your campaign their heartiest co-operation. They have been requested to sound every exhibitor coming into their offices on the "Give a Night for the Liberty Loan" idea. There isn't the slightest doubt in my mind but that many picture theatre men will not be content with merely this one little contribution towards the country-wide effort to help win the war, and our representatives have therefore been instructed to put these patriotic exhibitors in touch with the "Four Minute Men" organization so that those showmen who seldom visit the exchange centers, but who have been reached by the World's request, may be personally followed up.

I know that you will be glad to learn that the Universal Advertising Department has been instructed to insert the following slogans in all our trade paper advertising: "Are You Giving a Night for the Liberty Loan?" "What Are YOU Doing for the Liberty Loan?" "How Great a Part is YOUR Theater Playing in the Liberty Loan Drive?" These, and such other slogans as may occur to us, will be run in rotation.

As has been the case in the two previous Liberty Loan drives, the Universal Animated Weekly, Screen Magazine and Current Events will carry Liberty Loan propaganda throughout the drive. In fact, we are about ready to shoot out pre-campaign material.

Universal can be counted upon to do everything possible to make the third Liberty Loan an overwhelming success.

Confirming the foregoing Mr. Laemmle writes this:

New York, March 1, 1918.

Editor Moving Picture World.

Dear Sir—I want to congratulate the Moving Picture World for what is without doubt the clearest exposition of the long time contract evil that has yet yet been published.

The second paragraph of your "Facts and Comments" editorial is a gem, and I have requested the Universal advertising department to follow up in conjunction with the sales organization the movement you have initiated.

More power to the World's good right arm.

Cordially yours,
UNIVERSAL FILM MANUFACTURING COMPANY.
Carl Laemmle, President.

The Moving Picture World is particularly grateful for the practical manner in which the Universal proposes to take hold of the plan. Such co-operation will go far toward interesting the exhibitors of the country and to make the big idea go through.

Congratulations From Rowland of Metro.

I congratulate the Moving Picture World upon its timely and patriotic suggestion for a Liberty Loan Night at the motion picture theaters every week. A great many plans have been suggested, and those who made the suggestions were undoubtedly moved by the most patriotic motives, but the World's plan is not only patriotic, it is practical.

The idea that consideration should be given to German feelings in the presentation of motion pictures finds an answer in the fact that we are at war with Germany, and that persons who are offended by pictures which would offend Germany identify themselves as belonging to the other side. By this I do not mean offensive pictures, but pictures which are patriotic pictures. Offensive pictures should be more distasteful to Americans than to Germans or to German sympathizers.

Motion picture theaters have already responded with gratifying enthusiasm to the suggestions made to them by the Red Cross, the Food Administration and the Treasury Department in the Liberty Loan drive, but these responses have been more or less scattered, and it has seemed up to now to be impossible to get theaters to agree on a concerted plan. The Moving Picture World's suggestion that one night a week be devoted to enthusing the people by the use of patriotic pictures, patriotic music and patriotic decorations in behalf of any of the activities of the war, more particularly in crystalizing enthusiasm to a white heat in favor of our side of the contest is admirable in all its phases.

It is a pleasure to again extend congratulations and best wishes to the World for its fine idea.

RICHARD A. ROWLAND.

Goldwyn Says: "Of Tremendous Value."

I am immensely interested in the suggestion made by the Editor of the Moving Picture World that the motion picture theaters of America still further aid their Government in the successful prosecution of the war by holding a special Liberty Loan Night. Both the exhibitors and the producers are a unit in their loyalty to their country and the Administration which is directing the energies of our people. I feel that a special Liberty Loan Night—observed on the same date across the continent, if possible—will be of tremendous value to our Government. This involves, of course, as the Moving Picture World points out, the decoration of all theaters with our flag, a complete program of patriotic music, the liberal use of the newspapers, which already are bending their every energy to give wholesale exploitation to the selling of our national bond issues and our War Savings and Thrift stamps. I feel that great enthusiasm will be created and that the percentage of gross receipts devoted by exhibitors to the purchase of either Liberty Loan bonds, War Savings or Thrift stamps will amount to an enormous aggregate.

F. B. WARREN,
Vice-President Goldwyn Distributing Corporation.

Exhibitors Respond Early.

At a meeting of the Executive Committee of the Manhattan local of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League on Friday, March 1, Sam Spedon, special representative of the Moving Picture World, addressed the members on the World's plan to promote, in co-operation with the exhibitors, setting aside a special Liberty Loan Night or nights at their theaters during the next Liberty Loan drive to be made throughout the United States. The idea met with instant approval and enthusiasm.

David Weinstock voiced the views of the rest of the members by stating he thought in this way the support and co-operation which the exhibitors tendered the Government would be given greater emphasis.

Sydney S. Cohen said: "The World's plan would be a recorded evidence of the exhibitors' loyalty and patriotism in standing ready at all times to give to the Government the use of their screens and the privileges of their theater in promoting its work for the good and welfare of the people."

On motion made by John Manheimer, seconded by A. J. Wolf, and unanimously carried, the following resolution was adopted:

That we, the Executive Committee, recommend to the organization the plan suggested by the Moving Picture World, to support the Government in this next Liberty Loan drive, by setting aside a special night for that purpose.

The names of Executive Committee are: Sydney S. Cohen, Empire theater, 161st street and Westchester avenue, chairman; John Manheimer, Times theater, 42d street and Eighth avenue; Chas. O'Reilly, 68th Street Playhouse, 1164 Third avenue; Sol Coleman, Coleman theater, 745 Westchester avenue; David Weinstock, City Hall theater, 33 Park R w; Sidney Ascher, Wonderland theater, 2952 Third avenue; Gus Koenigswald, Sunset theater, 4705 Fifth avenue; Isaac Hartstall, Bunny theater, 314 Flatbush avenue, Brooklyn; C. R. Martineau, Hanover theater, 571 Fulton street; A. J. Wolf, Adelphi theater, Broadway and 89th street.

Manager Edel of the Strand Heads Exhibitors.

Heading the list of Exhibitors who have individually indorsed the Moving Picture World plan to boost the Liberty Loan is Harold Edel, managing director of the Strand theater, New York. Mr. Edel recites the activities of the Strand organization in behalf of the second Liberty Loan and intimates that he expects to carry out, if possible, a more strenuous campaign for the third loan. There is lots of encouragement in his letter which follows:

Editor Moving Picture World:

Dear Sir—The editorial in the Moving Picture World of March 9, calling the exhibitors' attention to the advent of another Liberty Loan, is a patriotic suggestion which is both timely and highly commendable.

During the two previous Liberty Loan drives, we endeavored in every possible way to further the movement. In the large Strand theater advertisements were embodied the line: "Buy a Liberty Bond." Appeals were flashed on our screen, and some of the best known ladies and gentlemen in the country addressed the audiences every afternoon and evening. The Strand theater program was largely composed of patriotic features and music of the kind that inspired and aroused patriotism.

It goes without saying that the Strand theater will be in the lead in the new Liberty Loan drive, as was the case formerly. I have given the matter a great deal of thought, and it is my desire, if possible, to conduct an even greater Liberty Loan propaganda this time.

I purpose to obtain as much new patriotic film material as possible. The musical program will be American throughout. The soloists will render rousing songs, the orchestra play inspiring music, and speakers of national fame will deliver stirring speeches. In addition to these features, the Strand program will contain a wellworded appeal.

I should like and hope to be able to do a great deal more than what I have stated above. I will use every means at my command and every suggestion from my staff or others, that will help to create a desire to buy Liberty Bonds. Where we cannot sell Bonds we will sell War Savings Stamps. If any visitor to the Strand theater, during the Liberty Loan drive fails to do his bit, we will not be to blame, I can assure you.

I may say in conclusion that the employees of the Strand theater answered the call to buy Liberty Bonds in splendid style on the two previous occasions. In many instances the owners of the Strand purchased the bonds for the employees and allowed them to make weekly payments for same. The Mitchel H. Mark Realty Corporation, owners and operators of the Strand, also bought a tidy amount of bonds on each previous occasion, and undoubtedly will do so again.

HAROLD EDEL,
Managing Director, Strand Theater.

Splendid Idea, Says Landau.

In presenting the World's plan to W. A. Landau, proprietor of the Heights theater, 150 Wadsworth avenue, New York City, Mr. Landau said: "It's a splendid idea and I shall be glad to cooperate with the Government in holding a Liberty Loan Night at my theater.

Let Us Have Your Indorsement.

As it will be impossible to interview personally many of the picture theater managers, we hope that all who are interested in the plan—and that should mean everyone—will write a brief letter stating their intention to get into the fight. This is the time to show your colors and to do what little you can to help our boys "over there."

Next week we will tell you of the material that has been assembled for "Liberty Loan" programs and where to get it. We are advised that there will be lots of pictures and slides for the purpose. The Committee on Public Information informs us that it has a catalogue of a thousand slides which will be available. This is in addition to many reels of motion pictures which have been made for this especial purpose.

Don't forget that this is an obligation that every exhibitor owes to himself and to his country. Come through with the strongest effort that you ever made.

Mutual Elects Board of Directors

Five New Financier Members Are Included in the List—Freuler Continues President.

THE Mutual Film Corporation announces from the office of John R. Freuler, president, in Chicago, the election of a new board of directors including five new financier members, representing and connected with several of the larger banking and investment houses of the middle west. The new Mutual directors include:

Charles Henry Bosworth, former president of the People's Trust and Savings Bank and former chairman of the board of directors and federal reserve agent of the Federal Reserve Bank of Chicago; William Tabor Abbott, lawyer and banker, vice-president of the Central Trust Company of Chicago; Walter Field McLellan, assistant federal reserve agent and secretary of the Federal Reserve Bank of Chicago; Isaac Compton Elston, Jr., investment broker, of 39 South La Salle street, largely interested in utility concerns, and Warren Gorrell, investment securities, 208 South La Salle street.

The new board of directors includes also James M. Sheldon, long associated with film enterprises, including the Randolph Film Corporation and the Empire All Star Corporation, of which he is president.

The other members of the board are John R. Freuler, president; Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Company, Inc.; John F. Cuneo, P. H. Davis, George W. Hall, J. W. Smith, banker of Fargo, N. D.; Dr. Wilbert Shallenberger, F. E. Kahn of New York and Crawford Livingston of New York.

"The board election represents a move for the strengthening of the Mutual's directorate, enabling us to further the execution of our firmly established policies of film distribution on a businesslike and effective basis," said President Freuler.

SEYMOUR SCHULBERG HAS A SISTER.

Master Seymour Wilson Schulberg is receiving the congratulations of his friends. So are his father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Schulberg. The staff of the Moving Picture World extend theirs, too.

You see, Master Seymour has a sister. Sonya Gladys Schulberg reached New York on February 20, tipping the scales at seven pounds. Her first utterance was an emphatic demand to see the latest Fairbanks and Hart pictures, remarking incidentally she always was strong for the real western stuff.

Latest reports are that Mrs. Schulberg and Sonya are doing splendidly.

HERMAN RIFKIN BUYS NEW ENGLAND RIGHTS.

Robert Priest, of the Arrow Film Corporation, announces that Herman Rifkin, the well-known exchangeman of Boston, has purchased the rights for New England of "Today" and "The Mad Lover." These are the subjects produced by Harry Rapf, purchased by Pathe, and being marketed on the state rights basis. Mr. Rifkin will have an important announcement to make shortly regarding his acquisitions that will be of interest to New England exhibitors.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

League Holds Regular Meeting in Boston

Asks Relief from Fuel Restrictions—Admit Non-Members Working on Exposition—Other Matters Discussed.

THE most important matters to come up at the regular business meeting of the Massachusetts and Rhode Island branches of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, at their Boston headquarters, were a plea to the Fuel Administration to have the 10 p. m. closing order for moving picture theaters canceled and an endorsement, on motion of Samuel Grant, that non-members of the League, who are doing special work in connection with the National Exposition, to be held in Boston this summer, be made special members of the League.

Jacob Lourie, manager of the Beacon theater, one of Boston's best downtown houses, voiced the sentiment that the ten o'clock closing order had outlived its purpose. President Michael J. Lyden appointed a committee of three to see Mr. Storrow, the Fuel Administrator. This committee included the president, Jacob Lourie, Stanley Sumner and Mr. Harris.

Samuel Grant, who is director of the coming National Exposition, asked the privilege of addressing the League in regard to allowing certain moving picture men, who at present are not handling films or film exchanges, to attend League meetings during the period that they are connected with the film exposition. He pointed out that he was not particular as to whether he be allowed a voice at such meetings, but was anxious to be present in order to get a line on what is taking place in the League. He said that for several months he would have a number of workers associated with him in handling the exposition and was anxious that these men also be familiar with League workings.

At the suggestion of President Lyden a motion was carried that such men as Mr. Grant desired be given the privilege of attending the regular League meetings. A special committee was appointed by the president to report at the next meeting with regard to the question of dues for such members. This committee includes Stanley Sumner, Harry I. Wasserman and Frank J. Howard.

President Lyden brought before the meeting the question of paying regular dues. He favored an amendment to the article in the League constitution calling for the payment of at least half a year's dues as an initiation fee. He said there was some doubt as to a member's right to take the floor in debate if he was in arrears in his dues. The matter was referred to the executive committee, and will be taken up at the next meeting.

A grievance committee, comprising three members, was formed. The committee consists of Ernest H. Horstmann, Jacob Lourie and President Michael J. Lyden.

Edward R. Gregory brought up the matter of paying the secretary for the work in connection with his office. The matter was left to a committee to report at the next meeting.

The appointing of a committee to wait upon the mayor of Boston relative to the reduction of the Sunday license fee for the Boston theaters, which was increased during the regime of James M. Curley, was discussed. President Lyden voiced the opinion that the exhibitors did not have a "ghost of a show" of securing a reduction of the present fee. It was voted to lay the matter upon the table for the present.

Those at the meeting included President Lyden, of the Dorchester theater; Harry I. Wasserman, Roxbury; Jacob Lourie, Beacon; Secretary Cornell, Hyde Park; Treasurer Gillman, Dorchester; Edward R. Gregory, Dorchester; Elmer R. Daniels, Lynn; Abraham Montague, East Boston; William Dowling, East Boston; Charles Ross, Boston; Harry Aiken, Boston; Samuel Grant, Boston; Nathan N. Gordon, Olympia; Mrs. Marcella Ayer, Boston; Stanley Sumner, Boston; Charles Hogdon, Middleboro; George A. Giles, Framingham; Charles Mailley, Brighton, and Charles Harris, Boston.

The largely attended meeting gave evidence of the great interest Boston exhibitors are taking in the mutual benefit of organization.

Sunday Closers Fail in Chillicothe

Ohio Ministers Unsuccessfully Appeal to Mayor and Military Authorities to Shut Theaters Near Cantonment.

CINCINNATI exhibitors, as well as film men, have been keenly interested in the detailed reports received from Chillicothe, where Camp Sherman, the cantonment of the Ohio National Army troops, is located, regarding the question of Sunday closing of theaters and other places of amusement. It will be recalled that it was at Chillicothe a year or so ago that the "blue stocking" element secured a legal decision construing an old Sunday closing statute remaining on the Ohio laws, and had the satisfaction of having a court ruling to the effect that the law was in effect and that it must be enforced. In spite of this decision, however, moving picture houses, as well as other theaters, have generally operated all over Ohio, including Chillicothe itself, since the army camp was located there; and it is only recently that the Chillicothe Ministerial Association, which originally started the trouble, has again endeavored to have the picture shows there closed, this time taking the ground that the shows were bad for the morals of the soldiers.

The force of this argument was somewhat weakened by the emphatic declaration of a Chillicothe minister, himself a member of the Ministerial Association, to the effect that he had attended picture shows in the town for three years and had yet to see a single picture which would not pass a committee on morals.

The fight continued, however, under the leadership of Rev. H. A. Straub of Ada, the walking delegate, so to speak, of the Lord's Day Association, who insists on the literal enforcement of the law. Dr. Straub endeavored to keep the Chillicothe Ministerial Association in the right, but struck a snag in the attitude of the mayor, who said that if the army authorities had no objection to this form of amusement for the soldiers on Sunday he would take no steps to close the theaters.

As General Frederick Perkins, commanding the cantonment, stated that he saw no reason why the soldiers should be deprived of an innocent means of entertainment on Sunday, being supported in this view by his provost marshal, there seems to be no immediate danger of Sunday closing in Chillicothe.

California Exhibitors Choose Officers

Alameda County Exhibitors' League Holds Annual Meeting in Oakland—Discuss Tax and Hold Election.

THE annual meeting of the Alameda County Exhibitors' League was held in the headquarters of the organization, in the St. Mark's Hotel, Oakland, Cal., on February 21. President H. L. Beach presided, and the roll call brought out the fact that all of the officers and most of the members were present. Secretary-Treasurer Will F. Krahn read the annual financial report, which showed that the organization was in a healthy shape financially.

A. E. King, chairman of the committee having the reel tax question in hand, outlined the work that had been done, and stated that all the data asked by Government officials, including bills and receipts, had been furnished, and that film exchange managers had been asked to appear and state their side of the case to the authorities. An early decision in the matter was believed to be possible.

The music tax question was discussed, but it developed that no one in this district was being called upon to pay royalties. The matter of joining the national organization was also touched upon, but no decision on this was reached, although President Beach expressed the opinion that there would doubtless be a need in the near future for more concerted action on the part of exhibitors than ever before.

The election of officers resulted as follows: President, H. L. Beach; vice-president, J. Hellman; secretary-treasurer, Will F. Krahn; directors, W. S. Smith, A. E. King, E. W. Scott, Emil Kehrlein and W H. Warnock. Following the gathering a luncheon was held.

Maryland Exhibitors Discuss Child Bill

Members of Woman's Civic League Confer With Baltimore Showmen Concerning Proposed Parent Measure

A SPECIAL meeting of the Maryland Exhibitors' League was held at the headquarters, 210 West Lexington street, on February 26. The object of the meeting was to plan what action would be taken by the exhibitors of Maryland to avert the passing of the bill introduced in the House at Annapolis by Representative League of Baltimore City which provides that no children under twelve years of age be admitted to moving picture theaters unless accompanied by a parent or legal guardian.

Frank Hornig, president of the league, presided and introduced Mrs. Robert Burton, chairman of the educational committee of the Woman's Civic League of Baltimore, and Mrs. W. R. C. Wood, executive secretary of the Civic League. Mrs. Burton is also chairman of the moving picture committee of the Civic League.

Mrs. Wood said she thought the Exhibitors' League of Maryland and the Woman's Civic League should really get together on the matter of children's matinees. "We have two thousand members from all sections of the city," she said, "and we all realize that there is good constructive work in good moving pictures." One of the ideas of the Civic League is that a theatre in each section of the city should run a Saturday morning matinee for children, and if the pictures which are to be shown at these performances could be guaranteed by the exhibitors the Civic League would recommend the pictures and she thought that this would carry weight. It is one of the purposes of the Civic League that godmothers, as they call them, be appointed in each section, who should be permitted to see that the condition of the theaters as to the ventilation and the subjects of the shows are all right and then recommend them to the other members of the league so that their children may be sent to these theaters.

Thomas D. Goldberg, manager of the Walbrook theater, objected to this suggestion, as it might reflect on the exhibitors to have these women inspect their theaters, as the theaters are already under the supervision of the police, the health department and the Grand Jury.

President Hornig then invited the Civic League, through the two members present, to come out with the exhibitors on the League bill which, if passed, might keep many children from attending the moving pictures and to attend the hearing with the exhibitors at Annapolis.

Mrs. Burton then suggested that the exhibitors have special moving pictures for their Saturday morning matinees, or any morning matinees for children.

Mr. Pacy said that it was necessary to go to Annapolis and speak against the League bill. J. J. Hartlove, manager of the Crescent theater, said he had seen Representative League and had asked him why he had introduced the bill into the House, and Mr. League said that he was not in favor of it.

"There is absolutely no need of the League bill," said Mr. Schlichter, "not only because we have censorship at the present time in Baltimore, but because we also have police laws which protect the public, and in reality if the bill is passed, the Civic League will be hurt as well as the exhibitors."

Mr. Schlichter then suggested that the exhibitors in all parts of Baltimore should talk to the clientele of their theaters as to just how detrimental this bill would prove. This, he said, he has been doing with the people at his theater. To the others I would suggest that they get slides made and show them on the screen to let the people know how detrimental this bill would be to their interests," he said, "and it would not be a bad idea to give the name of the legislators in each district and ask the people to send letters to them, opposing this bill. Explain to your patrons that it would affect their pocketbooks, for when this is explained to them it does a lot of good."

Thomas D. Goldberg then made a motion that a committee be appointed to find out how the Civic League stands on the matter as to the bill introduced by Representative League at Annapolis. This motion was finally approved, and President Hornig then appointed E. C. Sandell of the Lord Calvert theater, and J. J. Hartlove of the Crescent theater, on this committee.

Sam Spedon, of the Moving Picture World, who was present at the meeting, explained to the women of the Civic League how the same kind of a bill had been introduced in New York and how it had acted all right for a while, but lately the Board of Aldermen in that city had introduced an ordinance that no children be admitted to moving pictures unless such a theater was provided with a matron, at a salary of $12. He pointed out that the exhibitor would have to admit 240 children before the $12 would be made up.

With regard to the suggestion of the women from the Civic League relative to the godmothers in each section inspecting the theaters, Mr. Spedon suggested that the women be requested to come and look over the theater at any time they saw fit. Mr. Spedon declared that exhibitors were careful as to the shows they screened.

E. C. Sandell suggested that one reason why the Women's Civic League should oppose censorship and join hands with the exhibitors in their fight to repeal the censorship law in Maryland was that when it is wiped out the New York films can come into Maryland, and the programs of Mr. McQuire, which they think so much of, can then be easily shown in Baltimore.

A committee was appointed by President Hornig, which will devote time to investigating the best way to fight the League bill. Those appointed on this committee were Frank Durkee, Thomas D. Goldberg and J. Louis Rome.

Relative to the hearing on February 27, at Annapolis, for the opponents of the repealing of the Censor Law, this hearing was postponed until Wednesday, March 6.

Those who were present at the meeting included W. E. Stumpf, Louis Schlichter, E. C. Sandell, Frank H. Durkee, Milton Caplan, J. A. Winkle, G. H. A. Stroevel, B. Rosenbauer, Geo. R. Osborne, Star at Westminster, J. J. Hartlove, C. V. Eyer, W. M. Ginsberg, E. Schuck, W. A. Albers, M. T. Eser, C. W. Pacey, Louis A. DeHoff, T. D. Goldberg, F. A. Hornig, Eugene B. McCurdy, J. Louis Rome, A. C. Frey, Palace and Lyric of Frostburg and Grand of Eckhart, Md., and H. S. Trimble.

Protest on Children Patron Law

Toronto Exhibitors Send Deputation to Provincial Treasurer —Get Promise to Consider Change.

FOLLOWING the conviction of W. J. Holstein, proprietor of the Teck theater, 700 Queen street East, Toronto, by Magistrate Kingsford on the charge of permitting unaccompanied children under fifteen years of age to attend a performance at the theater some thirty exhibitors of Toronto waited upon T. W. McGarry, provincial treasurer, at the Parliament buildings, Toronto, on February 23.

The deputation asked for an amendment to the law covering the admission of children to a theater so that any adult over twenty-one years of age could take children to the show and that children under fifteen years of age could attend performances unattended by adults on holidays and on any weekday afternoon.

The recent conviction was cited as an instance of injustice possible under prevailing regulations. Mr. Holstein had been fined $20 and costs because he had permitted a man to bring three children into his theater and had not insisted that the children remain seated with the adult. The children went to the front seats, while the man took a place near the back. Magistrate Kingsford, in convicting the manager, had ruled that all children must be under the supervision of an adult the whole time that they are in a theater.

The deputation declared that such a regulation was impossible, and several exhibitors declared that they might as well abolish their matinee performances altogether.

Mr. McGarry was inclined to the belief that such a case would constitute a technical error only, and promised to consider a measure that would cover the point.

PLAN BIG MOVIE CARNIVAL IN SEATTLE.

Representatives from the Northwest Film Board of Trade met with the Seattle exhibitors belonging to the Washington Theater Managers' Association on February 20 to discuss plans for a big movie carnival. Although no definite plans have been announced the instigators of this idea promise that if it is accomplished at all it will be the biggest affair of its kind ever held in the West.

Fighting for Sunday Shows in Alabama

Birmingham Voters Petition for Referendum—Activities on Both Sides in Other Cities—Blue Laws Unpopular.

STIMULATED perhaps by the fact that the Sunday moving picture fight is in full sway in Birmingham, religious leaders in other Alabama cities and towns recently have been stirring up a continual turmoil regarding the antiquated Sunday "blue laws." The enforcement of these old statutes appears to have practically died out in a number of the Alabama towns, including Albany, Decatur and others. For a while even drug stores and newsstands were not permitted to open, and the past few Sundays have seen a return to the old order of things. With the masses the "blue laws" are unpopular in the extreme in Alabama. The Pastors' Union of Decatur resurrected the old laws some weeks ago, and have made a number of strong attempts to have the statutes enforced.

Petitions asking the Birmingham city commission to allow moving picture theaters on Sunday are being circulated, and over 1,000 names of prominent merchants, business and professional men of Birmingham at this writing have signed their names to the papers. When a sufficient number are procured the names will be presented to the city commission.

Only 1,500 signatures are required under the five-commissioner act to submit any question to a vote of the people, providing each of the signatures are qualified voters. Indications point to many thousands of signatures being attached to the petitions, thirty of which have been prepared.

The petitions will be refused by the city commission, and will then be turned over to the election commission to be checked, and if the required number is confirmed a referendum election will be called to settle the question of Sunday moving pictures. It is understood the Pastors' Union, which has been agitating the Sunday closing question, will continue its active fight toward closing the Birmingham moving picture houses on Sunday.

Co-operative Plan Up in North Carolina

League Will Meet on March 11—Committee Has Data Necessary for Action.

SECRETARY H. B. WARNER and President P. W. Wells have called the third monthly meeting of the North Carolina Exhibitors' League, to convene at the Selwyn Hotel, Charlotte, N. C., on Monday, March 11, at 10 a. m., this being a meeting at which final details of the co-operative booking office, to be opened in the near future, will be completed and all working plans set into operation.

Complete working details, contracts and data have been accumulated by the committee in charge, to be submitted to the board of directors at this meeting for final and full action so that the office can be opened without further delay to handle all film service from all exchanges for its members. A manager and assistant manager for the office will also be appointed at this meeting to maintain the head offices of the booking corporation at Charlotte, N. C., and a charter will be applied for at once, which will allow the office the privilege of buying, leasing and selling, also producing, motion pictures and conducting such other business as is usually conducted in connection with a film exchange, including the handling of a large supply depot at Charlotte, also upon a co-operative basis.

Representatives of Famous Players-Lasky, Select and Fox exchanges doing business in North Carolina have notified prominent exhibitors that they have positive instructions from their head offices not to recognize any co-operative or affiliated booking offices in their territory, and as the working plans for the North Carolina office are aimed to compel members to play no service except that which is booked through the office it is very likely that many film representatives will attend the Charlotte meeting.

Broader League in Southern Ohio

Plan Amalgamation of Miami Valley Exhibitors' League with All Nearby Organizations.

AN important announcement was made in Dayton by Al. Kinzeller, secretary of the Miami Valley Exhibitors' League, of the proposed merger of all southern Ohio exhibitors in one organization, which would include all towns from Lima on the north to Hamilton on the south. This is a large territory, and if the arrangements are perfected it will no doubt make the Miami Valley Exhibitors' League one of the largest.

The move will include many small towns, which, according to Mr. Kinzeller, are as important as the larger cities. Some of the more important towns included in the new move are Springfield, Hamilton, Lima, Celina, Piqua, Bellefountaine, Urbana, Middletown, Franklin, Miamisburg and Covington.

The new organization will work for closer co-operation among the several exhibitors. The central office will be in Dayton. A committee will be appointed to visit every town and city of importance in the new territory to explain the plan fully to all new members. All the details are not completed as yet, but the plan in rough is worked out.

Manitoba Amusement Tax in Effect

Beginning March 1 Patrons Will Pay from 1 to 25 Cents on Tickets Costing from 5 Cents to $2.50.

WORD has been received in Toronto that the amusement tax act went into force in Manitoba on March 1. This provides for a graduated scale of taxes, from one cent to twenty-five cents, on tickets from 5 cents to $2.50.

The first collection of the tax will be made on April 1, it is announced. The tax will be collected by means of stamps, which will be sold to exhibitors by the government monthly. The administration of the act has been placed in the hands of J. H. Willoughby, formerly chairman of the Manitoba Board of Censors, who has been succeeded in that position by T. A. D. Bevington. Walter Deering, formerly of the staff of the Walker theater, Winnipeg, has been appointed to administer various details of the act in Winnipeg under the supervision of Mr. Willoughby.

CENSORSHIP BEATEN IN NEW JERSEY.

A bill introduced by Assemblyman Roberts of Burlington County, N. J., to create a board of censorship of three members, each to receive $2,500 annually, which, with other necessary expenditures, was to be paid by a tax upon the picture men, was defeated in the Assembly last week.

Minorty Leader Simpson spoke against the bill, declaring it to be an interference with the rights of the individual. Mr. Simpson pointed out that New Jersey, next to California, was the largest moving picture State in the country. He said that the imposition of an additional tax on the producers was unjust and unfair, in view of the fact that they are now paying so many taxes.

Mr. Roberts alone spoke for the bill, saying it was a moral necessity. He was recorded in the negative so that he might be able to recall the bill at a later time.

Screeners Enthuse Over Rare Singing

Wilfred Glenn Stirs Film Men Gathered at Italian Dinner —Collectors Keith and Eisner Talk of Income Tax.

THERE were some surprises for the members of the Screen Club gathered at their clubrooms on the evening of Saturday, March 2, for an Italian dinner. Chief among these was the singing of Wilfred Glenn, who by competent authorities is credited with the possession of one of the finest basso profundo voices in America. Any one of the hundred men present at Screener Mario Majeroni's feast of rare spaghetti, of curry and rice and of chops will swear to the truth of the statement. Mr. Glenn aroused high enthusiasm by his singing of "On the Road to Mandalay." Then came the Drinking Song. At its finish every man was on his feet and cheering. The same scene was repeated at the conclusion also of "Simon the Cellarer." Mr. Glenn was accompanied by Arthur Leonard, organist of the Central Methodist Church of Yonkers. Mr. Leonard also officiated for Jack Harvey, chairman of the entertainment committee, who was called on to sing "For You Alone" and "Mother Machree," which he did in his usual finished manner. Fred Smythe, too, sang finely and Dan Mason told stories phrased in his inimitable dialect.

At the end of the dinner President Joe Farnham related experiences of seven months in the war zone, reminiscences of journeys from Verdun to the sea. The president introduced Henry P. Keith, collector of internal revenue for Long Island, who described some of the outstanding features of the income tax. Mr. Keith was followed by Mark Eisner, who collects for Uncle Sam from Fourteenth street, Manhattan, to Albany. Mr. Eisner spoke briefly and then invited his fellow-diners to ask questions on mooted points —and they did.

The occasion was declared to rank high in the list of Screen Club affairs. Chef Majeroni and his competent assistants were the recipients of hearty praise for their culinary accomplishments—which were executed in rather cramped quarters at that.

Greene Says Business Clouds Are Passing

Famous Players' Official Reviews Conditions and Points Out Why the Picture Is Looking Up.

ACCORDING to Walter E. Greene, managing director of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in charge of the Distribution Department, the darkest clouds have now rolled by as far as exhibitors are concerned, for business generally throughout the country is now moving forward with an added impetus and the breaking up of a severe winter has already evidenced a much brighter view than has been disclosed since the beginning of the new year.

"The passing of 'heatless days' and the abnormally cold weather which has gripped the country throughout the entire winter has already brought about a reaction," says Mr. Greene, "and the rapidity with which business has increased after being relieved of the deterrent factors is added proof of its rock-ribbed foundation and its resiliency.

"The next few months promise to be the banner season as compared with similar periods in the past. The more reassuring view of the crisis in Europe, the successful landing of countless American troops, as announced by the Secretary of War, as well as the loosening up of railroad congestion and the recision of embargoes in connection with the advent of milder weather, will benefit the entire world of amusements and the motion picture in particular.

"The maintenance of a high price for wheat and the prediction that it will be increased slightly, as well as the unprecedented demand for farm products, are spelling prosperity for the agricultural districts.

"In the manufacturing field everything is being speeded up and factories are attempting to work twenty-four hours a day. For every hour that has been lost in the past few months two will be made up in the near future. There is no problem of unemployment, but rather a shortage of men, and the wage scale is the highest the country has ever known.

"There is no scarcity of money, and the limitations of food and clothing are patriotic ones. Conservation of food is asked by the government in order that our soldiers may be fed and our allies assisted. This means that every pound of foodstuffs will find a ready sale at good prices.

"The public has been requested to refrain from extravagance in clothing in order to divert the material for the making of garments for our soldiers. Manufacturing industries are asked to decrease their outputs of regular products so that the metals can be used for war purposes.

"All these economies are the result of the bullish conditions so vast that the general mind has not yet fully grasped them. The country is experiencing underproduction, notwithstanding that all its vast resources are being called upon. Thus, while unprecedented prosperity in dollars and cents exists, the public is asked not to eat unnecessarily or clothe itself extravagantly.

"This means a boon for moving pictures, for it has been clearly established for centuries that amusement is essential to the well being of the human race, and the photoplay is the favorite entertainment. Under the strain of the war and forced industrial conditions, the motion picture is the safety valve for an overwrought people, who can conserve their health and happiness with its pleasant and diverting entertainment.

"As the industrial lines are bounding forward in renewed and increasing activities, so will the motion picture become enlarged in the new order of things, and it is up to the exhibitor to brighten up his house, increase his advertising and wear his best smile to welcome the multitudes that will come to his house in search of amusement."

Santa Barbara to be Russell's Home

New Producer's Pictures Will Be Made at American Studios, Where He Has Been for Three Years.

ALL pictures to be made by the William Russell Productions will be done at the American Film Company Studios at Santa Barbara. The technical work will be done at the laboratories of the American at Chicago.

"Mr. Russell's most brilliant screen successes were made in the American Film studio, under our direction," said President Hutchinson, "and it was natural that after a thorough investigation into the merits of different locations and studios he should wish to have his new pictures made under the same highly desirable conditions. He feels that with the unusual equipment and facilities of the American the William Russell Productions are starting out under auspicious surroundings.

"We will doubtless also contract to supply an American director for the direction of Mr. Russell's new pictures. Stephen Fox, who will write exclusively for Mr. Russell and for the American, is now at work on a novel idea for a comedy-drama for Mr. Russell, in which some surprising climaxes will be shown, affording opportunity to picturize the vivid Russell personality."

Margaret Mayo Out of Goldwyn Position

Well-Known Playwright Resigns as Scenario Head to Put on Musical Farce.

MARGARET MAYO has resigned as head of the scenario department of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. Before severing her connection in that capacity, however, she was instrumental in bringing to the department Elizabeth Jordan, late of Harper's, and Harry Durant, formerly of the Famous Players, it being her theory that the greatest success in the selection and creation of screen stories is to be obtained through a combination of the masculine and feminine point of view.

Miss Mayo counts the year she devoted exclusively to picture work as the most strenuous of her life. Upon her devolved the task of organizing the scenario department of the big film corporation. She is leaving in order to have more time to devote to the forthcoming production of "Rock-a-Bye-Baby," a musical play which has been adapted from her farce, "Baby Mine," and which Selwyn & Company are to produce this spring.

Miss Mayo, however, is by no means severing all connection with motion picture work. At the present moment she is doing considerable in the preparation of three new stories for special feature propaganda pictures, with which she expects actively to associate herself as soon as "Rock-a-Bye-Baby" is safely launched.

Milton E. Hoffman, Studio Manager

WITH the increasing activities at the studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in Hollywood, Cal., where the western productions of Paramount and Artcraft pictures are being made, the position of studio manager has become of prime importance. Milton E. Hoffman occupies this important post, which carries with it the care of five hundred employees. To gain an idea of the multitudinous duties required of Mr. Hoffman, it is necessary to know the routine which is followed.

Milton E. Hoffman.

The story is forwarded from the New York office to Frank E. Woods, head of the scenario department in the west, to be read. If it meets with his approval and seems adapted to some one star, he and Mr. Hoffman arrange when work shall start on the production, and a director is assigned to the work. Mr. Woods then puts a continuity writer on the story, and after it is completed copies are given to the departmental heads. After the scenes have all been taken, Mr. Woods, the director and Mr. Hoffman get together and decide on the cutting, the titles, etc.

The possibilities of hitches in the course of production are innumerable, and many things do happen, regardless of how well oiled the machinery is kept. When these difficulties come up the studio manager is very much in demand, and it is his business to be the "fixer" for the organization.

Arriving at his desk early in the morning, Hoffman disposes of the mass of letters and telegrams and telephone calls and makes a round of the studio, and confers with the chiefs. His travel through the studio is usually stopped every ten feet by some one with a query, but he goes through the day unruffled. He has systematized his organization so as to obtain a maximum of efficiency with a minimum of friction, but no man regards him as a "boss"—he is and prefers to be considered "one of the boys."

Government Films Show Army Training

Every Phase of Uncle Sam's Preparation for War Reflected in One and Two Reel Pictures, Officially Produced.

TWENTY reels of official war films were shown to a representative of the Moving Picture World in Miles' Theaterette the other day through the courtesy of Walter A. Niebuhr, who for some time has been in New York organizing local operations for the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information. All of these subjects were made under United States Government supervision, with members of the new National Army or recruits in the naval branch of the service performing their drills and various tasks exactly as required in these times of war.

Nine different subjects were thrown upon the screen, representing less than half of the output that has already been made. Every day the Division of Films is working on other subjects, and so will the task of reflecting war activities go forward until the day of victory.

Here are the subjects, all ready for distribution, many of them having been publicly exhibited in different parts of the country. The exact titles are not in all cases given, but a general idea is conveyed in the following descriptions:

1. 1917 Recruit—Maneuvers and training of America's great Liberty Army.

2. Gas and Fire—Maneuvers of Engineers, showing the use of gas and fire in war.

3. Soldiers of the Sea—Marines in action on sea and land.

4. Spirit of 1917—Showing an attack of the Jackies on the Sammies at Lake Bluff.

5. Submarine—Showing types of submarine used by navy and life and maneuvers on dreadnoughts.

6. Messengers of Mercy—Two-real feature, showing the training of doctors in their effort to receive commissions in the army. Actual scenes of what they have to go through on the battleground.

7. Torpedo—Depicting the loading of torpedoes; torpedo boats in action; firing of torpedoes and "wake of death."

8. Ready for the Fight—Maneuvers of the cavalry.

9. Ships for Uncle Sam—A two-reel feature, depicting scenes of the actual building and making of warships and vessels.

No adequate description of the impressions conveyed by these displays can be given short of a detailed reference to each subject that want of space prohibits. Every foot of film will serve as an inspiration to patriotism and bring a flush of pride to the cheek of every true American who shall behold them. Every subject is complete in its single reel, while "Messengers of Mercy" and "Ships for Uncle Sam" requires two reels to tell their inspiring story.

In viewing twenty reels at one session every branch of training, every style of drilling and battle practice, and every service to which the manhood of America is devoting itself is reflected in splendid photography. Nobody is "acting"; every individual in each subject is working at his appointed task, active in actual drill or practice. The evidence of splendid discipline and alertness in training is shown in every move men and officers make in proceeding with their work.

With proper and patriotic co-operation from exhibitors the Government will have in these and other pictures, still to be released, an assistance in co-ordinating its forces and an aid to awakening patriotism that will be an inestimable benefit in hastening peace through victory over the Hun. The exhibitor who does not arrange for regular and consecutive showings of these and all other pictures the Government will place at his service is neglecting a work that will bring to him an individual credit far greater than any other use to which he may put his theater.

The pictures will not disturb any other arrangement the exhibitor or exchange manager may have made. They do not conflict with anything else that may be shown upon the screen, because they are different from any news weekly or any other pictures that were ever run through a projecting machine. They are Uncle Sam's pictorial history of what he has done, is doing and will do to make it possible for exhibitors and the rest of us to run business—in future, as we have in the past—as freemen and not as serfs in a vassal state.

When it comes time to put on a "Liberty Loan Night" in your theater these Government pictures will be just the ticket; just the thing to use as an adjunct to a regular or prearranged entertainment. The Government is ready with the films, offering them freely to showmen who have enterprise enough to ask for them.

Canada Ready for Federal Censorship

Max Finklestein Says He Finds Sentiment in West Favorable—Authorities Seek Knowledge of Problems.

ACCORDING to Max Finkelstein, the Winnipeg "film lawyer," national censorship of moving pictures in Canada is nearer to a reality than most exhibitors imagine. While in Toronto recently he declared that three of the four Western provinces were ready to pass up the censorship of films providing the work was taken over by the Federal Government and providing they were permitted to secure new revenue to replace censorship fees. He had taken it upon himself to interview various officials in the Canadian West and had obtained favorable answers from them after he had explained the many disadvantages of provincial censorships. He believed that if one leader of the industry in the Canadian East undertook the same missionary work he would find the same official feeling, thus making practically the whole country ready to adopt measures for Federal censoring. The matter is receiving the thoughtful consideration of Toronto exchange managers.

Mr. Finkelstein, visiting Ottawa on official business, found that Federal officials knew practically nothing about the adverse conditions under which films are now being marketed in the Dominion on account of varying opinions on the part of many provincial censor boards. This is where exchange managers and exhibitors have been making a big mistake, he declared. They should be laying this grievance before members of the Federal Government at every opportunity.

Mr. Finkelstein expressed his willingness to represent both exchange and theater interests of the West in a big movement for national censorship in Canada. Ontario and Quebec should each have one man to co-operate with him in organizing a campaign. Mr. Finkelstein enjoys the distinction of representing both the exchange and theater interests in a legal way in Manitoba. He acts for both sides of the house, as it were, and there are numerous occasions when he can act as an arbitrator in disputes over booking contracts, prices and other details of the business. The result is that the internal affairs of the film business in Manitoba are running smoothly.

Censorship Fees in Saskatchewan.

In Saskatchewan the government has discovered several ways of increasing its revenue from the moving picture business through the censoring of films. Not only has the Saskatchewan Censor Board, which consists of one man, been authorized to collect a fee of $1 a reel for the censoring of all usual films, but a fee is also charged for the examination of advertisement films. For advertising films of less than 100 feet in length a charge of 50c. is made; a fee of $1 is charged for advertising films of 100 to 500 feet and $2 is the censor fee from advertising films of from 500 to 1,000 feet. The owners of advertisement films are also required to pay a license fee of $5 per annum.

The government has also decided to charge 15 cents each for the censoring of slides, while the censor board is authorized to impose a fee of $5 a reel for censoring the films of "itinerant or special feature exhibitors." Any owner or lessee traveling with a special feature or features not belonging to any film exchange licensed in Saskatchewan is required to pay a special license fee of $50. A qualified projection machine operator, non-resident in Saskatchewan, traveling with a film road show, must obtain a license from the provincial secretary. This license is good for two months and costs $2. The operator must show proof that he is a qualified man.

These regulations are entirely distinct from the rules providing for the payment of annual fees by all theaters and exchanges, etc., permanently located within the province. The theater license cost from $50 to $250 a year, while film exchanges must pay an annual fee of $200. Every operator in the province is required to pay $10 a year and apprentices pay $5 for the six months that they are learning to become operators.

"THE HIDDEN HAND" GOES TO THE WORLD.

Through arrangements concluded by the export and trading department of the Pathe organization, "The Hidden Hand," the serial starring Doris Kenyon, Sheldon Lewis, Arline Pretty and Mahlon Hamilton will be shown throughout the world.

Contracts have been closed for the presentation of this picture throughout the Far East, China, Singapore, Strait Settlements, India, Philippines, East Indies, Japan, Australasia, Mexico, West Indies, Brazil, Argentine, Uruguay, Paraguay, Chile, Peru, Bolivia and the other South American republics, England and its colonies, France, Italy, Spain, the Scandinavian countries—Sweden, Denmark and Norway.

Erecting Model Studio at Minnehaha Park

Plant of Washington Motion Picture Corporation Nearing Completion—Tyrone Power to Be Star of First Production—Location Affords Picturesque Scenes.

RESIDENTS of Spokane, Washington, and the surrounding towns are looking forward with much interest to production of the first big moving picture to be made at the plant of the Washington Motion Picture Corporation in Minnehaha Park, in which Tyrone Power is to be starred. Construction work is to be completed about April 10. C. J. Ward, general manager of the company, announces that shortly following the completion of construction work the equipment will be installed and laboratories will be fitted for the production work. Speaking in a general way of the details Mr. Ward said:

"In April we shall have a modern and efficient plant in Spokane, ready to begin the production of photoplays. With the completion of our stages our corporation will have one of the most convenient studios to work in to be found anywhere in the industry. The administration building has on the first floor the general offices of the company for the general manager, secretary, director of productions, continuity editor, auditing and bookkeeping. There is a large reception lobby for callers, with a drinking fountain, fireplace and comfortable chairs. In the basement of the building will be a heating plant, supplying the entire group of buildings. The second floor of this building will be taken up entirely by the dressing rooms. A covered passageway is to allow the performers to go from their dressing rooms to the stages, a great convenience at all times, and particularly during stormy weather.

"Our mechanical buildings will contain, on the first floor, the laboratory, consisting of special rooms for developing, drying, printing, cutting and assembling films. There is a room for chemicals and a separate department for still photography, also a projecting room, which will have a reinforced concrete film vault. Space is provided on this floor for a restaurant for the employees and visitors. On the second floor of this building is a department for the cameramen, the office of the technical director and the stage manager, wardrobe and costume department. Here also is the property room, cabinet shop and a spacious dressing hall for extra people.

"Under construction is another building, 60 by 100 feet, with a 32-foot ceiling, which will contain (in the front) the scenic artist's room. The larger part will be utilized for the indoor stage. Directly in front of the mechanical building will be the outdoor stage, 60 by 80 feet in size. In the rear of the group of buildings we shall erect a garage to take care of the company's autos."

The plant is located near the Spokane River, and there will be no difficulty in getting even the most thrilling mountain or precipice scenes near at hand.

Titan Expects to Produce in April

New Spokane Company Will Be Under the General Management of Frank Montgomery.

THE Titan Feature Photoplay Company has disposed of its 50,000 shares of stock at 50 cents a share and is now selling the 50,000 shares of the 75-cent stock, all having a par value of $1 a share and being common stock, according to the statement of J. Don Alexander, president of the company.

A. Anderson, Jr., has been appointed superintendent of the company and has moved to what has been named Titan City, on the bluffs and prairie in the southwest section of the city, where the Titan has established headquarters for its producing work.

C. L. Mayo, a director and the underwriter of the company, also of the Allied Film Company, a company which will make educational films to be released by the Titan company, gave a dinner at Davenport's, February 20, for the officers of the two companies.

Mr. Mayo announces that Frank Montgomery has been engaged as general manager of the Titan company and that he will direct the productions, which the company expects to have started in April.

KENNETH HODKINSON RECOVERS.

Kenneth Hodkinson, son of W. W. Hodkinson, who has been actively connected in an executive capacity with his father for a number of years, is recovering from a slight attack of appendicitis. Mr. Hodkinson was taken ill shortly after his father started on his western trip and it was thought at that time that an operation would be necessary. He has recovered sufficiently to be at his office, however, and his physicians believe him to be out of danger.

New Concern Elects Officers

W. L. Sherrill Chosen President of the Producers and Exhibitors-Affiliated.

AT a meeting held February 25 the officers of the Producers and Exhibitors-Affiliated were elected by the eight independent producers, who plan to market their pictures from manufacturer to exhibitor direct. They are as follows:

William L. Sherrill, president; L. Lawrence Weber, vice-president; Joseph A. Golden, secretary and treasurer; I. E. Chadwick, Lester Park, L. Lawrence Weber and C. C. Pettijohn, executive committee.

These officials, with the exception of C. C. Pettijohn, who is the general manager, are the producers who form the company. William L. Sherrill is president of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, Mr. Golden of Triumph, Mr. Weber of L. Lawrence Weber Photodramas, Mr. Park of Lillian Walker Productions, and I. E. Chadwick of Rialto Pictures Corporation. The remaining producers who have joined the plan are Herbert Brenon, Harry Rapf and Shubert, Hammerstein and Ince. The plan adopted by these independent producers is to eliminate exchanges by having a committee of exhibitors arrange their own bookings in each state and also to share in the profits of each picture. It contemplates the release of one picture a week.

Bradford Is Triangle's Chicago Man

RALPH BRADFORD, of Minneapolis, returns to Chicago this week to take charge of the Triangle offices, in the Mallers Building. Mr. Bradford is one of the best known exchange managers in this section and was manager of the Chicago exchange of the Mutual for two years until he went to Minneapolis and opened up the Triangle exchange there.

After successfully conducting the Triangle offices in Minneapolis for eighteen months, Mr. Bradford was selected to open the Goldwyn exchange in Minneapolis, and only resigned last week to accept the alluring Triangle offer in Chicago.

Ralph Bradford.

While the exhibitors in the Chicago territory will welcome him back with open arms, the Northwest exhibitors have suffered a distinct loss, and very much regret to see Ralph Bradford leave their territory.

Manager Bradford is a clean cut, fair-minded, energetic film exchange manager and with a host of friends among the exhibitors will assuredly make a tremendous success of Triangle in the Chicago territory. He was born in Bremen, Ohio, in 1885; is a high school and business college graduate, and received his early film training by business associations with C. J. Hite and R. C. Seery.

DERHAM HAS EXCITING TRIP.

J. A. Derham, controller for Select Pictures Corporation, has returned from a visit to several of the branches of that company and reports a very satisfactory financial system in operation throughout. "Business is picking up all along the line," says Mr. Derham, "and Select's exchange managers are seeing to it that we get our full share. Otherwise, I certainly did have a most exciting trip. On two occasions the train just preceding mine was wrecked completely. At Niles City, Neb., we were held up six hours while the wrecking crew cleared the tracks of a derailed train; and on the Missouri, Kansas and Texas the engine of the train before mine ran off the tracks, killing the engineer and the fireman, but none of the passengers. My lucky star was surely with me on this trip."

Pathe Prepares Mass of Exhibitor Aids

"The House of Hate" Serial Will Go Before Public with Advertising Campaign of Great Originality to Focus Attention.

NOT counting a few serials that have failed to live completely up to expectations, Pathe is preparing to release its eighteenth chapter-film that carries prospects of being a "hit"—"The House of Hate," ready for general distribution starting March 10. There have been campaigns of advertising behind other serials, many times and oft, but the claims for the new Pathe offering, that the means to wide publicity for "The House of Hate" will be radical in novelty and efficiency, are easily allowable.

The World representative listened to Tarleton Winchester's presentation of the Pathe plans and was shown numerous examples of the advertising material; campaign books, press sheets, wall and window work, publicity novelties and details of newspaper publicity were presented by the Pathe serial publicity manager with the resulting conviction that Pathe means business—for the exhibitor. If the managers who book "The House of Hate" will use with intelligence and energy the means to profitable ends that Pathe will provide, the new Pearl White story will be "continued-in-our-next" by showmen, greatly to the advantage of all concerned.

"Having the story, the star, the director, the supporting company and the proper sequence of 'punch' episodes," said Mr. Winchester, "we have prepared aids to the exhibitor that will supply him with the means to embrace his money-making opportunity. Mr. Berst has told us to go ahead and make the most of our ingenuity for establishing a record on 'The House of Hate,' and we are going after some hard records to outdistance."

The basic details of the new serial include Pearl White, star of many Pathe chapter stories; Antonio Moreno, her featured support; production by Astra Film Corporation; direction by George Seitz, who wrote "The Iron Claw" and directed "The Fatal Ring," and a series of episodes that are intended to build up to an exciting conclusion for each issue and a punch to combine all the thrills in the final outcome. Charles Logue and Arthur B. Reeves wrote the story, which Bertram Millhauser scenarioized.

Exhibitors who are within travel distance of Pathe exchanges have the opportunity of witnessing a "sales reel" embodying some of the "punches" before they sign contract; showmen who cannot see this reel will be expected to bank on the serial reputation of Pathe for their assurance of an attraction to draw the crowds. Speaking in round figures of the cash popularity of Pearl White the Pathe announcements state that the public in this country alone has paid twenty-five million dollars to see her in "The Perils of Pauline," "The Exploits of Elaine," the two other "Elaine" serials; "The Iron Claw," "Pearl of the Army" and "The Fatal Ring." That's a lot of money, even when counted in these days of war billions.

Showmen will have observed how extensively the trade paper advertising campaign on "The House of Hate" has been carried forward. Burton Rice, an artist who has established a reputation in the specific line of film art work, has been furnishing striking designs for two-color inserts in The World. These inserts preceded a flow of advance work mailed to exhibitors which has already begun and will continue for weeks hereafter.

The first piece of mail matter was effectively designed with Pearl White shown on the front cover and "The Hooded Terror" on the back. This "mystery fellow," by the way, has been intrusted with the work of holding together the strands of the plot and he will be "played up" in all advertising that will bear an illustration. From the text and cuts that this advance advertising contained showmen could gain a good idea of what is coming their way.

Campaign books have been issued in two parts—covering the first and last half of the serial. Part one contains advertising and press work, applying to each of the seven first chapters. "How to Put It Over" is also detailed in the first section of the publicity book, and suggestions have been carefully worked out to aid, in a common sense way, the exploitation of the attraction. Newspaper cuts, mats and special stories are stacked up in tiers at Pathe's waiting to be released. Program aids, cuts, and "stunts" galore will be among the helps Pathe will supply to exhibitors.

Rather novel is the idea for "throw aways," designed in illustrated herald form to whet the appetites of the fans who shall gaze upon the striking cuts and be enticed by the "punch" paragraphs that tell about "The House of Mystery." The back of this four-page herald is blank and Pathe has advanced an idea which will give the exhibitor his heralds free and a possible profit. There is room for local advertisers to share Page 4 and still give the theater lots of room for announcements.

Novelty that will also engage attention is a paper house, sent to exhibitors in "knocked-down" form. When unfolded this paper house is arranged to hang with an electric light globe within, its transparent sides showing Pearl White's picture and the "Masked Terror." The low price will give exhibitors a chance to supply merchants and shopkeepers with this attractive effect. There will be lithographs and special art work for posting, and a series of newspaper stories written especially for the different class of dailies to which they will be sent.

Pathe's advertising and press forces seem to have been taking advantage of the lightless nights by burning the candle of industry, and have kept themselves warm on Garfield Mondays by hustling ahead the aids that have been prepared for exhibitors.

N. A. M. P. I. LAUNCHES MEMBERSHIP DRIVE.

Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, is launching a vigorous drive for new members. Paralta is the first company to be brought in by the new campaign for support, Carl Anderson, president of Paralta, having wired an acceptance from Los Angeles.

The association now includes eighty-two producing companies, thus representing 90 per cent. of the film manufacturers of the country. It is equally representative of the other branches of the industry, and it is the purpose to bring the association up to the 100 per cent. mark within the next thirty days.

"The call of patriotism," says Mr. Elliott, in outlining his membership drive, "alone should bring the few companies which are affiliated into the association, which includes the producing, distributing, exhibiting and equipment making divisions of the business. The National Association is doing vital war-time work. The organization helped to swing over the two Liberty Loans, and is proving a vital aid to Food Administrator Hoover. It is also doing its bit in behalf of the war saving stamp drive. President Wilson, through the National Association, has officially recognized the tremendous value of the film and screen in war time for carrying Government messages to the people.

"With the third Liberty Loan about to be launched," continues Mr. Elliott, "the National Association should be able to put the weight of the whole industry behind its efforts to aid the Government win the war."

"At this critical time our organization should include every important company connected in any way with the motion picture industry. Aside from the patriotic need of joining the national body in order to help Uncle Sam in a united way it is now absolutely necessary as a protective measure. Various factions in Maryland, New Jersey, Virginia and other states are taking advantage of the war to inaugurate movements tending towards censorship and closing the picture theaters on Sunday. The industry, to successfully combat these evils, must present an absolutely united front. One person can do little alone, but with every one in the motion picture business working together it will be impossible for any one to take advantage of haphazard war-time legislation.

"The motion picture must follow the lead of Uncle Sam and unite every branch in order to win the fight for film democracy; to defeat any autocracy which demands that the entertainment of the masses be censored or that theaters be closed on one day out of seven."

WORKING FOR FIFTEEN AND TWO CENT COINS.

The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry has renewed its campaign for a fifteen-cent coin. The American Newspaper Publishers' Association is now agitating for the issuing of a two-cent coin, and it is not improbable that the national motion picture and newspaper organizations will co-operate in their respective efforts. Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, is in communication with the executive officials of the American Newspaper Publishers Association with a view towards an active co-operation in this respect.

The recent advance in price of practically all newspapers of the country to two cents is the cause of the publishers' drive for the new coin as a convenience to the public. The Government has produced a two-cent piece in the past and a return to this coin would really be a reissue.

Liberty Loan Picture Is Completed

"The Spirit of the Red Cross" to Be Shown in all Motion Picture Theaters During Weeks of Third Patriotic War Fund Drive.

THE company of players who went South with Jack Eaton to produce the special Red Cross film have returned to New York after completing their exteriors at New Orleans and at Camp Shelby. The scenario by James Montgomery Flagg called for scenes in a French city that could only be truthfully portrayed in the French quarters of New Orleans. The War Department's co-operation enabled Mr. Eaton to have the regular army troops from Jackson Barracks, Mississippi, for his French city scenes in New Orleans. With Mr. Eaton were Mr. Sniffen of the Third War Fund Publicity Committee, and Mr. and Mrs. James Montgomery Flagg. The rest of the party included Ray McKee, who plays the part of Sam Prescott, an American private in France; Peggy Adams, the American Red Cross Nurse; Saul Harrison, director; George Lane, cameraman, and Harry Grippe, an assistant to Mr. Harrison.

From New Orleans the party went to Camp Shelby at Hattiesburg, Miss., where 40,000 men, formerly the National guardsmen of Indiana, Kentucky and West Virginia, are in training. They produced trench warfare scenes here, and by the use of dynamite and large quantities of T. N. T., secured realistic effects, blowing up whole lines of trenches.

The interiors of the picture have been completed at the Biograph Studio in New York, which included some private home sets, a true portrayal of a Red Cross Canteen in France, and interiors of front line dugouts.

Mr. Flagg in his own inimitable way has sketched some truly artistic pictorial titles which will put this single-reel love and patriotic story in a distinctive "Feature Class."

This reel will be booked in all theaters free, and the means of distribution will be announced at an early date.

Hatrick to Photograph World-War Fighters

International Film Service Official to Represent George Creel on American Battlefields.

EDGAR B. HATRICK, a pioneer in the news reel field, will sail for France in a few days to make motion pictures of the European battlefields for the Committee of Public Information and the American Red Cross. Mr. Hatrick's mission is a most important one. He acts as a special representative of George Creel, director of the Bureau of Information, and carries with him credentials from Secretary of War Baker and a score of other heads of departments of the administration.

Edgar B. Hatrick.

Mr. Hatrick is secretary of the International Film Service Company and in charge of the news reel, educational, cartoon and still photograph departments. He has been given a six months' leave of absence by William Randolph Hearst in order to do this work for the Government. He will be accompanied abroad by C. J. Hubbell, who will act as his cameraman. Mr. Hubbell was personally selected by Mr. Hatrick because of his long and varied experience in news cinematography all over the world.

More than one hundred of Mr. Hatrick's associates in the Hearst organization tendered him a dinner on Tuesday night, February 26. The occasion was a complete surprise to Mr. Hatrick, he having been detained at the offices of the International by C. F. Zittel, the general manager, until the dining room was filled by his friends. He was then hurried to Reisenweber's by Mr. Zittel on the pretext of an important conference with several Government officials. The lights in the dining room were turned out as he stepped from the elevator. He was led to the middle of the floor, and when the lights were again turned on he found himself in the center of the dining room with friends on all sides. C. F. Zittel acted as toastmaster. All of the speakers eulogized Mr. Hatrick, but any touch of seriousness was eliminated by Mr. Zittel. Mr. Hatrick was presented with a solid gold watch, suitably engraved; while Mr. Hubbell was given a fountain pen.

Mr. Hatrick was born in Mauch Chunk, Pa., and is not ashamed of the fact that he began life as a street car conductor. Coming to New York he secured a position as a newspaper reporter, and nine years ago entered the Hearst organization as a member of the Hearst News Service. When the Hearst Syndicate was formed he was placed at the head of its photograph department, and made such a success of it that he induced Mr. Hearst to permit him to make moving pictures of news events. They were successful from the start, and were the forerunner of the great news reel of today.

Mr. Hatrick was editor of the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial for two years and general manager of the Hearst-Vitagraph News Pictorial. When the Hearst-International News Pictorial was organized he was made its general manager, and continued in that capacity until 1917, when the Hearst-International News Pictorial was consolidated with the Pathe Weekly under the name of the Hearst-Pathe News. Mr. Hatrick then took charge of gathering the motion pictures of the world's news for the Hearst-Pathe News Reel, continuing in that position and as secretary of the International until called upon to serve his country.

Parcel Post Decision Aids Film Trade

Exchanges and Exhibitors Will Be Enabled to Save Large Sums on Transportation.

THE order of Postmaster-General Burleson increasing the allowable weights of parcel post packages, effective March 15, will be of great value to the motion picture industry, as the present limitation on weight has tended to reduce the volume of business which otherwise would have been diverted from the express companies to the parcel post.

The new order of the department will permit film shipments in the first or second zones for delivery in the first, second or third zones to be as heavy as seventy pounds, where they are now restricted to fifty pounds. The weight limit for all other zones will be increased from twenty to fifty pounds. The film exchanges are utilizing the parcel post for shipments in the first and second zones in the eastern territory, while in the West they extend into the third and fourth zone, so that the industry will be materially benefited through this course, as both exchanges and exhibitors would thereby effect a saving in transportation charges aggregating hundreds of dollars daily.

The Transportation Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, at a meeting held a year ago, went on record in favor of increasing the parcel post weight limitations for film shipments, and the order just issued at Washington is believed to be based upon the committee's recommendations, which were filed with the Post Office Department at that time. The Transportation Committee was instrumental in securing the order admitting film shipments to the parcel post.

SULLIVAN IS MUTUAL'S NEW YORK MANAGER.

M. J. Sullivan, formerly efficiency director and more recently manager of production of the National Biscuit Company, has been appointed manager of the New York office of the Mutual Film Corporation, having assumed charge of his new office on February 18. Since last March Mr. Sullivan has been visiting all branch offices of the corporation in the United States and Canada as a special salesman. During this period Mr. Sullivan met many of the leading exhibitors of the country and learned at first hand what their requirements are under the changed conditions imposed by the war.

EMINENT ORGANIST MANIPULATES PHOTOPLAYER.

Clarence Eddy, the celebrated California organist, whose series of concerts at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition in 1915 was a feature of that event from a musical standpoint, has been spending considerable time of late at the headquarters of the American Photoplayer Company on Film Row, San Francisco, practicing on the large pipe organ installed there, as well as manipulating the Fotoplayers. After examining these instruments carefully he declared that the musical instrument builders had kept pace with the wonderful artistic development of the photoplay.

With WALTER K. HILL.

IT'S a shame that Cleopatra had not lived to read this praise of her from the press department of the Cleopatra Film Co., said all in one sentence, with only the period at the end to stop the flow:

"Helen Gardner in her tremendous portrayal of Cleopatra impresses one with the fact that the great Egyptian Queen had lived the life of lives and through it all has shown that the womanly instinct is a soul creature, that despite her failings the nobility of this woman is a generic type and as such finds its application in every degree of society; that the world here, there and everywhere—in the frigid or torrid zone where the handiwork of man has become a masterpiece, or where civilization is yet in its embryo state, woman and her great heart of hearts predominate; from days primeval through the channels of time the heart will throb in sympathy for woman because she is mother."

There would, however, be bitter with the sweet, if Cleo's social secretary pasted in her scrap book the following remarks, made by Rev. John A. McClorey, in a recent Sunday sermon he delivered from the pulpit of the Jesuit Church, Detroit, Mich. "Varnished lewdness" was the description Father McClorey applied to the film version of Cleopatra's vampirings.

"Cleopatra was a woman of the streets, who happened to be a queen. Her story is one of varnished lewdness. Lasciviousness personified is spelled by the name Cleopatra.

"What a shame for a Christian city that the sewer of Egypt should be stirred up by the golden wand of pictorial art, not to nauseate but to please the nostrils of Christians! What a disgrace for us to turn back from the purity of Christ's morals to the pagan orgies from which Christ recovered us!

"'It is art,' you say. The more the pity that art should be debauched, that a silken garment should cover the leprosy!

"It has been urged that this story of the vampire will teach men to avoid vampires. The play itself, to judge by its advertisements, is a vampire, sucking the blood of innocence from the veins of youth.

"You might as well place your baby's hand in fire to show him that fire burns, as to show men alluring vice to teach them not to be vicious. The harm is already done in the teaching."

Comes, then, the press agent of Theda Bara, to express that lady's views on the general subject of vamping. List to what the P. A. would have Theda say:

"Theda Bara, who has been called the 'greatest portrayer of vampire roles on the screen,' stoutly denies the assumption that men who yield readily to the lure of women are weak. 'On the contrary,' says Miss Bara, 'the very tendency may be taken as a sign of vitality. Love holds them in its tentacles like some momentary madness; it endows them with tremendous strength for good or evil. They will snatch an empire or cast away a throne at the behest of her they love. No task is too great, no sacrifice too immense to offer as tribute to their divinity of the moment.'"

"Tell me how you liked your dady when you saw him in the picture?"

"I like Charlie Chaplin better," was the very frank reply.

Ethel Has the Right Idea.

Five lonesome soldier boys away down in lonely Camp Doniphan, Fort Sill, Okla., have been made happy by Ethel Clayton, who was attracted to them by their appeal in a daily newspaper for someone to cheer them with letters. Miss Clayton has sent each a personally autographed photograph and will write them a letter each week. Not deeming it proper to become "godmother" to soldiers on account of the misuse of this term, Miss Clayton would rather befriend individual soldiers and know the boys she tries so hard to cheer more intimately, even though they are thousands of miles away.

Giving Marguerite Her Say.

Daniel Frohman was recently quoted as saying that the influx of stage stars to the screen had made motion pictures what they are today—meaning, of course, that these stars had "elevated" the screen plays. Marguerite Snow, who hopes to duplicate her success of "The Million Dollar Mystery" in "The Eagle's Eye" wants it known that she greatly differs in openion with Mr. Frohman.

"Stage stars have not brought anything to pictures," says pretty Peggie. "They left ordinary salaries on the stage to claim a false superiority of ability in pictures, and demand exorbitant salaries. Producers have only been complaining of hard times since the advent of so-called stage stars in pictures, only since they have had to contend with these high salaries.

"Mary Pickford, Ethel Clayton, Mabel Normand, Clara Kimball Young, Pearl White, Alice Joyce, Anita Stewart, Norma Talmadge, and many others of the paying and money-making stars of today are, essentially, players devolped within the industry and are better drawing cards than the average stage recruit. Too many producers today buy books of famous authors, select stars to appear in them, regardless of their qualifications to portray the book-heroine, with the result a picture unlike the book story, the star improperly cast, and a production disappointing to those who, having read the book, wanted to see it portrayed as they had themselves visualized it.

"Producers made money when real screen stars appeared in original stories. They will again when they return to that regime. Picture fans want to see picture stars and not stage stars on the screen. As much money is now spent for a single story or for a single star in a picture, as it formerly cost to produce an entire production. Stars are entitled to salaries commensurate with their box-office value, but I believe that a stage star is worth no more in pictures that she is on the stage."

Side Lights on a "Greeter's" Life.

There is a club in New York called "The Greeters," so named because its members stand behind hotel desks in glad array to greet the coming and speed the parting guest. J. A. Murphy, who wrote the expressive name of "Adam Sowerguy" into the language of theatricals, is not a member of the local "Greeters," although his service "behind the desk" makes him eligible. Besides having been an author, vaudeville actor, scenarioist and screen actor, Mr. Murphy has been a director, having produced for the defunct Flamingo Film Co., put "Eight Bells" into state rights shape, and worked in various studios.

Between these jobs Mr. Murphy clerked in a fashionable Chicago hotel. There he learned that the radiantly dressed "Greeters," from here and there, are so underpaid that they must dress on donations—the pick-ups and left-behinds of the departed guests. At a time when the clerks saw winter approaching with countenance set and frosty the clerks in Murphy's Chicago hotel had printed and posted in every room the following notice:

TO OUR GUESTS.

Owing to the extreme difficulty our room clerks have encountered in obtaining clothing of quality suited to the positions they occupy, we urgently request departing guests to leave such male apparel at the office as they can conveniently spare. The size of garments is immaterial as our room clerks are of such widely divergent types as to make practically any sizes acceptable.

Coats and vests are of more importance than trousers as our clerks are seldom visible below the waist line and can stand watch in their B. V. D.'s. Plans for raising the counter to mask in short vests are now under consideration. Thanking you in advance for any donations you feel inclined to make and assuring you that any clothing that can not be worn by the management will be promptly presented to the clerks, we remain, Yours receptively, The Management.

Later on another sign appear. Winter had arrived and snow was riding in on the shoulders of the guests when this notice went up on doors or walls of the guest rooms:

TO OUR GUESTS.

The room clerks announce with pleasure that their appeal to the guests for surplus clothing has met with prompt and generous response. Two Palm Beach suits and eleven straw hats have been contributed since November 1.

Among the minor donations are two golf sticks, three gloves, one green parasol and one rubber boot. Number 905 left two suits of cotton underwear. The cylinder heads are blown out of the pants, but otherwise the garments are in perfect condition. The red vest left in 952 can be used to repairs the trousers.

Special metion is due Mrs. Collie Shepherd for leaving a bag of dog biscuits for the night clerk. Through the influence of Sergt. Duffy, at Fort Priff, the clerks have arranged to borrow an army tent, and if permission to erect and occupy same on some vacant lot can be obtained, enough room rent can be saved in about six weeks to buy overcoats.

If this is not deemed expedient by the management, the clerks propose to have fire places painted in the rear of the Palm Beach suits and dispense with overcoats. It may be a mild winter anyhow. Yours warmly, The Clerks.

Bungalow Life Shocks Visitors.

Billie Rhodes, twinkle-toed screen comedienne, buys every new thing that comes on the market, whether she has any particular use for it or not. Miss Rhodes says she invests in these new-fangled contraptions to encourage enterprise, but whatever the reason, his latest departure of the Mutual-Strand star in the line of house equipment drove her seven guests to the street with shocking speed.

Some clever agent convinced Miss Billie that electric-heater mattresses would be nice for the beds in her ten-room bungalow at Los Angeles. The nights are so chilly out there. Two weeks later every bed in the house was wired and Miss Billie had seven week-end guests. She didn't say a word to them about electric mattresses, but waited until all were snugly between sheets before turning on the switch.

Screams of dismay were followed by a general exodus of men and women, shockingly clad, making for the open lawn. Miss Rhodes' guests were panic-stricken, and no wonder. She had plugged in the wrong switch and the motor pump current, strong enough to register twenty horsepower, had gone tearing into the beds.

He's the most popular man in Hollywood.

The Gangrene of Gambling.

Most men who occasionally "take a chance" content their passion for gambling by sticking to one style of endeavor—be it cards, dice or other symptoms of vice. But not so the fine hero who is ruined in the early reels of a screen drama. Behold him, either in stills or lithos. Usually he sits at a roulette table, before him on the green are dice, cards, coins for matching, poker chips, dice cups, and cubes of sugar, upon which he may bet that flies will or will not light, according to house rules. Racing cards hang on the wall behind him; there are slot machines everywhere, and if it is a real "movie club," as seen on the screen, he may bet on boxing matches or foot races. And with all these opportunities for plunging, the point of the piece usually hinges on the prosaic act of cutting the cards with a packful of deuces and treys. Old General Public will, some day, revolt and make 'em play at least one game of "stud" with a fifty-two card deck—and make the gamblers count 'em in close-ups.

Panic Hits Mange Cure Market.

"Smiling Bill" Parsons, originator of and central figure in the new Capitol Comedies, the first of which is soon to be released by the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, is asking his fellow bald-heads throughout the country to join him in a series of hairless holidays for the benefit of Uncle Sam's war savings campaign. Like all great schemes, "Smiling Bill's" plan is simple, though he admits it calls for more than a modicum of sacrifice. Briefly, here it is:

Let every member of the bald-pated brotherhood deny himself the luxury of hair tonic from this day on. Let him shake his head firmly when the barber suggests "a few drops of this, sir; that spot's getting bigger all the time" and quietly transfer from his trousers pocket to the one reserved for Thrift Stamp cash the quarter or half dollar the barber is playing for. Let him turn his back and march resolutely out when the druggist springs a bottle of something new, no matter how tempting the label, no matter how persuasive the "guarantee."

"Though you can't get a man who has forgotten where to stop washing his face to admit it," observed Bill, "there is enough money wasted on hopeless hair tonics in a year to equip a transport load of troops and set them down on the firing line in France. I have been using hair growers for years, but I haven't been fooling myself. It seems to be sort of a superstition that a bald-headed man ought forever to be doctoring his dome with something, and as long as there wasn't a whole lot to save the money for the practice didn't do a great deal of harm.

"Now it's different. Twenty-five or fifty cents for the barber means one or two Thrift Stamps. Five dollars for two bottles of sweet smelling something means a War Savings Stamp. I shall be glad to hear from brother bald-heads that they see the sense of my argument."

Some terrible things happen on John Semler's mimeograph.

This is No. 1 (regards to Jerry Beatty): When Twede-Dan dove into a snowbank near the Jester studios over on the Jersey side he did not come up. The snow was not sufficiently buoyant to float the comedian instanter. "They found Twede-Dan in a 'semi-unconscious' condition," writes Mr. Semler, after the laugh-smith had been dug out of the mimeograph ink.

Here's another: All of the heavy woolen wraps, overcoats, sweaters, and warming apparel the players had hung in their lockers at Jester studios mysteriously, simultaneously and abruptly disappeared. The entire local police force was called in for consultation. When he could not solve the mystery, Nilde Babette, the leading lady, eased matters a bit by stating that she had shipped them to your Uncle Sam's soldier to keep them warm.

There is no reason in the world why Jester comedies should fail. With "Bill" Steiner owning them and John Semler press-agenting success is assured.

Of tremendous import has become the row about "luminous-paint-for-lightless-nights"; it has created scandal and disturbance in two cities. Both Chicago and New York have awaited the following statement from Terry Mutual Ramsaye, issued from the author's personal mimeograph:

" 'The light that lies in Luminous Paint
Is rare and rich, elusive and quaint.
But the light that lies is dark and brown
'Fore the lies that light when Terry's in town.' "

Mr. Ramsaye goes on, more temperately, to say: "It is an axiom of fate that the servants of silence (he wrote it 'science') shall be martyrs. I love to be a martyr on page one."

Terry and Teddy—Synonymous.

"The Eagle's Eye"

The First Episode Passes Chicago Censor Board Without a Cut and Is Given a White Permit.

WILLIAM J. FLYNN, at one time chief of the United States secret service and now brought prominently into the public eye by writing the story of the serial "The Eagle's Eye," which is being produced by the Whartons, arrived in the city Sunday, February 25.

The following day Mr. Flynn, accompanied by F. J. Flaherty, manager of the Chicago office of Foursquare Pictures, Inc., took the first filmed episode of the serial to the City Hall, where it was viewed by the Chicago censor board and given a white permit, without a single cut being made.

Monday evening, Mr. Flaherty gave a dinner at the Illinois Athletic Club, in honor of Mr. Flynn, to which the representatives of the daily and trade press were invited. About fifteen were present.

At the dinner Mr. Flynn explained how he was led to conceive and write the story of "The Eagle's Eye" serial, which was afterwards adapted for camera use by Courtney Ryley Cooper. One of the objects of writing the serial, Mr. Flynn explained, was that he desired to show why America entered the European war.

Mr. Flynn left the city Monday night for St. Louis, in the interests of the serial, and will afterwards visit in succession Indianapolis, Cincinnati, Pittsburgh and Philadelphia, after which he will return to New York.

Manager F. J. Flaherty, of the Chicago Foursquare exchange, 207 S. Wabash avenue, has announced that the first episode of "The Eagle's Eye" will be released Saturday, March 2, through Foursquare exchanges, and afterwards, one episode a week, for a period of twenty weeks.

King Baggot takes the part of Harrison Grant, president of the Criminology Club, which, in the story, has been organized to run down the hundreds of spies set to work in the United States by the German government; and Marguerite Snow appears as Dixie Mason, the heroine of the story, who is employed by the United States secret service.

Where Is Ludwig Kovacs?

He Recently Disappeared from Chicago with Four Big Features Belonging to Leading Producing Companies.

ONE Ludwig Kovacs, who until recently operated the Lawndale theater, 3677 Grand avenue, this city, has disappeared. Before disappearing, however, he failed to return certain films belonging to the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, the Mutual Film Corporation, Celebrated Players and the Fox Film Corporation, which he had received from February 11 to February 16. Following is a list of the films and the dates on which Ludwig received them from the companies mentioned:

"The Dummy" (Famous Players), starring Jack Pickford, February 13; "Motherhood" (Mutual), featuring Marjory Rambeau, February 11; "The Whirl of Life" (Celebrated Players), with Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Castle, February 14; "The New York Peacock" (Fox), February 13. Kovacs mailed the Chicago office of the Fox Film Corporation a fake check in payment of the rental.

It is believed that Kovacs is in New York at the time of writing (February 27), and it is believed that he will soon be in the grasp of the law. In the meantime everyone in the renting and exhibiting business should be on the lookout for anything unusual in the handling of any films with the foregoing titles—or their stories, in case the titles have been changed.

Any information concerning these films should be communicated immediately to the nearest exchange office (in any part of the country) of any of the companies mentioned.

Illinois Committee of Producers-Exhibitors Meets.

The meeting of the Illinois state committee of Producers-Exhibitors Affiliated, which had been set for February 18, was postponed until the following Monday, on account of Joseph Hopp's accident. It was held at the headquarters of Chicago Local, M. P. E. L. of A., Masonic Temple, and the entire committee was present. Joseph Hopp was called to the chair and Louis H. Frank was appointed acting secretary.

The main subject of discussion was the proposition made by the producers concerned regarding the leasing of one film a week in the Illinois zone. After much thrashing of the matter it was finally decided to devote all efforts for the immediate present, to the thorough organization of the quota in the Illinois zone, the number being left open for the final adjustment. The quota was not determined at this meeting for the reason that the committee deems it best to go slow, so that the number finally decided upon shall be the result of the most careful and mature deliberations. Adjournment was then made, and the date of the next meeting will be subject to the call of the chairman.

"Tarzan" Goes to Chicago in April.

Aaron J. Jones, of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, announced recently that "Tarzan of the Apes," the American rights for which have been purchased by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, will be released in this territory during April. Mr. Jones also announces that "The Fall of the Romanoffs," Herbert J. Brenon's well-known feature, will be given its first Chicago presentation at the Orpheum theater during the week of March 18.

Miss Mabel Dines Chicagoans.

Mabel Condon, who is well remembered in Chicago film circles as an important member of the staff of Motography some years ago, made a brief stop-over in the city February 26, when she gave an informal luncheon at the Congress hotel to Edna Earle, who accompanied her to the Coast, and to members of the press. As is well known, Miss Condon has established herself most successfully in Los Angeles in connection with publicity service for photoplayers and in bringing them in connection with producers who require their services.

Beatty Goes to Coast to Recuperate.

Edward Thomas Beatty, president of Chicago Local, M. P. T. O. Association, left recently for Los Angeles, where he will spend several months in regaining his health, which has been impaired by recent illness. Mr. Beatty owns the Linden theater at Sixty-third and Halsted streets.

Film Saleswoman Getting the Contracts.

I. L. Lesserman, general sales manager of Universal, this city, recently engaged Miss Alice Mankus as the Wisconsin representative of Jewel productions. Although Miss Mankus had no experience in booking films, it is said that she has sent in a bulky number of contracts, which have caused Mr. Lesserman's eyes to bulge. Who knows but that this novel success of Miss Mankus may lead to the employment of film saleswomen by other organizations? Why not?

"Antony and Cleopatra" Revived.

After a most successful revival of "Quo Vadis?" in Chicago, which has lasted several weeks, George Kleine has brought back "Antony and Cleopatra," another of the famous classics owned by him. I was present at the premiere of this fine subject at the Chicago theater, Wabash avenue and Eighth street, about four years ago, and can recall the great reception given it. The first week of its revival is now under way at the Bandbox theater, where it opened February 25. Manager A. K. Brown informs me it is showing to crowded houses from 11 o'clock A. M. until 11 P. M., daily, at 25 cents for all seats, including the war tax.

Joe Hopp Out Again, Not Seriously Hurt.

The trade generally will be glad to learn that Joseph Hopp, president of Chicago Local, M. P. E. L. of A., who sustained painful injuries Monday night, February 18, from a passing street car, was able to be out and attend to business Monday, February 25. He was not internally injured as was at first supposed.

Miss Fischer Has a Birthday.

February 12 last was Margarita Fischer's birthday, and it was becomingly celebrated by the staff of the American Film Company's studios at Santa Barbara, when a surprise party was given the popular comedienne and her mother. Dinner was served at the Hotel Rincon, about fifteen miles from Santa Barbara.

Sergeant Gibson Again a Neighbor.

Sergeant Gibson, of the United States Signal Corps, formerly one of the assistant superintendents of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, was recently assigned to that plant for special service. Sergeant Gibson will personally oversee the production of the moving pictures being made by the Government under the direction of Captain O. O. Ellis, who is now located at Fort Sill, Okla.

Seibels Pushing "Food Will Win the War."

"Food Will Win the War," a food conservation picture produced by the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, is now being circulated throughout the country under the personal direction of W. T. Seibels, who is clearing through the Universal exchanges.

McMillen Demonstrating the Projectoscope.

Arthur McMillen, representing the interests of the American Projectoscope, left Chicago recently on a tour in the interests of that machine and will visit Detroit, Toledo, Cleveland, Buffalo, New York, Philadelphia, Atlantic City and Washington. In each of these cities he will give demonstrations of the projectoscope, in conformance with requests received for several months past.

Niles Welch Asked to Visit Soldiers

THE movement to provide good soldier entertainment progresses briskly and President Rowland of the Metro recognizes it by donating "Her Boy" to Camp Upton on March 12, but the chaps at Yaphank say they must have Niles Welch, too. Several hundred of the "Nationals" have joined in a round robin and petition, which was transmitted to President Rowland by the Y. M. C. A. exhibitor-secretary.

Niles Welch.

Mr. Rowland promptly asked Mr. Welch to appear, as requested, and the latter says he certainly will if his picture making engagements permit of his being within 100 miles of New York on March 12. Welch co-starred with Effie Shannon in "Her Boy," and the principal scenes were made at Camp Joseph E. Johnston, near Jacksonville, with the soldiers taking part. The record of his recent film activity includes the co-starring with Effie Shannon in "Her Boy," with Zena Keefe in "Shame," with Grace Darmond in "The Gulf Between," and in support as leading man of Mae March, Norma Talmadge, Kitty Gordon, Ethel Barrymore, Marguerite Clark, Ann Murdock, Mary Miles Minter, Violet Mersereau and Pearl White.

On February 27 Welch signed a contract to be co-starred in a new play by the Harry McRae Webster Productions, Inc., opposite Mabel Juliene Scott of "The Barrier" and "Sign Invisible" fame. The title of the new piece is "Reclaimed," the scenes are laid in Mexico and the United States, and the author is Richard F. Carroll, the veteran dramatic and film writer. Mr. Welch plays the role of a young American who falls in love with a Mexican girl, the latter being portrayed by Miss Scott. Production started on March 4 at the Hudson Studio under the active direction of Mr. Webster. The new Welch-Scott picture, on its completion, will be released on a State Rights basis.

New Company Outlines Working Plans

United Picture Theaters of America, Inc., Tells of Its Aims in Co-operative Effort.

THE United Picture Theaters of America, Inc., has now completed its headquarters organization and has moved into the fifth floor of the Mecca Building, where it has embarked on a campaign of lining up motion picture exhibitors to buy film co-operatively. All the department heads have been secured, thirty branch managers will get to work between March 4 and March 11, and the sales forces will be out on the road by March 18. As soon as alterations now making in the offices are completed exhibitors will be invited to a housewarming and opening reception. A feature of the plan is to make the exhibitor member easy and comfortable on his visits to book films; to give him desk room and writing material and a big assembly hall holding 150 where he can discuss current problems.

The head of United Pictures is Lee A. Ochs, president of the National League, and the treasurer is Louis F. Blumenthal, with Charles M. Rosenthal as secretary and Milton M. Goldsmith as general counsel. C. R. Seelye is general manager. Mr. Seelye announces his intention of leaving New York on March 6 on a nation-wide tour in the course of which he will organize distributing branches. Three days later President Ochs will begin his visits to the more important cities, where he will address exhibitors in public meetings.

As outlined by the organizers, the method of the United Picture Theaters of America, Inc., is to divide the cost of film negative pro rata among as large a proportion of the exhibitor forces of the United States as it may be possible to align. Exhibitors are to be graded into five classes, according to first and second runs, etc., money earning capacity and the like. The first grade will pay one tenth of 1 per cent. of the cost of the negative. Each lower grade will pay proportionately less till a unit in the last grade pays only one one-hundredth of 1 per cent. of negative cost. If any profit on these transactions remain to the United Picture Theaters, it is paid back to the individual picture theater proprietors who are stockholders in the general enterprise.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of March 3 at New York's Principal Motion Picture Houses.

THE RIVOLI.—Mark Twain's celebrated Tom Sawyer and Huckleberry Finn were introduced on the screen at the Rivoli for the week beginning Sunday, March 3, in a Paramount picture called "Huck and Tom," with Jack Pickford as Tom. The Rivoli Animated Pictorial, a scenic and Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew in "His Strength of Mind," were also shown.

THE STRAND.—"Carmen of the Klondike," a story of Alaska during the gold rush, was featured at the Strand, Clara Williams having the title role. The picture is full of melodramatic situations. "Turtles of all Lands," James Montgomery Flagg's "The Matinee Girl," and the Strand Topical Review complete the list of screen attractions.

THE RIALTO.—George Beban in "One More American," written by William De Mille, headed the list of screen favorites at the Rialto. The picture presents several novel features. Camille Ankewich and Helen Eddy have the principal female roles. The second installment of the Yellowstone Park pictures, the Rialto Animated Magazine and the Paramount-Mack Sennett comedy called "Sheriff Nell's Tussle" completed the screen portion of the entertainment.

EIGHTY-FIRST STREET THEATER.—"The Eagle's Eye" serial, the first half of the week; also J. Warren Kerrigan in "The Turn of a Card." Tom Moore and Hazel Daly in "Brown of Harvard" the latter half.

BROADWAY.—"Tarzan of the Apes" is still playing to crowded houses at the Broadway theater.

LYRIC.—"Woman and the Law," a William Fox picture produced by R. A. Walsh, is being shown at the Lyric.

SELZNICK STARTS SELECT CONFERENCES.

Lewis J. Selznick held at the offices of the Select Pictures Corporation February 27 the first of a series of conferences of executive heads which he has inaugurated. These will be held twice a week, and are for the purpose of bringing together the men directing the activities of Select.

At the meeting on Wednesday brief talks were made to the executive force by President Selznick and General Manager Arthur S. Kane. A genuine spirit of co-operation was manifested by all the officers and plans were made for the advancement of various enterprises.

Haworth Pictures Signs Hayakawa

New Film Enterprise to Star Noted Japanese Actor in Large Feature Productions.

AS a surprise to the local rialto comes the news that another motion picture star will soon head his own producing organization. In this case it is Sessue Hayakawa, the talented Japanese actor.

The Haworth Pictures Corporation has been organized to exploit the new Hayakawa features, the production of which will be started April 1, at the termination of Mr. Hayakawa's present contract.

Sessue Hayakawa.

Realizing that in their star they have an individuality that is entirely distinctive, this company will lay great stress upon individuality as applied to stories, directorship and other assets of a successful producing organization. Through his work with the Lasky company Hayakawa has become known throughout the globe. In the two years of his affiliation with that concern he has appeared in many features which have proven box office magnets, probably the most notable of them being "The Cheat."

Prior to his connection with the Lasky company Mr. Hayakawa was starred by Thomas H. Ince. The first large production Mr. Ince made that featured Hayakawa was "The Wrath of the Gods." The drawing power of this feature was so potent that the owners recently reissued it on the states right market.

Unlimited capital, it is announced, has been placed at Mr. Hayakawa's disposal, and studio arrangements already have been made which insure every facility for the production of the class of photodramas which are to be filmed.

Leading in the support of the star will be an actress who has won honors in the world of the cinema. Capable players will round out the company.

According to the present plans the stories will be the best obtainable, and from them the company will make not more than eight features a year.

"I am proud, indeed, to head my own company, and I wish you would tell your readers that I am going to do my best to go 'over the top' in making productions that will appeal to the patrons of the houses where the great photoplay art is displayed," said Mr. Hayakawa when seen at the offices of the Haworth company. "I want to make pictures that will be of a lasting character. I do not care to say very much at this time. Please wait for results. These, I am confident, will be perfectly satisfactory."

The headquarters of the Haworth Pictures Corporation are in the H. W. Hellman Building, Los Angeles.

Official Makes Trip to Los Angeles

Representative of British War Office Comes Seven Thousand Miles to See Griffith's War Picture.

W. E. BURLOCK of London, representing the Cinematograph committee of the British war office, has made a flying trip to Los Angeles. Mr. Burlock traveled 7,000 miles and spent three weeks on boat and train to witness a pre-view of the war picture which David Wark Griffith filmed on the western front in France. The picture was prepared at the request and with the co-operation of the British and French war offices for use in progaganda work.

So eager were the members of the committee to learn the success which had attended Mr. Griffith's work, with the unprecedented opportunities given him to photograph actual warfare, that Mr. Burlock was specially sent to Los Angeles to see the completed picture. After he had sat three hours in Mr. Griffith's projection room Mr. Burlock made reservations for the return journey and left for home the next day.

When asked his opinion of the new picture, about which Mr. Griffith has maintained secrecy, Mr. Burlock said: "When this picture is shown I believe it will be conceded that Mr. Griffith has done more than any other one person to impress upon the people the horrors of war, its drama and its tragedy. I believe this picture will arouse a universal protest against war, and spur the people on to win this war that there may be no more.

"I don't suppose it is well known, but it is true that the British war office was more than anxious to have Mr. Griffith make this picture than he was to undertake the gigantic task. The members of the war office attending to propaganda work were determined to commission Mr. Griffith to make an epic of this war drama.

"Lord Beaverbrook, the head of the propaganda movement, met Mr. Griffith and suggested the effort. It was not until Mr. Griffith realized how much such a picture meant to the government and the cause of humanity that he consented. He immediately canceled the reservation on the boat on which he intended to return home the following day and went to work."

"Salome" to be Elaborate Production

At the William Fox western studios Theda Bara's latest super-production, "Salome," is well on its way. Under the supervision of Director J. Gordon Edwards an elaborate set has been built, which is an exact replica of the streets of old Jerusalem, including the famous Jaffa Gate and the great palace of Herod.

As in "Cleopatra," no expense is being spared to make "Salome" one of the greatest feature pictures. Miss Bara has given her personal attention to the costuming of the character.

The Fox star has leased the home of Captain Miner, at 659 West Adams street. The Miner home is one of the show places of Los Angeles and adjoins Chester Place, its grounds merging into the residential park.

Bert Bracken to Direct "Jazz" Restaurant

Bert Bracken, motion picture director, is not contented to plod along with a script and megaphone as his only utensils with which to earn a living. He is going to open a cafe. If the Board of Police Commissioners will permit there's going to be dancing in the evenings, too.

The management of the new restaurant feels that wine is not essential to prompt the dance, and believes that a real good Jazz orchestra can do the work equally as well. While the spirits in liquid form will therefore be conspicuous by their absence the spirit of good fellowship and good cheer will make up for the former.

Bracken has severed his connections with the Fox Film Corporation, with whom he has been for some time.

While Bracken is heavily interested in this new proposition he will not assume the actual management of the place. He will continue as a producer. The new cafe is to be called the Cafe de Luxe, and will be situated in the ground floor of the Black Building, Fourth and Hill.

Beban Now Heads His Own Company

As mentioned in this department week before last, George Beban, the noted Italian character actor, has embarked upon a new motion picture enterprise, which will be entirely his own. He will be featured at the head of an organization over which he will have control. Mr. Beban and his business manager, George Stout, who was formerly with Mack Sennett in the same capacity, is at present engaging the personnel of the supporting company.

Sarah Kearnan, well-known character woman, has been signed, as has also Bob White, whose last camera appearance was in "Lost in Transit." Little Bob, while famous in his own right, is also noted for being the young son of Mr. Beban.

It has been decided that the trade-mark for the productions will feature the slogan, "The plays that make the dimples to catch the tears," and the first two stories to be made by the new organization will carry the titles of "High and Dry" and "The Master of the Pound."

Monte M. Katterjohn has been engaged by Mr. Beban to supply his first stories.

Diando to Produce Serial for Pathe.

W. A. S. Douglas, president of the Diando Film Corporation, with studios in Glendale, returned from New York this week with a contract in his pocket for the production of a fifteen-episode serial for Pathe, the working title of which will be "The Wolf-Faced Man."

The author of this serial is Mr. Douglas, and the story is the culmination of a month's conference and labor with the committee in the Pathe general offices in New York. When Douglas left the coast in January he took east with him the scenario of a serial he expected to have accepted and tentative plans for its making. The story was rejected. Mr. Douglas then submitted eighteen different books for the basis of a serial story only to have his suggestions met with the same fate as his original manuscript. Undaunted he then started working on the story to be known in its production "The Wolf-Faced Man," and it was unanimously accepted by the committee.

It is a western story, but different from the usual run of these pictures; inasmuch as it will not be a modern story, with a plot and setting of years ago, but will depict life as it was in the sixties.

The director will be Stuart Paton. The leading man will be George Larkin. The preliminary studio work on this serial will begin at once.

Caulfield Takes Over Sennett Theater.

A theatrical deal of considerable importance has been consummated by which Harry P. Caulfield, the present lessee of the Garrick theater, on Broadway, near 8th street, takes over the Sennett theater, one of the prominent downtown houses, at Broadway and 9th. Mr. Caulfield will now control two large theaters in the same block. The new house will be rechristened "The Riviera."

The house will open under the new management on March 3 with Olive Thomas in "Heiress for a Day." Triangle productions will be featured. The Sennett comedies, which have been a feature of the house, will be removed to the Grauman theater.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

Douglas Fairbanks last week became "Big Brother" to the boys of the 157th Infantry, stationed at Camp Kearney in California. He was asked in a telegram from Colonel Patrick Hannock to accept this post of honor, due to the fact that all these boys come from Colorado, which is Fairbanks' home state. Immediately after his acceptance Fairbanks mailed the boys batches of smileage coupons and enough smoking material to keep them going for some time. He also promised to keep them well supplied with literature, and if you have any interesting books you would like to donate to the cause send them to Fairbanks.

Stirring scenes were witnessed at the Paralta studios in Hollywood Sunday, this week, when several hundred members of the California National Guard worked for the entire day in a series of episodes laid in a French village, and forming a part of Louise Glaum's first picture, "The Iron Beast," which marks this talented player's initial appearance as a Paralta star. In addition to the large body of soldiers, the company was fortunate in securing the services of the military band from Fort McArthur, at San Pedro.

With ratification by the United States Senate of the American-British conscription treaty notices to appear for physical examination will be mailed two thousand British and Canadian subjects now residing in Los Angeles city and county. The treaty may have a telling effect upon the ranks of moving picture actors in Los Angeles. It is estimated that at least two hundred subjects of Great Britain are in the moving picture business here.

Several members of the Triangle playing forces aided in making the recent Red Cross benefit at Santa Monica a success, both financially and otherwise. Those from the Culver City studios on the program were J. Barney Sherry and Frank Borzage, who gave "The Littlest Girl"; William H. Curran, in a monologue, and Wallace MacDonald, who contributed tenor solos.

A film has been produced by Al Christie, with the members of the Hollywood Business Men's Club as actors. The picture, which was shown at the theaters of Hollywood, is not to be allowed to remain a local institution. It will be run at different cities throughout California for the purpose of arousing enthusiasm among the merchants and professional men to further the establishment of commercial clubs in their cities.

Pasadena may soon have another large and elaborate motion picture theater. B. O. Kendall, head of the firm of bankers and brokers of that name, is planning to build an up-to-date motion picture house at East Holly street and North Raymond avenue, on the site of the old Park Hotel, partially destroyed by a series of fires, and will face the Library Park. Mr. Kendall states that the plans are only tentatively considered, but that he would build either a modern hotel, to be conducted on the European plan, or a theater. There was room in Pasadena for another good theater, he said, for at present the theaters are crowded nightly. Personally he favored the theater, and said that the drawings were at present in the hands of the architects.

Douglas Jarmuth, proprietor of the Strand theater at San Bernardino, has at last convinced the War Department that a slight defect of a finger of his left hand should not bar him from fighting in the air. Telegraphic instructions were received to enlist Jarmuth just as the army surgeons in Los Angeles were refusing him at the finish of his fifth examination. Jarmuth served three weeks in the aviation school at Berkeley and was honorably discharged when the finger defect was found. He appealed to Washington and haunted military offices until the order came to permit him to enlist. He turned his theater over to a manager, and leaves within a few days for a training camp.

Jay Belasco, who before entering the army was leading man with Christie Comedies, is in Los Angeles after spending several months at one of the training camps, from which he has received his honorable discharge. Valvular heart trouble is the reason given by examining physicians for their refusal of Mr. Belasco for active service

GEORGETOWN (KY.) THEATER GETS SUNDAY FINE.

As a result of the recent decision of the Court of Appeals in upholding the Sunday closing law in connection with the cases against the Capital theater, of Frankfort, Ky., appealed from the Franklin Circuit Court, a number of similar fines will probably be imposed shortly. One of the first of these was at Georgetown recently, when the Circuit Court fined the Georgetown Amusement Company $25 each on two counts for operating a picture theater on the Sabbath. Ten other charges of like nature against this house were filed away.

American Carbons Sell Well Abroad

How the Inter-Ocean Film Company Is Putting the Speer Product Across in Foreign Markets.

PAUL H. CROMELIN, president of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, tells with pride of the sales his concern has made in foreign lands with the Speer carbons, an American product. Last week witnessed a shipment of 20,000 of these carbons to Argentina and the closing of Spain and Portugal for a minimum of 250,000 a year. South Africa received 50,000 recently, India 32,000, Peru and Chile 20,000, Uruguay and Paraguay 5,000, England 50,000, and France 30,000.

This branch of Inter-Ocean work is in charge of E. H. Kaufman, office manager of the company, who oddly enough handled the Edison Phonograph as a competitor of president Cromelin when the latter was general representative for the Columbia Phonograph Company. Mr. Kaufman is a moving picture pioneer, dating back to 1896, when he represented the Edison Company on the road with their moving picture machines, motors, batteries and films.

"Edison in those days," says Mr. Kaufman, "manufactured mainly scenics, in lengths of a few hundred feet. Those were sold to the exchanges at $7 each, and they resold them for $7.50, netting the exchange 50c. on the transaction. When I think of the profits that are turned over daily by the big exchanges of the country now, that 50c. net seems amusing."

Speer carbons were unknown to the foreign market when Mr. Kaufman took up their sale for the Inter-Ocean. In his first year of handling, 1917, over one million were exported. That the three million mark will be reached in 1918 is now the indication. This is a triumph not only for the Inter-Ocean, but for America, as American carbons were practically unknown in foreign lands prior to the last year.

South America Takes More Features

The Export and Import Captures Argentina with Selig Ammunition.

AS ONE of its victories for the past week, the Export and Import Film Company, Inc., announces the sale of twenty-five five and six reel features, including "The Carpet from Bagdad," "The Millionaire Baby" and "The Rosary," for Argentine, Uruguay, Paraguay and Chile. It has also sold for this territory the "Selig World Library" and "Selig Athletic Series."

This sale, following closely upon the heels of several others, proves that the Export and Import Film Company has taken its place as one of the chief film exporters of America.

Ben Blumenthal, president of this concern, reports that he is about to send a representative to South America for the purpose of determining the exact needs of this market in the film line. He states that it has always been the policy of his company to keep in personal touch with its customers, as only in this way can the exporter know the individual needs of each and every territory. "The resulting understanding between our customers and ourselves," says Mr. Blumenthal, "amply repays us, for in no other business is it as essential to success that the exporter and buyer come into personal contact."

Mr. Blumenthal states further that he is making active preparations for an aggressive campaign in European film centers after the close of the war, as he believes that for the next few years America will be called upon to supply the greater part of the demand for films in Europe.

"A Daughter of the Gods," the Fox production with Anette Kellermann, was recently released on the Chilean market.

Max Glucksmann, the well-known South American buyer, leaves no stone unturned in his search for serials. Besides buying as many pictures of this nature in the American market as he can possibly get, we notice that he is running a half-page advertisement in many of the Italian and French trade journals for the same purpose.

The Guarin Ibero-American Corporation, of Madrid and Barcelona, is handling for Spain and Portugal all the pictures and supplies controlled by the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, of New York.

Rumors circulating in the South American trade press seem to indicate that the North American Film Service Corporation and the Cinematografica Sud-Americana are about to sever their connection and will operate in the future as separate exchanges. The "Sud-Americana" is an old exchange doing business in Argentina, Uruguay and Chile and at the present time handles the output of the Universal and several European companies. The "North American" is a New York corporation distributing Metro and other American brands of pictures on an exclusive basis in the South American markets.

"The Red Circle," a Pathe serial, is being exhibited at this time in Colombia. This is one of the few southern republics where American pictures have not yet been introduced on a large scale. The market is practically controlled by a local Italian house, with offices in Bogota, Barranquilla and Panama, and the business is still in a very primitive state. New York dealers in second-hand film have made some shipments to Colombia, but no American manufacturer, as far as we know, has yet sold a single picture in this territory on a direct basis. That Colombia will be a productive market as soon as conditions change is proven by the fact that a used copy of "The Million Dollar Mystery" netted its owner a profit of $5,000 gold in Bogota alone.

Among the Exporters.

Chester Beecroft, 501 Fifth avenue, New York, is about to start an aggressive campaign for foreign business. We understand that he will devote particular attention to the Latin-American markets.

D. W. Russell, 729 Seventh avenue, New York, who controls the foreign rights on "Modern Lorelei," has sold this picture for exploitation in Australia and the Far East to David P. Howells.

York, advises that he has appointed agents in Mexico and Cuba.

"Is Cine-Mundial covering Brazil?" asks a New York film man who has just joined the ranks of the exporters.

It is. Our international edition has an agent and correspondent for the north of Brazil and another for the south. It publishes a special department, written in Portuguese by Portuguese journalists, dealing with trade conditions in this country, Brazil and Portugal. Cine-Mundial not only goes to every Brazilian exhibitor and renter, but it is also sold to the public by the news vendors in many of the large towns. Sixty-nine subscriptions from Brazil reached our office on February 23, together with 15 from Buenos Aires. The next working day, Monday, February 25, an order for 100 subscriptions came from Merida, Yuc., Mexico. And all these subscribers send the money in advance. As far as subscriptions are concerned, Cine-Mundial's record cannot be beaten by any export paper published in the United States—in fact, it can be stated that it is one of the few magazines published in this country that Spanish and Portuguese speaking people are willing to pay for.

Here is a good rule for all exporters to follow: Cities and territories should never be judged by size or population. Examples: there are two blocks in Buenos Aires with more motion picture theaters than in any single Central American republic; Chillan, Chile, with 54,000 inhabitants, supports only one moving picture house running twice a week, while Antofagasta, also in Chile, but a little further north, with a population of 40,000, supports nine moving picture houses running daily.

The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry believes that it has found an effective way of eliminating the duping, pirating and stealing of film that has been going on in the export market. The following announcement has been made by the Collector of the Port of New York, Byron R. Newton: "Any special article difficult of ready examination on the pier, such as cameras, films, motion picture machines, phonograph records, musical instruments, etc., must be submitted for examination at room 123, Custom House, at least seventy-two hours before departure." The National Association is arranging to furnish the Custom House authorities with official lists of all lost or stolen films and the concerns rightfully controlling them. All films submitted for exportation will be checked up by these lists and stolen productions quickly detected. If there is no way of getting around this new regulation, and an effective means has been found at last of putting a stop to the illegal transactions with foreign countries, the American manufacturers and distributors will be saved annually many thousands of dollars.

R. G. Craering, of New York, and Mr. Keal, of Washington, acting in combination with G. I. Fabbri, of Torino, Italy, and backed by the "colossal American Trusts, Standard Oil Co. and Iron Co.," are about to launch a world-wide motion picture syndicate, whatever that is, according to an announcement published in a prominent Italian tradespaper. Does anybody know Messrs. Craering and Keal around these parts?

Inquiries from Abroad.

The addresses of these firms may be obtained from Cine-Mundial, 516 Fifth avenue, New York. We do not assume responsibility as to the standing of the inquirers, and the usual precautions should be taken in all cases. All inquiries are received direct by the Moving Picture World and Cine-Mundial, the Spanish monthly edition of the Moving Picture World. Please mention number when writing:

12. A firm in Colombia is in the market for portable projection outfits for family use.
13. A man in Yurimaguas, Peru, wishes to get in touch with New York film exchanges. Wants to know renting terms. Will deposit necessary funds in Peru and London bank before placing order.
14. A firm in Brazil is in the market for films and moving picture supplies of every description. This firm covers northern and southern Brazil.
15. A man in Chuibdo, Choco, Colombia, is in the market for a projection machine with motor, screen, wires, 16-candle-power lamps and accessories.
16. A firm in Santo Domingo is in the market for a second-hand electric lighting set, from 8 to 10 kilowatts, run by gasoline engine. It is also interested in used theater chairs.
17. A man in Banes, Cuba, is in the market for a motion picture camera.
18. A man in Rosario, Argentina, is in the market for new and second-hand film.
19. A man in Caracas, Venezuela, is in the market for new and used film.
20. A man in Santiago de Cuba is in the market for theatrical equipment.
21. A firm in Brazil is in the market for motion picture outfits, machines, etc.

Australian Notes.

Sydney, Australia, January 22, 1918.

J. C. WILLIAMSON FILMS, LTD., have secured sole rights to the Goldwyn productions, and they will be released in the near future. Trade shows of the initial subjects, "Polly of the Circus" and "Baby Mine," have been held in the chief cities of the Commonwealth, and have everywhere been given very satisfactory press notices. J. C. Williamson, Ltd., will screen all subjects at its own theaters before releasing them to suburban and country showmen.

This firm is at present exploiting "Parentage" in this country, and this picture is doing good business at the Sydney Theater Royal during the present week. Several other films will be screened at this theater by the same management before the Goldwyn subjects are introduced.

The lease held by Union Theaters, Ltd., of the Lyceum Theater (Sydney) expired this week, and will be taken over by Hoyts Prop, Ltd., early next month. The Lyceum is without doubt the most historic picture theater in this city; on its change from a "legit" house some ten years ago it screened many of the early Australian productions which were in their day easily as good as any produced. Several of these films ran for considerable periods, some enjoying seasons of six and eight weeks. When the management became incorporated with Union Theaters, Ltd., a few years ago it was changed to a "continuous" show, and later was chosen to be the official "Triangle" house. Triangles have been given their first Australian run at the Lyceum since the initial presentation right to date, and they are now to be transferred to the Strand theater, starting with the big seven reeler, "Because of a Woman." Under the new management Paramount pictures will be screened at the Lyceum.

Several prosecutions have taken place during the last few weeks under the Amusement Tax Act, and a number of picture showmen have been fined amounts up to £50 each for failing to give returns of the number of taxable tickets issued.

Feature Films, Ltd., distributors of the Paramount Service announce that the first of the Mack Sennett-Paramount comedies will be released here during the first week of February, the subject chosen being "A Pullman Bride." Showmen and the public are looking forward to them, as there are very few really go d brands of comedies on the market.

Claude Phillips, who has been in charge of the publicity department of the Progressive-Mutual Film Service in Sydney for some time past, leaves that firm to go "on his own" this month. He is changing from publicity manager to film salesman, and will handle several big features for the whole of Australia. It is also his intention to negotiate for the rights of several big American productions, and his experience and ability should insure his success in his new venture.

"His Convict Bride" and "A Coo-ee from Home" are the two local releases of the month, and are both very good productions. The former, made under the supervision of John F. Gavin, was formerly known as "For the Term of Her Natural Life." It has been well and carefully produced, being historically correct as to costumes and settings.

"A Coo-ee from Home" is a modern drama, and incidentally the longest picture yet made in Australia, running into eight parts. It is a good picture, and while it has not any great amount of dramatic situations does not at any time drag, running smoothly to a satisfactory climax. Charles Woods, a pioneer in the film business here, was the producer.

Humbert Pugliese a prominent Sydney exhibitor, has decided to enter the producing line, and will market several feature productions during the present year. Arrangements have been made with Henry B. Fletcher for the motion picture rights to his stories "The Waybacks," which is enjoying a most successful run throughout Australia as a spoken play. The productions to follow include the comedy-drama "Judy o'Trot" and a filmization of the play "Struck Oil." He has a representative in America, sent from Australia, and has a first-hand knowledge of Australian requirements. Two productions already to hand are "Ignorance" and "The Tigress."

The Fox Film Corporation have inaugurated weekly trade screenings of all releases. Admission is by card, and quite a crowd go along each Wednesday morning to view the picture.

Wheeler Oakman Enlists as Private

WHEELER OAKMAN, leading man for Edith Storey, Metro's athletic star, is now wearing khaki and undergoing training at Camp Kearney, San Diego, for a part in the world war "over there." Mr. Oakman enlisted as a private in the regular army last week, after completing his work in "The Claim," a new Metro production featuring Miss Storey. Mr. Oakman comes of a long line of fighters. He is a second cousin of the late General Wheeler ("Fighting Joe"), after whom he was named. His father fought on the northern side in the Civil War and he has a brother, Chester Oakman, a graduate of Annapolis, who is now in command of a United States destroyer convoying American army transports through the submarine zone.

Wheeler Oakman.

With almost a perfect rating Mr. Oakman passed the rigid physical test for entrance into the army. He was immediately passed and wired to the Metro studios in Hollywood that everything was O. K. and that he had begun his training for active participation in the war.

The Metro actor asked to be assigned to the artillery and was placed in that branch of service. In order to enlist he gave up a long term contract with Metro, and his departure necessitated a quick change in the cast of "Treasure," Miss Storey's next picture, in which he was to have had the male lead. Mr. Oakman, who is twenty-seven years old and an athlete, fell within the provisions of the selective draft law, but if he had chosen to wait his turn, would not have been called to the colors for several months at least, and perhaps not for a year.

METRO GETS ANOTHER ALICIA RAMSEY PLAY.

Alicia Ramsey, the author of "Eve's Daughter," playing at the Rialto the week of February 24-March 2, has sold another script to Metro. This story was played under the name of "Bridge" with Effie Shannon and Herbert Kelsey in the leading roles. At present it has a tentative title only. May Allison is playing the part filled by Effie Shannon, and Joseph Kilgour has Herbert Kelsey's former role.

Rudolph de Cordova, Alicia Ramsey's husband, is working with her in the preparation of a number of scripts and they will devote a great deal of attention to screen stories in the immediate future.

STAGE WOMEN SHOW "THE CORSICAN."

Jefferson Seligman has offered the Stage Woman's War Relief the use of a moving picture called "The Corsican." The film is of particular interest, as it shows the life of Napoleon, the fighting of the Old Guard, Battle of Waterloo and Duke of Wellington with his English troops. So numerous are the entertainments being given for the soldiers and sailors by the Stage Women's War Relief, the picture will be kept in constant use.

How It Is Done at the Strand

A Discussion of Methods Which Have Actually Been Worked Out Successfully.

By Harold Edel, Managing Director.

A PATRIOTIC film recently presented at the Strand, disclosing a series of pictures offering present-day celebrities involved in the conduct of the war together with others of former periods, as well as scenes of historical events having to do with the liberty and democracy of our country, aroused wide laudatory mention by both press and public. The many inquiries as to where this film could be obtained, from exhibitors and others in the trade, seem to warrant a detailed account of "how it was done" in these columns. Various persons appeared to be surprised when I informed them that this was a "home-made" attraction and yet this is exactly what it was.

The film opened with a picture of a waving American flag over which the following title was thrown: "Liberty and Democracy March on Arm in Arm—Always Forward—and Forever." A view of a beautiful sunrise then appeared, presenting an appropriate prelude to the birth of democracy of which Washington was the father. This was brought out in a title followed by a picture of the statue of George Washington in front of the Treasury Building. The figure of Washington dissolved into a living likeness of the first President making an address which was quoted in the next title. Then appeared night pictures of Washington crossing the Delaware, followed in order and punctuated by suitable titles, by pictures of Abraham Lincoln in front of the White House, McKinley, King Albert of Belgium, President Poincare of France, ex-Czar Nicholas of Russia, King Peter of Serbia, King Ferdinand of Roumania, King Emanuel of Italy, Lloyd George of England, Lord Northcliffe of England, Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo, Daniels, Baker, Roosevelt and President Wilson. Then came the title "And when the sun sets on this struggle for our common cause the world will be ever safe for democracy," followed by sunset pictures of the same scene used at the opening and closing with the Statue of Liberty.

Fitting titles tying one scene up with another brought continuous applause and when the pictures of the famous people and incidents appeared there were stormy ovations, presenting on the whole one of the most enthusiastically received pictures ever shown at the Strand. As one reviewer said, the picture received more applause for each foot than any of its length ever made.

Now as to "how it was done." Pictures of the Washington statue were especially filmed for us, as were those of the living figure making the speech. The scene of Washington crossing the Delaware was taken from an old Edison picture released a long time ago and now forgotten. Pictures of Lincoln were obtained from Paramount's Ben Chapin films, "The Son of Democracy." For McKinley I was stumped momentarily. No films were available, so we photographed a still of the former President using an animated flag as a background. Through courtesy of Pathe Weekly I was able to present films, released during the past few years, of various other celebrities and from the Democratic National Campaign Committee I obtained pictures of President Wilson, McAdoo, Daniels and Baker. Requiring on the whole very little expense, but considerable thought and energy in getting the desired films and working them together into a smoothly moving feature, this offering presents another example of what can be done in the way of showing something the other fellow cannot get, at least until after the idea is used by you. I have a list of the titles, music and other data on this film which I shall be glad to give gratis to readers of the World on application.

CARLYLE BLACKWELL RENEWS WORLD CONTRACT

Carlyle Blackwell after recovering from his recent indisposition has renewed his contract with the World Film Corporation for an extended period of time and will shortly be co-starred with Evelyn Greeley in a new production, of which Dell Henderson is the director. This will signalize the coming to World Film of Mr. Henderson, who will direct Miss Greeley and Mr. Blackwell in a series of features.

MISS JUSTICE ACTIVE IN WAR RELIEF.

Maibelle Heikes Justice has gone to Washington for a short stay in the interest of her war relief work. Aside from her regular photodramatic writing Miss Justice has for several months been giving all her available time to war activities, especially in the National Army.

Motion Picture Educator

Conducted by REV. W. H. JACKSON and MARGARET I. MACDONALD

TO THE READERS OF THIS DEPARTMENT.

IT IS the wish of the Moving Picture World to serve the highest possible interests of the Educational moving picture. For this purpose it desires to come into intimate touch with ALL the readers of the Moving Picture Educator—the educational department of the World.

TO EVERY READER—Will you kindly write to the Moving Picture World expressing yourself as interested in the educational department, no matter in how small a degree. Please say if you are connected with a School or Church, Institution, College or Y. M. C. A. or any other organization. If a moving picture exhibitor alike interested, this means you also. If you have a large interest kindly express it, commend or criticize as you desire; state its help or its lack. If it supplies any need, say how you can be further aided in any way. We do not ask you to be brief, write as extensively as you desire. We want to know you and your desires, and to ask you to help us to make the EDUCATOR a reality in deed as in word.

"Rainier Park" (Pathe).

THE Pathe series entitled "Our National Parks" has given general satisfaction. The entertaining manner in which the beautiful views photographed in these national beauty spots have been presented on the screen has made the series a success wherever shown. The views obtained of Rainier Park, one of the most beautiful spots in America, are exceptionally fine, and cover all the typical Tatoosh Range, Timberline Lane and Skyline Trail. This picture covers in the neighborhood of 500 feet of film and is on the same reel with "Mesa Verde Park."

"Mesa Verde Park" (Pathe).

The pictures of Mesa Verde Park obtained by the Pathe Exchange, Inc., present what are perhaps the clearest set of views yet shown of the celebrated Cliff Dwellers' habitations. Groups of homes high up in the cliffs are visited by a party of tourists; and in the course of their journey through the dwelling places of this ancient tribe the council room, Cliff Palace, Peabody House and other special locations are designated.

"Democracy's Right Arm" (Universal).

In the Screen Magazine No. 61 will be found a fine illustration of how steel is made. In it we see pig iron made by smelting iron ore, coke and limestone, using hot air as a blast. Then there is the flushing of the slag or refuse of the smelting process and the casting of pig iron in sand beds. The blowing of impurities from the hot metal by a cold air process, the pouring of molten steel into ingot moulds, and the stripping of the moulds are also among the details shown. The moulds are placed in soaking pits to secure uniform temperature, and, after cooling, the ingots are rolled into slabs, which are finally while still hot rerolled into skelp for the manufacture of pipe. This picture is entered in the Screen Magazine by courtesy of the Agriculture and Immigration Department of the State of West Virginia.

"Oyster Industry on Chesapeake Bay" (Universal).

In the 61st issue of the Screen Magazine will be found an interesting exhibition of the harvesting of oysters on the Chesapeake Bay. In the picture we see the fishermen reaching down into the water with tongs or long steel rods with clamps on the end and gathering them by the hundreds into their boats. Pumps are used to clear the boats of water. The sorting and opening for canning are shown, and also some of the $10,000 worth of pearls found in oysters near Baltimore during a short season.

"In the Moonshine Country" (Paramount-Bray).

Hidden from the outside world in the rugged mountains of Northern Georgia and Kentucky live the famous American "moonshiners," whose mode of living has remained unchanged for five generations. These mountaineers are pictured in the 109th release of the Paramount-Bray Pictograph. The rugged nature of their surroundings and the stony soil make it extremely difficult for them to derive more than a scant livelihood as farmers. As a consequence they have resorted to other means to supply their needs. By nature lawless, they have turned to the making of "moonshine" whiskey and this they sell to the nearby settlers. Added contributions to their coffers are derived through hunting and fishing without respect for the game laws. No more picturesque country exists than that in which the mountaineers live.

And as a picturization of a quaint race the subject is most interestingly presented.

"The Horse Drive Is On!" (Universal.)

A splendid inspiration for those interested in the breeding of the horse, which is now in great demand for farming and the various purposes brought out by the war, will be found in the Screen Magazine No. 61. The film is introduced as an official film of the United States Department of Agriculture and shows some fine types of horse flesh, including heavy Percheron brood mares, saddle horses, draft horses, hunters and ponies.

"'King' Hog Is Hoover's Best Bet" (Universal).

The Universal Screen Magazine No. 61 contains an excellent bit of film illustrative of the hog industry, which is now being encouraged and pursued for the purpose of replenishing the larders of our European allies as well as for the benefit of our own men preparing for the front. The picture shows the sanitary care of hogs and hog raising on a large scale. Attention is drawn to the proper ventilation of pens and the careful disinfecting of the animals for the destruction of disease germs and the prevention of vermin.

Educational Films Corporation of America Releases Unusual Subject Touching Lightly the Supposed Origin of Man.

ONE of the unusual things in educational filmdom at the present time is the release by the Educational Films Corporation of a film depicting the different stages of evolution commencing with the period of fire suggesting the molten night and vast clouds of smoke enveloping the lifeless earth. Queer forms of plant life suggest the beginning of the earth's vegetation, and the reptile is introduced as the first form of animal life, followed by the giant diplodocus to which this form of life evolved some three million years ago. The tortoise of today is said to be the only form of life directly traceable to the diplodocus. Then came the mammal forms of which we have fossil proof. The hyrax, a small hare-like animal, exists today as the only remains of the primal form from which the hippopotamus sprang; and in a skeleton head of the hyrax tusks resembling those of the hippopotamus are plainly visible. The pygmy hippopotamus is also shown in the picture and also a fine specimen of the hippo proper. The anthropoid ape is introduced as proof of the origin of prehistoric man and is followed by the orang and the gibbon, which walks erect and bears a most uncanny resemblance to the human form.

The subject is entertainingly presented and is not without its moments of comedy.

Motion Picture Advertising

The Growth and Progress of the Picturized Appeal Discussed and Exemplified at a Dinner of League of Advertising Women.

IT IS a good thing for people with common interests to get together once in a while for the purpose of discussing the best methods of promoting those interests; and it was with a great deal of pleasure, not to say benefit, that the writer attended such a discussion following a dinner given at the New York Advertising Club, 47 East 25th street, New York City, on the evening of Tuesday, February 19, by the League of Advertising Women.

The speakers who on this occasion discussed motion picture advertising were Alexander Black, LL.D., Ph.D., of Newspaper Feature Service, and otherwise known as the "father of the pictureplay," scheduled to exploit the philosophy of Motion Picture Advertising; M. A. Dow, "Safety First" expert of the New York Central Lines, on the value of your selling message delivered through the medium of the motion picture; Harry Levey of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company on theatrical films and their distribution; and Dr. W. E. J. Kirk, in charge of the Baby Welfare Department of Borden's, on the distribution of industrial films.

During the evening four different methods of "getting the message over" via the motion picture were presented. To the spectators these illustrations of varying ideas, all valuable in their way, were intensely interesting. We realized then if never before that that branch of the motion picture industry known most commonly as the industrial end has developed to its present stage as an advertising medium after careful study on the part of those who have had it in hand. By comparison one with another the most effective methods of presentation have taken shape.

The first of the pictures shown was not an industrial film, but demonstrated a method of advertising rules of "safety first." This picture was entitled "The Rule of Reason," and is used by the New York Central Railroad in educating its employees to careful methods of carrying on their everyday work. It was effective for the purpose for which it was intended, but rather long for commercial purposes. The method employed in impressing on its audience the various "safety first" truths which it contained involved a slender story with which each lesson in carefulness was linked.

The second film illustrated dairy work as practised at the Borden farms and manufactory. This was interesting in detail and more commercial than the first; but it, too, lacked that brevity and terseness of quality necessary for the best success as a propaganda or advertising film.

The third method presented was that of employing the film magazine. This allows of the combining of the propaganda film with several other subjects of current or entertainment values, thus making it a part of the general entertainment without encountering the difficulties of depending solely on its own interesting qualities to get a share in public appreciation. One can readily see what an excellent medium this must be for the industrial advertiser.

Fourth and last to be shown was a film made by a firm recently launched in the field—the Films of Business Corporation, of which Camilla Donworth, chairman of the evening, is president. The title of the film is "One Department of a Great Industry." It covered but one reel of film and in that reel it illustrated clearly with the employment of many closeups and cleverly worded subtitles not only each important step in the manufacture of spaghetti, but the planting and harvesting of the wheat from which its main ingredient, wheat flour, is obtained. In the picturing of this branch of an industry not an inch of film was wasted, and the result is that the spectator is not only enlightened on the given subject, but he is also entertained. We have seen nothing in the way of a purely advertising film that more surely demonstrates its possibilities. M. I. MacD.

Unique Method of Advertising

Ford Motor Company Extends Free Distribution of Educational Films to European Countries.

SOME time ago we carried an article on the manufacture of educational films by the Ford Motor Company which gave particulars concerning the development of a branch of the moving picture industry which has been welded into the makeup of one of the largest manufacturing concerns in the country. The following excerpt from a letter recently received from A. B. Jewett, of the photographic department of the Ford Motor Company may, however, be of interest to our readers in partial consideration of the immensity of the educational field and the work that is being carried on through various sources:

With one or two exceptions, and these indirectly, our film is handled entirely through our own branches in the following cities: Atlanta, Buffalo, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Columbus, Denver, Detroit, Fargo, Indianapolis, Kansas City, Los Angeles, Louisville, Memphis, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Oklahoma City, Omaha, Salt Lake City, San Francisco, Seattle, Spokane, St. Louis, Washington, Cambridge (Mass.), Charlotte, Dallas, Des Moines, Houston, Long Island City, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Portland, San Antonio, Scranton, Elmer Auto Co., Hartford, Conn., and Dutee Wilcox Flint at Providence, R. I.

These branches act as exchanges and through them our films are distributed to between five and six thousand theaters each week and to audiences of between five and six million people. We have been designated by the Committee on Public Information—The Honorable George Creel, Chairman, Washington, D. C.—to supply the Government, through his committee, with certain of our films for circulation in foreign countries, translated into the language of those countries, for the purpose of informing our foreign neighbors of America, as she really exists today. To this end we have already supplied the Committee on Public Information with something over 350,000 feet of film, complimentary from the Ford Motor Company. We have just completed and begun the circulation of a film—"The Making of a Man-o-Warsman." This is an educational subject in six reels accurately portraying the life in the naval training stations, showing in detail how Uncle Sam prepares his sailor men for life aboard the fighting ships. This film will be used extensively abroad and will be circulated extensively in this country, as a sufficient means for off-setting propaganda of a vicious type that would insinuate that our naval training camps are not everything that they should be.

The "Ford Educational Weekly" does not include specific advertising. We carry our name on each title, as follows: "Produced and Loaned by the Ford Motor Company." And it is our firm belief that if we have assisted in establishing in the minds of the people sufficient comfort, courage and satisfaction together with an educational program, we have gone a long way toward perpetuating that mental attitude which is necessary for good business.

In addition to our weekly release, which, by the way, has been 110 copies per week, we have a film of the Ford Factory which describes in detail the methods in vogue here among our 40,000 men; a picture of the Ford English School which shows in detail how we teach the foreign born employee to read, write and speak the English language; and pictures dealing with Safety First through which we educate our workingmen in the application of caution.

In an interview with W. B. Young, the New York representative of the Ford moving picture interests, we discovered that a large amount of "Ford" energy is now being put into the manufacture of a patriotic series of which "The Making of a Man-o-Warsman" is the third. Previous numbers are "Training Officers for Our National Army" and "The Eyes of the Allies." The latter has to do with the aerial division of the army.

Mr. Young also states that the manufacture of the educational moving picture has been a hobby with Mr. Ford. It has therefore been made to serve a purpose of educational enlightenment as well as forming a unique advertising medium. There are at present employed in the photographic department of the Ford Motor Company some forty persons, not including cameramen, who are busy in all parts of the country.

Liberty and Democracy

Strand Screen Demonstration of Patriotism and Procession of Nations as They Entered World War Met With Enthusiasm.

THE patriotic pulse of the people so easily sounded at the present time, while the world struggle for liberty and democracy continues, marked time to the patriotic demonstration screened at the Strand theater during the week of February 17. Manager Harold Edel is to be congratulated on the origination of a clever idea. The passing in procession of the nations and their leaders as they entered the world war, subtitled in splendid and democratic language, drew storms of applause from audiences which visited the Strand during that week. At the particular performance through which the writer sat, however, there was one exception which was greeted with a sullen silence that spoke louder than the loudest applause in the interests of the cause at stake. This was when the unfortunate Czar Nicholas appeared on the screen in review of his soldiers; not a sound—not even a hiss greeted the weak-willed monarch who witnessed with approval the betrayal of his people.

It is a question whether or not a psychological error was made in the presentation of our own government and its able executive. Instead of placing President Wilson first, as was expected, different prominent members of the government were first introduced, leading up to a final climax, in which the President with the encomiums that are his due appeared on the screen. The effect that was originally intended was apparently secured, judging from the storms of applause which greeted the President's introduction to the audience.

Other features of the program and which were incorporated in the Strand Topical Review were "Camouflage" from the 108th release of the Paramount-Bray Pictograph, and views photographed with General Pershing and his boys in France, including instruction in the use of the gas mask. This latter we are told is given in an underground room filled with stifling vapor. The making of Liberty loaves from the Hearst-Pathe News was also interesting.

Liquid Fire Filmed

Remarkable Pictures of the Applying of Deadliest Weapon as Taught Our Boys in France.

ONE of the most remarkable pictures exhibited in some time will be found in the 42nd issue of Universal Current Events. It shows us the use of liquid fire applied by our American boys in France under instructions from French veterans. To those of us who have never witnessed such an exhibition the picture is a revelation; it visualizes for us one of the most deadly if not the most deadly of the present war's weapons used first by the Germans. The picture shows the advance of the men each armed with a small tank attached by what appears to be a hose to the source of the liquid fire. At a given point the men halt, fall in line and instantaneously put into execution the liquid fire projectors, when great tongues of withering flame dart forth on their way to the enemy. These pictures belong to the U. S. Official War Films, and were secured some time ago by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

MacFadden Plans Anew

Physical Culturist Revamps Scheme for Manufacture and Distribution of Films on His Favorite Subject.

BEGINNING with the sixth number soon to be issued, Bernarr Macfadden announces that he will enlarge the scope and size of his Physical Culture Screen Magazine. Each number will be a complete 1000-foot reel published monthly—as soon as present facilities are added to, fortnightly. The magazine will not be on a programme, but will be issued by territorial rights, so that the independent exchanges (which need short subjects) can handle it.

Mr. Macfadden's plans include everything of interest in the big outdoors and athletics generally. Champion athletes will be shown their training tasks, doings at soldier camps will be recorded, women's activities illustrated, and much practical information about food and health will be picturized. In addition to the "takes" of its own expert camera staff, Physical Culture Photo Plays is in the market for any good negative of the above character. The concern may be reached by wire or letter at 949 Broadway, New York, where all communications will be promptly answered.

I. S. Seidman, who has been long connected with educational film work and also of the Western Newspaper Union staff, is in active charge of the publication. He will give special attention to the reporting of athletic events, and the titles will be written by an expert in the Macfadden office who is thoroughly acquainted with the popular requirements of concise information as to sports, dress, hygiene, health and diet.

Items of Interest.

One of the most entertaining of the Finley Nature studies that are being released by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company is entitled "Bears of the Yellowstone." Children as well as adults would be delighted with it, especially where a couple of cubs are photographed at play. They have an interesting bout—a real childhood fight, good natured, but energetic. This is the third of the Finley pictures. It was released Feb. 2 and covers a half reel of film. On the other half are some fine views photographed in Lapland presenting probably the best pictures of a herd of deer in motion that has ever been filmed. This latter is entitled "The Long Trail."

Prof. M. C. Terrell, county superintendent of education for Alamance county, North Carolina, is perfecting arrangements for the presentation of a regular schedule of motion picture shows in all the schools in this county, and each of the school buildings will be equipped with a complete motion picture projecting equipment, films being rented and routed throughout the county in much the same manner as is practiced with theaters through co-operative booking offices.

Motion pictures in the high schools all over North Carolina have been in operation for some time, the Tileston High School, at Wilmington, North Carolina, having been completely equipped through the aid of the Howard-Wells Amusement Company, more than a year ago. The potentiality of the motion picture as a method of education is being rapidly and earnestly considered by the state educational heads, and while, to a certain extent, the presentation of regular motion picture shows in schools furnishes a kind of opposition to the local theaters, the managers are ready and willing to aid them in every way possible, since it marks the gradual acceptance of the screen as a powerful medium for good and is rapidly overcoming the old prejudices against the theaters in some sections.

The Hon. H. W. Adams, Mayor of Beloit, Wis., and Rev. James Boyd Coxe, Rector of Trinity Episcopal Church, St. Louis, have just been elected members of the National Advisory Commitee of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures. Mayor Adams has shown a very intelligent interest in the subject of regulation of motion pictures. Soon after entering office he invited the proprietors of the motion picture houses to meet him for a conference on the subject of regulation. At this conference he told them of the city's desire to cooperate with them in placing their business upon a basis that would deserve public confidence and respect, and added that it was the city's intention that only acceptable pictures should be shown. The Mayor requested the exhibitors to inform him of any picture about which they had any doubt as to the desirability of exhibiting in Beloit. "We found," said Mayor Adams in describing this plan, "that they were all willing to cooperate, and thus voluntary censorship was established."

The Rev. Dr. Coxe is one of the leading clergymen in St. Louis and has shown great interest in the subject of motion pictures.

The Gaumont-Mutual Weekly No. 9 shows us, among other things, that our fighting boys are having quite an enjoyable time at camp. Other pictures show what is being done outside of the training camps in connection with the war—women who are taking the place of male laborers; the famous Bellevue unit of Red Cross nurses, ready to start for France; and the pleasant lives led by the Germans who are so fortunate as to be interned in this country. Foreign subjects include the graves where rest the first American soldiers who fell on French soil; French soldiers in the trenches and on the fighting line; and a remarkable engineering feat which has made possible a drawbridge so nicely balanced that it can be operated by one man.

According to an announcement from Foursquare Pictures, Foursquare Exchange managers of the middle west are experiencing gratifying progress in selling merchandise on a basis of quality. The Chicago, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Pittsburg and Kansas City branches are beginning to attract exhibitors who want subjects of short footage which have that much desired element—quality.

The Bruce scenics and the Ditmars animal pictures are finding a steadily expanding market in these districts. Managers Flaherty, Erdmann, Lux, Bronstetter and Baker report to the home Foursquare Pictures office that these pictures—the product of the Educational Film Corporation—have finally gotten to be regarded as features, despite their brief length.

PARAMOUNT WITHDRAWS GERMAN SCENICS.

A notification to exchanges issued by General Manager of Distribution Al Lichtman, of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, orders the withdrawal of various German scenics from the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travelogues, in view of present conditions involving that country.

PROCTOR TO WRITE FOR WORLD FILM.

George Du Bois Proctor has joined the scenario staff of the World Film Corporation and will begin work at once. Mr. Proctor was born in Danvers, Mass., and educated at Andover and at Yale. His screen successes include "The Yellow Jacket," "The Maternal Spark," "Each of His Kind," "Those Without Sin" and "The Captain of His Soul."

MIGNON ANDERSON WITH EDITH STOREY.

Mignon Anderson is appearing with Edith Storey in the coming Metro All-Star Series production, "The Claim." Miss Anderson is cast as Kate MacDonald in this Western drama with Miss Storey. She is best remembered for her career as a star in Thanhouser pictures, when she earned the title of "the dare-devil ingenue."

without detracting from the film title is to be advised, and the paneled date seems to give about the best results as a rule, the next best device being to underline the date with one-point rule and set off to the left, flush with or extending into the margin. The two houses used a special holly design for their Christmas border and some stock cut material to surround Bill Hart in a decorative front page.

Program Stuff.

The Photogram, of the Star, Bellingham, Washington, puts an old question very neatly. Mr. Arnold makes a special point of his efforts to please his patrons, and in a recent issue he gives this:

> Having a picture that everybody likes sure makes the job of running a theater a lot more fun. But it's something rarely done; every week there are some people who tell us that "the comedy was fine, but I don't care about the feature at all." If it weren't for the people who tell us—that same week—that, "that was some program—one of the best features you've had," we don't know what we'd do.
> You can get us to admit, though, that we like this job of trying to please hundreds of different kinds of preferences in pictures. And right here we want to say again that if you would just get the habit of applauding—like audiences at the picture plays in New York and other cities do—we might come nearer pleasing you every time. When an exhibitor hears applause for a picture, and can measure that applause against the applause received by other pictures; and when he learns just what sort of situations bring out the heartiest evidences of approval from his own audiences, he can be much more sure of what you will or will not like best. Naturally we are keen to get for you those pictures which you are most apt to like.

Run this in your own program and keep after it if for no other reason than the moral effect applause possesses. If a grouch hears a picture applauded, he is more apt to think that he himself likes the picture. Give life to your house by coaxing your patrons to applaud.

With Decker's Compliments.

For his Christmas souvenir Charles W. Decker, of the Majestic, Grand Junction, Colorado, sent out a hanger calendar with a really good example of color printing from a painting by Moran, a letter and a complimentary. We particularly like the letter. The first paragraph asks the recipient to accept the calendar with the compliments of the house and to use the pass. The second paragraph adds that the pass is an appreciation of former patronage or a hope that the stranger will come and see what the Majestic shows are like. The third paragraph reads:

> Please make use of the enclosed complimentary ticket, the only thing it will cost you is two cents war tax, and this we must collect by law—the two cents we pay to the government to help win the war. Of course two cents is only a trifle, but at the end of the month they grow into dollars. During the month of November the Majestic paid the government $365.61 war tax, so you can readily see that every time you visit the Majestic your Uncle Samuel gets your aid to help lick the Kaiser.

That is nicely put. The pass undoubtedly will reach many persons who are staying away because of the tax. They will pay the tax once, if that is all they have to pay, and once the ice is broken, they will come back again. Meantime Mr. Decker drives home the fact that the tax is a patriotic duty and not an imposition. The paragraph works from many angles and is worthy of imitation. Mr. Decker has done better than usual.

Follow With Stills.

George Moore, of the Orpheum, Chicago, one of the "Loop" houses, places his faith in stills to really get the money for the house that must cater to the passer by. First he wants a known star, then he wants the star in some interesting stills. The cut shows the front of the house dressed for Mary Miles Minter, in Beauty and the Rogue. The Banner he uses to draw people from across the street, for he believes that the Minter name can do this, but once he gets them across he looks to the stills to bring them up to the box office. There is good logic in this. Save in the case of the ardent fans most persons want to know that the play is interesting. They must be attracted by something that is done in the play. There must be the unconscious "I'd like to see that," to win the day. We believe that the cuts of the girl used for The Auction Block sold far more seats than did the name of the author. It was something concrete, something definite, upon which desire could be fastened. Play up your lobby displays. Get double sets and use some of them in the windows.

For Next Year.

Harry M. Bird, of the Dreamland Amusement Company, Maryville, Tenn., sends in an idea for a lobby display that brought him big business this year and which may bring your own house business next year if you remember to put the idea in the Christmas file now. He decorated the lobby with crepe streamers and bells, with holly and mistletoe and for a center piece he used a Christmas tree decorated with cut-outs of the stars on his holiday week bill. The cut suggests the manner of display. It did not cost much to get up, but it was in the spirit of the season and made more talk than almost anything in the way of an elaborate display could have done. The decoration of the tree may be more elaborate, if desired, but it will be found that the ornaments, if too lavishly employed, will detract from the display of the cut-outs. If you have not already a file for seasonable ideas, start in with this and build up. The scheme has been suggested in the department numerous times. In its simplest form it is merely a few large envelopes marked "Christmas," "Thanksgiving," and with other observed days. Try it for a year and you'll never be without one again.

Bad Advertising.

Two exceptional examples of more than merely bad advertising happen to come in by the same mail. One is from Los Angeles and the other from Cleveland. We reproduce the lower portion of the advertisement of Jimquin's Rialto theater, Los Angeles. The top shows an actual cut of Mary Garden, costumed as Thais, and the text runs into the announcement shown at the top of the part reproduced. The nearly nude performer shown at the bottom of the space is not Miss Garden,, nor does she wear a costume suggestive of those worn by Thais. She has no responsible part in the picture and does not appear in the cast. She was picked out, apparently, for her nudity, and for her undressed condition alone. It is not definitely stated to be a picture of Miss Garden, but one of the inserts reads: "In Thais Mary Garden wears wonderful costumes that will thrill all women and delight all men," and across is another that says: "Miss Garden's dance in Thais is remarkable and sensational. She is the vital, daring, electric star without an equal." Both of these banks seem to be applicable to the person in the photograph and undoubtedly it is intended to create the impression that the cut shows Miss Garden in a costume worn during a sensational dance. This is not Miss Garden and this is not the dance she does, and we think that for once Jimquin has let something get by him of which he would not approve himself on sober second thought. Undoubtedly many persons will come expecting to see Miss Garden in this state of undress and will resent the fake. It got the money for this attraction, but it may have cost the house friends worth more than the slight gain. The second example is from the Standard theatre, Cleveland. Here there is no attempt to profit by false pretenses, but it is a splendid example of advertising stupidity. This is a four elevens in the Sunday issue, and it is the entire advertisement. That is what makes it so stupid. With a variety of attractive stills of scenes from the play to select from the advertising agent picks out a bunch of chorus girls who are nothing more than atmosphere. They are not characteristic of the picture, they have nothing in particular to do with the Price of a Good Time. They are just one of the flashes from a cabaret scene, and yet with a story that is gripping, human, appealing, the advertiser makes appeal with a bunch of chorus girls that evidently were taken from Billy Watson's Beef Trust. In the entire advertisement, which cost money to prepare and to display, there is not a line of argument, not a word of description, and as though to help along the bottom lines read today men and women are hastening to see magnificent and that does not appear to be a bit of intentional humor, either. What's the use of paying extra money for a better than usual play if it is advertised like a Keystone bathing girl comedy? These two advertisements, from their respective angles, are about as poor as we have seen.

Some Oddities.

Several oddities are noted on the opening program of the Theater Wilbert, Plaquemine, La., operated by Lionel Delacroix. The house opened in February with a free day, but Mr. Delacroix sent Christmas greetings to all prospective patrons, as we recorded at the time. Some of the house rules read rather oddly. For example, rule two reads that patrons in shirt sleeves must sit in the balcony, and another rule runs to the effect that full price must be paid after the box office closes with no guarantee that the full performance will be seen. The box office is closed when the last full show starts. Monday and Friday the lower floor is twenty cents, and the balcony twenty and fifteen. The negro gallery is ten and fifteen cents. The house has a rest room which is open daily from ten o'clock on, though the performance does not begin until three o'clock. In the meantime the service is free and doubtless makes many friends. Every Friday night there is a dance, following the performance, from ten until half past twelve, for which no extra charge is made.

Two Colors.

The Star theater, Weiser, Idaho, took a half page for The Slacker and got it in two colors. The advertisement was not elaborate, but it was well built, and not too much red ink was used. Only the house name, the title and the words "shows" and "prices" were in red, along with the border. The rest was all in black. It shows up well and arouses curiosity, which is the main point. This is the first red ink run we have seen in some months. We used to get a lot of them. They make a good flash about once a year.

A Monthly Folder.

A. A. Lionais sends in some house programs he issues for the Home theater, Everett, Mass. He uses an eight page, railroad style folder, with four weeks on one side, a page to a week in double columns, the house title on the front, a star portrait on the back and a bank advertisement on what would be the double middle were it stitched. They are not badly done, but they are not well done by any manner of means. We show the second issue. The third differs only in that the name of the star or the serial is in display with the title in Roman. There is nothing eye-inviting about the display. If you want very much to know about the attractions, you can find out the titles, but that is all you can ascertain. The printer opens up the lines with mathematical nicety, as he has been taught to do. He uses the specified type faces. More than that he does not attempt. It is nothing to worry his young life. A straight calendar would be better than this, and that would allow two or perhaps even three pages for chat of the coming attractions. Patrons could learn something of the plays to come; would have their interest aroused. As it stands there is not a single line in the six pages the house takes to interest in a single film. Even the star cut which decorates the back page is general and not connected up with a story of any particular date. The house program is one of the best forms of advertising, but to be of value, it must be informative and interesting.

From a Pioneer.

John C. Green, of the Temple, Galt, Ontario, is one of the real pioneers of the screen. In sending in some recent stuff he writes:

> Herewith I enclose some samples of newspaper ads and press dope I use six days a week, 52 weeks every year. What do you think of this kind of newspaper work in a small town of 13,000 where it's possible to give only one performance a night and a matinee only on Saturday or holidays. Takes nerve, don't you think, but my policy for 33 years in the show business is that you have to toot your horn if you want to sell clams (or pictures) and some of the muchly inflated stars are such clams that it makes selling them very hard.

Mr. Green does not merely advertise, he blows his horn, not too loudly, but sufficiently to make an impression. He uses mostly three-column widths and drops twelve inches or more. One advertisement for The Little Princess is oddly built. The top is two 9½ and below that is a four-fours. The latter does not appear as a part of the other advertisement but is a special paneled card appealing to mothers to send their children to see the play. This was for the day before opening, and the showing date got three thirteens. Another paper carries a full page the day before showing. That is going pretty strong for a thirteen-thousand-town or any other place. Mr. Green gets 15 and 25 cents instead of the usual 10 and 15, but he gives a show that is worth a quarter; late releases and the best subjects. Mr. Green has been playing the game for a third of a century and he has found out that if you have something to sell, the way to get rid of it is to advertise and keep on advertising. It may take nerve to increase your advertising in the face of falling business, but it is the surest way to bring it back if you have something to advertise that is worth while. But advertising is not merely buying space. It is making the right use of it.

Dan Knows the Answer.

Dan Conncrs, of Piper's Opera House, Virginia City, Nev., one of the most historic houses in the west, gives the whole snap away in a note that covers some recent samples. He writes:

These ads are eccentric, but when there are two shows loading up a little daily paper with the story of a play and two-column cuts and doing it every day, I switched into "crazy" advertising for a change. They get tired of reading the same old "Story of the Play," and anyhow I believe that telling the story of a play is an injury to business unless it happens to be something out of the beaten path.

There are several large chunks of wisdom in that letter. Be different, to be observed is one of the fundamental rules of advertising, and in most cases telling the story of a film is as detrimental, as Mr. Connors says. Let them hope for the best, anyway. These reproductions will run too small to give the text, but the layout might prove useful to other exhibitors. That on the right is decidedly good, and none of them are as "crazy" as Mr. Connor seems to think them.

Anonymous.

Someone sends in a page from Sioux Falls, S. D., and writes:

I own and operate one of the theaters on this sheet that I am enclosing to you and want an expression as to which display is the best from the advertising standpoint. Our local paper gets up this page every Saturday evening for the theaters and I want to get all that I can out of it, with suggestions from one who knows.

The advertisement for Thais is the best. This is not alone because the cut serves as an attractor, but because the cut requires a certain amount of white space. The rest of the type display is in consonance with this layout and does not crowd the space. The questions, taken from the press book, pique curiosity, though some of them are so framed as to suggest that Miss Garden in a combination of Theda Bara and Little Egypt. Even at that, it is probably selling argument. From a typographical point of view, the Jewel comes second, but as advertising it is not so good as that for the Princess. It takes it for granted that Taylor Holmes has already been sold. All that is necessary is to announce him. On the other hand, while the Princess does not catch the eye as quickly, the combination of Ingersoll's name and "I Believe" will tend to rouse curiosity and the reader will go ahead to see what connection there is. Both advertisements are too formal; too much of the straight line stuff. The Strand tries to tell too much. It should have taken more space for Miss Young and merely have announced the underlines. All should have gone in eight point. This is a Saturday issue and the first of the underlines does not come until Wednesday. Get them in to see Shirley Kaye and on Tuesday announce Daybreak. It would be better to drop the underlines entirely. The prices are made too conspicuous. The Olympia should have told a little more about its attraction. Here is another case of supposing that Farnum can sell himself. There may be a few who might be coaxed in if they had some hint as to the style of the play. One of the advertising phrases could have been picked up from Advertising Aids. For selling value the Jewel, Olympia and Colonial (small advertisement), rank in that order, but pretty close together. With the exception of the Colonial's large advertisement, none of them is well displayed because the compositors seem to have made no efforts, possibly because the Exhibitors take so little interest.

Meeting Opposition.

Here are three advertisements from the Sentinel, Waterville, Maine, the Monday before the new opposition opened. The three were all in the two outside columns, with the City Opera House on top, but they have been cut apart for convenience in reproduction. It will be seen that the Silver keeps on with the same two twos and a bare announcement of the title. The City Opera House takes more space, two sevens against sixes for the Haines, but beyond adding the cut, the announcement is just as dead as ever. Later the Haines came out for four eights announcing The Whip and three acts of vaudeville, working on what used to be known as the Poli scheme, presenting the feature in the middle of the show and the rest of the stuff both before and after so that the person who was there at half past six could see the entire bill by a quarter past nine, while it was possible to come at eight and still see the complete performance. Neither of the old time houses made the attempt to present something a little better than usual. No effort was given toward a better constructed advertisement. They just bared the neck. In time probably much of the old patronage will drift bask to the pioneer houses, for the new house seems to be atrociously designed from what we could see of the ironwork last fall, but the old houses could have helped a little by getting a jump on.

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully adressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addrssed to this department. Questions should be treated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticized, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is inclosed.

Not Good Argument.

SOMEONE, evidently a rather young man, wastes three cents upon an anonymous letter that calls us a prevaricator in fewer letters than that. The burden of his song is that we said the market was opening up, and so he sent a story to every company and they all came back, and therefore he knows us to be a person in whom the truth is not. He is reminded that we also wrote that the market was not open to the boobs. His argument is unsound.

Make an Analysis.

W. H. Harrison, Jr., author of the winning "Uncle Tom" synopsis, sends in an analysis of Technique of the Photoplay made for his own use. It is to be regretted that we cannot give the study in full, but that regret is tempered by the thought that it will do you far more good if you make your own analysis. Mr. Harrison uses the form familiar to the college student, but we would suggest that addition of the paragraph numbers might help, and would also recommend that related matter from other chapters be brought over. To make an analysis of Chapter XX, for example. An analysis might look something like this:

CHOICE OF PLOT. XX.

1. Drama is more easily written than good comedy and should be first attempted unless one's forte is comedy.
2. The good plot

Should be capable of being produced without unique expense through the avoidance of an undue number of scenes or scenes costly to produce.

5. Should have a small cast of principals, no matter how many extra people may be employed. Five or six characters should carry the burden of the story.
6. Should avoid two widely separated locales as the arctic regions and the tropics, though two countries can be made without much trouble if the scenes in one country are confined to interiors.
7. Should have as few time jumps as possible. The ideal plot is continuous in action.
8. Should be able to pass the various censorships (see Censorship).
9. Should avoid the unclean incident.
10. Should preferably end happily, but the facts should not be distorted to bring about this happy ending.
13. Should have few complications of sub-plot.
14. Should not give offense to any race, creed, sect, political party, society or propaganda.
15. Should not ridicule personal deformities or mental defects.
17. Should be simple and direct.

By going over the entire book, leaving room on the first draft for additions from other chapters, and then making a fair copy, the student will become possessed of a book even more valuable than Technique since this analysis represents his own understanding of the original work and is presented for ready reference in a form most easily consulted.

And remember that even though you are now concentrating upon the synopsis only, your proficiency in plotting will, eventually, give you a studio opening, if you desire it, provided you can do continuity work. It is absurd to argue that since continuities are no longer purchased it is not necessary to study the full technique of photoplay. You must know technique in order to be able to write the proper sort of synopsis, and you must understand continuity if you want to progress further. Studio authorities are still on the watch for good staff men, and mostly they are picked from those who have shown ability to write good plots. Keep studying.

Beware Press Agents.

Sometimes it is not easy to distinguish between the bona fide requests for scripts and the press agent's talk. Sometimes one runs into the other. Lately the establishment of a new script department was announced. The picture of the new editor was run and much was said about his plans and intentions, but some weeks later we asked about the new office and found that nothing had been done beyond reading. It had been the intention of the company to inaugurate a new dispensation. The press agent elaborated somewhat upon the plans and gave out the announcement. Then some internal policies cropped up that halted progress, and not a single story has been purchased. Meantime a number of authors are loudly declaiming that they have been stung. Perhaps they have, from their own point of view, but they were in too much of a hurry to get up to the counter. The early bird may get all the worms, but the hasty author sometimes merely wastes his stamps. Take it easy when you see stuff like this, and the more glowing the announcement, the more cautious you should be, for the greater the profusion of adjectives the more likelihood that the press agent and not the editor is the real instigator. As a matter of fact most of this stuff is not written for the author but is intended to impress the exhibitor with the idea that the stories offered by this particular company are going to be out of the ordinary. The chances are that if there is a real demand and a real editor, the editor knows how to get stories without hanging up three-sheets.

Essentials.

Many of those who sent in "Uncle Tom" synopses were careful to explain that they had left out Eliza crossing the ice to make it easier for the director. One writer explained that he did this, because he was told to in Technique of the Photoplay, but wanted to know just how far he could go. As an example he pointed out that he could use a dog to good advantage in a play, and it was merely required that the dog should run through a scene. "All that is necessary," he cheerfully explained, "is to have some one hold the dog and let him go when his master, on the other side of the scene, whistles for him." That was all, but we have seen 400 feet of stock wasted merely trying to get a dog to jump off a sofa and run off at his master's call. The best rule is to keep the action as simple as possible and not to fuss it up with a lot of frills. But if a dog, and only a dog, will serve, then write in the dog by all means and pray that it will find some director who can and will get the trained dog. The main thing to learn is whether the difficult stunt is an essential or merely an elaboration of a story. This is something you will acquire only through study and practice.

Won't Take Carbons.

The trouble one correspondent had with some new paper might interest others. He sent on a sample with the complaint that while it gave him a good first copy, he could not get even one satisfactory carbon. He bought it from the printer at a reduced price as a job lot. The trouble is that the paper is not intended for typewriting but for printing. It has a calendared surface that will take the ink from the ribbon, but the carbon can get no grip on the shiny coat. The paper should be kept for first sheets and a cheap news paper used for carbons, if the printer will cut it. The best carbon sheets have a dead finish. You can pick up a lot of jobs from the printing houses if you know how to go after them, but test out the paper before you buy it, and avoid, if possible, paper with too glossy a finish.

Don't Do It.

Two years ago a certain author pestered us for the name of a good selling agent, and we told him there was no such thing. The other day he sent in a couple of ounces of correspondence between himself and an agent and wanted us to weep with him. Probably he is angry because we refused, but we cannot waste sympathy upon those who reject our advice and then get stung. Please do not follow this author's example, and please do not write in and ask us for the name of an agent or request information as to the standing of any agency. If you read the paper you know what we think. If you are not a careful reader we cannot spare the time to correct your oversight. You are welcome to advice about photoplay writing, but you must learn to sell for yourself, for that is something no one can teach you.

Be General.

Don't bother to write a story for Bill Hart. Too many others are in the job. Write a story that might suit Hart and sell it to someone else.

Change Over.

We are fed up on war. Write a couple of romances.

Technique of the Photoplay

By

EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

A book replete with practical pointers on the preparation of stories for the screen, answering the hundred and one questions which immediately present themselves when the first script is attempted. A tested handbook for the constant writer of picture plots. "Straight-from-the-shoulder" information from an author with a wealth of real "dollars-and-cents" experience.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second sets of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Automatic Regulator for Mazda Lamp.

Our old friend, J. H. Hallberg, Consulting Engineer for the United Theater Equipment Corporation, is the inventor of about as clever a piece of simple electrical apparatus as it has fallen to the lot of this editor to view to date; also the invention of Friend Hallberg, when taken in connection with another regulator which he has designed for d. c. Mazda lamp voltage regulation, marks a long step towards making the tungsten filament (Mazda) lamp a practical thing for projection purposes. Used in conjunction with these instruments the lamps should, I think, last their full 100 hours of life.

In a recent article I set forth my belief that the Mazda would never be a commercial success for the projection of motion pictures until some commercially practical plan for the very close regulation of amperage through the filament be found, because an overload of even so much as one ampere for any considerable time is very bad for the filament and an overload of as much as two amperes for two or three minutes materially shortens the life of the lamp. Remembering that lamps cost $7 each, the importance of having them last their full 100 hours of estimated life is seen.

Well, the inventions of Mr. Hallberg do exactly that thing. Fluctuations of amperage flow is due to fluctuations in line voltage, and friend Hallberg's inventions automatically regulate the voltage so closely that current flow is held constant at a maximum variation of .5 of an ampere up or down.

First we will consider the a. c. apparatus, leaving the d. c. regulator for a future article. The a. c. apparatus is extremely simple. It consists of a small transformer of the three-leg, closed core type. Its secondary coil is stationary and is connected directly to the lamp. The primary coil, however, when in operation, literally floats in the magnetic field. This coil is so arranged that when installing a new lamp or machine the operator may raise or lower it mechanically to a point where the desired amperage at the lamp is obtained. Having done this his further task consists, insofar as the device is concerned, in letting it severely alone, since once the desired amperage (voltage) is established, the primary coil becomes entirely independent of the mechanical adjustment and floats free in the magnetic field, thus regulating the voltage (hence the amperage flow) automatically. Should that big motor in the next building shut down suddenly, and the line voltage, as a consequence, rise (precisely this does happen all too often in practice), the primary coil instantly, and with uncanny precision, moves up just the fraction of an inch and sits there like a cat at a mouse hole, waiting for that motor to start again. Meanwhile the lamp filament has felt no change, or a change too slight to be appreciable, and all is well

But this is only a beginning of the work of this instrument, because once having set the device to supply the proper amperage from a given line voltage to a 600 watt lamp, one may substitute a 750 watt lamp without making any change in the mechanical adjustment of the device, which automatically supplies precisely the required additional ten amperes; moreover the device gives even closer regulation with the big lamp than when the smaller one is in place. This surely is plenty for one little, simple transformer to do, but Brother Hallberg has proceeded further, and by the mere changing of a wire connection the instrument may be used for either 110 or 220 volt supply.

Certainly the foregoing ought to be amply sufficient, but there are still one or two minor points of excellence in the apparatus. First: it is constructed in two units, viz.: the transformer itself, which may be substituted for the economizer, compensarc, inductor or rheostat in use with the arc lamp, without any change in the operating room wiring, and the ammeter, which is attached to the back of the lamphouse by means of a swinging arm, so that the operator may set it in position to be seen from any point at the right or back of the operating room.

I desire to compliment Mr. Hallberg on this piece of apparatus. It is a clever piece of work. I have watched it in operation and it certainly does look to me like the real thing in voltage regulation for Mazda lamps operating in a. c. supply.

Unique Screen Arrangement.

The accompanying illustration shows the unique screen arrangement used recently in Kansas City at an exhibition given by the Kansas City Star in some large auditorium. The screen is four-sided, and on each side is a projection machine. Two of the booths (booth is the correct term in this case) may be seen in the picture. There were two more. Eight Power's projectors were used. Notice the orchestra directly under the screens. It is my understanding that four prints of the same subjects were run simultaneously, so that the entire audience saw the same thing at the same time. The audience ran into the tens of thousands. It was a unique, and I am told, a successful undertaking. The operator who sent the photograph was anything else but a good writer and I was unable to decipher his name or more than a few parts of sentences of his letter.

Light Trouble.

From an operator in the far west comes the following:

> Have your handbook and read the department with interest. Would like to call your attention to a problem we have encountered in connection with a new 6B projector.
> Some time ago we purchased a Power's 6B projector, installing it alongside our old 6A. These machines operate under precisely the same conditions. The old machine continues to give the same clear, bright picture, having good detail, while the new machine gives a picture which is dull, poor of detail and at times the screen center is so dark that one can hardly read the titles. The new machine takes current through the same inductor used for the 6A. Test shows no appreciable voltage difference as between the two arcs. We get 35 amperes and 33 volts at the arc of both lamps. We have changed the condensing lenses from one machine to the other without result; also carbons. Set of carbons same in both machines. But it is all the same result, viz., large dark spot in center of screen and dull picture, with poor detail from 6B and clear, bright, sharp picture from old 6A. No amount of adjusting will remove the dark spot in center of screen. Have placed the light source, condensers and objective all in same relationship, one machine with the other; also have experimented with other relationships, but always with the same result. As nearly as I can figure it out the trouble lies in the lamphouse, as the light does not seem to condense properly and we never get the same brilliancy at the spot with the 6B as with the old machine. Will await your reply with interest.

Your data is very clear. I am of the opinion your trouble lies largely in the condenser. In fact if your statements are all correct it can lie nowhere else. Try this: See to it that both lamps have same angle from perpendicular. In other words, give 6B lamp same angle 6A has. Use same make and size of carbon in both lamps. Let them both burn same crater. Get best screen result you can with both machines. Then set condenser of old machine same distance from film that new one is, change objective lenses and change condenser lenses, SPACING THEM (THE CONDENSER LENSES) SAME DISTANCE APART ON 6B THAT THEY WERE ON 6A and see if you don't get same result. I think you will, barring possible difference in revolving shutters, which might cause cutting of greater percentage of light on one machine than on other. There is absolutely no reason why there should be any difference in results at the spot as between the two machines if lamps have same angle, carbons are same and have same set, condenser lenses have same focal length, ARE SPACED SAME DISTANCE APART and of same quality and if condenser is same distance from film. If the test I have suggested fails to put you on the right track, let me know and I will undertake the contract of setting you right, but I think there can be no doubt that it lies in (A) Difference in focal length of condenser lenses. (B) Difference in distance condenser lenses are spaced apart. (C) Difference in lamp angle. (D) Difference in distance between condenser and film or maybe a combination of them all.

Film Damage.

Albert Wm. Hornby, Haileybury, Ontario, is in trouble, as follows:

> Enclosed find sample of film which I am accused of damaging. What I want is your opinion as to the true cause of the injury. Yesterday the inspector was here and claims the Simplex machines I am running were not to blame. My own view is that the film was deliberately cut with a knife. Look carefully and at the very beginning of the cut you will see a slight impression as where a knife blade was pressed before the cutting. Certain it is the film was not off the sprockets, else there would be marks on its surface. The exchange tells me there were 300 feet like this. I ran the film through three times and had no trouble. I will swear it left my hands in good condition.

This is a very peculiar specimen of film damage. I am unable to pass an intelligent opinion. Under a very powerful microscope I can discover no evidence of cutting. I would promptly pronounce the splitting as due to dye impurity (it is tinted film) but the stock seems tough, pliable, and in good condition. Certain it is, however, there has been terrific abuse of the film in some projector, because many of the sprocket holes are badly damaged, mostly on the down side (as film is in machines), but this is again complicated by the fact that a few of the holes are damaged on the opposite side. I'm sorry, friend Hornby, but I am unable to decide what did the damage. The sprocket holes were in part injured by one of two things, or maybe a combination of both, viz.: very, very heavy tension at the gate or else badly hooked intermittent sprocket teeth. There is still a third chance, viz.: that an upper reel stuck and pulled so hard that the upper sprocket injured the sprocket hole edges. Hooked upper sprocket teeth would help cause damage in such a case as this, but the splitting could be caused by nothing of this kind, so, after all, I am stuck. In one or two places it certainly does look as though only a knife was used, but friend microscope makes it look otherwise. I'm stuck.

New Screen.

Roy M. Herold, Elgin, Illinois, sends in sample of screen with the following explanation:

> Some time since, I wrote concerning a screen I am preparing to place on the market. You replied requesting sample, which I am now sending. One-half the sample is bright finish and the other dull. Several local theater managers are enthusiastic over the demonstration of the screen and all prefer the bright surface; however, they all suggest that the dull finish might be better for old films, as everything shows up very plainly on the bright screen. About five years ago the inventor put several of these screens on the market, but he was no promoter, hence failed. Have written his old customers, and some are strong in its praise, while others say it was good, but so bright that the reflection gave trouble where there were light scenes. I claim that a great deal of current may be saved by using a bright screen and turning the lights lower. Kindly do not mention this in print until I have a more perfect sample to submit.

The sample shows all it is necessary for me to see, friend Herold. I have looked at hundreds of screen samples during the past few years, and can tell you pretty well what any given surface will do, unless it be something entirely new, merely by looking at it. In the first place, do you realize that the screen presents almost as difficult an optical problem as does the optical train of the projector itself? Men like Frank Rembusch and the late J. H. Genter, who have made screens for years, studied the screen problem deeply, expending many thousands of dollars in experiment, still are not at all sure that they have the problem finally solved. A screen which might have been excellent five years ago may be far behind the times now. You seem to have the idea that but one or two things are involved, whereas there are many. The sample you submit has, at least, one point of superior excellence, viz.: its heavy, substantial supporting medium. The coating is very similar to that of dozens of samples that I have examined and presents absolutely nothing unusual. The bright surface would have, at least to some extent, both diffused and semi-reflection; also, it would undoubtedly have that bug-a-boo of screen men—fade-away, and I am afraid it would have it to such an extent as would bar it from all high-class theaters, except very narrow ones. Another thing; have you investigated the staying qualities of the surface? Some screens which give excellent results while new, either dull or discolor very quickly. The surface, to succeed, must be easily cleaned and must stand without perceptible change or dulling for at least three years. Your dull surface seems to be just a good dull surface, but its lasting qualities and its "cleanability" are something which only extended use could determine. A screen which will remain bright for years in Arizona's dry air may blacken quickly in New York.

Summing up: It is evident to me that you are entering an already very much overcrowded market, at about the worst possible time, with a new and comparatively untried product, and without any extensive knowledge of the business. I could, of course, easily say things which would please you and which would not be exactly untrue. You would go ahead, probably the Moving Picture World would get a bunch of advertising from you, and to that extent all would be well. BUT WOULD THAT BE HONEST? Well, maybe, from some folks' viewpoint, but this particular editor is not in that kind of business; also, the paper he represents is not in that kind of business. My advice to you is: DON'T ENTER THE SCREEN MARKET NOW! It is war-time. Theaters are struggling along under a to-the-limit load. Many are closing, and those remaining are, as a rule, only purchasing those things which are absolutely necessary. If you desire to enter the market, do so on a strictly local basis until times again become normal, from the theater standpoint; meanwhile, STUDY THE SCREEN PROBLEM FROM ALL ANGLES. It is not so simple as you seem to think. Now, friend Herold, do not feel hurt or angry. I have not written this because it is a pleasure, but because it is my DUTY. Remember that the one who tells you an unpleasant TRUTH is usually your best friend after all. By all means go ahead if you think best, but in one year from today examine your bank balance and tell me who it was gave you good advice.

Pettifogging Practice.

From Cananea, Sonora, Mexico, comes a complaint which is fully justified, provided the facts are as set forth by the operator. This thing of an exchange manager forcing operators to do his film inspection and repair work gratis is nothing less than an outrage. It borders on pettifogging practice. It is an attempt on the part of the exchange manager to lessen his overhead expense at the expense of the operator, thus helping himself make a record by deliberately compelling the operator to work for him for nothing. That is precisely what it amounts to in practice. The General Film company does not approve of such methods unless there has been radical change in its policy right lately, and I do not believe there has. The letter is as follows:

> Am sending partial copy of correspondence received from General Film company, 738 South Olive street, Los Angeles, California. Their service is consistently in imperfect condition, but they sent us one subject, "His Moral Code," in such terrible shape that I was forced to put in two and one-half hours inspecting and repairing the films before they could be run through the machines with safety. I sent them a bill for $2.50 for labor performed and, in return, am informed that "it is the operators' job to repair the films!" I very well know film inspectors do not get one dollar an hour, but I am not a film inspector, nor do I want the job. Here is their reply to my letter demanding pay for actual time put in inspecting and repairing, at the rate of one dollar per hour:
> "We are just in receipt of yours of Dec. 25, '17, calling attention to the bad physical condition of our feature, entitled "His Moral Code," and while it will not be possible to reimburse you for the inspecting of this particular subject (Why not, please?—Ed.), we nevertheless wish to assure you that your attention to the matter (2½ hours of attention!—Ed.) is greatly appreciated. However, it is a part of an operators' duty, as he should be sufficiently interested in the success of his employer to see that every reel is in the best possible physical condition before it goes on the screen, thereby preventing any possibility of an accident occurring during the show. We are not suggesting this as a regular practice, or anything of that nature, but wish to point out the fact that there will be times, occasionally, when we are forced to ship films on very short notice, which prevents their receiving proper inspection before leaving our office. This is particularly true of the Mexican shipments. Again assuring you that your courtesy and consideration in this matter has been greatly appreciated, and with best wishes for a prosperous new year, we are, Very truly yours, General Film Company."
> To this I replied:
> General Film Company, 738 S. Olive Street, Los Angeles, California. Gentlemen: Am in receipt of yours of Jan. 3 and must again request that you remit the sum of $2.50 due me for services rendered to YOU in the repairing of your film. I agree with you that the operator should be much interested in his employers' business and success, but that has nothing to do with his being interested in reducing overhead expenses of the film exchange by doing its film inspection and repairing for nothing. The operator is paid to project pictures, not to act as film exchange inspector! Our manager (and all other theater managers) pays for films in good physical condition, and you know that as well as do I. * * * If my price don't suit you, why just remember that I did not ask for the job and did not want it.

This operator had written the Los Angeles exchange quite some time previously, telling them their films were reaching the theater in very bad condition and warning the exchange that unless it was stopped his charge for inspecting and repairing them would be $1 per hour. This charge is high, yes, but as he says, he did not ask for the job and warned them of the price. Therefore the exchange has no kick coming. The letter of the exchange manager to the operator springs the old, moth-eaten, run-down-at-the-heel, frayed and frazzled line of bull with which we are by now all quite well acquainted. If you had not the opportunity for inspection you saved just that much in inspectors' wages. Did you not, Mr. Exchange Manager? Well, then, the very least you could have done would have been to have sent the operator whatever the saving was. Isn't that a fact? Didn't do it, Mr. Make-An-Honest-Penny, did you? Instead you wrote the operator (after he had put in a bill. Didn't even bother to write him until then, be it noted) a nice soft-soapy letter, telling him how he should love his employer so well that he would be almost tickled to death to do YOUR work for nothing. Fine! Finer!! Finest!!! Do your film inspectors love you so extremely well that they rush down every day, do your film inspecting and refuse pay for it? You, Mr. Exchange Manager, say the films go out in poor condition only occasionally, or words to that effect. But the operator tells a very different tale. When, on these "few occasions" the films go out in bad condition, I suppose you are so much interested in the success of your customer's business that you notify him of the condition of the films and make a rebate of your charge, don't you? You play strong on the operator's loyalty to and interest in the theater manager or exhibitor. How about your loyalty to and interest in him, huh? I'm asking questions, Mr. Los Angeles Exchange Manager. Suppose you get right up on your hind feet and answer? And remember, when you do it, that I'm past master in the art of analyzing answers made up of gentleman cow.

As I said in the first place, I do not believe the General Film Company agrees with your method of doing business. I know they certainly did not a short time ago, and I do not believe they have changed. I am getting real tired of the type of exchange manager who, while insisting that loyalty to the employers' interests should oblige the operator to do his, the exchange manager's, work gratis, is perfectly willing to collect from the exhibitor full price for films not in the condition the exhibitors' contract presumes them to be. Talk to this type of exchange manager about making a suitable reduction in price of service when service is shipped in other than the physical condition it should be, and he would pretty nearly have hydrophobia; but he calmly says to the operator receiving his stuff, "be loyal to your employer and do a lot of work for me gratis, so that my junk can be used, and I may collect full price therefor."

Worth Investigation. Sounds Reasonable.

Edward Hitchcock, Plainsville, Ohio, says:

> Have always had more or less doubt as to what a perfectly balanced shutter should be, so when I wrote, setting forth the plan described in the issue of Feb. 9, I used in designing the shutter I am at present using, I perhaps did not make the matter as clear as I might. My idea is to make the main blade just wide enough to avoid travel ghost under the local condition, in my case 75 degrees, and the opening on either side of the main blade 60 degrees, each interrupter blade 60 degrees and the remaining opening whatever it would be, in my case 45 degrees, but dependent in each individual case upon the necessary main blade width. This seems to be to be better than making the three openings and interrupters of equal width (It is not, if the local condition be such that they can be of equal width and still avoid travel ghost?—Ed.). I got the idea from the experiments set forth, and the shutter shown in Dec. 15 issue, the experiments being made at the Simplex factory. Of course my own shutter is not proportioned the same as is the one there shown, for the very simple reason that I did not require such a wide main blade. Would not a shutter made after this fashion fit in most places?

I am inclined to believe it would. I may be in error, but it seems to me you have dug out the underlying idea contained in the shutter shown in Dec. 15 issue, and have advanced a proposition which is of value. I would suggest that operators try out this plan. The real test would be as follows. With a given light value at the arc, try the present shutter without any film in the machine. Observe at exactly what speed flicker entirely disappears. Then construct a paste-board shutter blade, as per brother Hitchcock's plan, and make the same test. If flicker disappears at lower speed with the new shutter than with the old, then the new one is best. You might then proceed a step further and compare percentages of light cut by the two shutters. Please report results to this department.

Non-Intermittent Projection.

Recently the editor gave up valuable time to witness the demonstration of another non-intermitfent movement projector. The demonstration was not a success. The projection of an image from a steadily moving film is a tremendously delicate proceeding. It requires the superimposing of two photographs, both in motion, at a point usually not less than fifty and often one hundred feet distant, and it must be done so accurately that definition will remain unimpaired. To the practical operator it is given to know something of the extreme difficulty of such a performance. Very many schemes have been tried, but up to this time none have succeeded. The inventor of the machine in question insists that while the demonstration was not successful, he has the problem solved. As to that, I shall believe when I see a commercially perfect picture projected, and not before.

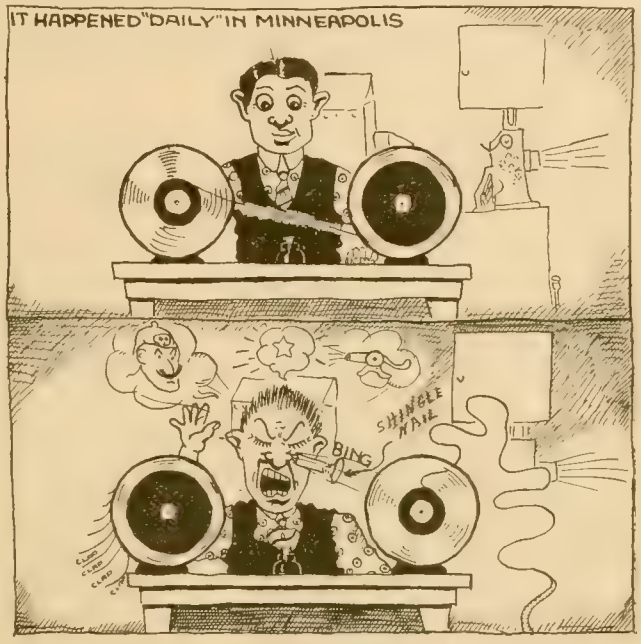
Feaster Non-Rewind.

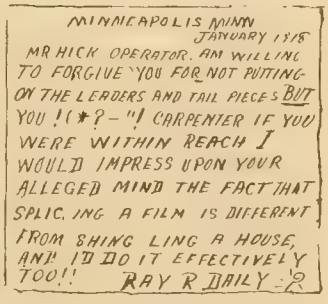
By the way, what has become of the Feaster non-rewind? It is a shame if through poor business management such a really valuable adjunct to the industry has been allowed to die. The Feaster was one of the inventions to which this department could and did give its unqualified and enthusiastic endorsement. Unfortunately, however, those in charge tried to market it at three or four times what it should have sold for. Very naturally they failed. I firmly believe that particular device could be made and sold at a good profit for not to exceed seventy-five dollars for two and maybe for as little as twenty-five dollars each; or at least that was my opinion at that time. It perhaps could not be done now. Be that as it may, however, the device was of genuine value. It really did do away with rewinding, except once at the beginning of a new show. The Feaster is illustrated and described in the handbook, page 318. I would like to know who has the matter in hand at this time.

From Minneapolis.

F. S. Rogers, Minneapolis, Minn., sends in a cartoon, and says:

> Inclosed find cartoon illustrative of an accident which happened to one of our men here recently. It shows that Brother Daily "got the point"! Conditions as pertaining to the business here in Minneapolis are pretty good all around. I heard your lecture when you were here, and felt I was about as poor an operator as could well be found when you got through pointing out my faults and weak spots. I am now studying hard. Have the latest edition of the Handbook, and it won't accumulate cobwebs from disuse. Next time you visit us I intend being able to answer at least some of the questions you propound instead of sitting like a bump on a log, inwardly blushing for my ignorance. Have been working as an operator for five years, and find that I have not even made a good start toward perfecting myself in my chosen calling. With the help of your Handbook, the projection department, and hard study, however, I intend to go to the top.





MINNEAPOLIS MINN
MR HICK OPERATOR. AM WILLING TO FORGIVE YOU FOR NOT PUTTING ON THE LEADERS AND TAIL PIECES BUT YOU !(*?-"! CARPENTER IF YOU WERE WITHIN REACH I WOULD IMPRESS UPON YOUR ALLEGED MIND THE FACT THAT SPLICING A FILM IS DIFFERENT FROM SHING LING A HOUSE, AND I'D DO IT EFFECTIVELY TOO!! RAY R DAILY -12

Good! That's the dope, Brother Rogers. It is a cold blooded fact that mighty few things really worth while can be had in this vale of sorrow without hard work. When the time comes that operators in general get into your frame of mind, and start digging for real knowledge, then will projection be respected as a profession. I see Brother Daily "got the point" of the shingle nail all right. I wonder if he also "got the point" (which I tried to impress upon all of you) that rapid rewinding is bad. It is always bad for the film. This time it seems to have been bad for his nose. But, of course, the presence of the nail in the film was an outrage on the film. If it had only been Daily's nose that suffered I would be tempted to say, "Good! Served him right for rewinding at racehorse speed." But his nose only got injured once, whereas the film gets damaged every time it is shot through a rewinder at excessive speed. My compliments to friend Rogers. Any time I can aid you just say the word.

The Speed of a Lens.

THE speed of a lens depends upon the amount of light it passes and is measured by the ratio of its effective aperture to the focal length, for instance, a lens with the speed of F.4 has an aperture or diameter of glass surface length equal to ¼ of its focal length. The larger the aperture in proportion to the focus the greater the speed, Great speed can only be had at the sacrifice of other qualities, such as depth of focus, covering power and angle of view.

Inasmuch as the focus of a lens increases when focusing nearby objects, whereas the diameter of the effective opening remains the same, it follows that at short distances lenses work at less speed than which they are listed for. For instance, when copying in natural size, a lens listed at F.8 operates only at a speed of F.16 requiring four times the exposure of an effective opening of F.8.

Covering Power.

Covering power is the ability to evenly illuminate and define an image over its entire circle illumination.

Depth of Field.

This is also termed depth of focus and expresses the range within which a lens will reproduce near and distant objects sufficiently sharp upon a negative. Theoretically a lens can only image sharply upon a negative object lying in one plane in front of a lens. When objects are found at different distances which appear sharp, it is because the eye is unable to discover the slight unsharpness. The depth of field depends upon the relation between the focal length and the opening of the aperture increases of two lenses of the same speed but of unequal focal length, the one of the shorter focal length will have the greater depth. Of two lenses of equal focal length but different speeds, the slower one will have the greater depth, but if both are stopped down to the same aperture, the depth will be equal.

The Rate of Fixation.

The subject of fixation is one which has probably received less scientific attention than the other processes of photography and, as for that, is one also to which the practical worker gives least attention. A developed film is left to work out its own salvation, with no fear or trembling by the photographer as to the possibility of uncertainty of result.

Hypo, we must say, is an agent which works well without much supervision. But fixation is really deserving of more attention than it usually gets, and we are glad to note the publication in the pages of our contemporary, American Photography, of an interesting and useful paper, "On the Rate of Fixation," by A. W. Warwick, where the author calls attention to the fact that a constant fraction of silver bromide is dissolved by the fixing bath at every moment of time, so that if this fraction be known, we may calculate the progress of fixation in a determined time. Mr. Warwick employs a 20 per cent. bath of hypo at a temperature of 65 per cent., and finds the fraction is one-half every two minutes. That is, at the end of every two minutes one-half is left, and at four minutes, one-quarter; until at the end of twelve minutes (twice the time necessary to clear the plate) only 1-64 of the original amount remains in the film.

Mr. Warwick considers that the question of temperature might be practically ignored and that 65 per cent. Fahr. is normal, the usual temperature used in fixation, but our experiences lead us to think that in practice this "normal" is not generally followed. There is considerable indifference among workers as to the temperature of the fixing bath, and there must be a variation dependent upon temperature.

A bath of 40 per cent. strength is the most rapid in action. A weaker bath, or one stronger, does not work as effectively, as we know from practice. The explanation of the tardiness of a concentrated hypo bath, given by the author, is that the molecular union between the hypo salt and the water of solution acts in retarding the ability of the hypo for taking up the silver salt. This might be the case, no doubt, in saturated solution of hypo, but not in the usually used strength of solution. When the hypo is too concentrated, it crystallizes upon the surface of the film and hence makes the fixing solution really too weak in hypo content for fixation. We really have a very weak solution in our bath. It has been found that softened gelatine absorbs weak hypo solution, but gives up its water to a strong solution, hence in the film the water is abstracted and but little of the hypo appropriated from the strong solution.

Spots on Film Caused by Aluminum Dust.

Dark spots on a sample of motion picture film submitted to the Kodak Research Laboratory showed a central dark nucleus surrounded by a white incrustation (visible on the surface by reflected light) which in turn was surrounded by a ring of fog, with or without a tail. In some cases the tail was very pronounced and was generally about ¼ inch long. From the behavior of the incrustation towards acids the presence of aluminum was suspected; and it was found possible to duplicate the spots by allowing freshly scraped aluminum filings to fall onto a piece of moistened film; after allowing this to stand for a short time the film was developed, fixed, washed and dried in the regular way. It seemed most probable that the dust particles had access to the film in the camera, and on examining a number of motion picture cameras, particles of aluminum dust were found inside them. The importance of keeping the camera free from such dust is therefore apparent.

A Handy Exposure Record.

While a trifle late in appearing, the 1918 "Welcome" Photographic Record and Diary maintains the standard set for it long ago. The new edition is brought right up-to-the-minute and completely rewritten.

We note that only plates and papers manufactured in the United States, Great Britain or other of the allied countries are given in the list of plate speeds.

The little mechanical calculator fixed to the back cover really does tell the correct exposure by one turn of one scale, and that alone is worth the fifty cents for which the book is sold.

American Annual of Photography.

Naturally, the war has interfered considerably with photography, and the restrictions imposed hampered the work of pictoralists. Nevertheless, we get as usual the American Annual of Photography with no perceptible falling-off in the interesting matter of previous issues, not subject to the same impediments. Of course, we miss the papers from foreign contributors, but the American writers present subject-matter of pertinent interest and particular value. The Annual contains also its usual excellent illustrations.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by GEORGE W. BEYNON.

Demand the Best in Cue Sheets.

TO-DAY nearly every producer of any consequence is giving musical service to his exhibitors in the form of cue sheets. Once in a while specially written score is provided and duly appreciated, but in views of the many releases and the result "Eleventh Hour" rush to get them out cue sheets have proved more feasible. The day will come and is fast approaching when no feature picture will be released without a score to further portray the gamut of emotions in the silent drama.

With few exceptions the producers do not understand music sufficiently to pass criticism. They procure a musician whom they believe, through hearsay or good repute, to be the man most capable of taking care of this most important branch of present day film service, and turn the entire work over to him without supervision. Some have been most fortunate in their selection, and the benefits derived are shown by added box office receipts to the exhibitor and increased bookings to the exchange. Others less fortunate have continued to give inadequately a service which they believed to be the best, but which actually proved to be a travesty of the picture rather than a portrayal. Moreover, some recognized musicians have essayed this work, and like the proverbial "new broom" swept clean at the start only to slump into a well beaten rut, as their new born enthusiasm waned. Consequently we find their cue sheets pretty much the same for every picture they review. Same numbers, same variety, same manner of handling cues, same quantity, and same quality throughout.

There is a strong tendency on the part of exhibitors to refrain from being classed "a knocker"—this is a laudable stand. Since he has to "kick" and fight for almost everything pertaining to his picture theater before he gets it, and, as yet, music does not take precedence over Advertising, Publicity, Lighting, Ventilation, Projection, etc., he feels that he can blame the leader, and let it go at that.

This is gravely unjust to the leader, and equally unfair to the producer. Besides, it does not show a brotherly spirit toward your neighbor, who may be a sufferer also. The leader must perforce continue to use the badly suggested music, the producer is kept in ignorance regarding the service for which he is paying, your fellow exhibitor continues to suffer, while the person responsible for the trouble blissfully draws his stipend for careless and slovenly work. Producers will welcome a "kick," and be more than pleased if you can constructively criticize the cue sheets. Ask your leader what suggestions he has to offer, and embody these in your letter. You will be surprised at the quick results obtained, for the producer of to-day has his ear to the ground, and is really anxious to adjust and correct reasonable "kicks."

A few of the flagrant faults of cue sheets might be mentioned and prove a guide to you in your judgment. In the first place, where you find one that suggests music almost exclusively from one publishing house you can gamble that the writer is either subsidized, or is, possibly, only familiar with that particular brand of music. No single publisher has a library comprehensive enough to fill the demands of the picture industry. The smaller the library, the more frequent will be the repetition of numbers. Certain publishing houses are issuing cue sheets of their own, with the object of obtaining a lucrative avenue of sales. This is bound to have a baleful influence upon the cue sheet, and becomes a means to an end without accomplishing its mission. The suggested numbers will not be selected for their suitability, but for pushing the sales of their own publications.

No good cue sheet should contain more than two or three so-called "photoplay numbers." If these are used to any degree of frequency they become monotonous and meaningless. There are occasions where they are absolutely essential, and fit the scene beautifully, especially dramatic tension stuff of which there is little to be obtained elsewhere. But when these "Photoplay Series" are forced into every situation their true value is lost, and it is made most difficult for an up-to-date leader to substitute something that will fit.

Many writers of cue sheets have their "pet" numbers, which are the "old stand-bys" found in every musical suggestion sheet. There is no gainsaying the fact that in the majority of cases these are real live selections, but, becaues of too frequent use, die a natural death. Beware of "pet" music, and caution your leader lest he, too, take it into his bosom and nurse it as his "pet." You can be assured that it will find little favor with the audience if they play it every week.

Suggested numbers must be in the atmosphere of the picture. If it be Oriental, and only three Oriental numbers are found in the cue sheet, there is something wrong with the brain of the compiler. At the same time it is just as erroneous to quote Oriental music for atmosphere that has nothing of the Orient in it. When a number is mis-suggested it becomes evident that one of two things has occurred, either the writer did not see the scene and his assistant misguided him, or he has never heard the number in question, and is judging it by the tempo or the name. Yet once in a while one finds a number such as "An Indian Legend," Baron, which in very name signifies the Orient, suggested for a placid scene laid in "dear old England—Bah, Jove!" A case of this kind is beyond comprehension.

Too many numbers spoil a musical setting; contrawise, too few. When this happens the orchestra leader is hard put to it to add sufficient music to obviate the repetition of each number. Of the two faults, the former contains the lesser evil.

Cue sheets that repeat more than one number (as the THEME) are neither practical or feasible in small combinations. Cue sheets are specifically intended to benefit the smaller exhibitor, and thus one containing two, three, four, five or more numbers which are repeated is defeating its own purpose. In some cases where the compiler is a practical musician and takes thought for the "turns" a selection can be repeated. For example, No. 16 is "Ave Maria," Gounod, then the THEME is played as No. 17. Now, because the Gounod number is open in front of them the players would have no difficulty in repeating it as No. 18. If desirable, the picture can be closed with the opening selection, as it simply means one "turn" back to the beginning. Thus No. 1 can be repeated as No. 38, the last number.

There are no tricks or professional secrets in the preparing of cue sheets. It requires brains, a wide knowledge of musical literature, a deductive mind, and a keen insight to the practical needs of the average exhibitor. These are the attributes and qualifications which the producer believes he is buying. If they are not represented in the service he is providing for you tell him about it, and there will be no question about his attitude in the matter.

Nazimova Music at the Lyric.

"Revelation," a superb photoplay now running at the Lyric, contains some wonderful opportunities for good music, and Mr. George Rubinstein, who set the music, has not allowed all of them to slip by. He has many beautiful selections most appropriately fitted, but we cannot understand why he opens the picture with a Spanish number as the location is in France and the scene, a cafe The natural supposition would prevail in the minds of the audience that they were about to view a picture holding Spanish atmosphere Just as the prelude or overture to an opera is indicative of what is to follow so should the first selection be symbolic of the anticipated atmosphere As the music continued through the dance we guessed that it pertained thereto but even that predication was wrong for it happened to be a Grecian Classic and could not possibly be mistaken for a Spanish fandango

Three minutes of studio scene showing Nazimova posing as "Salome" with no "Salome" music thereto; monks in the cloister and no religious music; the salutation of Napoleon and nothing patriotic; the American flag discovered and saluted by the heroine and again nothing to indicate it in the music; all these can be forgiven as oversights or lack of time and because of the fact that there was no attempt at synchrony it would be most difficult to catch these details. But when a title indicating a lapse of time is disregarded, and the same selection continued into the next scene, when change of location occurs and the music changeth not; when a hurry is played where the scene obviously requires a pathetic, one loses this sense of forgiveness, and prefers to err humanly rather than be divine. This music could not, with the greatest possible stretch of imagination, be classed as a score. It is a good musical setting with all the limitations of such. For a theater charging $1.00 per seat as its top price it is shamefully inadequate.

Two themes are necessary, an Allegretto for the heroine and a Moderato for the American hero.

Suggest.—Allegretto, "Chiffonette," by Atherton, or "The Legend of a Rose," by Reynard.
Moderato, "The Land of Dreams," by Driffil, or "Canzonetta," by D'Ambrosia.

You will need bright French stuff for the first five reels, intermezzos, light waltzes and serenades. Note the fight in the studio between the model and Nazimova. This is short, but requires big dramatic treatment. Would suggest "Prelude" from "Romeo and Juliet," by Gounod. For the monks and cloister scenes would suggest "Kamenoi Ostrow," by Rubinstein, while pastorale music is needed during her flight from her former lover. Little dramatic music is necessary throughout the entire picture, but toward the end we are shown a little fighting "at the front," with its attendant dying and suffering soldiers. Hospital scenes also will require pathetics, and the picture should close triumphantly, as the hero and heroine are married at the monastery after she has been decorated with the medal for her bravery. Excerpts from "La Boheme," by Puccini, will fit the studio scenes, and don't forget "Salome" for the posing scene. This picture deserves the best possible musical setting, as it truly is a big feature in every way. Get a viewing before the first performance if possible in order to properly present it.

Music at the Strand.

During the week commencing February 24, Mr. Edel, the genial managing director, provided a musical program that in many respects excelled anything we have heard in some time. The overture alone was well worth price of admission. Mr. Spireccu, wielding the baton for this number—"Scheherazade," by Rimsky-Korsakov—wielded it well. The entire suite was not given, but lost nothing in the cutting because of its beautiful interpretation and wonderful rendition. The Strand Symphony Orchestra merits much praise for even essaying such a work, aside from delivering it in such a facile manner.

Opening the Topical Review we disliked to hear "Onward Christian Soldiers" played with such a fast tempo. It was almost "Jiggy" and took away the inherent dignity of this beautiful march.

Miss Mabel Beddoe sang "The Pipes of Gordan's Men," a song written for and suitable to a baritone. Needless to say it stirred little patriotic fervor. Then followed the scenic. Mr. Carl Eduoarde never fails to make his music interesting in the scenics, and this was no exception. A duet for French horn and flute was rendered smoothly and effectively. The big fault was its brevity. Why not have the organist pick it up and finish it with the picture?

The second movement of McDowell's "D Minor Concerto" for piano and orchestra was well played by Mr. Daniel Wolfe. He showed marked technique and, for a first performance, acquitted himself admirably.

Herbert Waterous, the well-known basso, demonstrated that he has lost nothing of that beautiful velvety quality of tone that has made him a favorite for so many years. Especially was it noticeable in his rendition of "Annie Laurie." "Invictus," by Huhn, his first number, had all the necessary "fire," while the interpretation and enunciation left nothing to be desired.

Musical Suggestion Synopsis.

BANDIT AND THE PREACHER, THE (W. H. Productions, Inc.—Five Reels)—Theme A for the Bandit—Dramatic; theme B for the Preacher—Religioso. Suggest for the Bandit "Romance"—Frommel; and for the Preacher, "Love Song"—Fleigler, or "Intermezzo"—Bizet.

This is a typical Western drama of the truly Hart variety. You will need many dramatic numbers, lots of "hurrys" and agitatos, a couple of pathetics, and one amoroso. Cut sheets can be obtained from the W. H. Productions, Inc.

BROADWAY BILL (Yorke Metro—Five Reels)—Theme for the Hero—Moderato. Suggest "Elysian Dreams"—Rinland; "Legend"—Friml, or "Martinique"—Lorraine.

This picture is chock full of love scenes. You will require many sentimental ballads. Note the fist fight in the camp, the rescue of the little boy, and provide for these a hurry and agitato, respectively. You will also need a few Pastorale numbers to portray the atmosphere of the great woods. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Metro exchange.

CAVANAUGH OF THE FOREST RANGERS (Blue Ribbon—Five Reels)—Theme for the Hero—Allegretto. Suggest "Canzonetta"—D'Ambrosio; "Idilio"—Lack, or "Intermezzo"—Granados.

Pastorale music in quantities will be needed. Some Western stuff, a few one-steps and fox trots, a couple of pathetics and three hurrys. These, with a filling of bright intermezzos, will play the picture. Cut sheets can be obtained from the Vitagraph exchange.

DADDY'S GIRL (Gold Rooster—Five Reels)—Theme for Baby Osborne—Andante. Suggest "Pleading"—Wood; "Heart's Desire"—Losey, or "Lullaby"—Foley.

Play "Konigskinder" opera and choose the balance of setting with a view to light stuff. There is room for a fox trot in the cabaret scene, and "A Day with the Circus"—Lampe, will just suit the miniature circus stunts. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Pathe exchanges.

FLASH OF FATE, THE (Universal—Five Reels)—Theme for Hero—Andante. Suggest "Dialogue"—Meyer Helmund; "Elysium"—Speaks, or "A Little Song"—Erdody.

This is pure melodrama. Many "hurrys" and agitatos are needed. Music typical of the "submerged tenth" will fit beautifully. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Universal exchange.

FORBIDDEN PATH, THE (Fox—Six Reels)—Theme for Nelly—Andante. Suggest "Astarte"—Mildenberg; "Salut D'Amour"—Elgar; "Melodie"—Lederer.

Note organ solo in the first reel when girl plays, followed by Andante music in the second. You will need a fox-trot in the fourth and piano solo in the fifth. The balance of the picture is made up of big situations requiring very heavy music. Cut sheets can be obtained from the Fox exchange.

HER ROYAL HIGHNESS (World—Five Reels)—Theme for the Hero—Moderato. Suggest "Land of Dreams"—Duffil; "Melodie"—Friml, or "Serenade"—Schubert.

Opens with Harvard stuff—use college melodies. French atmosphere follows, requiring a big agitato for the fight in the cafe. An Apache dance can also be used in this part. The remaining footage is taken up with Royalty stuff. "Pomp and Circumstance," by Elgar, would be appropriate, followed by light music. Cue sheet can be obtained from the World exchange.

IT PAYS TO EXERCISE (Paramount Comedy—Two Reels)—No theme.

This is a comedy requiring light opera selections, potpourri stuff and the usual one-steps, two-steps and fox trots. No cue sheet available.

LITTLE RED DECIDES (Triangle—Five Reels)—Theme for Boy—Andantino. Suggest "Serenade"—Jeffery; "Tendre Aveu"—Schutt, or "Yesterlove"—Borch.

Dainty stuff is required here with a touch of Western flavor. Some pathetic numbers are needed, and light music will play the picture. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Triangle exchange.

MIDNIGHT TRAIL, THE (Mutual—Five Reels)—Theme—Allegretto. Suggest "Legend of a Rose"—Reynard; "Mignonette"—Friml, or "Idilio"—Lack.

The opening requires a misterioso and dramatic tension. Then fox-trots, one-steps, etc., for almost a reel. There are few dramatic situations, but note the sleep-walking episode and fit it with weird music. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Mutual exchange.

MORAL LAW, THE (Fox—Five Reels)—Theme for Hero—Andante. Suggest "Don Jose Aria" from Carmen"; or "Carmena"—Wilson.

Picture begins very Spanish, but light through the first reel. Misteriosos, dramatics and agitatos are required for the second and third, with a "hurry" and galop thrown in for good measure. The fourth part lightens up a bit, requiring serenades and intermezzos, and in the fifth you will need dramatic music entirely. Note the wedding scene and use "Lohengrin"; close with the theme. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Fox exchange.

ONE MORE AMERICAN (Paramount—Five Reels)—Theme for Hero—Andantino and Italian. Suggest "Maria Mari"—di Capua; "O Sole Mio"—di Capua.

The flavor of this music should be largely Italian, mostly light in character. There are some dramatic bits in the second and fourth reels. Have "The Dance of the Marionettes" handy for theater scene. Cue sheet can be obtained from Paramount exchange.

POWERS THAT PREY (Mutual—Five Reels)—Theme for Heroine—Allegretto. Suggest "Babillage"—de Castillo; "Dance of the Moths"—Weidt, or "Caressing Butterfly"—Bartholmy.

This picture has many big moments requiring heavy stuff. You will require many numbers on the romance style, a few agitatos, two big "hurrys" and a strong pathetic. The remainder of the picture requires "trippy" music. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Mutual exchange.

REVELATION (Metro—Seven Reels)—See "Music for 'Revelation'" elsewhere in this department.

RUGGLES OF RED GAP (Essanay—Seven Reels)—Theme A for Holmes—Moderato; theme B for Kate Kenner—Andantino. Suggest for Holmes, "Will You Remember?"—Romberg, or "You're in Love"—Friml; while for Kate Kenner, "The Vampire'—Levy, or "Extase D'Amour"—Roze.

The picture opens in England, turns to Paris and then comes to western America for its atmosphere. Note these locations and play music suitable to the occasion. Light stuff will play the entire production. There are no dramatic situations. Use one-steps, fox-trots, light opera, waltzes and intermezzos. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Perfection Pictures exchange.

SPURS OF SYBIL, THE (World—Five Reels)—Theme for Heroine—Moderato and dainty. Suggest "Bowl of Pansies"—Reynard; "Canzonetta"—Nicode, or "Chiffonette"—Atherton.

There is little drama shown in this feature. It can be played with light music throughout. Cue sheet can be obtained from the World exchange.

UNBELIEVER, THE (Edison—Eight Reels)—Theme for Hero—Moderato. Suggest "Semper Fidelis"—Webb; "At Sunset"—Breuer, or "Cavtina"—Bohm.

This is a war picture of very human interest. Opening with a pastoral religioso, it proceeds to moderato. A pathetic occurs in the first reel when the old German servitor received the news of the death of his son. Marches follow when the marines are drilling. Battle agitatos follow with a misterioso and allegretto in rotation. Dramatic music at the cue, "In the sector," followed by the Belgian National Hymn at T, "Vive la Belgigue." Next you will need more battle stuff, some pathetic music, and at the cue T, "Remember Herr Lieutenant," the Prussian National Air. The remainder of the picture requires dramatic and pathetic stuff. Close with the theme. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Perfection Pictures exchange.

Leaders' Service Bureau.

Questions Answered—Suggestions Offered.

Q. In preparing my setting for the pictures, following the suggestions offered in the cue sheets, I find it necessary to bring my orchestra to a full stop before going into the next number, which makes the music sound punk in spots, especially when the scene calls for only a minute or minute and a half of any one special number. What would you suggest to overcome this?

A. There is no way of overcoming the sudden stops if you are forced to use cue sheets, but with a little forethought you so gauge the tempo of the number that you can end at a cadence and the change will be less noticeable from the standpoint of the audience.

Q. I am a leader of a small orchestra in a small town. Frequently, some of the natives who have gone to New York and returned come to me and ask me to play "Jazz," or to "Jazz" some of the "Rags." I don't know exactly what they mean. Maybe you can help me.

A. Recently in the restaurants of the East, a new combination of instruments have been used to play dance music. An orchestra, comprising piano, violin or clarinet, cornet, trombone or saxophone and drums, blares out ragtime music and goes under the name of "a jazz band." This instrumentation is not effective for pictures and would drive your patrons away if attempted.

Q. What do you think of the idea of playing selections throughout a reel? Take, for instance, "The Fortune Teller"; this selection provides a number of movements and some very popular numbers, such as The Gypsy Love Song. I find the patrons of this theater rather like the selections from the light operas, although the music is not always appropriate to the picture.

A. Many of the best theaters follow this idea in the fitting of light comedies, or comedy dramas, and find it meets with much success. Do not try it for the feature.

Screen Star in Unique Role

Miss Valentine Grant Does Missionary Work Among Uncle Sam's Wounded Soldiers and Prisoners.

MISS VIRGINIA GRANT, associated with Sidney Olcott Films, has a serious side to her nature of which her friends know but little. It was by accident the writer learned the facts and drew from his unsuspecting victim material for a story of more than passing interest.

We had been down Pennsylvania way as the guests of Mr. Rothapfel. The trip had been quite strenuous, and our host was lost in the land of dreams, Florence Turner slept the sleep of innocence, and Sidney Olcott had tied himself in a double bowknot on a seat. The rest of the party were draped around the car in various positions, lost to the world and its troubles, so that only Miss Grant and myself were left to keep watch and ward over the destinies of nations. A chance remark in course of conversation set me boring for "story" oil, with the following result:

Miss Grant works hard, as is proved by her screen renditions, but between times she has literally become the Little Mother to the hundreds of Uncle Sam's military prisoners who are confined in the round building on Governors Island, opposite Battery Park, and to the inmates of the military hospital, also on Governors Island.

Miss Grant first became interested in Uncle Sam's boys on Governors Island while studying for grand opera, which line of artistic endeavor she was following zealously and with excellent chances for success when Sidney Olcott enticed her away to the screen. Her stories of the deadly loneliness of the ancient round building, with its hundreds of unfortunates confined so near the Great White Way that the reflection of its lights upon the sky may be seen at night through the narrow, barred windows in the weather-beaten walls, yet so utterly out of the reach of its inmates that it might as well be at the antipodes, can but make one realize how beloved by the unfortunates will be that one who brings to them a bit of cheer from the outer world and breaks for them the deadly monotony.

Miss Grant has spent many days in the old prison and in the hospital of Governors Island. In fact, she is still a regular weekly visitor at the hospital. She has interested others, and has on many occasions induced artists to go over to the prison and hospital and give entertainments to the inmates; also she has secured for them, or has been instrumental in securing for them, high-class motion pictures. She is known to the prisoners and to the hospital inmates as Little Mother, and is today the only woman who can, in these war times, secure admission to the federal prison on demands and get interview with any individual prisoner.

Great Government Plant Needs Theater

New City of Cauffiel, Near Nashville, Tenn., Will Soon House 40,000 Workers in Great Factories.

THE town of Cauffiel, at Hadley's Bend, twelve miles from Nashville, Tenn., has been established, and building work has begun in an active manner. The new town springs up as a result of the Government's great powder plant there, and thousands of workers with their families will be housed in the neighborhood.

Recent reports from Washington indicate that it is now the plan of the Government also to locate acid and dye plants on the Government property, and options on approximately 1,000 acres have been secured in addition to the 2,500 already bought. The stupendous figures of $250,000,000 have been unofficially quoted by representatives of the Government in Washington as being the total amount of the appropriation for the combined Government plants. Under the new arrangement approximately 40,000 out-of-town workers will be brought into the Nashville district.

While at first it was planned to house all the men in Nashville, the facilities in this city were soon found to be inadequate, and the new town was established.

Nashville theaters are feeling the benefits of the influx of powder plant employees, who journey to Nashville each night by the thousands, by railroad and interurban, on the way to their various homes here, in addition to a large number living at the Bend and coming to the city for recreation and amusement. At first it was thought that no business enterprises would be permitted near the powder mills, but recent developments permit of theaters being run at the Bend. In fact, it is especially urged that adequate amusement features be provided.

Moving picture men are planning to put at least two shows on the grounds within a short time, with a possibility of more.

Many Sales of St. Louis Theaters

Spring Cleaning and the Draft Responsible for Changes of Ownership of Amusement Enterprises.

SPRING housecleaning and the draft has resulted in a number of theater sales, transfers and closings in the last week in St. Louis, with many more still to be made in the near future. Three of the largest houses in the city have been affected by the draft, their managers and owners being young men who have been most successful in exhibiting here, but who are now either with or on their way to join the American forces.

Christopher Zotos, who operates one of the largest and most successful of the downtown houses, created quite a stir during the week when he offered the Broadway for sale. Inquirers were told that Mr. Zotos was ordered to camp, being in the last contingent of the first quota from this city. There was a rush of prospective buyers for the house, and it will probably go to Dr. Fred Demko, who already owns the Shenandoah theater, but who is said to have resolved to open a string of new houses.

The Peerless theater, 1900 Broadway, is also having a dubious existence temporarily through the draft call of Manager L. M. Martin, who found it necessary to make a hurried disposition of his house.

Manager Spiros Slouris of the Pageant theater is in uniform and about to get into actual service. The Pageant is one of the largest west end houses, and is being managed temporarily by Mr. Slouris' brother, who already has two theaters to look after.

Henry James has bought the Comet Picture House from the Zimmerman-Pohlman interests, owners also of the Mutoscope. The Pohlman-Zimmerman company is said to be dickering for two new theaters in a new section of the city. They have built up neighborhoods around their houses in the last fifteen years, having been among the pioneer exhibitors of the city. Edward Pohlman is secretary of the Exhibitors' League.

Metro Director Marries Actress

David Belasco Gives Away Bride, Mrs. Mildred Dean—Harry L. Franklin Is the Bridegroom.

HARRY L. FRANKLIN, one of the directing staff of Metro Pictures Corporation, was married to Mrs. Mildred Dean February 27, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Carewe, New York City. David Belasco gave the bride in marriage. Mrs. Dean was the widow of the late W. J. Dean, who was Mr. Belasco's stage manager for many years.

Mr. Carewe, a prominent Metro director with whom Mr. Franklin has long been associated, was the bridegroom's best man. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Dr. Tintner. Mr. and Mrs. Carewe were hosts at a wedding dinner of ten covers, the other guests being Maxwell Karger, Metro's studio supervisor, and Mrs. Karger, Finis Fox, Mr. Carewe's associate director, and Mrs. Fox, Mrs. Walton Bradford and Miss Lillian West. Mr. Belasco and Miss Louise Galloway were obliged to leave early.

After the dinner the guests attended the performance at the Belasco theater, where the bride is playing in "Polly With a Past." Later Mr. and Mrs. Karger were hosts at a supper-dance at the Claridge, at which other guests joined the party.

ABEL BACK AT SELECT HEADQUARTERS.

Sydney E. Abel, executive office representative for Select, has just wound up a three months' tour of the principal branches of that company. Mr. Abel reports general conditions are not only assuming a normal state, but in many localities are even better than they have been for some months.

"Those exhibitors," says he, "who have anticipated for the future and are conducting their theaters on a scale proportionate with the great growth of the film industry are not complaining or crying poverty. They are sawing wood and taking advantage of every opportunity. They show the best pictures purchasable and charge an admission price commensurate with the value and quality of such productions."

PROJECTION ASSOCIATION ELECTS OFFICERS.

The National Projection Association, of the Bronx, New York, has elected the following officers for the coming year: Frank S. Pircher, president; Morris J. Rotten, vice president; Edmond McR. Benkeim, recording and corresponding secretary; Harry Levine and Marcus Rattiner, trustees; Frank Pezzello, sergeant-at-arms. The association is in healthy condition and is very active.

Goldwyn Announces Foreign Alliances

John Olsen & Co. to Distribute Its Product in Sweden, Norway and Denmark.

GOLDWYN has lost no time in arranging the distribution of Goldwyn Pictures in all of the world's habitable places. During the week distribution contracts have been signed with John Olsen & Co., the great cinema firm of Scandinavia, for the releasing of Goldwyn Pictures in Sweden, Norway and Denmark. The Olsen organization has its headquarters in Copenhagen, dominating the northern European lands.

Similar contracts are about to be signed with other large organizations for the distribution of Goldwyn Pictures in Italy, Spain and France. In its present state Russia's disorganization has brought the film industry to a standstill in that country. Until the end of the war Goldwyn's only open spots will be the lands of the Teutonic allies and Russia.

Distribution contracts have also been signed with the Cooperative Film Corporation of New York for the releasing of its productions in Chile, Bolivia, Peru and Ecuador. This organization controls a number of the leading and largest theaters in those four South American countries. These contracts were signed through Arthur Ziehm, of Goldwyn's export department.

That Goldwyn is becoming increasingly active in reaching out for the world markets, as well as for the expansion of its North American business, is indicated by the fact that within three weeks it has announced the consummation of plans for releasing its productions in Australia, through J. C. Williamson Films, Ltd.; in New Zealand and Tasmania, through the New Zealand Picture Supplies, Ltd.; in South Africa, through the all-important South African Film Trust; for India and Burmah, through K. D. & Brothers; for Argentine Republic and Uruguay, through Messrs. Saenz & Gonzalez; for Porto Rico and San Domingo, through Agencia General Cinematografica.

Carlos, Fox Right Hand Man

EVERY captain of industry has a right-hand man—a substitute for himself—upon whom he leans in time of stress and upon whom he absolutely depends to lighten his own labors. Abraham Carlos has been that man for William Fox. "Personal representative" is the modest title bestowed upon Mr. Carlos, who has followed the fortunes of his chief through all his motion picture vicissitudes and successes.

Mr. Carlos became identified with William Fox when the latter first interested himself in the motion picture industry. This was back in 1908 during the days "down in Fourteenth Street," when Mr. Fox was at the head of the Greater New York Film Exchange.

Abraham Carlos.

All through the long legal fight waged by William Fox against the General Film Company, Mr. Carlos worked with his chief. When Mr. Fox and his associates organized the Box Office Attractions Company and began the making of pictures Carlos continued with his chief. Here Mr. Carlos demonstrated his remarkable ability as an organizer. The present Fox Film Corporation was evolved from the old Box Office Attraction Company.

Mr. Carlos occupies a unique position. Time and again he has demonstrated his ability not only to supervise the production of pictures but to get out and sell them after they are made. Mr. Carlos was intrusted by Mr. Fox with the supervision of the making of "A Daughter of the Gods" with Annette Kellermann, in Jamaica, and it was upon his reports that William Fox, the controller of the bank roll, had to depend.

Mr. Fox commissioned Mr. Carlos as his personal representative to go to Hollywood and there plan and build a complete studio plant. This was early in 1916. He completed the task and then took entire charge of production.

Early this year Mr. Carlos returned to New York, where he is engaged in further strengthening the sales organization of the Fox Film Corporation.

Powers Talks to Advertising Men

Association Pledges Support to War Camp Committee—J. C. Graham Talks of English Methods.

THE spirit with which the motion picture industry is taking hold of the opportunity to do its "bit" in connection with the entertainment of the American soldiers in the training camps was illustrated at a meeting of the American Motion Picture Advertisers, held at Keen's Chop House on Thursday, February 21. Patrick A. Powers, chairman of the War Camp Motion Picture Committee of the industry, which has been invited by Raymond B. Fosdick, chairman of the Army and Navy Training Camps Commissions, to co-operate with it in providing pictures for the camps through the various agencies engaged in furnishing entertainment for the soldiers and sailors, was present upon invitation, and described in a general way the plan whereby the industry is to share in putting the nation's fighting forces "over the top" in a winning mood. Co-operation of all to this end was the message which Mr. Powers gave to the advertisers' association, which passed a resolution pledging its aid.

J. C. Graham, London representative of the Famous Players-Lasky Company, described motion picture conditions in western Europe. He said that the British army cantonments had been supplied with motion pictures through army officers familiar with motion pictures appointed to take charge of the work of distribution.

Sunday, March 10, will mark the opening of "My Four Years in Germany" at the Knickerbocker theater, New York. This production, approximately ten reels in length, is based upon Ambassador Gerard's book of the same title, and it is announced that, should his health permit, as he is now convalescent, he may be present at the initial performance. A number of guests prominent in military, naval, and civil life have also been invited.

A large orchestra will interpret special music, which has been written for this picture by Hugo Reisenfeld, Musical Director of the Rialto and Rivoli theaters.

The adaptation of "My Four Years in Germany" for the screen was made by Charles A. Logue, and William Nigh directed the production.

DANIEL FROHMAN STILL WITH FAMOUS PLAYERS.

On Sunday, February 24, a New York newspaper was misled into stating that Daniel Frohman had ceased his connection with the Famous Players Film Company. The company states this is an error. Mr. Frohman is not only the vice-president and managing director of that company, but he is also a director in the Famous Players-Lasky corporation. It is only his duties at the studio in the executive department that have ceased.

Prominent Film Men From South America

By F. G. Ortega

Bidwell & Larrain, of Chile, Arrive in New York to Establish Film and Equipment Connections

WILLIAM BIDWELL and Luis Larrain, of the firm of Bidwell & Larrain, exhibitors and renters operating in Chile, arrived in New York on February 7 and, after calling at the office of Cine-Mundial—the routine adopted during the past two years by all South American buyers visiting this city—were ready for business.

William Bidwell.

"The object of our trip," said Mr. Bidwell to a representative of our Spanish edition, "is to study the moving picture business in general with a view to introducing in our country the best photoplays and the most modern projection machinery and theatrical equipment manufactured in the United States.

"The motion picture business in Chile is in a rather undeveloped stage. The public has not yet come to regard the screen as a high class medium of entertainment. It is looked upon as a simple pastime, and the moving picture theaters are patronized by the public as places in which to idle away a few hours. The principal cause of this, in my opinion, is the ruinous competition prevailing among the South American exporters, that has brought about, as a consequence, the daily change of program and the necessity of buying cheap film in large quantities. Even at the present time, 70% of the film exhibited in Chile is of very poor quality and the stories are selected with an utter disregard for the customs and tastes of our theater-going public.

"When I was in South America, I used to blame the local importers and their agents here and in Europe for this condition, but I can see now that in this matter they have had their hands tied to a great extent. We have only been here a few days, but my partner and I have already realized that there is a lack of practical export knowledge among many manufacturers. Some of the prices asked can only be explained on this assumption. There are producers here who will quote the same price on Chile as on Argentina, without taking into consideration that Buenos Aires alone has more theaters than all Chile put together and the prevailing admission prices in Argentina are 50% higher than in Chile. Take the case of "Civilization" as an example. The lowest admission price charged in Argentina was the equivalent of 22 cents, while it was shown in Chile at 13 cents.

"Our firm has been established since 1910 and we control and own over twenty-seven theaters in Chile. Owing to the unsettled conditions brought about by the war, the high price of films, the difficulties in getting steamers to carry cargoes of this nature even when paying exorbitant freight rates, and the other causes which I have mentioned, theatrical, the moving picture business in general in Chile is just now passing an acute crisis.

Luis Larrain.

"The production of films in Chile on a large scale is practically impossible for various reasons, the first and foremost being that screen players of ability cannot be procured there. Our company has produced two pictures. 'The Agony of Aranco' and 'The Steel Man,' of about 9,000 feet each, which were very successful throughout the republic.

"We also have a studio and laboratory capable of turning out from five to six thousand feet per day.

"We have brought with us 1,000 feet of negative showing the principal buildings of Santiago, riding exercises by officers of the Chilean army and other interesting views.

"And, finally, you can say for us that our aim is to establish sound business relations direct with the sources of supply. That is what we are here for and it will not be our fault if we fail."

Mr. Bidwell expected to leave for Chile about the end of February. Mr. Larrain, his partner and a retired captain of the Chilean army, will remain in New York for six months more, as he has a government commission to fulfill in relation to the use of moving pictures for educational purposes.

Among the Picture Theaters

Oswald & Rantz's Rialto Opened

New House at Bremerton Begins Its Career Auspiciously—Seattle Film Men Present—Reception and Supper Held After Show.

THE biggest event in Northwest motion picturedom since the opening of the Coliseum theater in Seattle two years ago took place in Bremerton on the evening of February 6, when Oswald & Rantz opened their new Rialto theater. The Rialto has been under construction for about a year, but the labor shortage has made earlier completion impossible. During that time motion picture men of the Northwest have followed the building of the new house with much interest.

A U. S. Navy Yard is located at Bremerton, which is directly across Puget Sound from Seattle. Eugene Oswald and Jack Rantz have operated the Dream theater there for several years. They have been considering building a new house for some time, and when the naval authorities decided last year to use the Bremerton yard as a naval base and to expend a large amount in improving it, the town began to boom so that they decided to build immediately and to build well enough for the future. The new house seats nearly 1,000 and was built at a cost of $50,000.

The Rialto is constructed of brick covered on the exterior with stucco in natural color. On the facade above the broad marquee are three wide niches in each of which is painted a life size peacock. The interior walls are buff with simple borders of gold, but the furnishings and decorations carry out the color scheme of red and green. The furniture, the carpets, the stage curtain and the draperies at the entrance to the auditorium are red velvet. About half way down the auditorium on each side is a pair of blind French doors curtained in red silk, and again on each side of the stage above a real door is another pair of French doors curtained in green silk. The tiny fountains on each side of the stage are lighted by red and green lights, and one row of the indirect lights stretching across the center of the house throws a red and green glow over the auditorium when the other lights are dimmed. The boxes are in front of the balcony. They are roomy and are furnished with white chairs upholstered in cretonne of a futurist design in green and red. The same color scheme is carried out in the women's retiring room.

As soon as a definite time for opening the Rialto could be determined upon invitations were sent to the managers of the film exchanges and the leading theaters in Seattle to attend the opening and a reception and supper to be given by the managers. Those who accepted the invitation were C. F. Hill, Goldwyn manager; H. G. Rosenbaum, Artcraft-Paramount manager, and Mrs. Rosenbaum; Jas. M. Tally, Vitagraph manager, and Mrs. Tally; F. L. Steffy, Kleine manager; Eugene Levy, manager of the Orpheum theater; Messrs. M. and A. Rosenberg, manager and secretary, respectively, of the De Luxe Feature Film Company; John R. Meldrum, Universal manager; S. P. Peck, representing the Exhibitors' Film Exchange; Jack Lannon, of Greater Features; and J. S. Anderson, the Moving Picture World correspondent.

The Seattle delegation arrived in Bremerton at six o'clock and went directly to the Rialto, where the program was scheduled to begin at six-thirty. The house was already packed when they arrived, and a big crowd was waiting on the sidewalk. The audience was entertained by music from the fine pipe organ until time for the curtain to rise. Just before this was done, however, a display of the different lighting effects was given. All the lighting is indirect, and some beautiful effects may be obtained by turning some of the lights off, and turning others on, by the use of the colored lights, and by the use of the "dimmers" on the stage.

When the curtain parted four large floral horseshoes were disclosed upon the stage. The largest of these was composed of red carnations and daffodils, tied with a broad red ribbon across the center, upon which was painted in gilt the word "Success." This was presented by the Northwest Film Board of Trade.

The first thing shown upon the screen were the words, "To you, people of Bremerton, who have made the building of this theater possible, the Rialto is dedicated. (Signed) Oswald and Rantz."

The program consisted of two Artcraft-Paramount releases, Mary Pickford in "Stella Maris," and Fatty Arbuckle in "Out West." The audiences were very enthusiastic, and showed their approval at the end of each picture by prolonged applause. They also greeted the announcements of the coming features, the first being Mabel Normand in "Dodging a Million." The program will be changed three times a week. There were three shows during the evening, and the house was packed at each performance. Most of the Seattle people spent the time between the first show and ten-thirty, the time when they were to assemble for the reception, at the Dream, Oswald and Rantz's other house. The program there consisted of a Triangle comedy entitled "Blood and Thunder" and Emily Stevens in "Daybreak."

At ten-thirty the Seattle delegation gathered in the foyer of the Rialto and, with Mr. and Mrs. Oswald and Mr. Rantz, proceeded to the Alexandria Cafe, where the reception and supper were held.

Liberty Theater, Fresno, Cal.

Theodore Keech Managing Fresno's Newest Picture House. Seats 2,000 and Is Equipped with American Fotoplayer.

PRETENTIOUS motion picture houses are coming into existence all over the country more rapidly now than in the past. This condition has been brought about by the increasing stability of the industry, the production of better subjects and by the advent into the exhibiting end of men with brains and money who are quick to realize the vast possibilities in a motion picture house constructed along the most advanced lines. This encouraging outlook is not confined to big cities only, but to the smaller ones, and the small towns, too.

To the list of smaller cities boasting of handsome and commendable picture houses can be included that of Fresno, Cal., where there was opened recently the Liberty theater. The Liberty is situated on Van Ness Boulevard, near Tulare street, a most advantageous location, and is under the capable direction of Theodore Keech, a man of long and varied experience in the amusement line. The new accession to Fresno's number of picture houses has a seating capacity of 2,000, and the owners were most prodigal in the expenditure of money in order that the clientele of the Liberty would have all the comforts and conveniences that modern ingenuity can devise. The theater has been constructed of iron, steel, and concrete; and wood has been used as sparingly as possible.

The interior embellishments were left in the hands of the company of decorators that had the beautifying of the New California theatre, San Francisco, in charge, and were given full sway. The result is that the auditorium of the Liberty is a thing of beauty. All chairs were supplied by the Wisconsin Seating Company, and a reasonable amount of space has been left between the rows, which permits of easy ingress or egress. In the back of the orchestra floor is situated the up-to-date projection room, a part of whose modern equipment are two Simplex machines, three dissolvers, and a spot and flood light. Bousch & Lomb lenses are used, and the length of the throw is 135 feet. An American Fotoplayer, made especially for the Liberty theater by the American Photo Player Company and which cost $30,000, provides the music. This instrument is presided over by a man who has mastered the art of playing to the pictures. The Moving Picture World is pleased to record in its pages this account of the Liberty theater, as it is a worthy asset to the industry as a whole.

Visiting Detroit's Madison Theater

Kunsky's Newest Picture House Contains Many Startling Innovations for the Theatergoer.

By Harry R. Guest.

IT HAS been my pleasure to visit John H. Kunsky's Madison theater of Detroit, a picture playhouse that is a worthy asset to the industry. The Madison has been open just a year—to be exact, one year March 6. The opening was one of the important pieces of motion picture news in 1917. The lavish hand of a prodigal theatrical magnate, who spent more than half a million dollars to build the theater he had dreamed of for years, had created ripples of anticipation among motion picture men all over the country, and the opening of the Madison became an event of national interest.

The theater is now under the management of Thomas D. Moule, who couples Mr. Kunsky's idealistic wishes with his own practical ideas. Mr. Moule is one of those conscientious, alert managers, ever on the watch for something new in management and motion picture presentation. He is never satisfied. The thing must be done better. The Madison must excel. If it is a theater man calling upon Mr. Moule, he will ask him to criticise.

The Madison theater is in the new heart of growing Detroit, a statement that will be readily understood by those familiar with the dynamic city. It faces Grand Circus park, around which has sprung up in the last five years, mammoth hotels, office buildings, and high-class merchandising houses. In the midst of this development stands the Madison theater, flashing its invitation to seekers of the best in amusement (when the Fuel Administration allows the use of its $10,000 electric signs and decorative effects) far up Woodward avenue, the main thoroughfare of the city.

I found Mr. Moule in his office, situated in the lobby, where every person who enters the theater passes his door. "There's a reason for this, too," explained Mr. Moule. "I like to keep close to the public." He was busy at his desk when I entered, "making plans," he explained, "for our anniversary week. Mr. Kunsky wants to show appreciation of the people's patronage by giving them a wonderful week of surprises."

After a brief chat I asked permission to enter the theater alone, wander about at pleasure and sit where I pleased so that I might get my own impressions.

The moment you enter the Madison theater you feel "management." It permeates the atmosphere, beams from the faces of the octaroon young women who act as ushers, vibrates from the mammoth organ and bellows from the tympany and big drums.

The decorative scheme is from the Italian Renaissance. Tapestry panels cover the walls, and a color scheme of green, gold and old ivory is carried out in every bit of the decoration.

One of the striking features is the promenade, just under the balcony, known as the "mezzanine well," where patrons may sit in beautiful chairs, amid luxurious surroundings and listen to the music of the great organ carried to this place through mysterious passages. Expensive paintings adorn the walls, magnificent lamps light secluded corners where patrons sit and dream away an hour waiting for their friends. Dainty writing tables are provided for those who wish to make use of them, and the latest magazines and periodicals are there for those who care to read. Those who enter the theater when the feature picture is on, often walk to the beautiful mezzanine well, to while away the time until the starting of the next performance. Here is the luxury of a millionaire's home, furnished with refinement and faultless taste, thrown open to the use of the public.

The stage setting was a revelation to me. Instead of paper flowers, tinsel, cardboard and painted canvas—I found a solid cement cyclorama, built to represent the terrace of an ancient castle. When the picture screen is raised from view, this cyclorama is beautiful with wonderful light effects, that change as the spectator watches it, giving the sensations of sunrise in the mountains, or a gorgeous sunset at sea, a beautiful moonlight evening, or a cold, dreary day in January, or the warmth of a torrid summer. Into this atmosphere of wonder, and surrounded by this ever-changing scheme of mystifying color, step the singers or entertainers on the program; and when they bow and exit the light gradually and artistically fades, the first announcement of the feature picture falls on the solid wall at the back of the stage, and the picture screen, slowly lowered into place seems to fit itself to the first frame of the picture.

The Madison has an orchestra of twenty-three pieces, under the direction of Warde Johnstone. Much of the Madisons' reputation is built upon music. The overture is one of the features of the program, and every selection played during the showing of the weekly news picture, the feature or the comedy, is fitted to the scenes.

John H. Kunsky controls ten of Detroit's popular photoplay theaters, and the Madison is his special pride. It represents the culmination of a long experience in giving the public value received for the price of admission. It represents the result of close study of the public's desires. It represents the pinnacle of a wise exhibitor's successful career.

When I made my way out of the theater I met Mr. Kunsky standing with Mr. Moule. They were listening for suggestions from the people—the unbiased criticisms of picture patrons fresh from the minds of those who had just been entertained.

"What do you think of our theater?" Mr. Kunsky asked me.

"The Madison theater is beauty, order, service, art, music, brains and careful management—all devoted to providing moderate-priced entertainment for a discriminating public."

TO BUILD $50,000 THEATER AT TACOMA.

A building permit for the erection of a $50,000 theater building at South Ninth and Market streets, Tacoma, Wash., was taken out recently by John S. Baker and H. F. Moore. The permit states that the building will be 90x120, with the entrance on South Ninth street. It is estimated that the building, which was started last month, will be completed in about five months.

WORK ON FRIEDMAN'S THEATER PROGRESSING.

Work on the new theater that Arthur Friedman is building in Racine, Wis., is going along steadily and rapidly, despite the stormy weather experienced in that section of the country recently. Mr. Friedman hopes to have the new structure open for business in the early spring. The Palace theater, Monument Square, Racine, is under the direction of Mr. Friedman.

ACQUIRE THEATER CONTROL.

The Forest City Investment Company, Cleveland, Ohio, has leased to Morris Friedman and R. M. Gordon the Strand theater at the corner of Superior avenue, N. E., and E. 89th street, that city. The lease is for a period of six years at a rental of $24,000 per year.

Allston Theater, Allston, Mass.

Lyman C. Fisher, An Experienced Picture Man, Takes Over the Allston—Also Buys Out Interest of His Partners in Newton Opera House.

ON December 24, 1917, Lyman C. Fisher, of the Newton Opera House, Newton, Mass., took possession of the Allston theater in Brighton avenue, Allston, Mass. Allston comprises a part of the best residential section of Boston. Mr. Fisher's new acquisition is one of the finest motion picture theaters in New England, and caters to a patronage of discriminating people. Years of experience in the amusement line has been the means of providing Mr. Fisher with a knowledge of what constitutes quality entertainment, and he is bringing this knowledge into play in running the Allston and his other house. In this respect he has booked the entire output of the selective star series productions of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Negotiations for these pictures were recently closed with the Famous Players Film Company of New England with offices at 8 Shawmut street, Boston.

Lyman C. Fisher.

Mr. Fisher is an optimist in the show business; and an analyst as well. Those who have followed his career say that his success is due to the careful study and observation of the public and the shaping of his policies to suit the taste of the majority. Eight years ago when Mr. Fisher and his then business associates built the Newton Opera House at Newton it meant the inauguration in that community of the best entertainment obtainable. "The best is the cheapest in the long run," says Mr. Fisher, and that initial policy has been adhered to up to the present day.

Sometime ago Mr. Fisher acquired the interest of his partners in the opera house, and that theater is now being conducted by him alone. Both the Allston and the Newton opera house are conducted along lines of exclusiveness and refinement. Auspicious circumstances attended the dedication of the Allston theater. A well-worked out advertising campaign whereby the opening of the new house was widely heralded resulted in exceedingly heavy attendance, and many were turned away at each performance. It was a marked tribute to Mr. Fisher's eminence as an exhibitor of the first water, and augurs well for a long and prosperous career for the Allston.

As to the comparative merits of a mixed program of vaudeville and pictures, and straight pictures, Mr. Fisher has pronounced ideas gained from his experience, and his answer is the discarding of vaudeville from all programs of both the Allston and the Newton Opera House. The accompanying illustration showing a view of a section of the interior of the Allston gives a good idea of its spaciousness.

Alhambra Theater, Indianapolis, Ind.

Central Company Remodels One of Its Houses—Lobby Is Equipped with Newman's Unit Poster Frames—Structure Now Seats 1,200.

SO THAT its Alhambra theater in Indianapolis would be more complete and up to date, the Central Amusement Company, of 113 North Illinois street, that city, had that house entirely overhauled and remodeled. The work was completed in August, 1917. The width of the auditorium has been enlarged, fifteen feet being added to the original width of thirty feet, making the auditorium now measure forty-five feet. This addition resulted in increased seating capacity, and the Alhambra is now able to accommodate comfortably 1,200 persons. The chairs were furnished by the American Seating Company and are upholstered in leather. A spacious and beautiful mezzanine floor has been built in, and this section of the Alhambra has been equipped with beautiful paintings and comfortable settees and lounges for those patrons who come in during a show and who desire to wait for the starting of the next one and for those who want to wait within the theater for their friends.

The balcony is a large one, and from every seat here as well as in the orchestra and the boxes, which line the auditorium on each side, an unobstructed view of the screen can be had. The boxes have accommodation for sixty persons. In the basement, where can be found the women's parlor and the men's smoking room, is located the private projection room of the manager, where he carefully views each picture on the program before it is shown to his patrons. Simplex machines are used. Music, which forms so important a part of picture entertainment, is rendered by an orchestra of ten pieces and a big organ. It is said that the Alhambra has one of the largest organs in use in picture theaters in the city. By means of the excellent ventilation system the air in the house is changed every two minutes. The unit poster frames made by the Newman Manufacturing Company of Cincinnati is used by the management of the Alhambra, and they find it a great help in arranging the posters in the most conspicuous yet artistic positions. The Central Amusement Company also own and operate the Lyric and Isis theaters in Indianapolis. B. V. Barton is president of the company; Charles M. Olson, vice-president and treasurer, and J. M. Barton, secretary. As a result of the overhauling, the Alhambra has been doing an increased business, and among its clientele are many who do not live in the immediate vicinity of the theater. It has gained the reputation of being a picture house where the best in entertainment is dispensed.

Theater Wilbert, Plaquemine, La.

A. Wilbert's Sons Open Pretentious Photoplay House in City of 15,000 Population—Structure Cost Over $100,000—Fitted Out With Every Appliance Necessary to Comfort and Pleasure.

IT is not often that a city of 15,000 with a potential amusement population of a little over 10,000 can boast of as magnificent a theater as has recently been opened in Plaquemine, La., as a monument to the public spirited enterprise of A. Wilbert's Sons, extensive lumber operators. The house has been named Theater Wilbert and it is a most pretentious institution. Nothing in the way of expense has been spared in the erection of this theater, and over $100,000 had been expended before the doors were ready for opening. It is finished in the best modern style throughout and no appliance that will contribute to the pleasure or comfort of the patrons has been omitted. The building is as substantial as expert workmen could make it, and no second class material was used in the construction. The structure is of brick and is equivalent to three stories in height. The opening of the theater was an event in the history of the little city that will not soon be forgotten. The theater was opened for inspection at 10 o'clock on Sunday, February 3, for the first time, and at 1 o'clock the formal dedicatory exercises commenced with musical selections by the Dixie orchestra of Baton Rouge, followed by addresses by prominent citizens. J. Warren Kerrigan in the Paralta release, "A Man's Man," was the initial production shown, and after the picture presentation at 10 p. m. dancing was indulged in by the public. Despite most disagreeable weather over 4,000 persons attended the opening ceremonies. The Messrs. Wilbert are justly proud of having erected the finest general theater in the South for a city of the size of Plaquemine, and they selected "Pro Bono Publico" as the motto for the house.

Lionel Delacroix, an experienced manager, has leased the theater for a term of years and will devote it to motion pictures during the present season, but will later introduce road attractions under the Klaw and Erlanger management. Few theaters are better equipped for the showing of all kinds of attractions. The theater has a seating capacity of 1,300. The stage is 52 feet wide by 40 feet deep and 51 feet high. The proscenium is 32 feet wide by 30 feet in height. The motion picture equipment consists of an independent electrical plant; two 6-B Power's motor-driven machines with a throw of 122, projecting a picture 17 by 21 feet. An $8,000 Fotoplayer and a large symphony orchestra provide for the musical entertainment. Paramount-Artcraft, Goldwyn, Fox, World and Metro will furnish the program service of pictures.

Ashley Miller

ASHLEY MILLER, who is now a feature producer with the Vitagraph Company, is one of the small band of young pioneer directors who began the upbuilding of a great industry before many of its now prominent figures had come into view.

After a stage career of fifteen years in support of Walker Whiteside, Otis Skinner, Henrietta Crosman, Anna Held, and in stock companies east and west, Mr. Miller became a member of the famous old Biograph company, where under D. W. Griffith, he learned the rudiments of the newest of the arts.

Ashley Miller.

Having written and produced several successful stage plays he soon began to build scenarios for Mr. Griffith's use, and later, through this department of the work, was engaged by Thomas A. Edison to produce his own works exclusively for this company.

This connection lasted over seven years, and during it Mr. Miller originated many customs and effects now in general use in the business; brought from the stage to the screen several prominent and now successful artists and created a number of best sellers in filmdom. He also made the first European trip with a company, under Edison's standard.

After leaving this studio he directed Arnold Daly for some months, and made a series of detective features for Pathe release. This was followed by an engagement with the Lasky-Famous Players company to adapt and produce a special feature, starring Maurice and Florence Walton, the dancers.

Seven months ago Mr. Miller joined the Vitagraph forces, and for this company has so far produced entirely adaptations from the works of prominent authors. He has, however, been at work for nearly two years on the story and scenario of a big super-feature which he expects to produce on an elaborate scale the coming summer. He is also a contributor to popular magazine fiction and to mental science literature. His booklet "You," a primer of this cult, is one of its successful department store sellers.

Mr. Miller is a believer in the mission of the photoplay among the nations of the world as an influence toward better understanding and sympathy between races, nations and creeds.

Operators Arrested for Arson

Three Members of Indianapolis Local No. 194 in Trouble on Account of Fire at Annex Theater.

THREE motion picture machine operators, members of the Indianapolis Union No. 194, were arrested by the police February 19, and at this writing are being held pending an investigation of a fire at the Annex theater, 118 South Illinois street, Indianapolis, on February 14, in which they are alleged to have been involved. The men are Wilbur West, Charles Hoffman and Arthur McLoskey. West was employed as an operator at the Circle theater, and the two others were employed at the Crystal theater.

The arrest followed an investigation asked for by George G. Swain, manager and owner of the theater.

Claude Worley, special investigator for the Marion County grand jury, said the back door leading into the place had been broken open. The screen was slashed several times, he added, with a sharp knife. The inquiry tended to show that the intruders had then gone upstairs into the operating room, where they unscrewed parts of the motion picture machine and partly wrecked it. They are said to have removed part of the film, which they set on fire, the flames spreading rapidly to other parts of the building. The interior of the theater was wrecked by the fire and practically destroyed.

Mr. Worley said he learned from a reliable source that West and McLoskey had threatened to burn the Annex and the Royal theaters, both of which are said to have refused to recognize the union. Several days previously the manager of the Royal theater complained to the police that his patrons had been driven out by some foul smelling potion that he thought was probably scattered inside the place by union sympathizers. Mr. Worley charged that West, one of the operators now under arrest, was seen to leave the Royal at about the time this trouble occurred.

The management of the Royal contends that inasmuch as the work at the theater is done by the owners there is no need of employing a union operator, and added that they have an agreement with the local union to this effect. Members of the local union say they know of no such an agreement.

McLoskey and West were questioned at police headquarters, and are said to have told conflicting stories regarding their whereabouts just before the fire in the Annex occurred. They denied knowing anything about the fire. Worley and the detectives say they learned that Hoffman and West were among the spectators at the fire.

Swain, the owner of the Annex, has experienced considerable trouble with the operators' union because of his refusal to recognize it, and at one time an effort was made to boycott the place by distributing cards, declaring that the theater was unfair because it did not employ union men. Recently Swain is said to have settled his troubles with the union by signing a contract with them. Later, it is said, some of the union operators refused to work for him, and the trouble broke out anew.

The men under arrest, are at this writing, held under $2,500 bonds pending an investigation by the grand jury.

Northern Ohio Exhibitors Happy

Spurt in Business Noticed Since February First—Weather One of Biggest Factors.

EVIDENTLY a miracle has happened in Northern Ohio for the exhibitors thereabouts are experiencing some wonderful business. A few months ago they had faces so long and dreary looking that one would almost think they had lost their minds. Today there is a smile on those same faces that looks as though it would never come off.

Since February 1 there has been a big spurt forward in business. Large and small houses have had the same experience. This is due principally to the weather and only illustrates once more that the weather is the biggest factor in the show business. Cleveland has experienced some wretched weather and lots of it, which has hurt business. Many exhibitors thought the war tax and kindred war activities had put the business on the bum.

In the smaller towns there is great activity among the exhibitors and the number of them visiting Cleveland within the last two weeks has almost doubled, which is another sure indication of a return of prosperity. One small town exhibitor said to the writer the other day: "In November and December the patrons of my place would come up to the ticket window with pennies and nickels. Now they come with dollars and five-dollar bills."

Another Consolidation in the South

Craver Amusement Captures Business in Greensboro, N. C. Isis Theater a Part of Chain.

BY the purchase of the Isis theater from W. D. McAdoo, R. D. Craver, president of the Craver Amusement Enterprises, with head offices at Charlotte, N. C., comes into control of the entire theatrical situation in Greensboro with the exception of the Municipal theater, in which he also has an interest as part owner, and will conduct the four local theaters as a link in his extensive chain of theatrical properties throughout North and South Carolina and Virginia.

The Craver Enterprises some weeks ago took over the Bijou theater in Greensboro, owned by G. W. Pryor for many years, and with the Piedmont, which they built five years ago, and a controlling interest in the Municipal (legitimate) house, adds another city to the many in the South which are becoming dominated by one management. Among these cities are Norfolk, Richmond, Chattanooga, Nashville, Jacksonville, Wilmington and Asheville, in each of which cities one corporation operates all of the theatrical properties.

Mr. Craver some weeks ago launched a corporation with a capital of $100,000 to handle the theaters on his circuit, and is rapidly acquiring properties throughout the South, being represented in Charlotte, Durham, Columbia, Winston-Salem, Lynchburg and Greensboro. F. A. Abbott is the company's general secretary. Mr. Craver has been interested in the theatrical interests of the state for fifteen years, and for several years was manager of the Charlotte Universal exchange.

Carewe Returns to Me

EDWIN CAREWE, director of a long list of Metro's most successful pictures, returns to the firm's directorial staff to guide Bert Lytell in his initial All-Star Series picture under the parrot trade-mark. The Metro director returns "home," after producing a feature picture starring Mary Garden.

Just previous to making the Garden production he directed Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne in "The Voice of Conscience," written by his brother, Finis Fox. Among his other Metro productions have been "The Barricade," "The Sunbeam," "The Dawn of Love," and "God's Half Acre," with Mabel Taliaferro; "Destiny; or, The Soul of a Woman," and "The House of Tears" with Emily Stevens; "The Final Judgment" and "Her Greatest Power" with Ethel Barrymore; "The Trail of a Shadow" with Emmy Wehlen, and "Their Compact" with Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne.

Edwin Carewe.

Carewe obtains his screen results by means of direct methods. His slogan is "simplicity." He believes in the combined appeal of the emotions and the intelligence, and never directs a picture in which both of these elements are not to be found in almost equal proportions. His most representative work has been for Metro, although his screen debut was made with the Lubin Company.

Before identifying himself with motion picture work he had valuable experience on the speaking stage. He toured the country in leading parts with such stars as Otis Skinner, Nat Goodwin, Laurette Taylor, Kitty Gordon, and Chauncey Olcott. He comes of mixed New England and Indian stock, being a quarter-blood Chickasaw Indian, regularly receiving compensation from the Government for the sale of lands inherited from his maternal grandmother, the daughter of Chief Tabuscabano of the Chickasaws. "Big Chief" Carewe himself spent his childhood among the tepees of the Indians, and says he owes his robust health to the outdoor life of the red man.

Kentucky Sabbatarians Growing Captious

Fear Legislature May Permit Theaters to Open Sundays—Exhibitors Trust to Good Sense at Capital.

THE churchmen in Kentucky are beginning to start a fight against the enactment of the Sunday amendment which would permit moving picture theaters in cities of the first three classes to operate on the Sabbath. The clergymen were rather slow in finding out that the bill was before the legislature, but the ministerial organizations as usual have been busy since that time.

The ministers of Paducah, Ky., are among the hottest on this subject. These men for several years have prevented shows from operating in that city, and have been generally opposed to any form of amusement on Sunday, even baseball and harmless amusements of all kinds. The congregation of the Kentucky Avenue Presbyterian Church recently adopted resolutions at a special mass meeting, protesting against the measure, and copies of this have been mailed to ministers in Louisville, Lexington, Frankfort and other cities, asking the ministers to use their influence with their Senators and Representatives in an attempt to kill the bill. However, it is believed the members of the general assembly will carefully weigh the matter before taking action, and the exhibitors feel fairly confident that results will be satisfactory.

Getting a Line on the Public

Device Suggested by a Detroiter to Ascertain What Pictures Make the Greatest Hit With the Audience.

A RESIDENT of Detroit, Denis H. O'Meara, has favored us with a suggestion for a theater lobby voting device for determining just what pictures appeal most strongly to the tastes of the patrons.

As will be seen by referring to Mr. O'Meara's drawing, here reproduced, the device consists of a bulletin board upon which appear the titles of the pictures shown at each performance. To the left of each title is a push button and to the right an automatic counter.

Figure 2 shows the interior mechanism of the proposed device. All that the patron needs do after attending a performance is to punch the button opposite the title of the picture which he or she liked best and the automatic counter will keep score.

Naturally the picture with the most punch will get the most punches and score highest. It might not be a bad idea to add another set of punch buttons to indicate disapproval and thereby reduce the tendency of the audience to cuss the management after a particularly rotten program.

Goldwyn Rents Two Additional Plants

Increases Fort Lee Facilities by Taking on Norma Talmadge and West End Studios.

OWING to many production difficulties due in large measure to conservation of current affecting its Fort Lee Studio, Goldwyn has rented two additional plants, completely equipped. These are the Norma Talmadge studio in West Forty-eighth street and the West End Studio in 125th street.

With three modern studios at its disposal, Goldwyn distributed its companies in a way to accomplish the greatest amount of work in the shortest space of time, one star leaving a studio to make way for another; the settings best suited to one studio being built there until the star could be accommodated elsewhere.

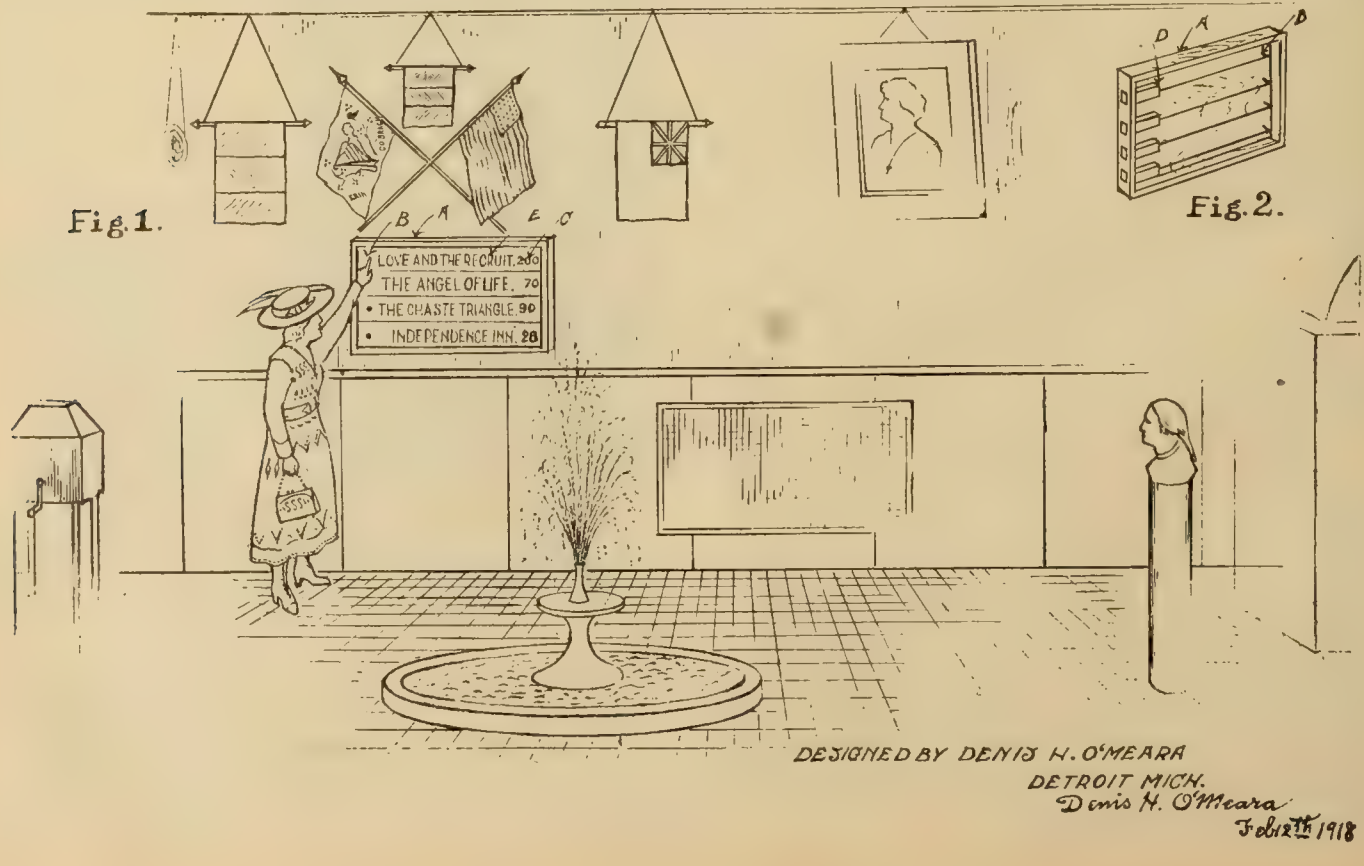
In this manner Madge Kennedy could act intimate scenes at the 125th street studio while a large set was being built at Fort Lee for the Italian restaurant which plays a prominent part in "The Danger Game." Mabel Normand at the Fort Lee Studios occupied herself with the charity bazaar in "The Floor Below" while other work was being planned for her at the Norma Talmadge studio.

PAULEY TREASURER OF HODKINSON CORPORATION.

Raymond W. Pauley, who was treasurer of the Paramount Pictures Corporation during the time that W. W. Hodkinson was the president of that corporation, is again actively connected with Mr. Hodkinson as the treasurer of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. Before the forming of Paramount Mr. Pauley distributed the productions of Famous Players in the Pennsylvania and southern New Jersey territory. When Paramount was organized Mr. Pauley was made treasurer and held that office until Mr. Hodkinson tendered his resignation, later going with Mr. Hodkinson to Triangle.

CANADIAN CENSOR APPROVES JAXON SERIAL.

The official stamp of approval of two governments has now been given "A Daughter of Uncle Sam," the Jaxon serial, reports General Film Company. A few weeks ago the United States censor's office witnessed a run-off of the first few episodes of the serial and passed it with the department's approval. The Canadian chief press censor, Colonel Ernest J. Chambers, of Ottawa, has gone a step further and broken an office record by issuing a letter highly recommending the General's spy serial.



Rothapfel Protests Against Drews' Exit

In Letter to Metro the Manager Insists Screen Cannot Afford to Lose Their Delightful Brand of Humor.

THE announced intention of Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, Metro's champion fun-makers, to retire from the screen and devote their time and talents to the spoken drama has called forth a storm of protest from "fans" and exhibitors all over the country. One of the most vigorous expressions has come from S. L. Rothapfel, manager of the Rialto and the Rivoli, New York City. By his businesslike statement appeal and marshaling of the facts Mr. Rothapfel becomes the spokesman for the progressive and constructive men in the industry. Mr. Rothapfel's letter to President Richard A. Rowland speaks for itself:

"In writing you this letter I grant you permission to give it all the publicity you think it deserves. It concerns the Drews in their well known characters of Henry and his spouse, Polly. I hope their intention to presently retire from the screen will never materialize.

"I want to make an appeal to those first class theaters which have the interests of the motion picture industry at heart to send in such a flood of protest to these artists that they will renounce their intention of going on the speaking stage. I consider that they are among the very foremost exponents of the quiet, refined, uplifting type of comedy which is so desirable during this war period.

"This is the first time I have ever made any request of exhibitors. I urge them to try their hardest to bring the Drews back to the fold. I ask them to investigate the worthiness of the Drew comedies, to book them if they have not already done so. They will reap great rewards, for these pictures are some of the best business getters and business creators on the market today.

"Indeed, I cannot conceive how any intelligent exhibitor can pass these up at a time when comedy material in good taste is so scarce and so desirable. Drew comedies do not create roaring laughter like Chaplin and Mack Sennett comedies, but rather they get under the skin, they produce a homey, intimate feeling that wins its way into the heart of the audience. Exhibitors may easily be deceived and think the audiences are not enjoying the picture because they are not tearing up their seats with hilarious laughter, but I want to say that I have received more favorable comment on these one-reel features than on any other comedy of similar nature I have ever run.

"Mr. and Mrs. Drew do not know of this letter, and probably will not be aware of it until it is printed. I have no axe to grind. They owe me nothing; I owe them nothing, except the advantage I have derived through the showing of their fine work. And I am indeed grateful to them for this, for they have given us a really effective form of screen entertainment—pictures that are intensely human and intimate, clean, truthful, deliciously humorous, and altogether in good taste. Their loss to the industry would be an incalculable misfortune. They must be made to stay. I shall use all my influence to have them forego their intention of leaving the screen. Anything further you can suggest, I shall be happy to do."

DOMINION THEATERS JOIN FIRST NATIONAL.

Announcement was made in Vancouver recently that the Dominion Theater interests had joined the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Ltd., of Canada. This adds three more theaters to the chain, the Dominion theater of Vancouver, the Dominion theater at Victoria and the Dominion theater at Nanaimo, B. C. It is also announced that the Broadway theater of Vancouver, the Edison theater of Westminster, B. C., and the Bijou theater and the Gaiety of Winnipeg are recent additions to the circuit. This makes approximately twenty theaters in the combination which touches practically every city and town of importance in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia. It is by far the strongest circuit as well as the most complete which has ever been formed in Western Canada, and the entrance of Victoria and Nanaimo cities completes its farthest Western connection for feature distribution.

"VOICE ON THE WIRE" GOES TO JAPAN.

"The Voice on the Wire," the Ben Wilson-Neva Gerber Universal serial produced by Stuart Paton, has reached Japan, where it has scored an instantaneous success and promises to be shown in all the leading motion picture theaters of the "Land of the Rising Sun."

Mary Murillo, Script Writer Extraordinary

OF THE meteoric flights to fame and fortune which have marked the careers of many present day leaders in the motion picture profession's various branches, the rise of Mary Murillo from obscurity to her present prominence in the field of scenario builders, offers a remarkable example. Credited with innumerable of the photoplay successes of the past few seasons, the versatility and originality displayed by this brilliant writer is perhaps best exemplified by the super Fox production, "Cheating the Public," which proved a sensation during a recent engagement at the Lyric Theater, New York. The girl who helped to bring to the screen "Jack and the Beanstalk," "Babes in the Wood" and other delightful fairy picture tales now entertaining millions of fans, Miss Murillo is also responsible for many of the starring vehicles, both original and adaptations, in which have appeared such brilliant artists as William Farnum, Robert Mantell, Theda Bara, Virginia Pearson, Valeska Suratt, Katherine and Jane Lee, Robert Warwick, Edna Mayo, Norma Talmadge, Emily Stevens, Ethel Barrymore, Harold Lockwood and other luminaries of the picture play art.

Mary Murillo.

Born in Ireland and educated at the Sacred Heart Convent in Roehampton, outside of London, Miss Murillo early evinced a natural bent toward literature and the drama. It is a note of unique interest that her entrance into the theatrical world came via an engagement as chorus girl in the musical comedy "Havana." In order to give full scope to her latent talents as a writer she forsook the footlights. Beginning as a writer of slap-stick comedy films, recognition was quickly awarded the young author through the acceptance of her first story by Lois Weber and Philip Smalley. Encouraged by this small success she produced further scenarios of a comedy nature, all of which were immediately taken by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. Miss Murillo's natural talents, however, inclined strongly toward the drama. Her initial photoplay of this character was accepted by Edgar Lewis and her ability to vividly portray the realities and human weaknesses of life attracted the attention of D. W. Griffith.

Miss Murillo has at present in course of production a play intended for the stage dealing with a theme of poignant interest to all humanity. It is understood that already two or three leading Broadway managers have made tentative bids for the presentation of this drama.

MICHIGAN EXHIBITORS WANT HEADQUARTERS.

The A. E. A. of Michigan is casting around for permanent Detroit offices, and it has been suggested that a clubroom be established somewhere near the film building. King Perry, secretary of the organization, has several buildings in view.

Detroit is slowly but surely preparing for the coming convention of the American Exhibitors' Association, which will hold its national conference in Detroit early in July.

The A. E. A. of Michigan expects to raise the initiation fee early in March. King Perry, secretary, is making it known emphatically to exhibitors that each one owes it to himself and to the industry to be a member and help carry on the work of the organization. He is getting excellent results.

PATHE TO HAVE TWO TOTO COMEDIES A MONTH.

Beginning April 14 Pathe will release two Toto comedies a month instead of one, as heretofore. Vice-President and General Manager J. A. Berst has decided upon this step because the success of the two Totos already released shows that one comedy a month will not near satisfy the demand.

Laemmle Celebrates Twelfth Anniversary

"Bob" Cochrane, Manufacturer's Long-Time Associate, Talks of Rise of the Universal Chief

CARL LAEMMLE, president and director-general of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, celebrated last week the twelfth anniversary of his entrance into the moving picture field. As one of the few pioneers who are still figures in the trade the event is bound to be of interest to the industry.

Whenever the history of the birth and growth of the motion picture comes to be written the twelve years that have passed since Mr. Laemmle opened his little nickelodeon in Chicago will loom large. His activities have left their impress on every stage of progress, and his influence has been for sane, sensible advancement.

Carl Laemmle.

A biographer would find in Carl Laemmle's career all the elements that enter into a romance. An immigrant boy, who had to overcome the handicap that came as the result of his inability to speak English, he nevertheless succeeded to the extent where he presently had no difficulty in obtaining positions that carried fair salaries with them. In his effort to locate the field to his liking the boy worked in drug, department, jewelry and clothing stores, drifting from New York to Chicago; from Chicago to Oshkosh. He even tried his hand at bookkeeping in the Chicago stockyards and as a farm hand on the western wheat fields before he finally stumbled into the moving picture business.

The one man who probably knows more about Mr. Laemmle in a business way than any other living individual is Robert H. Cochrane. As vice-president of Universal Mr. Cochrane has been associated with Mr. Laemmle almost from the day the latter went into the film business.

"There are thousands of men with brains," said Mr. Cochrane in the coure of a conversation, "but there are fewer men who have the nerve to back up their brains. I know of one such man in the moving picture industry, and his name is Carle Laemmle.

"I probably known Mr. Laemmle more intimately in a business way than any man living today. I am prejudiced in his favor, but not so prejudiced that I cannot see his weaknesses as well as his strong points. I know why some like him and why other men hate him. I know furthermore that even the men who do hate him cannot despise him.

"Only a handful of years ago Laemmle was nobody in the moving picture business. That he should in so short a space of time rise to the top of the heap; that he should do it honestly and accomplish it without losing his head is something to marvel at. There are mighty few parallels in the business world.

"Mr. Laemmle started modestly in the moving picture business; so modestly that it was laughable. His original capital was a few hundred dollars and a full supply of nerve. Many of the men who were the giants of the trade when he edged his way into the business have dropped from view, but this nerve, coupled with the characteristic Laemmle determination to succeed, has enabled him to survive and to leave his indelible imprint upon this industry's progress.

"To me," continued Mr. Cochrane, "Laemmle is at once the shrewdest man and the easiest mark in moving picturedom. I could tell you of a dozen instances where he closed deals immensely to the advantage of our company, only to turn around after the deal had been made and pay more than the price stipulated simply because he thought the other fellow hadnt' got all that was coming to him. Now, how many men do you know of who are so shrewd and yet so easy as that?

"I could tell you scores of instances, each showing the fight he has had to make against crookedness, dishonesty, double-dealing and plain thievery; how he has forgiven wrongdoer after wrongdoer, in spite of the fact that they sought to ruin him, either financially or in reputation.

"Physically, Mr. Laemmle is a small man. I don't suppose he is much over five feet in height, although the pictures in his advertising convey the impression to those who don't know him that he is tall and athletic in build. This is the only misrepresentation he has ever been guilty of, and then it was the camera's fault.

"When he came to me years ago, with a proposition to help finance a moving pictuer exchange, I laughed. Moving pictures did not interest me at that time. I didn't see much of a future for them. Look back over the years and remember how little interest they held for you. So I laughed.

Brains Were Backed Up with Nerve.

"Nor was I alone. Others laughed him off also. Friends tried to talk him out of wasting his time and the little capital he had. But they made the same mistake that I did regarding his capital. They did not know that his few hundred dollars were backed with brains, and that the brains in turn were backed up with plenty of nerve.

"So he flung his few hundreds of dollars on the table in one single bet, but it was the kind of bet that is no gamble to a man with brains. You see, he bet on himself and not on another man's game. He bet that he could originate a better plan of serving theaters with moving picture films than was then in vogue. He won and the stakes were comparatively fat.

"His next move was to build a factory and manufacture films. Months ahead of all others he saw the necessity of fighting the film trust, which at that time had the industry by the throat, with quality and fair treatment as weapons.

"The trust promptly notified him that if he dared to build a factory within the United States or Canada, his then prosperous exchange business would be ruined overnight. It was no idle threat at that time. Theirs was the power then to make good—and Laemmle knew it. Lawyers told him 'Yes,' and lawyers told him 'No,' but his native shrewdness stood him in good stead and bade him fortify his exchange business before giving battle.

"Thereupon—and I don't think this inside dope has been told before—Laemmle set about negotiating with European manufacturers to furnish him with their very best films, so that could afford to drop the product of the American manufacturers who formed the combine. Hardly were these negotiations opened when Laemmle learned that another company was working along similar lines to supply the American market with foreign makes of films.

"This was exactly what he wanted, so he dropped his own deal and made arrangements with the other important company to furnish him with the sinews of war for his exchange while the factory was in course of construction.

"Mr. Laemmle of today is still the Laemmle of those old days. One of his strongest characteristics is his intense eagerness to tackle in a two-fisted way anything that threatens the welfare of the industry. Eight years ago it was the trust, today it is the overpaid star.

"He has attacked this evil with all his oldtime vigor and, inasmuch as he has never been beaten, it's perfectly safe to bet that the industry is presently going to join him in his fight. After two years of constant hammering upon 'The play's the thing' idea, he has actually brought the majority of producers to view it his way, eye to eye.

"In other words," concluded Mr. Cochrane, "Mr. Laemmle has made every problem that has ever confronted the moving picture industry a matter of personal interest. It has never occurred to him that competitors would also derive benefit as the result of his efforts. Enough for him the thought that here was an opportunity to take a crack at something that deserved to be cracked.

"An instance of this broadmindedness is his invitation to producers everywhere to make use of Universal City and so cut down their own overhead expenses. If you are at all familiar with producing expenses you will realize that the saving this makes possible is enormous."

Pettijohn Reports

Says That the Producers & Exhibitors Affiliated Plan Has Been Well Received.

C. C. PETTIJOHN, general manager of the Producers & Exhibitors Affiliated, has given a statement to the eight Independent Producers who have formed the direct booking plan. His report gives in detail an account of all proceedings, the territories which have been acquired and the exact progress up to date. His statement in substance is as follows:

Already fourteen states have been organized and are ready for distribution, contracts in twenty-one states are being completed, and fifteen are being canvassed and the direct sales proposition presented to them. Mr. Pettijohn also reported that it will require at least from thirty to sixty days before the exhibitors will be sufficiently organized to handle their own distribution.

Mr. Pettijohn further believes that before these units are completed a meeting should be called which will include from 20 to 25 representative exhibitors from over the country to meet the original exhibitors' committee and independent producers, so that they can co-operate and iron out the permanent contract of the Producers & Exhibitors Affiliated.

Suggestions that will work to the mutual advantage of both producer and exhibitor have been received from exhibitors throughout the country, and have been recommended for insertion into the permanent contract. Among those who have offered suggestions are Messrs. Black, Maine; Herrington, Pittsburgh; Hamlin, Minnesota; Herman Brown, Boise, Idaho; Frank and Hopp, Chicago; Lustig, Cleveland; Rembusch, Indianapolis; Craver, N. C., and Crandall, Washington. Their suggestions and recommendations on what these contracts should finally provide were gone over at a meeting on Feb. 27, 1918, by Harry Crandall, Louis L. Levine, and C. C. Pettijohn.

Alexander Debray

AMONG the noted French artists who have recently come to this country is the French author and dramatic writer, Alexander Debray, producer of many comedies presented in the theaters of Paris. His biggest successes were "Mariage Libre" interpreted by Antoine; "L'Enfant Gate," by Mlle. Berangere and "Madame Bluff," which has been interpreted by Mme. Augustine Leriche, the most famous comedy artiste in Paris.

Mr. Debray is one of the few authors in France who has a practical training in the technique of motion picture production. His wide experience in that art with the knowledge of stagecraft generally has given him a unique position among author-producers. According to his views the scenario writer who is not familiar with technique may, by chance, produce one or two good scenarios, while the rest of his product will prove incomplete and, as is well known, an incomplete scenario can give but very poor results. He believes that is one of the reasons why one sees so many motion pictures which meet with total failure.

Alexander Debray.

Mr. Debray finds that the general public, which was at the beginning of this marvelous invention so easy to satisfy, has become more and more hard to please. That condition supplies the reason why it is necessary to give it, without delay, entire satisfaction if its interest in pictures is to be maintained.

To attain this end, he asserts, we must begin at the bottom—the foundation—which is the scenario and to follow that up with proper supervision of that scenario by the author as is the procedure in the production of all stage plays. Mr. Debray contends that it is the author alone who can best be depended upon to interpret the scenario which he has written, for the reason that he is the only one who knows the correct meaning of the story. The day that the author will consent to learn the technique of pictures and practice it will enable him to write correctly, and the day producers will make instead of lose money.

PHOTOGRAPHING NEW YORK'S PARADE.

Historic Fifth avenue, in New York City, has witnessed thousands of parades, but the parade on February 22 of 10,000 of the draft army was unusual in many ways. An almost blinding snow storm made the parade additionally picturesque.

Editor Pell Mitchell, of the Gaumont News Weekly, realized that this unusual, history-making event should be photographed and preserved. Therefore, while his cameramen "shot" the parade from various points a tripod, towering above the heads of the marchers and onlookers, was constructed and set up at the intersection of 40th street and Fifth avenue, in front of the public library and directly opposite the reviewing stand.

Strand Employees Hold Beefsteak Dinner

Threescore Gather After the Show—Doc Wilson Makes Recitation to Accompaniment of Slow Music.

EMPLOYES of the Strand, one of New York's leading motion picture houses, held a most enjoyable affair, a "beefsteak dinner," on Saturday night, March 2, at 216 West Fiftieth street. The festivities did not commence until nearly midnight, as the duties of nearly every one present necessitated remaining at the theater until after 11.

Plenty of juicy beefsteak served on crisp toast and large quantities of exhilarating and palatable malt liquid were provided, and rapidly disappeared before the onslaughts of the sixty or more who were on hand.

Doc Wilson, the genial director of publicity, officiated as master of ceremonies and added to his laurels by proving himself to be an accomplished elocutionist. His recitation to the accompaniment of Signor Spirescu, director of the Strand Symphony Orchestra, was touching indeed.

Much of the comedy in keeping with the occasion was furnished by the extemporaneous sallies of Joe Browne, one of the Strand "props," who is a natural comedian. Incidentally Mr. Browne was featured in the decoration of the dining hall, an artistic poster, billing him as "Cho Burrowne," and showing him in Hawaiian costume with a necklace of frankfurters, occupying a prominent place. Dan Casey and Felix Adler, well known vaudeville performers, also kept the crowd in roars of laughter with new jokes and songs.

All departments of the theater were represented—executive, treasury, ushers, stage, etc., including a number from the orchestra headed by Carl Edouard, the musical director.

PLAN EXTENSIVE IMPROVEMENTS AT PALACE.

Extensive plans have been outlined by Manager E. M. Henle of the Palace theater, Muscatine, Ia., for a number of improvements to be made on his picture house during the early spring months. The first big improvement will be the addition to the seating capacity of approximately one hundred and twenty-five more seats.

Then will follow the installation of one of the largest and latest Seeburg instruments and a new motion picture machine. When the new projector is in the Palace will have a battery of three projecting machines. Paralta pictures, it is also announced, will be added to the program.

Frank Keeney Secures Pathe's Bronx Studio

Up-to-Date and Well Equipped Plant to Be Used for Catherine Calvert Pictures—Second Production to Be Started Soon.

THE Frank A. Keeney cast, which has been producing "A Romance of the Underworld," was transferred last week from the Biograph studios, where all the interiors had been made up to that time, to the Pathe studio, at Park avenue and 134th street, which has just been leased in the name of the Frank A. Keeney Distributing Corporation, recently organized to market the Keeney pictures.

Henceforth the studio will be known as the Keeney studio. It was built originally as a dance hall, then remodeled into a studio by Eugene Sanger. After he had occupied it for a time it was taken over by the Pathe company, which has used it in making serials and Frank Keenan features. Recently a new and thoroughly up-to-date lighting equipment was installed by the Edison company at a cost of more than $15,000.

The studio is one of the best equipped for all around work of any which is devoted to the exclusive use of a single company in the Eastern territory. Its facilities are ample for the making of all kinds of scenery, properties, and equipment.

As soon as "A Romance of the Underworld" is completed, Director Kirkwood will begin the production of "Marriage," by Guy Bolton, co-author of "Oh! Boy!" "Oh! Lady! Lady!!" and other stage successes of the stage. In which Catherine Calvert will also be starred.

"A Romance of the Underworld," which is now complete so far as the camera work is concerned, will be a six-reeler, unfolding a story of human interest, with episodes that will give it a distinct punch.

Novel Advertising Stunts for "Raffles."

All-Star Feature Distributors have instituted a novel advertising campaign for the initial showing of "Raffles" in San Francisco. During the showing of this picture a man identifying himself as "Raffles" will appear in several well known stores, which will incorporate in their newspaper advertising the statement that he will be in the store at a certain hour. The management of the Strand theater will pay $10.00 to any person who can identify this man, providing said person places his hand on the man's shoulders and says, "You are 'Raffles, the Amateur Cracksman,' appearing at the Strand theater this week." Said person, however, must prevent "Raffles" from making a get-a-way to a machine waiting outside bearing the wording, "'Raffles, the Amateur Cracksman,' appearing at the Strand theater this week, is inside. Catch him and you will obtain $10.00."

Additional prizes are also offered by some of the San Francisco stores. For instance, a merchandise store offers a $10.00 waist, a gentleman's furnishing store offers a suit of clothes if Raffles is captured in their place of business, and a jewelry store announces they have insured their window against theft by "Raffles."

Congested street corners will bear banners reading, "Raffles has just passed this corner," or "Raffles will pass this corner at two o'clock," etc. To assist in identifying this party, the Strand is carrying slides showing his eyes, ears, nose, and mouth.

If everything goes over as anticipated the same plan will be carried out in Los Angeles and throughout the larger towns in that territory.

Hiller & Wilk are the selling agents for this production, made by the L. Lawrence Weber Photo Dramas, Inc., featuring John Barrymore.

First National to Have "Tarzan" Week.

AT the offices of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit many applications have been received for "Tarzan of the Apes," the release date of which is announced as April 2, which week has been designated by the circuit throughout America as "Tarzan" week.

"Tarzan of the Apes" continues playing to large audiences at the Broadway theater, and the engagement has been extended for another two weeks.

This week, with lightless nights stopped and the great electric signs again being used, the National Film Corporation, in conjunction with First National Exhibitors, arranged for the huge talking sign at Broadway and Forty-seventh street, and each first-run house in the country is getting a number of flashes, which read thus:

"'Tarzan of the Apes' at Bridgeport, April 2. 'Tarzan of the Apes' at Philadelphia, April 2," and so on taking in turn each house that has booked the picture thus far. This has been arranged because of the large number of letters received at the Broadway theater from different parts of the country asking what date the picture will come to their cities.

Through A. L. Burt & Co., publishers of the reissued books, arrangements have been completed for the decoration of drug, book, and stationery store windows in various sections of the country, while a large number of newspapers will republish one of the Tarzan stories previous to the release date.

Unusual publicity is being enjoyed by "My Four Years in Germany," dealing with Ambassador Gerard's experience in that country. In the first place his book of the same title has had a very large sale, then it has run serially in a number of prominent newspapers. Now, Mr. Gerard's sequal entitled "Face to Face With Kaiserism" is appearing in the New York American and other daily papers. A souvenir volume containing the story, many still photographs of the principal scenes, a photograph of Ambassador Gerard, and a foreword by him has been prepared; and, in addition, for the use of exhibitors there is a large variety of paper ranging in size up to twenty-four sheets; heralds, slides, cuts, and publicity readers in abundance. This should all prove a valuable asset in the exploitation of this picture, which will probably be in ten reels, and issued on a state rights basis.

Sketch of Olga Petrova

OLGA PETROVA, star of the productions now being made under the auspices of her own organization, was born in Warsaw, Poland, of English and Polish parents. Following the usual custom of the country, the present famous screen star was married at the age of fourteen to Boris Petronowitch. Her present name is a derivation of this Polish cognomen. Her married life was a brief one, being terminated at the age of sixteen by her husband's death. shortly afterwards she visited Brussels, Paris and London. For two years she studied music in Paris, becoming an accomplished pianist, and at the same time developing her naturally beautiful soprano voice.

Proceeding to London, Madame Petrova found the road to success long and hard, and became successively song writer, journalist, and performer in the London music halls. Later she came to America and, following a special engagement at the Folies Bergere, entered vaudeville, afterwards starring in "Panthea," "The Tiger Woman" and "The Exile." She then entered motion pictures via the Metro organization, appearing in a number of productions. Leaving Metro she joined the Lasky Company, and subsequently formed her own producing company, early in 1917.

In private life she is the wife of Dr. John D. Stewart, a well known surgeon, and owns a beautiful estate on Long Island where she indulges in her love of books, music and painting. She is also an author, having contributed fiction articles and magazine stories to American publications, and at present is conducting the Petrova School of Expression in a magazine.

Following her initial production, "Daughter of Destiny," released through the branches of The First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Madame Petrova has starred in "The Light Within" and "The Life Mask," and expects to make five other productions during the present year.

Twede-Dan

Fourth Jester Shows Famous Theater.

The fourth Jester comedy reelase entitled "The Wrong Flat," featuring Twede-Dan, which is nearing completion, is a story that reflects the old days of stagedom. One of the important scenes will be enacted in a replica of the old Tony Pasters, which has been built for the purpose. The situations surrounding the story also demands the use of some of the old-time performers, and some of the popular favorites of days gone by will appear in this picture.

"Life Mask," Mystery or Melodrama.

In producing "The Life Mask," the Petrova Picture Company arranged to film the various scenes so as to leave the spectator in doubt of the out-come until the very end of the picture. It was later discovered, however, that it would be possible to either make an out-and-out mystery, or film the story as a straight melodrama with considerable suspense. It has therefore been decided to leave it to the exhibitor as to whether this picture shall be either of these types. It is claimed that this has been accomplished by means of a prologue of a little less than one hundred feet in length, in which the leading characters are introduced and suspicion pointed at each by means of appropriate subtitles.

By eliminating the prologue a society melodrama without the element of mystery is produced. If, however, exhibitors desire to attract the attention of their patrons to the probable solution this can be effected by use of the prologue in connection with the picture.

In furtherance of this idea special aids are being prepared by the newly formed Petrova service bureau which, it is said, will be of valuable assistance to exhibitors in exploiting this picture.

Based on the Western Import Company's feature picture of the same title starring Mabel Normand, the song, "Mickey," will be exploited by the publishers, Daniels & Wilson, Inc., on an elaborate scale. In fact the campaign will be tied up with the national campaign on the picture. A syndicate of 5 and 10-cent stores and several department stores throughout the country have agreed to give the song a full window display in order to secure the maximum returns which would accrue from the co-operative advertising with this picture, and a number of prominent vaudevilleans are taking up this number as part of their repetoire.

Prominent Theater Men Indorse "Mickey"

Al. Woods, Well-Known Producer, and Alfred Arons, of Klaw and Erlanger, Extol Mabel Normand Production.

THE prominent play producer, Al. Woods, after viewing a private screening of "Mickey," states in part as follows: "'Mickey' is what I call a real, big picture. It is vivid and appealing, and the characters are real and human. There are charming bits of comedy in it, and there are places where the story trembles very close to the brink of tears. I would like to have the opportunity of making a play of it some day. Miss Normand as the quaint little mountain girl is wonderful. The action of the play is off the ordinary run of picture plays, and what impressed me a great deal was the fact that there is no padding."

This picture was also viewed by Alfred E. Arons, general manager of Klaw & Erlanger's theaters, who says, "'Mickey' is the greatest commercial proposition I have ever seen in the amusement field. Outside of its commercial value it is a wonderful, artistic and interesting picture. It possesses every quality that could be put in a photoplay, and its preparation shows infinite care and study. Mabel Normand as 'Mickey' clearly shows her versatility and supremacy as an actress. The story has a number of big punches; in fact, I was impressed by four big climaxes. It is marvelous how the humor, the pathos, the mystery, and the sensationalism have been woven into one remarkable photoplay. It will surely have a universal appeal."

More Productions for Magnet.

The Magnet Film Exchange, which recently acquired the New York rights to W. H. Productions Company's feature, William S. Hart as "The Two-Gun Man" in "The Bargain," has also secured the rights to William S. Hart in "The Bandit and the Preacher" and "The Hell Hound of Alaska," and the twenty-eight Mack Sennett-Keystone Comedies.

The series of Keystone comedies will be released soon, the first entitled "A Small Town Bully," starring Mabel Normand, Mack Sennett, Roscoe Arbuckle, and Owen Moore.

In this comedy, Mabel assumes the role of the new teacher in a country school, and the difficulties in addition to her duties as a teacher are increased by the misbehavior of her pupils, Mack Sennett and his enemy, Roscoe Arbuckle. Mack is the bully of the school.

"Fatty" Arbuckle takes vengeance on a smaller boy, and throws him into the river. Realizing what he has done he jumps in to save him, and both are rescued by Mabel.

Not knowing that her sweetheart (Owen Moore) is waiting in another room she hangs her wet clothing out of a window. The bully attempts to cast a bad light upon her reputation, and she is about to be discharged, but is saved by the arrival of the mother of the boy whose life she saved when everything is explained to the satisfaction of all concerned.

Keystone Censors Object to "Zongar."

The Pennsylvania State Board of Censors has ordered nine changes in the Physical Culture Photoplays feature, "Zongar," including scenes showing the struggle between the hero and the villain, the struggle between the villain and the girl he is abducting, the gag in the mouth of the heroine, close-up of a man after being mauled in a fight, and two subtitles; one, "The Wages of Sin," and the other, a reference by a sculptor to his model's figure being superior to that of Venus.

Bernarr Macfadden, head of the company producing this picture, has protested against these eliminations, contending that Zongar is a physical preparedness drama standing side by side with the efforts of the United States to win the war on account of the large proportion of young men rejected as defective by army physicians. He also calls attention to the fact that the National Board of Review in New York passed this picture without eliminations, and requests that the picture be reconsidered in the light of a patriotic drama.

G. E. Feature Shown for Government.

General Enterprises, Inc., is in receipt of a request from the Bureau of Public Information at Washington, D. C., asking for a private showing of "The Crucible of Life," and arranged for this exhibition to take place on Thursday of this week. This picture visualizes many of the important phases of the present conflict, contains many battle scenes, and touches also upon the work of the German spy system in America. It was adapted from the famous stage melodrama, "Fairfax."

Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin have also arranged with Tom Moore, one of the leading exhibitors of Washington, to give a special screening of "The Crucible of Life" for members of some of the important war committees now working at the Capitol.

The patriotic atmosphere of this production has been worked out in an extensive line of lithographs, including an attractive twenty-four sheet, which has been prepared for the exploitation of this feature.

Jacob Wildberg Joins Foursquare.

One of the latest newcomers in the motion picture field is Jacob Wildberg, a capitalist and manufacturer, who will retain his interests in other concerns, but has become a large stockholder in Foursquare pictures, and will, in future, be actively identified with that organization as treasurer. Mr. Wildberg becomes associated with "Foursquare" through George Backer, who is a friend and business colleague of many years' standing. He is a financial expert, and with his broad experience in merchandising methods should prove a valuable acquisition to this organization, which has been very successful in the motion picture field and now has its own exchanges in all parts of the country.

Nilde Babette in Jester Comedies.

Church Worker Praises "The Belgian"

Sister O'Kavanaugh, Representative of Cardinal Mercier, Extols Olcott Picture—British War Correspondent Also Compliments Producer.

Sister Mary Ignatius O'Kavanaugh, prominent church worker of Belgium, and special representative of Cardinal Mercier for relief work in this country, was the guest of honor at a special presentation of Sydney Olcott's production, "The Belgian," given for charitable purposes in Cleveland under the joint auspices of Sydney Olcott and the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, by which the picture is being distributed.

Sister Mary was stationed in a little border town in Belgium when the Germans invaded the kingdom, and lived through the bombardment of Liege. During the attack on that city she several times risked death while ministering to wounded Belgian soldiers. It was the scenes of the invasion depicted in "The Belgian" that impressed Sister Mary and impelled her to send Mr. Olcott the following letter:

"I want to tell you how keenly I enjoyed the privilege of seeing a private screening of your photoplay, 'The Belgian.' It certainly is a wonderful presentation of many things I witnessed in that unfortunate country during the first four months of the war. The devastating onward sweep of the German hordes; the pitiful caravans of villagers fleeing from their burning homes with what they could save of their little belongings; the valiant stand of the priests striving vainly to protect their flocks; indeed the general aspect of the whole thing, as well as the physical type of the people, are truly Belgian. The tiny little landscape shown three or four times right up at the top of the screen is a gem. The quiet wheat fields, the picturesque old windmill, the delicate church spire showing against the evening sky are typically Belgian. The charm and peacefulness of this rural scene contrast sadly with the tale that unfolds below. Yet, no nerve-racking horrors are depicted; the author shows true art in the way he leaves to the fancy of the spectator many fearful scenes which he merely suggests. The psychological side seems to be equally good. I wonder was it only a lucky hit or did the author intend to portray in the quiet heroine of that little Jeanne the sublime heights to which this war has raised the soul of the Belgian women? Whichever it be, the whole thing makes a very beautiful picture, and I thank you sincerely for having given me an opportunity to see it."

Several weeks ago Mr. Olcott also received a leter from Frederic Hume Paulton, a noted British war correspondent, in which he, too, complimented the director upon the accuracy of detail with which he converted the scenes of the invasion of Belgium to the screen.

Cast of "The Life Mask" (Petrova).

A strong cast will appear with Olga Petrova in "The Life Mask," soon to be released through the exchanges of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. Appearing opposite the Polish star is Thomas Holding, in the character of Capt. Hugh Shannon. Second in importance is the character of Woodruffe Clay, whose death forms the mystery elements of the picture. For this part Wyndham Standing, who has appeared in support of many Famous Players', World and Lasky stars, was engaged. A note of sentimental interest is given to the production by the appearance of Lucille LaVerne in the role of Sarah Harden. Miss LaVerne is a character artiste who has played with many celebrated stage stars of the past two generations, such as Harrigan and Hart, Thomas Jefferson and others. Christine Mayo, remembered for her ability in several Ivan productions, is also seen in a congenial role, calling for the display of "vampire" tendencies.

The balance of the cast included Matilda Brundage, Edith Hinckle, Gene Burnell, E. J. Burnes, and five natives of Spain, selected to lend the proper atmosphere to certain scenes presumably laid in that sunny country. The picture has been directed by Frank Crane, photographed by Messrs. Lane and Harris.

"The Golden Hope" for Anna Case.

Miss Anna Case, the prima donna, is enjoying a week's rest at Atlantic City after a successful concert tour of the larger cities in the South and West. She is scheduled to appear in Chicago, Milwaukee, Boston, and Philadelphia, and will return to New York during the month of March to begin work on her first feature picture under the personal direction of Julius Steger. What is said to be an exceptionally strong story entitled "The Golden Hope," which combines the atmosphere of the West with the modern social life of New York, has been secured by Mr. Joseph M. Schenck for the screen debut of Miss Case.

Al Woods Extols John Barrymore.

In the March issue of a prominent magazine, Al. Woods, the theatrical producer, in discussing conditions of the theater, has the following to say with regard to John Barrymore, who is the star in the L. Lawrence Weber Photo Dramas, Inc., photoplay, "Raffles, the Amateur Cracksman," for which Hiller & Wilk, Inc., are selling agents:

"The greatest actor in America today is John Barrymore, and yet he only began to take his work seriously about two years ago, when I asked him to play the leading dramatic role in 'Kick In.' Up to that time he had just walked through his roles without effort. He had put no real work into his job. 'But I can't play a dramatic role,' Barrymore protested in my office, when I showed him his part. I'm a comedian.' 'Forget it,' I advised him. 'With your wonderful ability you can play anything. It's about time you settled down and did something series. 'The Fortune Hunter' and other light things are all very well, but here is your chance to show what you can do with an emotional role.

"On the opening night of 'Kick In' it was funny to see the faces of the critics and the audience. Here was a new Barrymore, a man with emotional strength, an actor who carried conviction, one whose admirable work wanted to make you tear off the roof of the theater. And in 'Justice' his work as that half-crazed, prosecuted London clerk was a revelation. And by his acting in 'Peter Ibbetson' he is confirming the opinion that he is destined to become one of the great actors of the world."

Activities of General Enterprises, Inc.

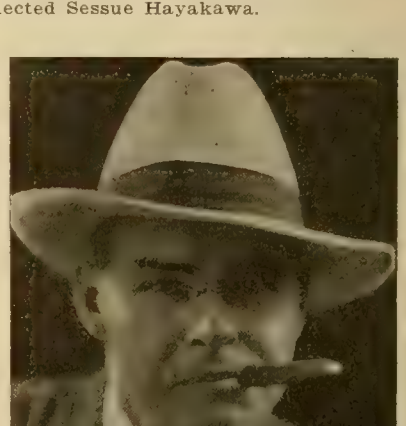
A deal was consummated this week between General Enterprises, Inc., and the Federal Film Company, of Boston, which gives to the latter concern the entire New England rights to "The Liar," a six-part society melodrama starring Jane Gail and Stanley Walpole, directed by William H. Haddock. Following close upon this sale negotiations for the disposition of their seven-part feature, "Mother," were closed with the Regal Films, Ltd., of Toronto, Canada. This organization also controls the entire Canadian territory for "The Warrior."

General Enterprises also report that the Westcott Film Corporation, of Minneapolis, have requested a third print of "The Warrior," as has the Jordan-Brewster Film Corporation, of Seattle, Wash.

Reginald Barker

REGINALD BARKER, director of "Carmen of the Klondike," the Selexart production, which will be the initial release of the State Rights Distributors, is the man who produced the first William S. Hart features, "On the Night Stage" and "The Bargain."

Mr. Barker also had much to do with the rapid rise of Sessue Hayakawa. "The Typhoon" was one of the Japanese actor's first successes. Previous to this time it had been the policy of the motion picture men to use Caucasian actors in Japanese parts. Barker, however, decided it would be better to use Japanese actors, and selected Sessue Hayakawa.



Reginald Barker

Reginald Barker was born in Winnipeg, Canada, in 1886. His mother died when he was two years of age, and he was sent to Scotland, where he lived until he was eight years old. From Scotland he went to England to meet his father, who took him to America. They settled in California. Young Barker decided upon a stage career after seeing Charles Dalton in "The Sign of the Cross." This was when he was nine years old. At fifteen years he wrote, produced and played the leading part in a play called "Granna Uile," which was shown in Los Angeles. At eighteen he became leading man, and played in various stock companies. After that he was associated with Robert Hilliard in the production of one of the first and most prominent of the "vampire" plays, "A Fool There Was."

About five years ago, Barker, then at the height of his success as a stage director, decided that the motion picture field offered a better opportunity. Having no knowledge of motion picture direction he found it almost impossible to obtain a position as director. It was only when he offered to work for Thomas H. Ince for nothing that he got the opportunity desired. Four weeks after he arrived at Inceville he was on the payroll, and soon began turning out the successes which have much to do with the reputation built up by that studio. Starting with "On the Night Stage" he followed with "The Typhoon," "The Coward," "The Iron Strain," "War's Women," "The Criminal," and "Golden Rule Kate." Barker makes good pictures quickly, and at a minimum expense. "Carmen of the Klondike" is perhaps the most expensive picture he ever made, and is said to be his masterpiece.

Billy a Novel Fiend in "The Messenger."

"The Messenger" is the name of the next Billy West comedy now in the making. It is an original story in which Billy West appears as a "Novel" fiend messenger boy.

Claire Whitney

MISS CLAIRE WHITNEY, who plays the part of Lucy Daniels in the Graphic Film Corporation's forthcoming release of Ivan Abramson's latest photodrama, "Moral Suicide," has been long known to exhibitors and motion picture patrons. Gaining her experience in the hard and thorough school of the stock company, Miss Whitney enjoyed a successful career upon the legitimate and vaudeville stage. However, she soon deserted the stage to enter the motion picture field, where she has since remained.

Miss Whitney has won an enviable reputation as the associate of such well known actors as Charles Richman, Edmund Breese, Robert Edeson, and William Farnum, and has been starred in several photoplays.

As Lucy Daniels, Miss Whitney's part is said to be full of pathos and comedy, which she has handled so humanly and delicately that it will be considered the crowning effort of her career.

Steiner Claims a Record with Jesters.

William Steiner ("Big Bill") claims a record by having disposed of the entire territory of the United States for his Jester comedies, with exception of District of columbia, in exactly twenty-one days, and states two days would have been cut off of this time had it not been for adverse weather conditions.

During this period, Mr. Steiner not only disposed of his productions, but found time to call on many large exhibitors and screen the Jester comedies for them with satisfactory results.

Gainsborg Returns to Pacific Coast.

Euardo C. Gainsborg, manager of the San Francisco exchange of Foursquare Pictures, was called to New York recently because of illness in his family. The crisis passed, he has return to his post.

Mr. Gainsborg is in charge of the entire Coast business of the Foursquare organization, supervising the Seattle and Los Angeles offices. Before entering the motion picture business he was well known as a civil engineer.

New Releases for King-Bee.

The March 15 release of the King-Bee Films Corp. starring Billy West is entitled "The Scholar." From advance reports this comedy promises to contain a little knowledge that you never learned in school.

On April 1, King-Bee will release "The Messenger." It is now being made at the Hollywood studio of the King-Bee Films Corp.

Ebenstein Makes Trip for "Sterling System"

Will Visit Exchanges in All Parts of Country—Plan Under Which This Company Operates.

THE manager of sales of Sterling Pictures Corporation, H. R. Ebenstein, has left for a ten weeks' trip covering all exchange centers, during which time he expects to place with first class exchangemen throughout the country the productions handled by this company under what is known as the "Sterling System."

This system combines a certain arrangement between the manufacturer, the Sterling Pictures Corporation, and the independent exchange. It does not necessarily mean the sale of feature rights, neither does it mean the direct percentage arrangement under which some features have been released. Realizing that the manufacturer needs cash in order to continue manufacturing productions, and likewise realizing that the independent exchange cannot continue laying out cash covering high production cost and big profit to the manufacturer the Sterling Pictures Corporation says it has stepped in as a middle factor, whereby a happy medium is struck, and both the manufacturer and local distributor are able to operate successfully.

It is not the intention of the Sterling Pictures Corporation to confine its operations to the distributing of features only upon the "Sterling System." It will likewise handle other features on the basis of an outright territory sale. At the present time it has found a demand for releases under the "Star Series" plan. In addition to the Alma Hanlon series and the Jean Sothern series, consisting of six productions each, it has a series of three features, each starring Anna Q. Nilsson, and four starring Catherine Calvert. The company likewise has taken over the George Loane Tucker production, "I Believe," and acquired from the France Films, Inc., "The Natural Law," featuring Marguerite Courtot, and expects to close this week for another big production.

It is announced as the policy of the Sterling Pictures Corporation to offer its exchanges not only a consistent output, but the nature of their organization demands that it continue to supply affiliated exchanges at periodical intervals, and that the plan is to build and create the value of "Sterling System" upon the commercial value of the production—not on the production cost.

"Mother" Booked for Loew Circuits.

Following the announcement made last week by Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin that the New York City and state rights to their production, "Mother," had been acquired by the Modern Feature Film Company, Charles H. Striemer stated on Monday that the picture had been booked by the Marcus Loew Circuit, first showing to be on Thursday, March 14 at the New York theater.

In order to lend the proper exploitation to the picture, Mr. Striemer has arranged to distribute several thousand copies of a recent issue of the Ladies' World containing a complete novelized version of the story. In addition the film will be extensively advertised by means of several twenty-four-sheet stands. Following the New York theater screening of "Mother" the feature will appear in the various other houses which make up the Loew Circuit, giving it an extensive run in New York and Brooklyn.

Wharton Studios Well Guarded.

There is no munition plant in the United States which is more closely guarded than the Wharton studios, at Ithaca, N. Y., where "The Eagle's Eye," the twenty-episode serial expose of the Imperial German Government's plotting in America, is being produced.

Desperate efforts are still being made by German propagandists to foster any feelings of sympathy which may remain in this country toward the Kaiser and his advisers. Public showing of "The Eagle's Eye," it is hoped, will make futile any such propaganda. So the guard was organized for the studios to prevent any attempts at interference with the Whartons and their work of production.

The selection of the guards was carefully made. To prevent any accident of the studio through carelessness every one entering the studios must first show his pass. This ruling not only applies to all lesser employees, but to the principals and executives as well.

"His Golden Romance" Second Jester.

In "His Golden Romance," March release of the Jester comedies, Twede-Dan is seen in the character of a nondescript. He meets a beautiful girl who is also down and out like himself, and they form a compact that when they are both working and prosperous they will get married.

They separate, and in quest for a position, Twede-Dan sees two tramps rob a woman. He comes to the rescue, and restores the stolen purse. She falls in love with Twede-Dan, takes him to a tailoring establishment, and has him made to look human. A banquet is given in honor of the engagement, but Twede-Dan disgraces himself by his clumsiness and mannerisms, resulting in his being thrown out of the house, where he again meets his first love, who spurns him.

Netter Purchases Two Productions.

Leon D. Netter, of the Masterpiece Film Attractions, Cleveland, Ohio, did not return empty-handed to his Cleveland office after his five-day visit to New York to attend a meeting of Directors of State Right Distributors, Inc., as he secured the rights to Col. William N. Selig's latest productions, "The City of Purple Dreams" and "Who Shall Take My Life," which he will exploit in Ohio and Kentucky through his Cleveland and Cincinnati exchanges.

Billy West Boosts "Liberty Bread."

Arvid Gillstrom, director, and Billy West, star of King-Bees, have arranged a comedy bit that can also be used to advertise "Liberty Bread" to the patrons that see the Billy West comedies. In the opening scene of his newest picture the comedian is placed in a bread box. He has his knitting in hand when the baker arrives with the "Liberty Bread," and Billy has his breakfast. The situation is said to be humorous, as well as showing the patriotic feeling that helped to frame it.

"Moral Suicide," Graphic Film Corporation's latest photoplay, is nearing completion, and will soon be released. It deals with an important problem of life today, and intermingled with its serious scenes are many comedy situations.

John Mason plays the part of Richard Covington, an elderly millionaire stock broker and social leader of California, who searches for the years that have fled, and succumbs to the allurements of a woman with a tarnished past. His actions cost him shame, loss of prestige, money, lifelong friends and subsequent estrangement between himself and his daughter, who, unable to save him and unwilling longer to witness the demoralization of his soul, leaves home, and the placing of his son's life in jeopardy for a crime prompted by the actions of his step-mother.

Backs Public Defender Movement.

Simultaneous with the release of Harry Raver's picture, "The Public Defender," which is being marketed by Renowned Pictures Corp., the New York World is running a series of "Public Defender" articles, one each week, encouraging legislation for the creation of such an office in each city and state where the "Public Defender" does not now hold such an office.

The articles are written by prominent judges, lawyers, and laymen, and are circulated through a syndicate of newspapers of which the World is the head, and are published in the form of two-column stories, with portraits of the writers.

Frank Keenan, Robert Edeson, and Alma Hanlon are the featured players in "The Public Defender."

Valuable Dog Used in "Master Crooks."

In one of the scenes of "The Master Crook," the Harry Raver production starring Edmund Breese, a prize St. Bernard dog belonging to Jacob Ruppert, the baseball magnate, is used. This dog, said to be worth $10,000, is used to distract the attention of the detectives in a scene, where the Master Crook attempts to poison one of them. In another scene with Alma Hanlon, who is cast in one of the principal roles in this production, this prize canine is also in evidence.

"Satan's Pawn," Barriscale Feature.

The first Barriscale feature to be distributed by the W. H. Productions Company on the state rights market will be entitled "Satan's Pawn." It was produced by Thomas H. Ince, and is based on a play by Francis Molnar.

Co-starring with Miss Barriscale is Edward Connelley, well known for the past two decades on the stage, having appeared in prominent roles in "Marse Covington," George Ade's only serious production; also in "Everywoman" and "A Good Little Devil." He has also appeared in pictures, creating the role of "Rasputin" in "The Fall of the Romanoffs."

Among the remainder of the cast is Clara Williams, well known to photoplay audiences for her work in several productions, including "The Italian," "The Bargain," and recently in "Carmen of the Klondike." Rhea Mitchell and J. Barney Sherry also appear in prominent roles.

One scene which is said to be especially powerful is a picturization of Dante's Inferno, in which a multitude of lost souls is seen vainly struggling to escape torture.

Sennett Talks on Changes

Continual Revision of Methods Necessary for Success, Says Producer.

MACK SENNETT, producer of "Mickey," starring Mabel Normand, which is controlled by the Western Import Company, states in the following article, that turmoil is necessary for continued success in filmdom.

"There is no form of American industry which experiences such rapid and sensational changes as the motion picture business. It is my impression that much of this extraordinary development is due to the fact that the producers have never had a chance to get into a rut. The business is too new to have developed much of a rut.

"I often hear producers sigh for the day when the picture business finds itself and settles down.

"For my part I dread that day. When it settles down it is likely to sink.

"The salvation of the picture business has been that the workers in its ranks have been vigorous young men who came into the screen business from other professions. Each brought youth and enthusiasm; each one also brought special knowledge.

"The motion picture studio has been the great melting pot of new ideas. Absolute wonders of photography have been accomplished. In fact, photography has virtually been removed from the realms of art. It has been standardized into a routine.

"The conduct of a studio is coming to a danger point where it will be easy to slip into ruts. As a matter of necessity the future development of the movies will have to be along somewhat more standardized lines.

"The first sprint is over; the picture business is now settled down to a long grind. Those who allow themselves to settle down with it into the rut will find the going very hard.

"As Henry Bergsen, the noted French philosopher, says, 'life is the process of changing. And when you stop changing you die and decay.' I do not regard a single rule or institution of the studio as permanent. There isn't a day that I don't change things around in some way.

"Sometimes these changes are made in parts of the machinery that are apparently in good working order. I believe in making changes sometimes just for the sake of the changes. Just to keep things moving; to keep anybody from taking root.

"The man who recommended that well enough should be let alone didn't know much about modern business competition. If you let well enough alone, presently you find your customers slid over to some other fellow who did not have such complacent ideas. The most deadly thing in the world of business—especially in the motion picture business—is to tell yourself that everything is at last as it should be. When you get to the place where you feel that you can rest satisfied with the results, you can be pretty sure that at least one part of the establishment is dreadfully out of kilter and that is yourself.

"I believe in progressiveness, and the greatest example I can refer to is 'Mickey,' which, to my mind, will set a standard in photoplay producing that will require a lot of far-sighted thinking to surpass."

Bernarr Macfadden

BERNARR MACFADDEN, author of the five-reel production, "Zongar," and president of Physical Culture Photo-Plays, Inc., was born in Missouri about fifty years ago. At the age of fifteen he began the system of athletic exercises that converted him from a delicate boy to a veritable young Samson.

After attaining some success in the Middle West as a wrestler and athletic teacher he came to New York in 1893 to seek his fortune. A prominent newspaper was giving a benefit performance for charity, and published a challenge that the champion, Hugh Leonard, would meet all comers. Macfadden accepted, and made such a good showing that he was in demand for other events. He later made four tours of England and several of this country lecturing on how to get strong and healthy, and how to stay so, following his lecture by illustrations of practical exercises, wrestling, etc.

In 1898 he established the Physical Culture Magazine. He learned to wield the pen forcefully, and, as an author, his encyclopedia course has been purchased by thousands of athletic fans. He preaches business and personal efficiency as necessary to success, and feels that the presentation of pictures like "Zongar" will help young men to prepare for the great tasks ahead of this country in the present war by rousing the active, fighting "never-say-die" spirit and encouraging them to become mentally, morally and physically fit.

Personally, Bernarr Macfadden is a concrete example of preparedness. His mobile features and lithe active frame suggest more a man of thirty-five than of fifty. His family consists of a wife and six sturdy little girls. His home is located at Douglaston, L. I., where a number of the scenes and thrilling stunts shown in "Zongar" were photographed, and he personally directed each scene of this production.

In addition to his other activities he is author of the Physical Culture Screen Magazine released monthly through General Film Company, and also operates a chain of physical culture restaurants.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

Essanay to Reissue Broncho Billys and Snakesvilles

GEORGE K. SPOOR announces the immediate weekly release of the Essanay "Broncho Billy" pictures of the hills and plains. Thus will come back to the screen a favorite of many picture-goers who have not forgotten the "good bad man" that thrilled and stirred in other days.

Mr. Spoor is now engaged in selecting the best of the great series of Broncho Billy one-reelers, and anounces the titles of the first ten. They are "Broncho Billy's Leap," "Broncho Billy and the Rattler," "Broncho Billy's Close Call," "Broncho Billy and the Settler's Daughter," "Broncho Billy's Indian Romance," "Broncho Billy, a Friend in Need," "Broncho Billy's Wild Ride," "Broncho Billy's First Arrest," "Broncho Billy and the Rustler's Child," and "Broncho Billy's Last Deed."

Mr. Spoor has anticipated a great demand, and plenty of new prints have been prepared to meet it. The pictures have been carefully re-edited and equipped with new subtitles. Not only is the film itself to be all new, but the paper and accessory advertising paper is all newly designed and printed.

These first ten Broncho Billy pictures represent some of the best photographic work, and are full of vivid action and possess heart interest and the spell of the West.

"There is suspense in these pictures," said Mr. Spoor, "a very important element of the melodrama and drama of the hills and plains. There is romance in most cases afforded by the work of Marguerite Clayton in support of Broncho Billy, and there is a simplicity of story that gives the pictures each a 'punch'—a smash at the end."

Mr. Spoor states that bookings are already coming in. Exhibitors may book the Broncho Billy films through the George Kleine System, and are invited to inspect each picture before they book it.

Coincident with the foregoing announcement comes another to the effect that Essanay will also put out new prints of their well known "Snakeville comedies," which ran in harness with the Broncho Billy films.

"Snakeville comedies," it will doubtless be remembered, afford a thrilling laughable phase of Western fun, featuring the inimitable "Slippery Slim" and "Sophie Clutts."

They are one-reelers, and will be released one a week through the General Film Company.

Accident Suggests Title

Name of "Lion's Claws" Follows Unexpected Happening in Universal Serial.

An attack by one of the lions upon Marie Walcamp while working in the first episode of "The Lion's Claws," the new Universal adventure serial, announced for release April 1, resulted in the actress receiving a scar she will carry for life, but it provided a new idea for a number of scenes and incidents in the plot to Director Jacques Jaccard and led to the change of title to "The Lion's Claws," instead of "The Moon Girl," the first title announced.

While the entire story was written by Mr. Jaccard, who is the author as well as the director of the serial, before work started on the big continued chapter picture, the accident in the first episode provided an inspiration that the director felt had greater possibilities than the original story and he immediately capitalized it.

"The Lion's Claws" will consist of eighteen episodes, the first to be released April 1.

Double Utility of Advertising Folder.

Picture exploitation and advertising service to the exhibitor are combined in a double-page folder, 28 by 12 inches, which the Triangle Distributing Corporation has just issued in connection with "A Soul in Trust," the new seven-reel feature for February, which is furnished, at no extra cost, to exhibitors. Each month one of these folders on the current seven-reel feature is sent to exhibitors. The outside pages give a brief description of the picture and a talk on the Triangle policy of co-operation with exhibitors, as well as suggestions for promoting the picture. The inside of the folder forms a poster, with seven artistically arranged illustrations of the principals, Belle Bennett, J. Barney Sherry and Darrell Foss, together with a general announcement to the public. The exhibitor is requested to use this colored poster as a lobby display for the promotion of the picture.

Change in Judge Brown Releases.

"Thief or Angel," a juvenile comedy-drama with a clever touch of heart interest, is the current Judge Brown story on the General Film program. This is an intimate and highly entertaining story of young people in a city neighborhood in which it differs from foregoing Judge Brown stories which had a rural background. Ruth Hampton plays the heroine, and Judge Brown has gathered a capable cast for her support. Ernest Butterworth, who plays the leading boy role, is also featured.

Judge Brown has announced a slight change in the order of the March and April releases. Following "Thief or Angel" the Judge Brown stories will be in the following order: "The Accusing Toe," "Rebellion," "A Boy Built City," "I'm a Man." The latter subject is an intensely patriotic story which, it is promised, will excel even "Bud's Recruit," the initial release, in entertainment value.

Screen Telegram Makes Debut.

Capt. Vernon Castle, noted dancer and hero of the British flying corps, staging his last flight before sacrificing his life to save that of a fellow aviator, is graphically portrayed in the initial release of the Mutual Film Corporation's Screen Telegram of March 3.

At virtually the same hour the correspondent of the Screen Telegram was shipping the pictures to Chicago Captain Castle fell to his death.

While all Chicago was suffering for want of sugar a fast freight train was wrecked near Congress Park, Ill., scattering enough of the precious sweet along the railroad tracks to supply a cup of coffee for every resident of the city.

Exclusive pictures of the wreck are shown in the Telegram, in addition to scenes of the farewell celebration in honor of soldiers enlisted in Chicago for service with the British army; activities of a huge Government shipbuilding foundry on the Pacific coast; official French war films, showing American soldiers playing the role of Santa Claus to French war orphans at Noyon and St. Maixent; former President William Howard Taft refereeing a boxing bout between Jackies at the Great Lakes Training station; "Doug" Fairbanks staging a rodea at Ewing Field in California for the benefit of the war camp community fund, and several others.

Goldwyn Advances "The Splendid Sinner" Two Weeks

MARY GARDEN'S second Goldwyn production, "The Splendid Sinner," will be released throughout North America on March 24, instead of on April 7, as was first announced. This sudden change of plan by the Goldwyn organization, which brings another big production into theaters everywhere, is due to Samuel Goldfish's desire to increase exhibitor prosperity.

Scene from "The Floor Below" (Goldwyn).

From every section comes information of the most authentic sort that patronage conditions are showing improvement, and the Goldwyn determination to release the Garden subject earlier will aid in bringing the crowds back to the theaters of the country.

"When business shows a widespread inclination or tendency to improve," says Mr. Goldfish in explanation, "the greatest help a producing organization can give its exhibitor patrons is to release productions of great drawing power. In 'Thais' Miss Garden lifted business to record levels, and since 'The Splendid Sinner,' in my opinion, is twice as powerful as 'Thais,' I expect to see landslide business wherever this new production is played. I have a very fair indication of the pleasure and gratification that will be manifested by exhibitors in a thing that has happened here in New York. I had told one or two exhibitors of our intention to bring forward the release date of Miss Garden's second picture, and they at once contracted for a showing of double the time usually given to a single picture in their houses."

This alteration of the Goldwyn releasing schedule brings, as first announced, Mabel Normand back before the public in her second Goldwyn release, "The Floor Below," by Elaine Sterne, on March 10. John H. Kunsky, the Michigan exhibitor, who saw this production a few days ago at the Goldwyn studios in Fort Lee, proclaimed it as one of the best productions he has seen in months.

Miss Garden, in "The Splendid Sinner," follows the Mabel Normand picture, on March 24, and then, two weeks later, comes the most unusual production in which Madge Kennedy has appeared since she made her screen debut for Goldwyn. This is "The Danger Game," and one will properly infer from the title that the story is melodramatic. It is being directed by Harry Pollard.

Marguerite Clark Working on "Rich Man, Poor Man"

THE title of the play on which Marguerite Clark has begun production at the Fifty-sixth street studio, is "Rich Man, Poor Man," in which she has a strictly dramatic role. The story was written by Maximilian Foster and published as a magazine serial. It was later issued in book form, and a large number of editions have been printed. George Broadhurst dramatized "Rich Man, Poor Man," and presented it at the Forty-eighth street theater, New York, where it remained for a long run, and several companies have taken the piece on tour.

Pauline Frederick has finished "The Resurrection." The final scenes were taken in the settings of the big prison yard as the condemned prisoners are on the eve of their departure for Siberia. The handling of this production for Paramount release is said to reflect credit upon Director Edward Jose and his assistant, Daniel Pennell. Count Leo Tolstoi's novel was intended to show the contrast between the rich and the poor in Russia, and the cast includes varied types.

Billie Burke is still working on the interiors of her new Paramount picture, "Let's Get a Divorce," the photoplay written for her by Anita Loos and John Emerson. Beautiful backgrounds were secured in Florida for the exterior scenes, and these are being matched with gorgeous interiors. Miss Burke has personally assisted in the selection of the settings and furniture, and as the young bride in the story, with a trousseau of extraordinarily pretty clothes, the general ensemble of the picture will be beautiful and artistic. Director Charles Giblyn, who has charge of the productions, predicts that Miss Burke's work in this photoplay will cause favorable comment. The story is a comedy drama.

Activities at the Ince Studios.

The Thomas H. Ince studio is now working well ahead of its Paramount release schedule of Charles Ray, Enid Bennett and Dorothy Dalton productions. Charles Ray's next Paramount release is "The Family Skeleton," a particular appropriate vehicle for the popular young actor staged under the direction of Victor Schertzinger, supervised by Mr. Ince. This film will be released March 11 and was completed over two months ago. The next Ray picture, "His Own Home Town," which it is expected will be released in April, is also finished.

Enid Bennett, whose first Paramount picture, "The Keys of the Righteous," was just released, will next appear in "Naughty, Naughty!" a story by C. Gardner Sullivan, directed by Jerome Storm under the supervision of Mr. Ince. This photoplay, which will be released on March 25, is also now ready, and her next film, a circus subject, will soon be finished, bringing her work several months in advance of release.

Dorothy Dalton's next Paramount offering, "Love Me," to be released on March 18, was finished over a month ago, and "Tyrant Fear," her following picture, to be released in April, is also completed.

"Up the Road with Sallie" (Select).

"Up the Road with Sallie," in which Constance Talmadge is presented by Lewis J. Selznick, marks her return to smart comedy drama. The scenario has been written by Julia Crawford Ivers from the book of the same name by Frances Sterrett, and tells the story of a lovable, wilful heiress who has been left five thousand dollars with the injunction that she see how well she can spend it. Her quest of a unique method of expenditure leads her into numerous complications, which she finally untangles to her own satisfaction and that of her audience.

As Sallie Waters, Miss Talmadge comes into a rare opportunity for the display of her comedy gifts. She is supported by Norman Kerry and a capable staff, including Kate Toncray and Thomas Persse. The direction of the picture has been in the hands of William D. Taylor, and Frank E. Garbutt was official photographer. "Up the Road with Sallie" is now going through the finishing touches and will be ready for Select distribution shortly.

Four Chapin Releases in March.

Four features of the Ben Chapin series, "The Son of Democracy," released under the Paramount trademark, will be offered during the month of March. A tremendous demand has been created for this series, and exhibitors everywhere announce big business. A company official stated last week that the returns have exceeded all anticipations for this subject, and every branch office has gone beyond the estimated bookings.

The big publicity campaign conducted by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation covering this series included national magazines and daily newspapers.

Great diversity is shown in the subjects. Several are unique comedies, others are melodramatic, with thrills, fights and fast action, while some are filled with genuine pathos.

"My First Jury" is released March 4; "Tender Memories," March 11; "A President's Answer," March 18; "My Native State," March 25.

General Releases "By Injunction."

"By Injunction," an O. Henry story of the West with a big heart interest punch, is the Broadway Star Feature release through General Film this week. Patricia Palmer, Chet Ryan, and W. L. Rodgers, the popular trio who have appeared in many of the Western O. Henry pictures, are the featured players.

Buck Lumsden, Price Purcell, Panchita, and Trinidad Sloan, favorite O. Henry characters, are revived in this attractive two-reel drama. The central feature of the breezy story is the effort of Buck to give the kids of Yellowhammer a treat.

"The Song and the Sergeant," one of O. Henry's intimate heart interest stories of stage life, is the next release.

Blackton Leases Brooklyn Studio.

Convinced that California is better adapted for general production work than the East, J. Stuart Blackton has leased his Brooklyn studio and will confine his activities to the land of sunshine and flowers in making pictures for Paramount release.

What Mutual Offers March 11

Margarita Fischer in "Ann's Finish," Two Screen Telegrams and a Comedy.

MUTUAL announces another Margarita Fischer production for the week of March 11. It is titled "Ann's Finish," and was produced by the American under the direction of Lloyd Ingraham. The scenario was written by Elizabeth Mahoney from a story by Beatrice Van, and is a comedy-drama in which the elements of mystery and effervescent comedy alternate. In the cast are Jack Mower, Adelaide Elliott, David Howard, John Gough, Robert Klein and Perry Banks.

The second week of issues of the Screen Telegram, released March 13 and 17, will cover happenings of interest in the United States and Europe. The organization of the Screen Telegram correspondents embraces every state and territory on the continent, as well as foreign correspondents in the war zone, and its system of news-gathering is the most comprehensive ever attempted in a news weekly.

Billie Rhodes will appear in a Strand comedy released March 12. "Finishing Mary" is the title of this one-reel comedy, in which Billie gets in "dutch" with the school by giving a pickle-party in her room and inviting a bunch of young men to partake of the festivities. She redeems herself by capturing a second-story man who has hid under the bed, and is made the model student by the principal.

Good Support for Bessie Love.

In the cast surrounding little Bessie Love in her first Pathe Play, "The Great Adventure," are several players who are well known to photoplay fans, and who have appeared in previous Pathe pictures. Among them are Flora Finch, who was very popular in Vitagraph comedies several years ago, and who has had prominent parts within recent months in several Pathe features, among them "Prudence, the Pirate," with Gladys Hulette. Chester Barnett, who plays opposite Miss Love, only recently was to be seen as Miss Hulette's leading man in "Over the Hill." Donald Hall, who plays the "heavy" in "The Great Adventure," was Miss King's leading man in "The On-the-Square Girl," a Gold Rooster play which has scored a pronounced success. John Dunn, who has the stage manager's part, played "John Golden" in the Pearl White serial, "The Iron Claw."

"A Doll's House" for Miss Ferguson.

At the Fort Lee studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation Elsie Ferguson has begun the production of "A Doll's House" for Artcraft release, and will again appear in a role of emotional intensity. This Ibsen play has been recognized as a classic of the drama, and has been very popular in both America and Europe. It had its premier in 1889 at the Novelty theater, London, and its success led to its presentation in all the principal cities of Europe. It was produced in New York in 1889 by the Mansfield company of players, and during its successful run at this house five companies were launched which played throughout the country and Canada. In 1901 Mrs. Fiske selected this play as a starring vehicle for herself at the Manhattan theater, where she gave an elaborate presentation with practically an all-star cast.

Strong Barriscale Coming.

Something new in the way of emotion, a human sentiment which has never before been appreciated from the standpoint of dramatic value, will be introduced to the inarticulate drama in the Paralta play, "Within the Cup," starring Bessie Barriscale, which will be released shortly through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

"Within the Cup" was written by Monte M. Katterjohn and directed by Raymond B. West. It is considered one of the best Paralta Plays which has yet been presented, and from a standpoint of elaborateness it is remarkable. There is but one exterior setting in the entire production, which is seven reels in length.

Five New Jaxon Comedies.

The sixth series of Jaxon comedies concludes this week with the release of "Which Was Lucky?" a one-reel subject dealing with the weird adventures of two trouble finders. General Film now releases a new series of Jaxon comedies consisting of five subjects, "The Official Maneuver," "What Occurred on the Beach," "An All Fool's Day Affair," "Beating Him To It," and "Forced Into Matrimony."

Lees Journey to Savannah.

For the purpose of taking exteriors the Fox "Baby Grands," Jane and Katherine Lee, with Director Kenean Buell, have gone to Savannah, Ga. The knowledge of their presence in the state spread, and it seemed every exhibitor in the Southeast either telephoned, telegraphed, or came in person for the purpose of securing the little players for a personal appearance at his theater.

"The Debt of Honor" (Fox).

The William Fox Special Feature release for the week of March 10 is "The Debt of Honor," the first production Peggy Hyland has made for Fox. The spy element enters strongly into this picture. Supporting Miss Hyland are Irving Cummings, Frank Goldsmith, Hazel Adams, and Eric Mayne. The story is by Eve Unsell, the direction by O. A. C. Lund, and the photography by Joe Ruttenberg. Many of the scenes in "The Debt of Honor" were taken at New Orleans.

Burton Holmes Travels in China.

The 108th release of the Paramount-Burton Holes Travel pictures on March 4, contains one of the most interesting incidents of Burton Holmes' travels experienced in China last summer when that country sent her first 100,000 men to the front. The Chinese Labor Corps is a splendid body of men, the pick of the young manhood of northern China, uniformed and drilled by British officers, and have been sent to build and dig in France and Flanders.

The next release also will be an exceptional subject, being a cruise from Vancouver to Alaska, and is the beginning of an interesting series of travels into the land of Gold and the Midnight Sun.

Desmond and Mary Warren in Triangle Pirate Picture

TWO Saturday Evening Post stories appear on the Triangle March 10 schedule. In the romantic costume play of the days of Captain Kidd, "The Sea Panther," scenarioized from Kenneth B. Clarke's story of the same title, William Desmond is featured as the Beau Brummel of a bloody pirate crew, supported by Mary Warren in her first role as leading woman. The seventeenth century "atmosphere" has been faithfully reproduced, the Triangle research department having spent weeks securing authentic data for the production. Rare colored prints were secured as models from which to fashion the costumes, and the famous Clara Morris wardrobe was also utilized. As the script called for every variety of natural setting, many of the beauty spots of California were screened by Director Thomas N. Heffron. The historic old barkentine, "Fremont," was used for the water scenes. William Desmond, as Paul Le Marsan, is thought to have staged the greatest stage fight of his career in this production, and defeats Lee Hill in a duel to the death. Mary Warren is Molly Tarplay, whom Le Marsan captures and forces to share his home in the Bahamas. Jack Richardson, who plays the part of Will Kip, blundering mate of the pirate ship, offers a striking contrast to Le Marsan, his fastidious superior.

Realism in every detail was demanded by Director Raymond Wells in the filming of "The Hard Rock Breed," first release for the week of March 10, which George Elwood Jenks adapted from Frederic Bechdolt's story. The stone quarries at Colton, Cal., were screened for this production, which deals with the life of the men who tunnel through huge mountains in their efforts to advance civilization. Steam shovels and hydraulic drills are seen in action, and a huge blast, in which the entire side of a mountain is torn loose, was caught by the cameraman. The demand for types was supplied by the Colton Company, who allowed more than a score of their employees to mingle with the Triangle players.

A terrific battle in which more than forty men participate is a feature of this picture, which teems with red-blooded encounters. The story has as its theme the experiences of Jack Richardson, city-bred aristocrat, who comes from the East as boss, and tells how the love of Sheila Dolan (Margery Wilson), daughter of the quarries, helps him to "make good." J. Barney Sherry and Jack Curtis are two typical "hard rock" men. The cast includes Marion Skinner, Lee Phelps, George Chase, Louis Durham, Thornton Edwards and Aaron Edwards.

An industrious criminal plays his own game so crookedly that he "double-crosses" himself into his own villainous web in Keystone's latest comedy, "Did She Do Wrong?" Harry Gribbon is the crook and Claire Anderson is the siren who lures him to new deeds of pillage.

"She Didn't Do It" and "Wives and Worries" are Triangle one-reel Komedies released for the week of March 10.

Farnum Finishes "Rough and Ready" and Goes to Coast

WILLIAM FARNUM has completed "Rough and Ready," his de luxe production for William Fox, and is now preparing to return to California. He will begin work on a new vehicle of great dramatic power shortly after his arrival on the West Coast.

Mr. Farnum's most recent film was directed by Richard Stanton in the Fox studios and at Port Henry, N. Y., in the Adirondacks. The story is one of the East and West, and is interpreted by a large supporting company. Mr. Farnum appears in the role of a man who seeks the solace of the snowy trail to escape thoughts of the past.

Scene from "Rough and Ready" (Fox).

During his stay in New York the star has made three photoplays, "The Heart of a Lion," "Les Miserables," and "Rough and Ready" in the order named. It was in December, 1915, that William Fox sent his first company of photoplayers to the Pacific Coast. William Farnum headed that group. He remained in California until April, 1917, and made a dozen productions during that period.

Mr. Farnum came back to the Eastern studios to work under the direction of Frank Lloyd. The star took a brief vacation on his estate at Sag Harbor, L. I., and then started on "The Heart of a Lion." This picture was an adaptation of Ralph Connor's novel, "The Doctor." In the preparation of "Les Miserables," Mr. Farnum and Mr. Lloyd were engaged for seven months. As the Jean Valjean of this masterpiece, Mr. Farnum scored the triumph of his life.

Mr. Farnum has made in all twenty-one productions for William Fox. "Rough and Ready" will be released as a Standard Picture on March 24.

Madge Kennedy in "The Danger Game" Has Serious Role

NO sooner does a film player score a success in parts of a certain kind than he or she begins to burn with an ambition to do something different. Any number of emotional heroines hanker to skim through light comedies, and everyone knows that comedians yearn to play Hamlet or Macbeth. So it is with Madge Kennedy, star in Goldwyn Pictures. Recently she confessed to a sympathetic interviewer that she would hazard her all on a production of Charlotte Corday, though, with characteristic sanity, the piquant comedienne added that no one would take her seriously if she did get the chance to be Marat's slayer.

Yet by holding to the thought of doing something different, of being a heroine of another sort, the life of "Baby Mine" and "Nearly Married" is getting nearer to the serious side of feminine character. It is happening in "The Danger Game," her Goldwyn production now under way.

No longer is Madge Kennedy the girl who gets herself into scrapes, then depends on her eyes and her smile to extricate her and to put her right with a suspicious young husband. No longer is she the skittish young person who is guilty of the wildest indiscretions, who skates on the thinnest ice without, however, really compromising herself beyond reinstatement. Always Madge Kennedy's mistakes have been social ones, the carelessness of the young girl who flirts with a married man or the bride who is too kind to a rejected suitor. In "Our Little Wife" her misdemeanors were calculated to shock circumspect dowagers and not the public in general. Primarily, Madge Kennedy is a society actress, and her departures from convention are necessarily regulated by the standards prevailing in society, not the world in general.

For this reason "The Danger Game" is giving in her no end of satisfaction, and will equally satisfy her public when the production is exhibited. Madge Kennedy is placed in a "society" environment.

Eugenie Forde in Rhodes Comedies.

Eugenie Forde, well-known character actress of the screen, is supporting clever Miss Billie Rhodes in one-reel Strand-Mutual comedies. Miss Forde's stage career includes engagements with William Faversham, Chauncey Olcott, Blanche Walsh and George Munroe. She has appeared in scores of well-known motion picture productions. Her recent appearances have been in Mutual pictures, playing "mother roles" with Jackie Saunders and Mary Miles Minter. Her debut in Strand comedies is made in "Finishing Mary," a rollicking boarding school playlet.

"Breakers Ahead" Completed.

Quaint New England types abound in "Breakers Ahead," Viola Dana's newest screen vehicle in the Metro program. The picture, in five reels, has been completed at Metro's western studios. It was directed by Charles Brabin, who collaborated with H. P. Koeler in the composition of the original story.

In the strong cast Clifford Bruce plays opposite the star in the role of Eric Pixley, a rugged young mariner. Russell Simpson has a virile character part as Captain Scudd, and others in the cast are Eugene Palletto, Sydney Deane, Mabel Van Buren, T. H. Gowland, Lorena Foster and Helen Jerome Eddy, the latter loaned by Lasky.

The burning of a ship at sea is one of the spectacular effects in "Breakers Ahead," which was photographed by John Arnold and Robert Kurrle.

De Mille Assembling Big Artcraft.

Cecil B. DeMille is assembling the negative of "The Whispering Chorus," the special Artcraft picture produced by him. It was adapted by Jeanie Macpherson from the story by Perley Poore Sheehan. It has been produced by Mr. DeMille as a super-attraction, and no individual is being starred, although Raymond Hatton, Kathlyn Williams and Elliott Dexter are prominent in the cast. Novel lighting and color effects, similar to those which caused considerable comment in "The Devil Stone," have been applied to this new subject on a large scale.

The next Cecil B. DeMille special production will be an adaptation by Jeanie Macpherson of "Old Wives for New," a story by David Graham Phillips dealing with the divorce question.

A system has been inaugurated whereby Miss Macpherson and William C. DeMille will alternate in writing scenarios for these special productions.

Fox Busy at Biograph Studio.

William Fox activities in the Biograph studios, New York City, have given that picturemaking building a busy appearance. R. A. Walsh's drama, "Woman and the Law," with the sets which have been constructed lately for the prison scenes, the lavish sets which Director Stanton had put up for scenes in "Rough and Ready," and several sets which have been prepared to facilitate the completion of the as yet unnamed vehicle of Jane and Katherine Lee, crowded the studio to its capacity.

Jaxon Serial Is Finished.

The entire gamut of German spy activities in the United States is run in "A Daughter of Uncle Sam," the Jaxon patriotic serial being reelased by General. Each of the twelve episodes presents one or more phases of the attempts of enemy agents to hamper America's participation in the war. The innovation of condensing the action usually found in a two-reel episode into a single-reel chapter is popular, according to reports from exhibitors.

The twelfth episode, which has just been completed, ends the story with a smashing climax showing the complete breakdown of the Hun spy system in the United States. There is also a big heart interest touch.

Don Barclay Makes Faces.

The gentleman reclining in the chair might be called "two-faced," but he is entirely at the mercy of Don Barclay, Essanay's new comedian and member of the "Ziegfeld Follies." Mr. Barclay, who is quite a good cartoonist as well as a comedian, is here shown doing a bit of "business" for a forthcoming comedy, painting a face on the bald pate of the man in the chair.

Children Stars in "The Blue Bird."

Tula Belle, aged eight, and Robin Macdougall, ten years old, two talented children of the screen world, are intrusted with the chief parts in Maeterlinck's masterpiece, "The Blue Bird," produced by Maurice Tourneur for Artcraft release. Never was the Belgian poet's great message of happiness more appropriate than during the present war period, and that the producers' selection for these two characters were well made will be conceded by everyone who sees the pretentious cinema to be released on Easter Day.

Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of productions, in bringing out the importance of these children in conveying Maeterlinck's ideals in "The Blue Bird," said: "Tula Belle and Robin Macdougall make the famous poet's great thoughts clear to those of their own age as well as older people. With them the audience will journey through scene after scene of symbolical magnificence. Through the magic of the Fairy Berylune they will witness the soul of all things become visible. The cat and the dog, gifted with speech; milk, transformed to a beautiful feminine figure; sugar, in grotesque shape, and light, personified by a lovely girl radiantly costumed. These and many others are made more realistic through the work of the youngsters, as directed by Mr. Tourneur."

Fairbanks to Don Dinner Jacket.

After "Headin' South," the Douglas Fairbanks production just released under the Artcraft trade-mark, comes a photoplay presenting marked contrast from the recent films in which the exponent of the smile appears. In his next Artcraft picture, the title of which has not yet been decided upon, acrobatic Douglas appears in a dinner jacket in place of chaps and flannel shirt. Instead of leaping onto a swinging chandelier or bucking "bronc," he plays pretty love scenes with a charming young girl. Supervising Director Allan Dwan is responsible for this new subject, which was suggested by Ernest Butterworth, and actual production has already commenced.

Metro Puts On a Regular Parade in "The Landloper"

OVER five hundred extra people were employed in the big parade scenes for Harold Lockwood's forthcoming Metro release, "The Landloper," the story of which is based on Holman Day's novel of the same name. This action was photographed on one of the downtown streets of Jacksonville, Fla., and drew an immense crowd which watched the spectacle with interest.

The parade scenes secured are to be used in that portion of the story where Walker Farr (Harold Lockwood) marshals his forces and marches them through the city streets to lodge a protest to the mayor of the town against a renewal of the water supply franchise to Colonel Dodd, the head of the syndicate which has controlled the privilege in the past, and which, by furnishing impure water, has caused disease and death throughout the city.

The parade had the same aspect as a pre-election political demonstration, as many of the marchers carried banners which bore inscriptions attacking Colonel Dodd. Two cameras, trained upon the procession from different angles, recorded the action. The resulting effect will form striking screen incidents.

"The Landloper" will be released in five reels. George Irving, who recently joined the Harold Lockwood Company to alternate with Fred J. Balshofer in directing Yorke-Metro productions, is staging the picture.

Russian Art Film Leads Pathe for Week of March 17

PATHE'S program for March 17 is headed by a five-reel Russian Art Film starring Ivan Mozukin and Mme. Lesienko and the second episode of the new Pearl White serial, "The House of Hate," as well as Toto in another of his amusing comedies.

"The Beggar Woman" is the title of the feature. It is one of the most remarkable dramas yet released on the Russian Art Drama program, and features Mme. Lesienko as a songbird whose golden notes chime over Petrograd. The literary lion of Russia who writes in verse of youth and love is played by Ivan Mozukin.

"The Tiger's Eye" is the title of the second episode of "The House of Hate." The punch in this episode comes when the Hooded Terror late at night emerges from a secret passageway and goes to the safe. He innocently sets off a flashlight, which exposes a plate in a small camera in the head of a tiger rug.

"Fare, Please," is the name of Toto's two-reel Rolin comedy. The famous little comedian plays the part of a street-car conductor. Toto is at his best in this comedy, and he sparkles with originality from start to finish. He has made a mark as a screen comedian.

Harold Lloyd stars in "Here Come the Girls," a one-reel comedy produced by Rolin. This is one of those snappy Lloyd comedies that gets the spectator from the very start.

A split-reel travel and educational is made up of picturesque France (the Cauterets), Pathe colored, and "Children's Dances"; also Pathe colored, and made with the famous ultra rapid camera.

There are an International Cartoon and Educational split-reel and Hearst-Pathe News No. 24 and No. 25 on this program.

Real Fight in "Woman and the Law."

As a melodramatic feature in "Woman and the Law," the new picture he is making for William Fox, Director R. A. Walsh is proud of the fight that takes place between the husband and the secretary to the wife's father.

"I want this real," said Mr. Walsh. "To get the reel punch we must have a few real punches in it."

And they went to it. There can be no question that they were mindful of his instructions. First a chair went whirling to destruction against the wall, then a table crashed into a state where it was gone beyond repair. The participants got so warmed up that Mr. Walsh had to stop it, call for arnica and send the cast home for the day.

Thompson to Support Doris Kenyon.

Doris Kenyon's leading man in "The Street of Seven Stars," the Mary Roberts Rinehart story, which will be the initial offering of De Luxe Pictures, Inc., will be Hugh Thompson.

Mr. Thompson has signed a contract to appear in Miss Kenyon's company. He is now working as leading man in a picture in which Virginia Pearson is the star, his other most recent screen appearances having been with Theda Bara, Annette Kellermann, and Edna Goodrich. Mr. Thompson is a native of St. Louis, where he appeared for several years as a stock actor on the legitimate stage. He is an all-round athlete. He holds the unique record of having won forty-eight out of fifty-two games pitched in one season.

"Some Professor" (Klever).

Klever Pictures, Inc., released on February 25, Victor Moore in the latest Klever Komedy, "Some Professor," written by Robert James and directed by Harry Jackson. The scenes of this comedy are all laid in pretty seminary grounds, with a bevy of pretty seminary girls, which adds lots of "pep" to the fast comedy action. Moore is supported by D. L. Don, Emma Littlefield, Charlotte Gray and Harry Foy.

HEARST-PATHE SHOWS SCENES OF SOLDIERS.

The Hearst-Pathe News No. 18 is distinctly military in tone. Two of the most striking subjects treated are those which show Americans of the National Army of Camp Devens and Camp Upton, and those which depict a review of the French Colonials on a wide plain in France. Companion scenes show the drafted men from Yaphank in their big parade down Fifth avenue, New York.

The French scenes are stirring, showing as they do many thousands of veterans heavily armed marching in review on a plain so wide that it disappears in the horizon. A close-up is given of one hero who bears upon his chest several rows of medals as a testimonial of his valor.

Scene from "Stolen Orders."

Brady Using Great Balloon in His "Stolen Orders"

FOR several weeks Atlantic City has been in a state of excitement unusual even for that hectic seaside metropolis. Rumors of unusual happenings at the Longport end of the island, of a balloon securely anchored in a carefully camouflaged hangar somewhere on the deserted dunes, and of a sudden flight to sea have been rife.

Visitors who ventured to the end of Longport, a desolate point jutting out into the ocean, found it fenced off and a guard on hand to enforce the frequent "No Admittance" signs. All they could see was a building, a solidly built wooden affair 150 feet long and 60 high. It was odd that it should be there, but the fact that it was camouflaged so as to make its presence from any distance unnoticed made it more so.

Inside that hangar was a balloon, 100 feet long and 30 feet high, and into which was being forced 25,000 cubic feet of hydrogen gas. What the onlookers outside the fence did not know was that this balloon is to play a prominent part in the filming of "Stolen Orders," the big feature based on the huge Drury Lane melodrama, "Sealed Orders," which William A. Brady is making with a cast that includes Kitty Gordon, Carlyle Blackwell, Montagu Love, June Elvidge, Madge Evans and George McQuarrie. "Stolen Orders" will be the first of Mr. Brady's spectacular feature productions, recently announced. As "Sealed Orders," when produced at Drury Lane and later here at the Manhattan opera house, was replete with action and possessed unusual pictorial values, the screen version promises many unique and highly interesting features.

Universal Creating Advance Interest in "Bull's Eye"

EDDIE POLO, in the current Universal big Western serial, "The Bull's Eye," is proving a recruiting officer for a large army of juvenile and embryo writers who may later invade the industry.

"What Did Eddie Polo Say?" is the title of a contest conducted by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company to create interest in the serial among boys and girls sixteen years of age and under throughout the United States and Canada, and the contest, which is conducted by means of advance heralds distributed in advance of the showing of the serial, has well proved its value in creating advance interest and providing "The Bull's Eye" with a number of juvenile friends who anxiously watch for its arrival.

The contest is for the youngsters to supply missing words in given titles for certain specified scenes in each episode.

The different conceptions, the diversified thoughts of different minds viewing the same scene is most interestingly shown in the answers that are being received by the Univsal Company.

Hundreds of answers are being received daily in this contest, which will close on June 1, and every state in the Union is already well represented.

Change in Title of Glaum Picture.

Announcement has just been made of a change in the title of the Paralta play in which Miss Louise Glaum will soon make her debut as a star at the head of her own company. The picture which has been advertised as "Intelligence" will be released through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation under the new title, "The Iron Beast."

Miss Glaum is now hard at work at the Paralta studios in California on this production. Both exhibitors and the public are manifesting unusual interest in it, as it will take Miss Glaum from the vampire character to which her screen work has been confined and present her for the first time in the broad and unlimited scope of a true and versatile dramatic actress.

Fifth Barriscale Paralta Ready.

At the Paralta studios in California, "Maid o' the Storm" has been completed. It was staged under the direction of Raymond B. West. Both the play and the screen version of the story are from the pens of J. Grubb Alexander and Fred Myton, who collaborated in writing it.

In this picture Miss Barriscale undergoes a striking transformation in costume and character. The story opens with her as a castaway on the coast of Scotland and at the climax she is the premiere danseuse of the London Opera Company. The production gives Miss Barriscale an opportunity to display a wardrobe more varying than in any of her previous Paralta productions, at first appearing as an airy sprite waif, becoming later a handsomely gowned star of the opera.

Long Runs of Goldwyns at Quinn's

As indicative of the enthusiasm with which "Dodging a Million," Mabel Normand's first Goldwyn picture, is being received, Goldwyn cites the fact that J. A. Quinn, Los Angeles showman, has just finished a two-weeks' run of this George Loane Tucker picturization of the story of the modiste's dresser who became an heiress. Business in the first week at his Rialto theater was huge, but in the second was even better. Capacity was the rule.

The approval thus expressed follows on the heels of another unusual engagement —a three-weeks' run of Mr. Tucker's picturization of Edward Childs Carpenter's "The Cinderella Man," with Mae Marsh as the star. Goldwyn believes that few if any two-program pictures can boast of five weeks at a metropolitan theater.

Metro Stages Game of Baccarat.

For the first time in an American motion picture production, baccarat, the great French gambling game, is vividly shown in the Metro All-Star Series picture, "Social Hypocrites." May Allison is the star of this picturization of Alicia Ramsey's popular Broadway play, "Bridge." It was adapted for the screen by June Mathis and Albert Capellani and directed by the noted Frenchman. As no baccarat table could be secured in America the Metro technical staff built an exact duplicate of the kind used in the big casinos at Monte Carlo and other gambling French palaces. The table was 12 feet 6 inches long and 44 inches wide, and marked off in accordance with the rules of the game. All the accoutrements of the table were provided.

To Co-operate on Plays

Metro and Nazimova's Manager Get Together on the Star's Plans.

A CO-OPERATIVE program has been arranged between Arthur Hopkins, the theatrical manager, and Metro Pictures Corporation in regard to the plans of Mme. Nazimova in the same way that Metro has already co-operated with the Charles Frohman estate in regard to Nazimova.

Ethel Barrymore and with the firm of Oliver Morosco in regard to the yearly program of Emily Stevens. When Mme. Nazimova opens at the Plymouth theater, March 11, in Ibsen's "The Wild Duck" three Metro stars will be playing Broadway engagements simultaneously.

At the Metro studio the star's respite from screen work will be utilized in the selection of a new list of photodramas, work upon which will be begun as soon as Nazimova finishes her starring engagement in the Ibsen plays under the Hopkins management. This follows the policy already established in the case of Miss Barrymore, now playing in repertoire at the Empire theater, and Miss Stevens, who is appearing in "Madonna of the Future" at the Broadhurst.

Metro's scenario department is busily employed in reading a large accumulation of manuscripts submitted with Mme. Nazimova's requirements in mind. Two photoplays have practically been decided upon; one, the picturization of a famous novel, the other a screen version of a celebrated play by a French author. Maxwell Karger, studio supervisor, has directed that Mme. Nazimova be provided with a wide range of parts which will do justice to her amazing versatility.

The Hopkins forces have further co-operated with Metro in the choice of a cast for Nazimova's Ibsen repertoire. Several of those engaged have appeared in the star's support in her Metro pictures and in other Metro productions. Among these are Dodson Mitchell, Edward J. Connelly, and Lyster Chambers. That stage and screen can be mutually helpful instead of detrimental to each other is the working plan on which such progressive managements as Metro, Hopkins, Frohman, and Morosco proceed.

Beatrice Van Author of "Jilted Janet."

"Jilted Janet," the clever comedy-drama in which Margarita Fischer has made a signal success, was written by Beatrice Van, who is the author of several of the Fischer pictures, among them "Molly Go Get 'Em." Elizabeth Mahoney wrote the continuity for both of these comedy dramas.

Bud Duncan in New Comedies for Release by General

IN a very short time General Film will begin releasing a series of one-reel comedies featuring "Bud" Duncan, formerly of the well known Ham and Bud comedies, and Dot Farley, one of the comediennes of the screen. These subjects will be released once a week as Clover comedies. They are being produced by the National Film Corporation, O. D. Woodward, president, at its studios in Denver. The first subject to be released will be "From Caterpillar to Butterfly," an amusing story of domestic life. Other subjects in the series will be announced. The inimitable antics of the diminutive "Bud" will be the feature of these new laughmakers.

The National Film Corporation will also begin production of a series of two-reel Western dramas for release every other week through the General Film exchanges.

Margarita Fischer's "Ann's Finish" a School Story

MARGARITA FISCHER, whose sprightly comedy-dramas, made by the American Film Company at Santa Barbara, have made her a drawing card, has scored another success in her new picture, "Ann's Finish." It is the story of an impulsive, romantic girl with too much money and her adventures at a girl's finishing school. Ann is not nearly finished when the term is up; but the school is, what with her adventures with burglars and kidnappers and mythical husbands who were supposed to have been drowned at sea, but who turned up quite lively and dismayed Ann considerably.

Jack Mower plays opposite Miss Fischer, and others in the cast are David Howard, John Gough, Robert Klein and Perry Banks. "Ann's Finish" is released through all the Mutual exchanges on March 11. Miss Fischer has some specially fetching gowns for this play and makes a most demure little widow in her smart mourning outfit.

Glass Studios Enable Triangle to Work Despite Rain

THE recent rainstorm which deluged Southern California didn't impede progress at Culver City, for, with most of the exteriors of current productions "shot," the producing companies continued their work, without interruption, in the five glass studios. During the past week four feature pictures have been completed and as many new stories put under production, with carefully selected casts. There are now eight companies engaged with their respective features and comedies.

A romance of the Canadian Northwest, a "western thriller," two society dramas and a one-reel comedy comprise the pictures now in the editing department. "The Law of the Great Northwest," by Ralph Westfall, former member of the Canadian Northwest Mounted Police, features Margery Wilson. William V. Mong, Eugene Corey, Louis Durham, Will Jeffries and William Dyer are also cast in this production, which Raymond Wells directed.

Roy Stewart's latest vehicle is "Boss of the Lazy Y," a screen adaptation of Charles Alden Seltzer's novel of the same title, which was made under the direction of Cliff Smith. Josie Sedgwick, Walt Whitman, William Ellingford, Aaron Edwards, Graham Pette and five-year-old Frankie Lee are included in the supporting cast.

"Another Foolish Virgin," from W. Carey Wonderley's story of the same name, a drama of life in Greenwich Village, featuring Alma Reubens as an unsophisticated song writer of the Bohemian set, was directed by E. Mason Hopper. Texas Guinan, Joe Bennett and Lee Hill have leading roles.

"The Vortex," new society drama, combines romance and mystery, and numbers in the supporting cast Joe King, last seen with Olive Thomas in "Heiress for a Day"; Mary Warren, who was featured in "The Sea Panther" with William Desmond; Wilbur Higbie, Eugene Burr, George Hernandez, Myrtle Rishell and R. P. Thompson. Gilbert P. Hamilton is credited with the direction.

Jack Livingston, Jack Richardon, Lillian West, Mae Walters and Ruth Langton appear in the one-reel comedy, "Many Happy Returns," which H. Edwards directed.

Following the release of John A. Moroso's play, "The Shoes That Danced," a new drama by the same author has been secured by Triangle. "In the Spring" is a mystery story of the New York Police force, showing life in the Italian underworld. Joe King is cast as a police inspector, who falls in love with Margery Wilson, whom he believes is a reformed crook. Under the direction of Raymond Wells this play is well under way, and includes in the supporting cast Francis McDonald and Aaron Edwards.

E. Mason Hopper has begun work on a screen drama written by Lillian Ducey, the working title of which is "Heritage." In the cast are Jack Richardson, Irene Hunt, Darrell Foss, Wilbur Higbee, Walter Whitman, Walter Perry, twelve-year-old Burwell Hamrick and little Frankie Lee. "Heritage" is a transcontinental drama.

A new comedy, "First Aid," on which Herman Raymaker is handling the megaphone, features Billy Franey, and includes in the supporting cast Maud Wayne, Diana Carrillo, Myrtle Reeves and Burwell Hamrick. There are various bathing scenes in this new fun-maker, and Miss Carrillo will be called upon to dive into one of the canals at Venice, despite wintry winds.

Director Jack Dillon is well under way on "The Siren in the House," a five-reel comedy with Olive Thomas in the title role, as the alluring siren. William V. Mong, Claire McDowell, Ray Griffith and Lee Phelps are also cast in this production.

With William Desmond in the title role, Director Frank Borzage is well under way on "The Honorable Billy," an English drama which combines humor and pathos. As Desmond's leading woman, Gloria Swanson has her second role in Triangle feature plays.

Director Thomas N. Heffron expects to finish within a week "The Veil," a political drama in which J. Barney Sherry is seen as a politician of the Tammany Hall type, whose policies are dominated by his sympathies rather than any pronounced convictions. Others in the cast tre Edwin Brady, Dora Rodgers, Frank Bonn and Mary Mersch.

Triangle is showing increased activities and enterprise on behalf of exhibitors.

Mary Garden's New Release Carries Cavell Touch

EDITH CAVELL'S brutual execution by the Germans at the beginning of the war shocked and angered the whole world. The story of the heroic English nurse and her perfunctory trial has been printed in every language, even subjects of the Central Powers deploring the injustice of Von Bissing's order which sent Miss Cavell to her death. Monuments have been erected to her in England and on the Continent, and in the little village of Beausoleil, just above Monte Carlo, on Mont Agel, a street bears her name. The blue sign bears the quaint legend, "Rue Miss Cavell."

Mary Garden, who knows her war history as few of us do, was responsible for this honor being paid the memory of the nurse. A frequent visitor to Monaco, she knows the surrounding country well, and had no difficulty in persuading the mayor of Beausoleil to put the matter before the local council.

Now Miss Garden has further opportunity to immortalize the memory of Edith Cavell—and in motion pictures. It happens in "The Splendid Sinner," Mary Garden's second Goldwyn picture, to be released April 7.

In this production Miss Garden as a Red Cross nurse finds herself enmeshed in German intrigue and espionage after the manner made famous in the Cavell case. She attempts to aid a wounded soldier, and is detected by German officers, brought before the council, and given a trial equally as unfair as Miss Cavell's. The conclusion of the drama is poignant in the extreme, and Miss Garden's ability is given adequate expression. "The Splendid Sinner" promises to greatly augment Miss Garden's popularity.

Dorothy Dalton in Coming Triangle.

"The Unfaithful," a two-reel picture scheduled by Triangle for March 31 release, features Dorothy Dalton, and was directed by Charles Miller, under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince. The play, written by Lambert Hillyer, is dramatic in incident and plot. John Karge (Robert McKim), a successful novelist, wishes to portray a situation of domestic infidelity, and finds he cannot, having known only happy married life. His wife (Dorothy Dalton) risks life and honor to aid him in his literary dilemma, and her well-meant efforts nearly culminate in a grave tragedy. Included in the supporting cast are Charles Gunn and Charlotte Vermont.

Changes Title of "Ruthless Russia."

Another change of name has been decided on in regard to Alice Brady's latest Select productions, which has been going forward under the working title of "Ruthless Russia." The new title will be "At the Mercy of Men," and has been embodied in all orders advertising the picture.

"Love Me" Is Dorothy Dalton's Next.

In "Love Me," her Paramount picture, to be released next month, Dorothy Dalton is supported by a strong cast of players, with Jack Holt playing opposite her. William Conklin has the role of a polished villain, a man of the world type, to which he may be expected to do full justice. Dorcas Matthews is a weak girl in the story, too fond of petting and easily led into dangerous paths.

Melbourne MacDowell plays the part of a wealthy Philadelphia, and Elinore Hancock and Robert McKim each have good roles.

Harry Carey Leads Universal.

Harry Carey again leads off the list of Universal pictures for the week of March 18, in the Harry Carey production entitled "Thieves' Gold," a vivid Western of the type in which Harry Carey has excelled for the last three years. "Thieves' Gold," under the title of "Back to the Right Trail," was a story written by Frederick R. Bechdolt. George Hively put it into scenario form, and it was produced by Jack Ford. Molly Malone and Vesta Pegg support the star, and there is the usual troupe of real cowboys.

The Nestor comedy for the week presents a former Universal star in quite an unaccustomed character. The star is King Baggot, who for five years was one of the leading figures in Universal features, and the title of the Nestor comedy in which he appears is "I'll Fix It." The picture was filmed last fall, and is not a re-issue, as some of the announcements had it. It is a new picture, and is the first of a number of comedies which King Baggot started in upon just prior to the making of a serial in which he is now being released.

"Cooks and Crooks," the two-reel L-Ko comedy, appearing on Wednesday, March 20, brings Gale Henry, the former Joker comedy star; Hughie Mack and Dave Morris. The story has a Mexican locale.

Screen Magazine No. 63 presents a continuation of the series started in last week's Screen Magazine under the heading, "The Making of a Newspaper." In this installment the editor of the magazine shows how a munition plant explosion is written by the reporter, turned into type on the linotype machines, cast into molds for the cylinder press and run off on the huge presses which grind out the daily papers of the United States. There are also other features.

Animated Weekly No. 16 and Current Events No. 45 contain all of the news which can be communicated to a motion picture camera.

The Universal serial, "The Mystery Ship," is in its seventeenth episode, which is entitled "The Deadly Torpedo." This popular serial, with Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber, is in its final stages, and has but one more chapter in which to wind up its exciting and adventurous career.

The Eddie Polo serial, "The Bull's Eye," is already fairly started, and is in its seventh episode, which is entitled "Wild Riding."

There is also a Finley Nature split-reel subject entitled "Where Rolls the Oregon," with which is combined the Educational split-reel "The Mosquito."

Exhibitors who are using Universal service will thus be well provided for in forthcoming distributions.

Norma Talmadge Returns from Vacation.

Norma Talmadge and her husband, Joseph M. Schenck, are due in New York from Palm Beach, where they have spent a four-weeks vacation. Mr. Schenck's business associate, Julius Steger, has purchased from the Mark-Well Publishing Company the motion picture rights to the well-known novel, "The Ashes of My Heart," by Edith Blinn, in the picturized version of which Norma Talmadge will subsequently appear for Select.

Strong Cast for "Social Hypocrites."

Truth, Vice and Modesty meet in "Social Hypocrites," May Allison's first vehicle as an individual star on the Metro program. In the screen play adapted from Alicia Ramsay's drama, "Bridge," by Albert Capellani and June Mathis, and directed by the noted Frenchman, there will be seen Marie Wainwright, who played Truth in the stage miracle play, "Everywoman"; Stella Hammerstein, who played Vice, and the star herself, who was cast as Modesty in that production. These talented women have not met in the same production since that time.

By a strange coincidence, although all three have appeared in a wide range of parts since the run of "Everywoman," their roles in "Social Hypocrites" are strikingly similar to those in which they were seen in the Savage production. In the screen play Miss Allison has the winsome role of Leonore Fielding.

In "Social Hypocrites" director Capellani has assembled a true Capellani cast, which includes Ethel Winthrop, Henry Kolker, Joseph Kilgour, Frank Currier, Stephen Grattan and Maggie Breyer, in addition to those already mentioned.

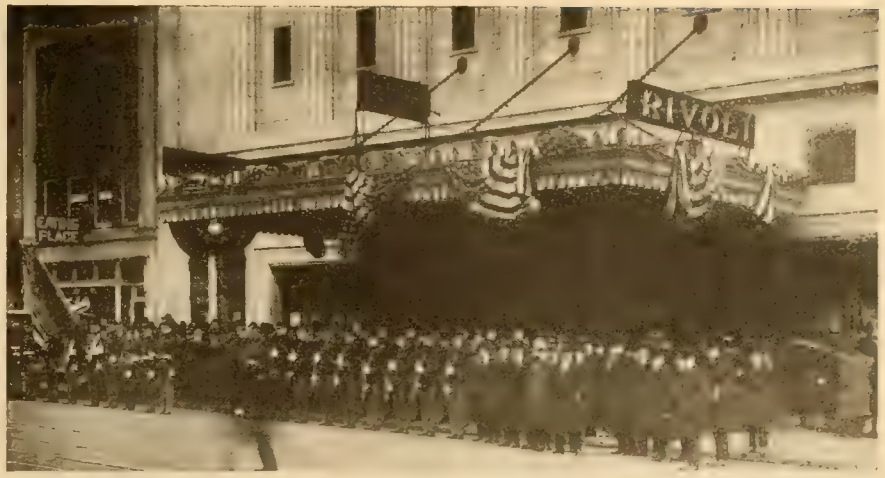
"The Red, Red Heart" (Bluebird).

The Bluebird Board of Judges, the body which passes upon every production issued by that company and determines the releasing titles, has decided upon the name of "The Red, Red Heart" for the feature completed under the temporary title, "Heart of the Desert." It was under the latter title that the story, written by Honore Willsie, appeared in book form. The work of adapting it for the screen was intrusted to Bess Meredyth and the direction to Wilfred Lucas.

Produced upon the great Majove desert, "The Red, Red Heart" is easily one of the most picturesque and scenically beautiful features released by Bluebird in months. Aside from the fact that it affords Ruth Clifford a sympathetic role, the picture also allows Monroe Salisbury to resume his favorite type—that of the Indian.

It will be remembered that Salisbury's first appearance as a Bluebird artist was in the characterization of the half-breed in "The Savage." The finished performance he gave to that devil-may-care individual promptly established him as one of Bluebird's assets and elevated him to the position as co-star with Miss Clifford.

"The Red, Red Heart" will be released April 8. The supporting cast includes Val Paul, Gretchen Lederer, Allen Sears and Monte Blue.



United States Marines in "The Unbeliever" at Rothapfel's Rivoli.

Soldiers of the Sea Aid in Showing "The Unbeliever"

WHEN the Rivoli, New York City, presented Edison's "The Unbeliever," distributed by George Kleine System, the United States Marine Corps furnished a detachment for each performance. The picture was taken with the aid of an entire regiment of marines, which is at present in France. Mr. Rothapfel preceded the presentation of the picture with a scene showing a marine on sentry duty. This was followed by marine corps buglers in addition to his orchestra in playing "Semper Fidelis." The house was elaborately decorated for the occasion.

Liquid Fire in Current Events.

A film of remarkable interest is that showing liquid fire as presented in Universal Curren Events No. 42. These pictures are exclusive with this news reel and show, for the first time, the use of this hellish invention as a weapon of war. Originally devised as a method of surprise attack by the Huns, liquid fire, as shown by the Universal release, has been improved upon by our Allies and made even more deadly. The picture was made by the military cameraman, under the supervision of the United States Government, and although issued as official war film by the Committee on Public Information though the American Red Cross, it will be shown only in Universal Current Events No. 42.

Belle Bennett, Too, Adopts Some Boys.

Belle Bennett has "adopted" the boys at the West Coast submarine base at San Pedro, and now one thousand stalwart youths who have signed up with Uncle Sam are hailing her as "Little Mother." The honor was bestowed upon Miss Bennett on a recent morning when, as the guest of Captain Pounstone, commander of the base, she reviewed the sailors. After the boys had gone through their manoeuvers, Captain Pounstone presented the actress to the uniformed men. He told them that she, having a husband in military service, was thoroughly in sympathy with them. The ceremony of installing Miss Bennett as the "Little Mother" of the base followed. At a midnight performance of "Ashes of Hope," which was presented at a San Pedro theater for the enlisted men, Miss Bennett, who was featured in the picture, announced that she would present her library and also many volumes which had belonged to her father to her "adopted" boys, as well as an electric Victrola and 150 records.

"Hungry Eyes" (Bluebird).

"Hungry Eyes," the Bluebird production featuring Ruth Clifford and Monroe Salisbury, has been set for release the week of March 11. This picture was originally known as "His Wife from Arizona."

It is a typical Julian production in that this Bluebird director has turned out a feature which has for its locale the West of former days.

Monroe Salisbury deserts his characterization of "Lo the poor Indian" in "Hungry Eyes," portraying instead the part of a cowpuncher. Miss Clifford appears opposite him in the role of Mary Jane Appleton, his sweetheart. The feature also sees the return to the screen of Rupert Julian in his favorite character—that of the somewhat Quixotic John Silver.

The cast of "Hungry Eyes" also contains Gretchen Lederer, W. H. Bainbridge, A. H. Barros, Arthur Tavares, George McDaniel and Rita Pickering.

William Desmond Plays Dual Role.

In "The Marriage Bubble," forthcoming Triangle picture, William Desmond portrays a dual role, being cast as Marty Conrad, a Montana millionaire, and Peter Trenholm, dissipated son of an aristocratic but financially embarrassed family. This society comedy has been adapted from the story by W. Carey Wonderley, and was directed by Walter Edwards, under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince. Anna Luther, Maude George and Florence Dagmar have important roles.

World Film Makes a Big Slash at Studio Wastage

IN continuance of its policy of giving the World exhibitors the greatest possible value for their money the World Film Corporation has organized its studio accordingly. Wastage has been cut out wherever possible, and, instead of crediting these gains to the profit side of the ledger, all the gains are being put right back into the pictures themselves.

One of the first steps in the studio organization has been the establishment of a central purchasing department through which the material for all the various productions will be secured. In this way all overlapping purchases are eliminated and better prices are secured.

An estimate bureau has also been installed. All the money needed will be spent where needed—no part of any film is to be skimped in the slightest degree.

All stock companies at the World studio have been dispensed with. The actors will be hired by the picture. There will be no actors on the pay roll while idle.

The closest sort of co-operation between directors and stars has been arranged for. This means that both must approve of a story before work is started on it and know definitely just what they hope to accomplish and how they are going to do it. The technical men and location men will with the directors and stars all participate in a conference with Charles Sarver, the scenario head, before starting a new film.

One of the big causes of wasted time and money at studios has been due to a lack of knowledge on the part of some one in authority of all the props and essentials necessary for the filming of a scene. World Pictures has arranged to eliminate all this. Before starting a production the director, studio manager and technical man confer and make a list of absolutely everything needed for each scene. Each actor is given a list of the clothes he or she is to wear in the play and the numbers of the scenes in which the various costumes are to be worn. These lists are checked up each evening with the actors.

Jokes About Marriage.

Philip J. Hurn, of the Triangle scenario staff, received this telegram from a friend: "Just heard you were married. Congratulations." To this Hurn replied: "Report untrue. Have no intentions of getting married." By return wire came this: "Congratulations."

Reorganization of World's Production Department

MY recent meeting with Lee Doughterty, film editor par excellence," said William Smart, technical director of World Pictures, "who has again become an associate of mine, recalls my former days at the old Biograph studio on Fourteenth street. From my experienc of nine years with the Biograph, I became strongly imbued with the belief that the manufacture of the motion picture could be standardized, as every other commercial product has been. This, of course, is heresy, but the admission by several large film corporations of the precarious condition existant, is striking confirmation of my statement.

"The technical department of the World studio has been reorganized on the principle of producing the most effective pictures with the smallest outlay and in the shortest time compatible with our ideals of box office winners. From the time that the O. K. has been placed upon a scenario by the editor and handed to the technical director, the technical department is in entire charge of preparing the sets for the director of the picture. This novel division of responsibility permits the director to concentrate upon the story, continuity, acting and any special effects which he wishes to incorporate. Not only does it enable both of us to accomplish more but saves the interminable hair pulling by an overworked man. The various heads of the departments, such as the costumer, scupltor, electrician, scene painter, interior decorator, confer with me upon the requirements of their respective branches. A date is named for the shooting of each scene and these several heads are empowered with the responsibility of having their respective assignments prepared on time. In other words, there is not any diffusion of authority, but each one is acquainted with his work.

"The technical work of the studio is part and parcel of the inner wheels and is wholly lifted from the realm of the spectacular. Consequently it has been passed by as one of the minor elements of production whereas in truth it is the pivot. Without suitable sets, proper furniture, appropriate arrangement of interiors, and the fourscore other accessories of the work, no director or actor with a story of surpassing merit could succeed in creating a picture saleable in the Congo.

" It has taken me some years to realize my ambitions. Facilities of the World studios have been placed at my disposal for the experimenting and installation of some ideas which a year ago seemed chimerical. Today, however, they have been received in a most receptive attitude. This change is a sign of health, of a realization that the motion picture producer has not reached the stage in which he can take the high-and-mighty know-it-all manner toward the misguided mortal possessing differing opinions."

Chaplin Working Day and Night on Initial Picture

CHARLIE CHAPLIN will shortly be flickering along on the screen again with the presentation of his initial First National Exhibitors' Circuit production, the title of which is "A Dog's Life." The famous comedian is now thundering down the home-stretch of his story, working day and night on what he claims will be the greatest comedy ever turned out by him.

Chaplin is carrying out the same policy with his present contribution to the film world as he has in the past, that of not making public the slightest nature of his story until the subject is well on its way to the exhibitors.

Of the story it may be said that it is of a nature entirely different from anything the star has heretofore attempted, and not alone will his comedy antics provoke outbursts of joy, but he has also added touches of pathos similar to those evidenced in "Easy Street" and "The Vagabond."

Several new faces will be seen in the forthcoming picture, as well as the ever welcome features of Edna Purviance. Fred Starr shoulders the character that usually fell tp the late Eric Campbell, and Zasu Pitts, the little artist who won many admirers with her portrayal of the sympathetic slave in Mary Pickford's "Little Princess," will be new to Chaplin followers.

Close to one hundred players have been used in the making of the picture, and the greater part of the action takes place in interior "sets," affording the star tremendous scope for unique comedy situations.

Following the first release it is planned to issue a Chaplin subject on an average of about every six weeks until the eight comedies, as contracted for, will have been released.

Wide Variety in Paramount Short Subjects for March

THE Paramount short releases for March include a varied assortment of subjects, with comedies, travel pictures, war incidents and four installments of the Benjamin Chapin series. Among the laughmakers are two Mack Sennett comedies, "Sheriff Nell's Tussle," released March 11, and "Those Athletic Girls," released March 25. Arbuckle contributes "The Bell Boy" on March 18.

The Burton Holmes Travelogues take the audiences from China to Alaska, with "On the Way to the Front with the Chinese Labor Corps," March 4; "The Alaska Cruise," March 11; "A Summer Day in Skaguay," March 18, and "Over the White Pass," March 25.

Fifteen separate subjects in the four releases of the Paramount-Bray make it truly "the magazine on the screen." They include "In the Moonshine Country," "Stage Women's War Relief," "Magic for Home Use," and a cartoon, "Pinkerton Pup's Portrait," released March 4. The release of March 11 includes "War and the Motorcycle," "Hawaii and Her Natives," and a cartoon by Wallace Carlson. In the March 18 release are presented "Rose Culture," "Uncle Sam's Coin Factory," "Physical Culture Terpischore," and a cartoon, "Hornets of the Sea," showing the workings of a submarine and its torpedoes, by J. F. Leventhal.

On March 25 the subjects are "Lumbering for Wartime," "Hawaiians and Their Strange Customs," "Women in the World of Work" (showing unique interior decorating), and a cartoon, "Bobby Dumps," by Earl Hurd.

GENERAL FILM TAKES "SHAME."
Will Distribute the Seven-Part Drama Produced by John Noble.

General Film has taken over the distribution of "Shame," John W. Noble's seven-reel drama of life. All United States rights, with the exception of New York City, are included in this deal, and an energetic sales campaign will be launched immediately by General Film. The success scored by this production in New York City gives promise that it will be one of the notable moneymakers in the feature class this year.

"Shame" is a powerful story of the world's unjust condemnation of a girl whose motives were of the best. Zena Keefe is the star, and Niles Welch her leading man. Miss Keefe plays the part of an innocent victim of circumstances in the prologue. She reappears as a girl of another generation, the picture unfolds a strikingly effective train of adventures, mirroring faithfully a graphic ordeal full of tears and smiles, ending with justice done the heroine. The theme involves the attitude of society toward the innocent children of no name.

"Shame" is perhaps the masterpiece of Director Noble, who produced such features as "Romeo and Juliet," "The High Road," and "The Awakening of Helena Ritchie." A wide range of advertising aids is available.

Ten Sweaters Weekly Is Triangle Output.

The knitting circle at the Triangle Coast studios, which includes most every girl in the playing forces, is co-operating with the Red Cross to aid the soldier boys in keeping warm. The weekly output averages ten sweaters, six pairs of socks and as many mufflers. Several of the girls are now mastering the intricacies of helmets.

Exhibitors Like "The Grand Passion."

Advance reports that have reached Bluebird exchanges tell of the favorable impression made upon the exhibitors who have during the last week given "The Grand Passion" its initial bookings. Dorothy Phillips is the featured star in this production, which has just been released as a Bluebird Special. The story is an adaptation of Thomas Addison's stirring romance, "The Boss of Powderville," which attracted considerable attention when published in a magazine.

The cast includes William Stowell, Jack Mulhall, Lon Chaney and Evelyn Selbie.

Scene from "The Brass Check" (Metro).

Five Special Fox Features.

FIVE special features are scheduled for release by William Fox during the month of March. On the 3rd the release is Jewel Carmen in "The Girl With the Champagne Eyes." In this production Miss Carmen takes the part of a girl pickpocket. She sends an innocent man to jail, repents, earns his forgiveness, and finally reforms and marries him.

March 10 the release is Peggy Hyland in "The Debt of Honor. This is the first picture Miss Hyland has made for Fox. It has a spy interest and a timely war plot, says the announcement from the Fox offices.

March 17 the release is Gladys Brockwell in "The Devil's Wheel." Many of the scenes in this production are laid in Paris, and the story revolves around a system evolved by a Marquis to beat the roulette wheel. The daughter of the Marquis is played by Miss Brockwell, who is made the heroine of a band of Paris Apaches.

Virginia Pearson in "A Daughter of France" is the release for March 24. As the title would indicate it is a war play. The scenes are laid along the battle front, and Miss Pearson plays the part of a French girl who is attacked by invading soldiers.

The release for March 31 is George Walsh in "The Kid Is Clever." This, it is said, will be one of the best pictures George Walsh has made. Announcement from the Fox offices is to the effect that it is full of sparkling comedy and surprise situations.

Scene from "The Family Skeleton" (Paramount).

Ray Coming March 11.

The next appearance of Charles Ray in a Paramount picture is an interesting study in mental suggestion released March 11 under the title of "The Family Skeleton." As Billy Bates, a young man who inherits a large fortune through the death of his father, the subject presents great dramatic possibilities in addition to the sensational and humorous features.

"The Family Skeleton" teaches a striking lesson in will power, in harmony with the ideas of modern thinkers and writers on psychology and demonstrates that bad habits are merely little ruts in which we travel, and if we can be shaken to another path we will forget them in the different environments. The production was directed by Victor I. Schertzinger under the personal supervision of Thomas H. Ince.

Mutt and Jeff Move to New Quarters in the Fox House

MUTT and Jeff—that is, the Mutt and Jeff of the films—have moved. The famous comedians of the animated cartoons have forsaken the parental roof, and through the formal process of legal adoption have become members of the large and growing family of William Fox.

This change of home was made during the present week, with the consent and assistance of Bud Fisher, the comedians' creator. Their first appearance under the new guardianship will take place March 24, and there will be subsequent appearances to the extent of about 500 linear feet once each week. Bookings will be handled exclusively through the Fox offices throughout the world.

Bud Fisher.

Under the new arrangement, Mutt and Jeff not only will have a new home, but a greatly extended field of activity. As newspaper cartoons they are known from one end of the country to the other, appearing regularly in the New York World, and being so widely syndicated that there is scarcely an important town in the country in which they are not published. They were introduced to the screen more than two years ago under the auspices of a corporation promoted by Bud Fisher, and since that time they have firmly established themselves as screen stars. Now they are to have the benefit of a larger distributing organization—become a regular feature of the William Fox output along with Standard Pictures, Fox Special Features, and Fox-Lehrman Sunshine Comedies.

A half reel of clean comedy with a hearty laugh for every click of the projector's ratchets is the promise made by the Fox management. There will be no change in the plan of release or the general style of the pictures, according to Mr. Fox, and assurance is given that there will be no delays in service in consequence of the new arrangement.

"When Mr. Fox contracted with Bud Fisher," according to Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, "he paid a premium as an additional inducement to Mr. Fisher to make Mutt and Jeff cartoons greater and funnier than ever before.

"This is not like a new proposition with a mass of detail work to be done. We are taking over the releasing of the animated cartoons from the point where the Bud Fisher Films Corporation leaves off. The productions, therefore, are for immediate release, and our branch offices are prepared now to furnish all details. Announcement of the subjects and their order of release will be made within the next week.

"The atmosphere of war is expected to be reflected in the pictures in the near future. Mr. Fisher, who until recently was a lieutenant in the United States Army, and who now is a captain in the British Army, will be in France within a comparatively short time. He has made all necessary arrangements for continuing his art work while abroad, and we naturally expect that what he does while abroad will be strong of the flavor of trench life and conditions in the immediate vicinity of the front."

Mr. Fisher's offices in New York City, it is understood, will be continued indefinitely.

Pathe Active at Paralta Studios.

PATHE activities at the Paralta studio at Los Angeles continue at high speed, with the force augmented by the arrival of Fannie Ward and George Fitzmaurice, who have gone west for the production of Sir William Young's famous play, "A Japanese Nightingale."

Frank Keenen is at work under the direction of Ernest C. Warde in Gilson Willets' adaptation of Sir Henry Irving's success, "The Bells."

Bessie Love has started on the production of a charming story by William Addison Lathrop, the working title of which is "A Little Sister of Everybody." George Fisher, who for some time past has been leading man for Bessie Barriscale, has been chosen as leading man for Miss Love in this picture.

Bryant Washburn has started work with Director William Worthington on a highly exciting mystery story of the Southwest, in which he appears in a series of adventures which clothe him in evening dress, smart afternoon attire, the garb of a Mexican poen, a cowboy's outfit and other unconventional costumes, donned for the purpose of rescuing the lady in the case from a distressing situation, in which she finds herself in the clutches of a Mexican gun runner. Rhea Mitchell has been engaged as the leading woman in this picture. George Fields has been engaged to play the "heavy" part in this Bryant Washburn-Pathe play.

World Pictures Opens New Boston Office

Carlyle Blackwell and General Officers of the Company Arrive for Ceremonious House Warming at Exchange—Crowds Attend.

By Richard D. Howe, 80 Sumner Street, Boston, Mass.

BOSTON, MASS.—The opening and dedication of the beautiful new exchange building erected by World Pictures to house its Boston branch occurred on February 28 and, judging from the crowds, it seemed as though all Boston had turned out to assist in the auspicious event.

Carlyle Blackwell, the famous World star, who, with World officials, came to Boston to assist in the ceremonies, was the center of a huge crowd from the time of his arrival. He was met at the station by a delegation of film fans and exhibitors who presented him with a gigantic floral offering. He was escorted to the exchange building by the orchestra of the Park theater, and at the exchange held an informal reception.

Ricord Gradwell, vice-president and general manager of World Pictures, who headed the delegation of World officials, was more than pleased at the expressions of appreciation of World pictures by New England exhibitors.

Lancaster Theater's First Anniversary.

The Lancaster theater, one of Boston's leading neighborhood picture houses, celebrated its first anniversary recently. Manager Charles Ross, who has had charge of the theater since its opening, arranged some beautiful decorations for the interior and exterior of the theater during anniversary week. He ran special shows and put on a special children's performance in the forenoon of one of the days last week, which was very successful.

Lessening of Fuel Restrictions Pleases.

New England moving picture houses have resumed their usual business schedules with the exception of the early closing house at night. The removal of the heatless Monday edict and the restoration of Tuesday as a regular theater day has brought great satisfaction and added receipts into the treasuries of New England theaters.

Expectations are that the volume of business this spring will be exceedingly pleasing to exhibitors throughout all New England. It has been a hard winter and people will want amusement.

Emery Theater Books Fox Film.

Providence, R. I.—The Fox Film program has been booked by the Emery Brothers for the Emery theater. They have dropped the services of two other film companies.

Maritime Provinces News.

By Alice Fairweather, "Standard," St. John, N. B.

Vincent McCabe Visits St. John.

ST. JOHN, N. B.—Visiting the Fox exchange, where J. Lieberman always has some items of interesting news, I learned that the new Fox Canadian general manager, Vincent McCabe, was recently in St. John for a few days. Mr. McCabe has been in Toronto and Montreal, and now is looking over conditions in the Maritime Provinces. He expects that some of the Standard productions will be in St. John shortly for trade showings—"The Honor System," "When a Man Sees Red," "The Conqueror," and "The Daughter of the Gods." Sunshine comedies are to be here soon as well.

Fox pictures which have been favorites here lately are "The Two Little Imps," shown recently at the Star theater, and "The Yankee Way," at the Gem theater.

Donald McCrae Weds.

Donald McCrae has gone to Boston, and is to be married there. When he returns he will go to Campbellton to take up new duties as manager of the theaters at that place and at Dalhousie. He purchased these houses from W. Dimmock, of Campbellton.

Maritime Trade Notes.

The Palace theater, Sydney, C. B., started with the Fox service last coming week.

E. R. Lynn, of the Casino, Sydney, is in Boston. While he is away his interests in Sydney are being looked after by A. K. Mundee, of St. John.

T. Cooper, general auditor of the General Film Company, has been in St. John closing up the office of that company in the city.

The manager of the Regal theater, St. John, tells me that he has had a great many features and special pictures lately.

A trade showing of "The Lust of the Ages" was held at the Unique theater this week, and "Thais."

"The Lust of the Ages" will be seen at the Academy of Music, Halifax, at Sydney, St. Stephen, Wolfville, N. S., and Glace Bay, C. B.

"The Deemster" and "The Warrior" are both back in this territory for a second running, and are being booked up well.

"Madame Who" is to be here shortly.

Harry E. Lewis has joined the Pathe art forces to continue the handicraft that first attracted attention when he was with International, and later with Paramount.

Pine Tree State Letter

From J. P. Flanagan, Bangor, Me.

New Booker for Bangor General.

BANGOR, ME.—The local General Film office has a new booker in the person of Helen F. Barry, of Worcester, Mass. This recent acquisition makes the staff complete, and, as Mnaager Tinker would say, "100 per cent. efficient."

W. H. O'Brien Visits Bangor.

W. H. O'Brien, Maine representative for the Fox Film Corporation, was a recent business visitor in Bangor.

East New Jersey Operators' Unions Dance

Local Unions of Newark and Jersey City Hold Annual Frolics—Souvenir Programs in Newark Has Stars for Soldier-Members

By Jacob Kalter, 25 Branford Place, Newark, N. J.

NEWARK, N. J.—The annual ball of Moving Picture Machine Operators' Union, Local 244, was held February 20, at Kreuger's Auditorium. The committee in charge of arrangements consisted of Henry Debus, Robert Kellett, Henry Herdegen, James Corbett, Joseph Valentine, Leonard Wolven, Morris Heslowitz, Vincent Schauler, Harry Gold, Jack Walsh. Leonard Wolven was floor manager, assisted by James E. Young, Robert Kellett, and Herman R. Metz. The reception committee was composed of Miss Rose E. Tapley, Reginald Cooper, William Uessler, William Totton, Fred Young, Gus Benner, Fred Michaels.

The souvenir program contained a page with three stars on it in honor of the boys "over there." The boys are Dave McCracken, Joseph Jennings, and Arthur Whelpley.

A large delegation of representatives of the Simplex Machines was in attendance at the ball. Among those from the Precision Machine Company were Sam Kaplan, president of Local 306; Rudolph C. Kneuer, Dave Narcey, Arthur Duron, Lawrence Johnson, and Charles B. Wilson. They arrived in a body from New York.

The affair was a great success both socially and financially.

Atlantic Controls Ditmars-Bruce Films.

The Atlantic Film Company, with offices in the Leavitt building, Newark, N. J., 126 West 46th street, New York, now controls the Raymond L. Ditmars and Robert A. Bruce scenic pictures in this territory. The same concern also owns the McClure picture, "Mother," made by George Loane Tucker. These pictures, especially the educationals, are fast gaining popularity in this section.

May Added to Civilization.

Ira May has joined the Civilization Film Corporation, Strand Theater building, Newark, N. J., as sales representative. He is now covering southern New Jersey.

Now Called "The Price."

By order of the police authorities of Newark, N. J., the title of the Lois Weber production featuring Mildred Harris has been changed from the "Price of a Good Time" to "The Price."

Hudson County Union Dances.

Jersey City.—The fourth annual dance of the Moving Picture Operators' Union, Local 384, was held February 27 at Grand View Hall, and was largely attended by exhibitors, exchange men, and others interested in the trade.

Matawan Amusement Company.

Matawan, N. J.—The Matawan Co., Inc., has been incorporated for the purpose of operating theaters. Jacob R. Lefferts is listed as statutory agent. The concern is capitalized at $25,000. The incorporators are George W. Parker, August Kettner, Jr., and Clifford N. Hulsart.

Buffalo Less Hindered by Lightless Nights

Fuel Administration Lets Up on Display Lights of Theaters—Only Two Nights a Week Left Dark—Other Notes.

By Joseph A. McGuire, 157 North Elmwood Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—Buffalo exhibitors have been informed by local Fuel Administrator Elliott C. McDougall that the lightless night order has been modified. Under the latest ruling lights will be permitted every night except Thursdays and Sundays. On the remaining five nights the theaters will be allowed to burn their display lights one-half hour after sunset and continue them until one-half hour after the opening.

F. I. L. M. Club Appoints Transportation Committee.

The Buffalo F. I. L. M. club has appointed this transportation committee: Messrs. Taylor, Hopkins and Allan. As representatives of the club they will confer with the express companies to arrange, if possible, for better shipping service.

S. R. Banks at Head of Buffalo Metro.

S. R. Banks has been appointed manager of the Metro, Buffalo. He was formerly connected with the Goldwyn exchange in this city, and at one time was in the law division of the Paramount in New York. Mr. Banks is contemplating a trip through all the small towns in western New York.

"We shall heartily co-operate with all the exhibitors," said Mr. Banks. "All our films will be in good condition when sent out and they will be shipped so as to reach the exhibitor in time for the matinee performances."

E. M. Saunders, vice-president and general manager of the Metro, was a Buffalo visitor. Other Metro callers were Mr. Griswold, Savoy theater, Syracuse, and Mr. Roe, Turn Hall, Syracuse. Morris Fitzer, road representative, is campaigning on "Blue Jeans" and other Metro productions for the Buffalo office.

New Theater Planned for Niagara Falls.

Plans have been filed for a new moving picture theater at Niagara Falls. The house will be opposite the Elite theater and will seat 500. The owner is J. F. McDonald.

Manager Green Out in His Territory.

Louis Green, Buffalo manager of Perfection Pictures, is covering Rochester and Syracuse, concentrating on "Ruggles of Red Gap." In his absence J. V. Allan is in charge of the local office. O. A. Seigal has joined the Perfection staff as salesman. D. H. Bergh, personal representative of George Kleine, was a Buffalo visitor. It is reported that Mr. Kleine's reissue of "Quo Vadis" is going over big in the Buffalo territory.

Systematize Communities' War Giving.

Franklinville, N. Y.—Exhibitors and film devotees of Franklinville, N. Y., have been overrun with charity solicitors, but now a new plan will bring relief in that town. At a mass meeting to organize the community on a systematic basis of giving for all war charities, an organization to be known as the Franklinville War Chest has been formed. No member will be allowed to pledge less than fifty cents a month, and those who pledge this amount, or more, will be guaranteed immunity from all forms of solicitation of the kind mentioned.

G. H. Christoffers Plans Long Trip.

G. H. Christoffers, manager and secretary of the United Film Service, 86 Exchange street, Buffalo, is planning a trip through the state. He is releasing "The Public Defender," "Parentage," "Birth of Democracy," and other features.

"We are getting some big state rights features of guaranteed box-office value," said Mr. Christoffers. "This is the only independent exchange in western New York. An exhibitor can book one of our features or book them all. We will not force him to book bad ones to get good ones, and we will help him to make money. 'The exhibitor first and fair prices' is our mottor."

Fred B. Murphy, president and general manager of the United Film, recently visited Mr. Christoffers. As one film man remarked, "Mr. Murphy was sailing on the top wave, with his old-time smile." Another called was Dr. C. A. Willatt, producer of the Technicolor production, "The Gulf Between," showing at the Majestic theater, Buffalo. With Dr. Willatt was J. E. Francke, manager of the film. "The Gulf Between," reproduced in nature's own colors, drew capacity business here.

Two Theaters Darken.

The Globe moving picture theater, Buffalo, has been closed. A "For Rent" sign appears in front of the Rialto theater, this city.

Interesting Buffalo Jottings.

"Washington Crossing the Delaware," a familiar picture, was greeted with marked applause at every performance during a recent week at Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo. The picture was made in silhouette and splendidly colored. The inscription read: "Washington stopped at nothing to achieve victory. War Savings Stamps mean victory and prosperity."

Harry Marsey has taken over the Arcadia moving picture theater, Buffalo. Matt Whitman, representing Mr. Marsey, is booking for the Allendale and the Arcadia, this city.

E. C. Winegar, manager of the Central Park moving picture theater, Buffalo, conducted a farewell party at his playhouse on a recent Monday night for the benefit of the 114 drafted men of the twelfth division just before their departure to the military camps.

The affair was under the auspices of the Fourteenth Precinct Police Reserves Association and the Twelfth Division Relief Association.

Then men were presented with useful gifts made by the women of the community. These consisted of sweaters, helmets, scarfs, tobacco, comfort kits, and other essentials. Besides the presentation, Mr. Winegar gave a high-class show for the young men. He is an enthusiastic worker for the benefit of the boys who have joined the colors. Is it any wonder that such a manager has a solid backing in his community?

Theaters Find Mondays and Tuesdays Dull.

TORONTO, ONT.—A considerable number of exhibitors have been conducting matinee performances on Tuesdays in an effort to make up for loss of business on heatless Mondays. Several Toronto exhibitors operated their houses continuously from 2 P. M. to 11 P. M. on Tuesday, February 26—the first time that they had ever presented a continuous performance during the afternoon and evening of one day. The general report was that the special Tuesday shows had not proved profitable and might be discontinued. There is also a general feeling that the Monday holidays for the theaters will be quickly terminated.

Exchange managers in Toronto declare that quite a number of exhibitors are refusing to book special attractions or new serials for the first two or three days of a week on account of the loss of business on Mondays. This means that there are quite a few open Monday and Tuesday dates for serials during the next twelve to fifteen weeks. Thus the heatless holidays are affecting business some time ahead. This is a detail which the exchange managers had not taken into consideration.

New Princess Theater Has Escalator.

Montreal.—The new escalator at the New Princess theater, Montreal, is now in operation. It is ninety-three feet in height, and is intended to carry patrons to the top gallery without trouble or inconvenience. An electric ticket selling device is operated in connection with the escalator in order to facilitate matters further. The moving stairway will accommodate eighty-five people comfortably at one time. The people are required to use the ordinary staircases when leaving the theater.

Reserve Seats at Lyric Theater.

Hamilton.—The management of the Lyric theater, Hamilton, Ontario, has adopted the policy of reserving the majority of all seats on the ground floor, as well as those of the boxes, for every evening performance and Saturday matinees. Only the boxes are reserved for matinees. The usual program each week consists of a five or six reel feature, Pathe's Weekly and vaudeville.

Francais Theater Changes Policy.

Montreal.—The manager of the Francais theater, Montreal, has decided to change his film programmes twice each week, new programmes being presented on Sundays and Thursdays. The first features to be shown after the adoption of the new policy were the Triangle release, "Ashes of Hope," and Pathe's, "The Other Woman." Other pictures included the first episode of the new Universal serial, "The Bull's Eye," and the Pathe News during the first half of the week and a two-reel comedy, with the Pathe Gazette, during the second half of the week. The new Chaplin releases have been secured for the Francais, this theater getting first run of the Chaplins for Montreal's East End.

The Francais gives matinees daily and two performances each evening. Afternoon prices are 10c. and 15c.; night prices range from 10c. to 25c.

Ontario Notes of Interest.

The Arrow Features Syndicate, 100 King street West, Toronto, has been organized to handle the Canadian rights for several special productions, including W. H. Clune's "The Eyes of the World" and "Ramona." The company also offers to sell the Canadian rights to "Persuasive Peggy," "Souls Redeemed," "Weavers of Life" and "Right Off the Bat." The head of the new syndicate is Mr. Charles Haystead, who recently took "The Fall of the Romanoffs" over the road for the Regal Films, Ltd. He is acting as the general manager.

Lindsay.—Manager Roenigh of the Academy theater, Lindsay, Ontario, is paying $1,000 for the installation of a new electrical system throughout his theater.

Chatham.—The several moving picture theaters in Chatham, Ontario, have been compelled to close their doors for two weeks by the local medical health officer as a precaution against the spread of smallpox, several cases of which were discovered in February. The schools were also closed during this period.

Kingston.—At the request of the local fuel controller the moving picture theaters of Kingston, Ontario, agreed to close on Tuesdays as well as Mondays for several weeks in order to help relieve the local coal situation. Later the theater managers submitted a proposition whereby they would close the theaters on alternate nights, providing that they would be permitted to hold their usual performances on every Saturday. No decision has been announced regarding the latter proposal.

Call on Exchange to Decide

Who Holds the Contracts Is Question Before Managers of the Masonic.

By D. M. Bain, Wilmington, N. C.

NEW BERN, N. C.—A small sensation was sprung in New Bern last week when it became known that F. M. Hahn, one of the managers of the new Masonic theater, a moving picture house backed by the Masonic fraternity of the city, had entertained seriously a proposition from Messrs. Lovick and Taylor to pool the interests of the Masonic with their two theaters, the Athens and Star.

Lovick and Taylor for years enjoyed the entire theatrical patronage of New Bern until a civic movement headed by the Masonic lodge and aiming to secure better pictures and better presentation opened the Masonic theater on January 1 of this year. Backed by the support of the Masonic lodge, the theater enjoyed unprecedented prosperity, booking the entire Paramount and Artcraft output.

When the committee of Masons who constitute a board of managers for the Masonic very readily declined the proposition, Mr. Hahn immediately resigned as manager and announced that when he left the Masonic he would carry with him the contract for the Paramount and Artcraft service, stating that the contract was made to him personally and not to the Masonic theater. This assertion caused immediate consternation among the board of managers of the Masonic, as they were under the impression that all contracts for service should have been made in the name of the Masonic lodge or the Masonic theater, and that they should have the privilege of retaining the service. It was asserted that it was the plan of the amalgamation to close the Masonic except for an occasional legitimate attraction, which would have left the Lovick and Taylor organization still in control of the situation. It was also reported that Mr. Hahn was to be connected with the management of the theaters at a much greater salary that the Masons were paying him, as a consideration for transferring to them the Paramount and Artcraft franchise for the city.

Immediately after the conference, the Masonic management wired the Famous Players-Lasky exchange at Washington to send a representative to settle the matter, and Harry Randall, traveling man in that territory for Famous Players-Lasky, arrived in New Bern Tuesday, February 26.

O. A. Kaffer, formerly assistant to Mr. Hahn, will be active manager of the Masonic in the future, it is announced, and has announced his attention of retaining the Paramount-Artcraft service for the Masonic theater.

H. J. Lovick, when seen by the representative, declined to make any statement upon the present status of the wrange.

IN CLEVELAND.

Masterpiece Takes Larger Quarters.

Cleveland—On account of the increased business picked up recently and the addition of many new features, the Masterpiece Film Attractions has moved to larger quarters in the Sincere building, Cleveland, which is directly opposite its former offices.

In making this move, Leon D. Netter, one of the owners of the Masterpiece, also announced the establishment of a Cincinnati branch in the Strand theater building.

The Masterpiece started in Cleveland about ten months ago, handling state rights features and exploiting them a la road show style. This company has been very successful to date and only recently purchased several big features starring William S. Hart.

The Allen Film corporation, which had offices with the Masterpiece, also moved with that company.

Film Trade News of Week in Cleveland

New Theaters in Cleveland and Akron—"Song of Songs" Passes Ohio Board—Business and Personal Notes—Theater Changes.

By M. A. Malaney, 218 Columbia Bldg., Cleveland, O.

CLEVELAND, O.—Cleveland is to have a big new theater, but not for photoplays.

This house will be built downtown, and will be the home of Klaw & Erlanger Attractions. It will be a successor to the Opera House, where legitimate shows have held forth for many years.

The new theater will be built on Euclid avenue, between the Square and East 14th street. It will open the fore part of 1920, when the present lease of the Opera House runs out. It is understood the Opera House property will not be available for theatrical purposes after that time.

New Theater Building in Akron.

Akron.—Akron is to have a large, new theater to be called the Hippodrome. With it will be combined a spacious arcade for stores. The work of building the structure has already commenced. The location is at 182 South Main street. There will be about 2,000 seats.

The company promoting the venture is selling stock at $10 per share to the public. It is using advertisements in newspapers of Akron and Cleveland offering this stock.

"Song of Songs" Passes in Ohio.

After several weeks, during which they reconsidered their action, the Ohio censors have issued a certificate of approval of Elsie Ferguson's latest picture, "The Song of Songs."

But it was necessary to make many changes before the censors passed it. These were chiefly in the titles, only two or three scenes being eliminated.

Morris Safier Weds Rose Selznick.

Washington's Birthday was celebrated in a novel way by Morris Safier and Rose Selznick, employees of the Cleveland Triangle office, when they went to the East 55th Street Temple and were married. It was a real film romance, as Mr. Safier met Miss Selznick only about a year ago when he came to Cleveland from Pittsburgh.

Miss Selznick is a sister of Lewis J. Selznick. Morris says he had to work harder to sign up Rose than he ever did to sign up an exhibitor, and that this contract is not a yearly one, but a non-cancellation contract.

Sam Morris, district manager for Select, was best man. The couple left for a wedding trip to Chicago, and upon their return will live at Hotel Winton.

Alice Brady to Come to the Stillman.

Manager Jack Kuhn, of Loew's Stillman theater, Cleveland, has announced that Alice Brady will be seen in person at his theater in the near future. Miss Brady is contemplating a tour of the country, and the Loew houses in Ohio have been placed on her list of visits.

John Murray Is Better.

Warren.—John Murray, owner of the Opera House, Warren, Ohio, while still confined to his home, is recovering from a severe bronchial illness.

Eastern Ohio Jottings.

Cleveland.—The Milo theater, on Miles avenue, Cleveland, has been sold by Flahaven and Palmer to J. V. Wolcott. Mr. Wolcott now owns three theaters, the Princess, downtown; the Iris, on West 25th street, and the Milo.

Dover.—E. A. Stephan has purchased the Weber theater, Dover, Ohio, and will continue to operate it as a first class theater.

Cleveland.—R. J. Fitzgerald, for some time auditor for the Victor Film Company, Cleveland, resigned March 1 to accept a position as baliff in the Court of Appeals.

"The Whip" is being exploited in Ohio by J. Frank Hatch, the Newark, N. J., film man. He has an office at 804 Penn avenue, Pittsburgh, where bookings are arranged and shipments made.

Two Mansfield Theaters Combine.

Mansfield.—Within the last year or so there have been a great many combinations in Ohio cities, but none is of any more importance than that of the arrangement between the Majestic and Grand theaters, Mansfield, Ohio.

These two houses are now under the management of William A. Partello, who, as he says himself, is side-tracking junk or cheap pictures and putting in the best. He runs many specials like "Intolerance," "The Whip," "Blue Jeans," and is doing well with them. Billy also uses Metro, Fox, Goldwyn, Artcraft, and other well known brands.

Cincinnati News Letter

By Kenneth C. Crain, 307 1st Nat. Bk., Cincinnati, O.

McMahan Out of Forest Theater.

CINCINNATI, O.—Isaac McMahan, of the firm of exhibitors and film men, has announced the disposal to Charles Schaengold and F. Jos. Lamping of his interest in the Forest theater, the handsome Avondale house in which he has owned a share for several years. Among the reasons which caused McMahan to make the sale were his increasing work in other direction, notably in his personal management of the new Gifts theater.

"Alimony" Released by First National Circuit.

The first release of the recently organized First National Exhibitors' Circuit seen in Cincinnati was "Alimony," which formed the principal feature in a recent bill at the Family. The picture has many strong drawing points, and proved a good attraction, coupled with the first of the series of Cincinnati military pictures recently announced. This initial military film shows the work of the home guards during the Ohio River floods, and some of the ice scenes could pass for those taken in the Arctic regions.

Fire in Youngstown Theater Booth.

Youngstown.—The Roma theater, on East Federal street, was recently endangered when friction ignited a film which was being run. The blaze destroyed everything in the operating booth, including nine reels of film. Andrew Masel, the operator, was painfully burned about the head and hands in his efforts to put out the fire. The fire department was called out, and prevented the fire from spreading to other parts of the house.

Had G. A. R. Men as Guests.

Youngstown.—Manager Joseph Trunk, of the Dome theater, who never overlooked an opportunity to do a graceful and kindly act, or to prove that the Dome is a progressive house, presented "The Spirit of '17" recently, and invited the members of the local G. A. R. post to attend a performance as his guests. The old soldiers turned out at the designated performance in full force, and greatly enjoyed the picture.

Rural Exhibitors in Kentucky Prosper.

Cincinnati, O—McMahon & Jackson say that of the attractions which they control in Ohio, bookings are being continued without interruption. One of the firm's salesmen returned from a trip through the southern end of the state with $14,000 worth of business. Country exhibitors without exception are doing a splendid business, according to Mr. McMahon, and are eager for up-to-date attractions which promise to interest their patrons.

Louisville Has Chance to See Good Boxing

By Ohio Valley News Service, 1404 Starks Bldg., Louisville, Ky.

LOUISVILLE, KY. Citizens of Louisville who haven't seen a boxing match for fifteen or twenty years, or since the days that the old Avenue, Hopkins and other theaters staged some interesting matches, are now managing to see some classy bouts, which cannot be interfered with by the police or other authorities, as Uncle Sam is sponsoring these matches, which are either between soldiers or civilian boxing directors of soldiers at Camp Taylor, in the Liberty theater. Five hundred seats were offered to the public last week, and were quickly grabbed. Park McFarland, the famous ring artist, who has been boxing instructor at the camp, has taught the men a lot about the game, and in such a large number of men there are always to be found a few good boxers. McFarland also boxed a few rounds. These matches will be held every week, it is understood.

The Walnut theater has been handling excellent business this past week in connection with the showing of Dave Griffith's new spectacle, "Intolerance," which has been prescribed a success by Louisville picture fans. This picture has been pulling so well, partly due to excellent weather and good advertising, that the house may hold the film over for a second week's showing.

High winds on February 25 caused a lot of wreckage from a nearby building to fall on the glass canopy of the Keith theater at Louisville, resulting in a shower of glass, and scaring a number of patrons just as the house was crowding for the evening show. No one was hurt.

New Albany, Ind.—The Kerrigan theater recently arranged for a special band concert given by the boys from the Forty-Fifth Regiment at Camp Taylor, Louisville. The proceeds of the concert were turned over to the war camp community fund.

LaCenter, Ky.—The old Globe theater has been sold by George Wolf to Aubrey Sale, who will convert the building into a store for general merchandise, resulting in LaCenter losing her only picture theater.

Ada Meade Theater Changes Hands.

Lexington, Ky.—The Ada Meade theater of Lexington, Ky., which has been operated as a picture theater, vaudeville house, etc., has been sold by T. C. Fuller, of Lexington, to W. M. James, of Columbus, O., who also operates the Broadway theater at Columbus. Possession of the playhouse was given immediately, and it has been announced that pictures will be run every Sunday and during the rest of the week vaudeville at fifteen, twenty-five and thirty-five cents. The force at Lexington will include Howard Feigley, formerly manager of the Keith house at Columbus; Walter Neal, stage manager; Jess Williams, ticket seller, and Walter H. Scribner, orchestra director.

New Association of Theater Managers.

A new theatrical association has been formed in Louisville by the operators of stage attraction theaters, who will probably work hand and glove with the local photoplay association, composed of the picture exhibitors. The new organization is the Theatrical Managers' Association of Louisville. The new organization replaces the old Louisville Managers' Protective Association. The officers elected were: President, Carl Rettick; vice-president, William Woolfolk; secretary-treasurer, Harry J. Martin.

Continue As Exhibitors to Fill Contracts

Mt. Sterling, Ky.—Judy & Gay, formerly of the Paramount theater, who, upon the expiration of a lease on the building in January, decided to withdraw from the field, have started the Liberty theater. The firm had every intention of withdrawing, but later found that contracts for pictures were still effective and that the firm would be held to the contracts. The other houses were either booked on service contracts or unwilling to pay for such high-priced service, and the concern has been forced to go back into the picture business to run out contracts for Paramount and Artcraft pictures. It was announced that the new theater would operate three nights out of each week—on Mondays, Fridays and Saturdays, opening on February 16 with Marguerite Clark in "The Seven Swans." The firm has placed the admission price at ten cents, including the war tax, and will run two matinee shows each of the three days.

Short Notes from Kentucky.

The Bell Amusement Co., capital $500, has been incorporated by Stephen Bell, A. Gaddie and George Marshall.

"The Birth of a Nation," which was recently shown for the second time in Louisville, is now making a second tour of the state and was recently shown at the Garrick theater, Madisonville, Ky.

Winchester, Ky.—The Queen theater is a thing of the past, and is now being remodeled into a store room.

Maysville, Ky.—The merchants of Maysville have been giving a series of free shows at the Washington theater in the afternoon, every merchant issuing free tickets with cash sales.

Louisville.—The wiring was recently overhauled and other necessary improvements made at the Rex theater, which was slightly damaged a few weeks ago when fire broke out in the basement. The house lost very little time.

St. Louis Letter

By Mary Moore, 6035 Kingsbury Block, St. Louis, Mo.

Francis J. Fegan Truly on the Job.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—"Barney" Fegan is the "live wire" of Film Row in St. Louis. If there is anything going on he knows about it. He has recently told of several important changes in film offices, even before the changes have taken place. When it comes to co-operative efforts, he is the general mover of all progressive plans in the distributors' circle, and while he is doing all this he has during the last year and a half successfully raised the standard of the Standard Film Company in St. Louis. Fegan is a capable manager and an all-around likeable chap. Much of his success is said to be due to his remarkable nose for news—he is always on the job before the thing happens, which is an admitted achievement in this field of keen rivalry. The strange thing about Barney—as everyone knows him—is that his real name is Francis J. Fegan and not Barney. Not more than twenty people of his wide circle of acquaintances know that this is his real name.

Francis J. Fegan

Notes of the Trade in St. Louis.

Joe Blume, who went to Kansas City with Sid Baker to join the Foursquare forces in that city, has returned to town and has lined up with the Goldwyn office under Manager Bush.

Maurice Stahl has left the General Film offices and as yet has not been connected up yith any other company.

Henry Sanders, one of the leading exhibitors of Cape Girardeau, took enough time from business last week to come to St. Louis and spend six actual 8-hour days in selecting programs for his houses for the coming months. William Sohm, secretary and manager of the Belasco theater in Quincy, spent four days in St. Louis doing likewise. Both attended the meeting of the Exhibitors' League Friday.

Leo Levy, formerly of St. Louis and more recently of Kansas City, this week returned to his home and is said to be ready to sign up with the Paramount company, under Manager McKean.

S. J. Hankin, head of the Central Film of this city, is the only distributor here who deals directly with a foreign field through a personally arranged and directed exchange. He has a large clientele in Mexico and South America.

St. Charles, a suburb of St. Louis, has started something new. Rev. Fred A. Henry, pastor of the Fifth Street Methodist Church of that town, announces that on Sunday nights during Lent and probably during the future—(it all depends on the congregation) he will have a motion picture outfit at the church with a real operator and screen.

Prairie State News Letter

By Frank H. Madison, 623 South Wabash Ave., Chicago.

Theater Changes in Nebraska.

SUPERIOR, NEB.—Mrs. Doer has sold the Empress theater to E. C. Preston, proprietor of the Sterling.

Kearney.—Manager Saup, of the opera house, has installed moving picture equipment, and will play features which are too big for a house of small seating capacity to handle. The first feature booked was Theda Bara in "Cleopatra."

Omaha.—J. E. Kirk, who has been connected with various film companies in Omaha, has purchased the Grand theater at Sixteenth and Locust streets from J. W. Rachman.

Omaha.—Manager Jensen turned the Hamilton theater over for a benefit performance for St. Andrew's church.

Dakota Theater Notes.

Sioux Falls, S. D.—The return engagement of "Civilization" was played at the Olympia, where it ran three days.

Grand Forks, N. D.—After a controversy which attracted considerable attention it was decided that war pictures would not be shown in Grand Forks on Sundays even though under the auspices of the North Dakota Council of Defense. The Grand Forks Home Loyalty League, which had charge of the Grand theater for these Sunday shows, defended the pictures, and indicated a willingness to let the matter be carried into the courts. However, the State Council of Defense interposed an objection, and it was decided not to continue the fight.

Dayton News Letter

By P. J. G., Dayton Correspondent.

Rudolph Knoepfle, Fox Salesman, Popular.

DAYTON, O.—In order to be successful in Dayton a film salesman needs only get on a friendly basis with a number of exhibitors. After this is accomplished the rest is comparatively easy, for many contracts are signed at the league rooms here, and the writer has seen many changes take place there in regards to service. One salesman who has met with approval, according to the secretary of the Miami Valley Exhibitors' League, is one R. Knoepfle, who, when in Dayton recently, signed many new contracts, among them being the Elite, the Alhambra, and the Mecca, for Fox-Standard Pictures and Sunshine comedies. Many other houses contracted for the Fox program.

Snappy Dayton Pick-Ups.

The Woods theater in Dayton has booked several new programs, among them being Pathe, Fox, Paralta, and World Film.

Things that never happen. Al. Kinzeler, at the Elite, without several impromtu slides for Sunday exhibition in apology for poor express service.

Gus Kinzeler is no longer with the Kleine System. His resignation became effective two weeks ago.

Paul Kreiger has left Foursquare. R. H. Haines is now handling U. S. Exhibitors office as well as Foursquare.

Haven't seen Harry Shaw, of Mutual, for some time. It's time to report in Dayton, Harry.

George Davis flitted amongst us Daytonians recently on a stop-over from several northern Ohio towns.

The inseparable pair, Al Espy and E. Banker, are to play Fox pictures. Espy, at the Mirror, is using them now.

Robert Hirsch reports good business at the Old Glory.

"The Bar Sinister" at the Orpheum in Dayton went over very well.

The Ideal theater in Dayton is doing a good business, the house being a money-maker seven days a week, so claims John Siefert.

The East Majestic theater, Dayton, is open again, with John Siefert out. John is devoting all his time to the Ideal.

While in Dayton, J. A. Conant booked the "Wild Girl," with Eva Tanguay, for showing at the Alhambra theater.

Metro pictures continue at the Alhambra, this house is soon to present Fox Standard pictures and Sunshine comedies.

Elmer Rauh, who is stationed at Camp Sherman, Ohio, with the U. S. Army, was home for a few days recently. The Rauh estate owns the Auditorium theater here, at one time Dayton's most beautiful theater, which will be rebuilt soon.

Work on the new Dayton theater is progressing rapidly, but at the time of writing no definite date had been set for the opening.

Dayton will step up a notch or two with the opening of the Auditorium and the new Dayton theater.

IN DETROIT.

Business Notes.

Phil Charnas, now manager of the Majestic theater in Findlay, Ohio, was a recent Detroit visitor.

The Woodward Theater Co. will soon open a new theater on Woodward avenue, near Henry street, Detroit. It will seat about 350 and be for photoplays exclusively. The Woodward Theater Co. now operates the Grand Circus, Rosebud, La Salle, Comique and Woodward theaters. This will make their sixth theater in Detroit. The policy of the new house will be daily change.

Lloyd Simpson, who formerly operated theaters in Saginaw, is now salesman in Michigan for the Vitagraph Co.

Fuel Restrictions Lifted in Michigan

Exhibitors Feel Encouraged Over Prospects of Spring Business Now the Weather Has Grown Favorable—Still Have Two Lightless Nights.

By Jacob Smith, 710 Free Press Bldg., Detroit, Mich.

DETROIT, MICH.—Michigan exhibitors from now on have every reason to be optimistic and encouraged. The state fuel administrator has finally lifted all restrictions on theaters and business places permitting them to resume their former opening and closing hours. All he asks now is that theaters and business firms continue to observe lightless nights on Thursdays and Sundays in order to save electric current. This the theaters are perfectly willing to do. At the same time the announcement was declared removing all restrictions, the state fuel administrator urged every theater, household and business place to stock up their bins with coal during the summer so that there would be no recurrence of the crisis through which Michigan has passed. Michigan exhibitors will surely heed his advice so that next winter will see no theaters closed for want of fuel.

On top of the lifting of the ban by the state fuel administrator has come a big rise in the temperature and for the past two weeks the weather around Detroit has been more like spring. This has permitted people to get out into the air and has resulted in big increases in the attendance at the theaters. Theaters of every kind, large and small, downtown and in the outskirts, report a big increase in trade for the past two weeks.

The best indication that business is improving is the encouraging reports of the film exchanges and the supply houses. Not a film exchange manager is pessimistic—on the other hand, they all report a jump in the gross sales for each of the past two weeks, while L. J. Gardiner, manager of the United Theater Equipment Co., says that February is the best month the company has ever had in the way of sales of Power's machines and other new equipment handled by the U. T. E.

It shows that exhibitors are preparing for spring.

There is nothing new to report as yet relative to the manufacturer direct to exhibitor plan of booking as outlined by C. C. Pettijohn when he was in Detroit recently to talk before the A. E. A. of Michigan. A committee is still considering the plan from all angles, but has not yet made its complete report to the association. There is no doubt, however, that a circuit of theaters will be formed, and that the plan will be given a thorough tryout. Its ultimate and permanent success is a matter of conjecture. However, any plan that looks meritorious is worthy of a trial. "You never can tell till you try" is a true adage.

M. H. Starr Will Run Knickerbocker Theater.

M. Harlann Starr, recently salesman for Pathe, and former manager of the Madison, Washington and Empire theaters covering a period of five years, has taken full charge of the management and booking of the Knickerbocker theater, Detroit. Doc Owens, his predecessor, goes over to the Coliseum, an enterprise controlled by the same concern operating the theater.

Universal to Reopen Branch in Grand Rapids.

Grand Rapids.—The Universal Film Co. has decided to reopen a small distributing office in Grand Rapids. There will be kept on hand at all times a number of short subjects and features to take care of western Michigan exhibitors in emergency cases and to prevent there being any dark houses through non-arrival of film from other points. R. A. Von der Goltz, who has been with the Universal for some time, will hereafter make his headquarters in Grand Rapids.

Lloyd Hammond Will Conduct Reaper Theater.

Monroe.—Lloyd Hammond, for the past two years city salesman in Detroit for Mutual, has resigned to operate the Reaper theater in Monroe, Mich. J. Cairns, who formerly operated the Amo theater in Detroit, succeeds Mr. Hammond as city salesman.

George W. Weeks with Famous Players.

George W. Weeks, former manager of the Detroit Universal and recent manager for Hoffman Foursquare in Detroit, has been appointed city salesman in Detroit for Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and is already on the job.

J. E. Flynn Assumes Charge.

J. E. Flynn has arrived as manager of the Detroit office of Goldwyn and is now in charge, succeeding A. I. Shapiro, who has gone to New York to enlist.

Charles Darrell Will Manage Alhambra.

Charles Darrell, former advertising manager of the house organ of the John H. Kunsky theaters, Detroit, has been appointed manager of the Alhambra theater, Woodward and Kenilworth theaters, Detroit, which is operated by Mr. Kunsky.

J. F. Ryder Takes Managerial Post.

John E. Ryder, for the past year city salesman in Detroit for Famous Players-Lasky, has resigned to become acting general manager of the State Film Co., in which he is heavily interested financially.

Change of Policy at the Liberty.

The Liberty theater, Detroit, which has been operating on a policy of showing all features a full week since it opened, has changed its policy to two changes a week, and will book open. The first week under the new policy two Vitagraph features were shown.

Boy Born to G. W. Trendle.

George W. Trendle, general manager of the John H. Kunsky enterprises, Detroit, is now a proud father. A baby boy weighing nine pounds arrived on Washington's birthday. The funny thing is that Mr. Trendle himself was born on the fourth of July. Congratulations.

Michigan Pick-Ups Worth Noting.

The Madison theater, Detroit, the largest and newest of the Kunsky theaters, celebrated its first anniversary the week of March 3. A Vitagraph feature, "The Woman Between Friends," starring Alice Joyce, was the principal attractions.

Dave Mundstuk, of the Strand Features, Detroit, has purchased the Michigan rights to the Triangle-Keystone-Mack Sennett comedies, sixteen in all. He will release them one every two weeks. It was previously reported that Harry I. Garson had purchased these comedies, which was in error.

W. H. Rudolph, publicity manager for the Clara Kimball Young Co., New York City, has been spending the past week in New York handling the special publicity and advertising matter in connection with "Parentage" at the Drury Lane theater.

Tom Faland, manager of the Orpheum and Regent theaters, Detroit, announces a new policy for each theater. The Orpheum downtown will play eight acts of vaudeville and no pictures, while the Regent uptown will play six acts and feature pictures. The features are to be first-run only.

The Standard Film Service, Detroit, has a lady selling film, and she is proving very successful. We refer to Miss Maud Selden who formerly did special work for the same company in northern Ohio.

Two Dallas Exchanges Burn Out Together

Select and Standard Offices Suffer from Fire—Several Prints Are Destroyed—No Lives Are Lost.

By Douglas Hawley, The Times-Herald, Dallas, Tex.

DALLAS, TEX.—The Select Pictures Corporation and the Standard Film Company, Dallas, suffered loss by fire on Feb. 22, when a film ignited. The fire marshal's report is that a young woman—or two of them—engaged in examinations over an electric light, had wrapped a piece of paper about the light globe. The heat set the paper afire and the film caught from that. Eight brand new prints of Selznick, Brady, Talmadge and Clara Kimball Young future releases were destroyed. That some one wasn't injured was a miracle.

Manager C. C. Ezell, of the Select Corporation, has established temporary quarters next door to the damaged building, and new prints of the destroyed films were immediately ordered. N. F. Wertheimer owned the building and conducted the Standard concern, occupying the second floor portion. Wertheimer's loss in the building is put at $12,000. The loss in film may be estimated when the titles are considered and the statement is made that a number of older pictures also went up in smoke.

Kyle Theater at Beaumont Burns.

Beaumont, Tex.—Fire here on the morning of Feb. 21 gutted the Kyle theater building, a five-story structure in the heart of the city. The theater was under lease to E. H. Hulsey, but no moving picture films were concerned. The Elks and Neches clubs, located in the structure, sustained heavy losses.

Harry Thomas Makes Trip.

Orange, Tex.—Harry Thomas of the Airdome theater at Orange, has returned from a several-days' trip with Mrs. Thomas, spent in Dallas and North Texas. He reports a cordial welcome from the exchange men in the distributing center and that the "missus" had a good time in the big shops. Mr. Thomas is one of the best liked exhibitors in the state, and is always given a warm welcome by the exchange managers. The Airdome is doing a big business, particularly as a result of the establishment at Orange of a big shipbuilding yard. The theater building is being remodeled and made more attractive.

Dallas Trade Notes and Personals.

The week ending Feb. 23 came mighty near being a Goldwyn week in Dallas, with two big features running the full week at leading local houses. "Thais" was a crowd-getter at The Old Mill, and "Freedom of the World" brought almost a record attendance at the Queen

Jack Abrams, representing "Birth of a Nation" and "Intolerance," is in high glee. The two big pictures are going fine in Texas at the moment. They have been booked by a number of well known exhibitors who have visited Dallas.

Harry Barr of the People's theater, Beaumont, and H. A. Holten of the Port Arthur Amusement Company, Port Arthur, Tex., called on Dallas recently and booked new features. They each report south Texas in good shape, some rains having fallen, but more needed to make things just right.

P. C. Levy, of the Hippodrome and Strand theaters, Fort Worth, may soon be "over there" in the capacity of an interpreter or whatever other assignment he is given by the military authorities. Mr. Levy has been placed in the select service class under the draft, although he is just out of the age limit. He is a native born Frenchman. Ed. Phillips of the Egypt theater, Fort Worth, was another recent Dallas visitor.

Cleburne, Tex.—Miss Anna Clements of this place has sold The Best theater here to A. Price, who is now operating the amusement place. Miss Clements has conducted The Best theater for the last several years. Mr. Price is also well known in Cleburne.

Abilene, Tex.—Mrs. M. L. Payne is opening a moving picture house at this place, a new building now being under course of construction, which she will occupy. Mrs. Payne formerly conducted theaters at Colorado and Sweetwater and is well known to Texas exhibitors and exchange men.

Des Moines News Letter

By J. S. Shipley, 615 Locust St., Des Moines, Ia.

Al. Lichtman Visits.

DES MOINES, IA.—Al. Lichtman, general manager of Artcraft-Paramount, and A. D. Flintom, district manager, visited the local branch of the Kansas City Feature Film Company, distributors of these programs in the Iowa field, last week. Mr. Lichtman stated that conditions generally as he has found them on the trip from New York are most encouraging, and that he looks for brisk business in all quarters.

New Faces at Yale Photoplay Office.

Manager Stanley J. Mayer, of the Yale Photoplay Company, Des Moines, announces several additions to his working force. Lafe Clark has been promoted to the position of assistant manager. W. A. Cisco, formerly an exhibitor in Clinton, Iowa, and recently on the road for Bluebird, has been added to the sales force. Mr. Mayer is conducting a big spring drive on "The Whip."

Exhibitor-Soldier Writes from France.

Manager L. A. Sheridan, of the Pathe office, is in receipt of a letter from his brother-in-law, Lieutenant E. S. Guignon, with the U. S. Field Artillery in France. Mr. Guignon formerly operated a string of theaters in Idaho and Montana. The uncensored portion of his letter indicates that he is enjoying soldiering.

Jack Bilz Now Pathe Road Man.

Jack Bilz, former shipper in the Des Moines, Ia., Pathe office, has been promoted to road man, and started out on his initial trip.

Sam Goldflam Gets New Territory.

Sam Goldflam has been transferred to northern Iowa territory by the A. H. Blank Enterprises.

C. W. Champlin Gets House at Greene.

Greene, Ia.—The Crystal theater at Greene, Ia., has been taken over by C. W. Champlin, and after being remodeled will open with big features.

Smallpox Closes Osage Theater.

Osage, Ia.—Owing to an epidemic of smallpox all theaters in Osago, Ia., are closed, and will remain dark indefinitely. Three theaters are affected.

Hamlin & Barrett Dissolve.

Knoxville, Ia.—Hamlin & Barrett, who formerly operated motion pictures at Corydon and Allerton, have dissolved partnership, Mr. Hamlin retaining the houses at these towns, and Mr. Barrett taking over the Grand at Knoxville.

Iowa Business Notes.

Visiting exhibitors in the various Des Moines exchanges in the recent past included J. K. Black, of the Majestic, Fort Dodge; J. A. Newton, of the Lyric, Redfield; George Flack, of the City, Dickens, Iowa; Ed. McCray, of the Lyric, Oskaloosa.

First run of Pathe plays has been contracted for by the Casino theater in Des Moines, and it is understood that these pictures will be shown at the new Rialto when that house opens.

Harry Graham, manager of the Minneapolis Kleine office, accompanied by C. R. Micheal, Iowa representative for that office, spent several days in Des Moines recently. First run of "Brown of Harvard," "Ruggles of Red Gap," and other features was booked locally. Mr. Graham is much pleased with the change of policy, whereby the Kleine office distributes big pictures only, and states that business is on the jump.

I. Ruben, of Ruben and Finkelstein, owners of twelve downtown theaters in Minneapolis and St. Paul, was a Des Moines visitor recently. Mr. Ruben operated the first motion picture theater in Des Moines, the Lyric, and cleaned up a neat fortune in the picture business before entering upon the larger field in the Twin Cities. He called on many Des Moines friends while in the city.

R. S. Ballantyne, formerly manager of the Des Moines branch of Mutual, which was recently consolidated with the Omaha office, was a Des Moines visitor a few days ago.

Film Trade Jottings from Kansas City

Universal, Jewel and Bluebird Exchanges Now Under Manager H. W. Talbot—Other Changes in Local Offices—Midwest Exhibitors' Notes.

By Kansas City News Service, 115 Railway Exchange, Kansas City, Mo.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—The Bluebird and Jewel offices are now under the same roof with the Universal, at 214 East Twelfth street, Kansas City, Mo.

Milton Feld, who managed the Jewel office, is now sales manager for the combined office. He was practically the first manager of Jewel Productions, Inc. George Bowles, who managed the Bluebird office, has been working in the advertising department of the Kansas City Star and Times since the making of the change, February 18.

H. W. Talbott is manager for the entire output of the office, and has as his sales force F. Fladler, C. A. Jones, Frank Cass, Harry Young and Joseph Fox. The publicity for the Bluebird, Jewel, and Universal productions will be handled through the assistant manager, L. B. Douglas.

O. H. Bandy Will Manage New Theater.

O. A. Bandy, formerly city salesman for the Kansas City Pathe office, and later Oklahoma traveling salesman for the Select Picture Corporation, has been selected to manage the New Isis theater now under construction. It wil be opened about April 1.

L. C. McElroy Will Cover Missouri.

L. C. McElroy has been added to the sales force of the Kansas City office of the Select Pictures Corporation. He was formerly a salesman for the Triangle, and will have Missouri as his territory.

Robert Thompson Gets Goldwyn Job.

The Kansas City Goldwyn offices announce that Charles Gregory, for several months a shipping clerk of the Kansas City office, has been succeeded by Robert Thompson, formerly with the World and Kleine offices here.

J. D. Thatcher Has New Territory.

J. D. Thatcher, film salesman of Kansas City and Des Moines, has been made Oklahoma and Kansas representative of the Kansas City General Film office to succeed E. Reynolds, now with Mutual. While in Kansas City, Mr. Thatcher worked for Triangle, and in Des Moines he worked for Universal. He is the organizer of the old Kansas City Screen

Club, and was the guiding force of Kansas City's Movie Ball.

Changes in Kansas City Mutual.

E. Reynolds, formerly a salesman for the local Triangle office and for the Kansas City General office, has been added to the sales force of the Kansas City Mutual. Ira F. Mantzke, manager of the office, announces also that William Parsons, formerly traveling salesman out of the Kansas City office, will work northern Missouri and northern Kansas for Mutual. Mr. Reynolds will travel in southern Missouri and southern Kansas. Both are old men in the Kansas City film business, and should prove valuable men for the Mutual.

Manager Ira. F. Mantzke reports that during the week of February 18 his office was favored with visits from 122 exhibitors. This fact is all the more remarkable when it is considered that Mr. Mantzke did nothing out of the ordinary to entertain them. They merely "dropped in" to look over the new pictures, meet the new manager, and to be generally sociable. One of the visitors, not one of the 122, was L. V. Calvert, formerly manager of the New Gary theater, Minneapolis. Mr. Calvert and the Mutual manager were at one time roommates in Minneapolis. Mr. Calvert is now in the regular army, and is stationed at Fort Leavenworth.

Visitors and Business Jottings.

B. A. Lucas, manager of the Kansas City office of the United States Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, returned February 23 from a ten-day trip through central Kansas. He left the same day for a two weeks' trip through central Iowa.

S. J. Baker, manager of the Hoffman interests here, left February 23 for a trip to Omaha, Nebraska, where he spent a week.

Harry Genet, New York Pathe representative, was a visitor in the Kansas City office of the company February 23. He was on his way from Denver, Colorado, to Dallas, Texas.

The Kansas City Metro office announces that the exchange is having a remarkable business on the four big pictures, Nazimova in "Revelation," Viola Dana in "Blue Jeans," Edith Storey in "The Legion of Death," and Rita Jolivet in "Lest We Forget."

Theater Notes from Middle West.

Sterling, Colo.—Secretary Gandy, of the Chamber of Commerce, Sterling, Colo., has received word from J. S. King, president of the Laramie Amusement Company, to the effect that Mr. King had disposed of interests in Laramie and other points of Wyoming, and that he was looking forward to returning to Sterling in April to complete arrangements for the erection and maintenance of a first class theater in this city.

Moberly, Mo.—The Princess theater has been temporarily closed, but will be opened in the near future under new management.

Grant City, Mo.—The Gem theater has again changed hands, the lease having been purchased by Messrs. Ira Martin and Sayle Robertson.

Lamar, Mo.—E. E. Wagner announces that the Bijou theater will be open only four nights weekly until he removes to the Airdome, which he recently purchased. Mr. Wagner will completely remodel the Airdome theater.

Kansas City, Mo.—The lease of the Grand theater will be taken over by J. K. Sherlock.

Superior, Neb.—E. C. Preston, proprietor of the Sterling theater, has bought the Empress theater from Mrs. Doer.

Allen, Neb.—The Rex theater has been sold to E. Kepford and R. C. Brownell.

Hiawatha, Kan.—Roy Sweetland has sold the Sixth Street theater to Mr. Van Doran.

Blue Rapids, Kan.—Mr. O. E. Reed has bought the motion picture theater of W. L. Sherrill.

Colony, Kan.—Preston Browne recently bought the interest of J. Jones in the picture theater, and is now sole proprietor.

Minneapolis Film Managers Honor Bradford

Dinner Tendered Local Exchange Manager Who Has Accepted Management of the Chicago Triangle Office.

By John L. Johnston, 719 Hennepin Ave nue, Minneapolis, Minn.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—Film managers tendered Ralph E. Bradford, who has left the local Goldwyn to become manager of Chicago Triangle, a farewell banquet at the Hotel Radisson on Saturday, February 23, and the affair was attended by representatives of almost every exchange in the city. In making the opening short speech of the evening Toastmaster Hamlin had the following to say about Mr. Bradford:

"It is with sincere regret that the film colony of Minneapolis is forced to give you up. The gentlemen here assembled might talk for hours in expressing their sorrow at your leaving. For the sake of brevity let me state in behalf of those present that we are sure you will be as successful in the Chicago field as you were locally, for though, in your modest way, you might not have realized it your very name spells success." Mr. Hamlin then added: "R. stand for reliability, resourcefulness and respect; E. for efficiency, exaction and earnestness; Brad, a small nail, straight, pointed and serviceable. Once it has gone its way it serves as a connecting link and holds fast. Ford is a millionaire. Fully believing Mr. R. E. Bradford all that his name implies, it is our hope that by his 'Brad-like' methods he will become a millionaire like Ford." Numerous speeches, eulogizing Mr. Bradford and his work here, followed. Following the banquet several local film magnates gamboled on the green (carpet). This party broke up about midnight, we are informed.

Among those present were: Thomas J. Hamlin, toastmaster, and Charles G. Gates, Associated Theaters exchange; Harry J. Rathner, Select; E. A. Westcott and E. S. Flynn, Fox; E. R. Pearson, Universal-First National; S. N. Robinson and Newton Davis, Bluebird; C. L. Peavey, Paramount; Dan Michalove and Jack Corbett, Triangle; Ralph Bradford, R. C. Fox and Messrs. Hoye, Nathanson, Hoffman, Reisman and Blotcky, Goldwyn; Charles Stombaugh, Standard; Lee A. Horn, Supreme; J. F. Cubberley, Artcraft; Dan Donnelan, Mutual; Tom Kress, Pathe; W. A. Lochren and F. D. Fox, Lochren; James A. Keough, New Lyric theater; T. Walker, Walker Transfer Co.; R. J. Holmgren, Phil Ryan and Harold Mortensen of Amusements.

E. S. Flynn Heads Minneapolis Fox.

Immediately after it was learned that Richard C. Fox was to succeed Ralph E. Bradford as manager of the local Goldwyn exchange another change in exchange managers was announced. E. S. Flynn, who deserves a good deal of credit for making Fatty Arbuckle and the Paramount-Sennett comedies popular in this territory, has been appointed manager of the local Fox exchange to succeed Edward A. Westcott. Mr. Westcott has not announced his future plans, but it is expected that he will return to the independent film exploitation field.

Minneapolis Brief Notes.

Manager Charles G. Branham of the Strand, Minneapolis, states that all existing Sunday records at his theater were broken February 24, when "The Price of a Good Time" began its run at his theater.

Julius Johnson, New Garrick manager, has contracted with several operatic singers for their appearance at four performances daily for an indefinite period.

Manager Dan Donnelan of the Mutual exchange paid his respects to several western Wisconsin visitors, leaving "Governor" G. W. Malone at his desk during his absence.

Lee Horn of the Supreme exchange returned to Minneapolis after a road trip through Iowa and Southern Minnesota. While away Lee visited all of the larger towns, including Ida Grove.

Dan Michalove, recently appointed district manager for the Triangle Distributing Company, spent several days here last week visiting Manager Corbett of the Minneapolis exchange previous to going to Chicago with Ralph Bradford.

Wichita, Kan.—Wichita is to have a picture and vaudeville house to cost $100,000. The incorporators of the new company, which will erect the house, are W. D. Joohems, Charles C. McCollister, J. H. Cooper, and Edwin D. McKeever.

Funston, Kan.—The Kansas-Funston Theater Company chartered with a capital of $30,000 by B. H. Kingsberry, of Sioux City, Ia.; M. W. Jincks, Army City, Kan., and Morgan Wallace, Army City, Kan.

Wichita, Kan.—Extensive improvements have been completed on the Regent motion picture theater. Among the improvements are a new glass front, a tiled lobby floor, and new lighting system.

Aberdeen, S. D.—Articles of incorporation have been filed for the McCarthy theater of this city. Capital stock of the company is $100,000.

Gilman City, Ia.—J. C. Starnes has bought the Lyric theater of Leman & Heki.

Sioux City, Ia.—Jacob E. Schlank has sold the Princess theater to J. S. Shertley, of Seattle, Wash.

Clinton, Okla.—L. B. Bloom has sold his interest in the Liberty theater to Mrs. Charles Duffield, who will conduct the business hereafter.

Eufaula, Okla.—C. O. White is the new manager of the Princess theater.

Weatherford, Okla.—Geo. Remund has bought the Bungalow theater.

Waco, Tex.—Plans have been made by A. L. Mitchell and A. H. Simon for the erection of a large airdome on Washington street, near the corner of 6th street. The expenditure will be approximately $6,000. Work on the theater will begin shortly.

El Paso, Tex.—Work on a new theater on West Commercie street in Juarez (Mexico) is being rushed, and it is promised that the new theater will be opened March 5. The theater is being erected by Comacho, De Leon & Company, and J. G. Comacho will manage the house. The building is constructed of adobe and cement, and is costing approximately $6,000. It will have a seating capacity of 600, and the interior of the theater is said to be as handsome as that of up-to-date houses in El Paso.

Indianapolis News Letter

By Indiana Trade News Service, 861 State Life Bldg., Indianapolis, Ind.

Union City Theater Closes Temporarily.

UNION CITY, IND.—Provided it is not sold in the meantime the Victory theater here will remain closed in a few weeks, according to an announcement made recently by H. G. Rosenbush, who, with his two sons, Carl and Russell, have operated the theater for the past two years. Mr. Rosenbush said Russel is in the army and Carl is expecting to be called into the service at any time. He said that without the assistance of his boys he would be unable to operate the house. The Victory has been one of the most popular amusement places in Union City.

Patriotic Navy Film in Evansville.

Evansville, Ind.—Patrons of motion picture houses in Evansville can see the patriotic war film, "The Making of a Man o' War." The films of these pictures have been assigned to be run in the Evansville theaters from February 18 until March 30.

Theaters Face Higher Rates for Power

Northern California Film Board of Directors Holds Special Meeting to Investigate Proposed Change of Rates for Electricity.

By T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—An increase in electric power and lighting rates will be made in San Francisco and vicinity if the petition of the public service corporations serving this field is given favorable consideration. Since a twenty per cent. increase is planned this matter is of direct interest to exhibitors and already action is being taken in an effort to prevent the advance. A special meeting of the board of directors of the United Motion Picture Industry of Northern California was held recently to investigate the proposed change in rates and to take steps to protect the moving picture industry in any way possible. The gathering was attended by Eugene Roth, of the California and Portola theaters; J. A. Partington, of the Imperial theater; Howard J. Sheehan, of the Rialto theater; Herman Wobber, manager of the Progressive Motion Picture Co.; Louis Reichert, manager of the local Metro branch, and M. J. Cohen, manager of the George Kleine system.

The reasons given by the power companies for asking for an advance in rates range from the higher costs of labor to the greatly increased cost of fuel oil, which is more than double the former price. Much of the power used in this state is generated from water power in the mountains, but the season has been an exceptionally dry one and there is but little snow to furnish the usual flow of water, necessitating the use of fuel oil.

Novel Features at California Theaters.

The California theater, San Francisco, is offering a succession of attractions other than its program of pictures and these are of such high order that many who formerly took but little interest in screen productions have become regular patrons. The California theater company orchestra, under the direction of William McKinney, has been increased to thirty instrumentalists. The great organ is not being neglected, and this is now being presided over by Edward Benedict, organist of the Strand theater of Detroit, who was brought to the Coast for a limited engagement. During the first week of his engagement special lighting effects were made a feature of the stage decorations during the concert period. An immense fixture containing thousands of pieces of crystal glass was suspended over the center of the stage and colored lights within this, which changed at intervals, made a most charming effect. The week before a noted singer rendered a select program, while before this classic dances were presented by a company that had formerly been on the Orpheum circuit.

Kinema to Feature "The Planter."

Oakland, Cal.—"The Planter" will shortly be offered at the Kinema theater, and this has received more preliminary attention than any other production booked for presentation here in a long time. The first gun in the publicity campaign was fired at the Ad-masque Ball held at the municipal auditorium, when ten beautiful young ladies trained by Mrs. Herman Whitaker, wife of the author of "The Planter," made their appearance on the floor. Letters on their costumes made the name of the production, while when they turned in their exercises the name of the theater appeared. Mr. Kehrlein, of the Kinema theater, has arranged a writer's night, an ad club night, a chamber of commerce night, and similar events during the week this picture will be shown.

The Kinema theaters at Oakland, Fresno and Los Angeles are setting a pace for publicity work that is attracting wide attention. A feature of the newspaper advertising of late has been the use of original drawings and color work, entirely new in this field, besides being real works of art. An innovation at the Oakland house is the inauguration of a policy of holding midnight matinees each Saturady night, to which a uniform admission charge of 15 cents is made. The thoughtfulness of the management for the comfort of patrons at this theater is illustrated by the arrangements that have been made for them in case of rain. Should a sudden shower come up a slide is thrown on the screen, advising the audience of this and offering rain checks to those who might wish to cover their autos, or umbrellas to those who might be without protection of this kind. A stock of the latter is kept on hand and no charge is made for the use of them, merely a deposit being requested to insure their return.

"Birth" Crowds Jewel Theater.

All former records for attendance at the Jewel theater, San Francisco, have been broken by the two-weeks' engagement of "Birth." This was shown the first week to women only, but during the next week men were admitted to the upper section of the house.

New Exchange for Film Row.

The Ideal Film exchange, San Francisco, recently incorporated with a capital stock of $5,000 by E. W. Fowler, formerly of the California Film exchange, and associates, will shortly open for business on Golden Gate avenue, having secured quarters in the heart of Film Row. Theater supplies will be handled in addition to films.

Al Star Buys "Birth."

The All Star Feature Distributors, San Francisco, has purchased the California, Arizona, Nevada and Hawaiian rights to "Birth," and has already closed a large number of bookings. This concern has also secured the Rex Beach animal pictures and has commenced a campaign on "Carmen of the Klondyke," which Sol. L. Lesser describes as being a second "Spoilers."

Sheehan & Lurie Secure War Film.

Sheehan & Lurie, of the Rialto theater, San Francisco, have secured the rights in this territory to the Pathe production, "The German Curse in Russia," and, after showing this for a week at the Rialto theater, will present it at other places on a percentage basis.

W. W. Hodkinson Visits San Francisco.

W. W. Hodkinson, of the corporation bearing his name, arrived in San Francisco recently to look over the local field and confer with Manager Harry Schmidt, of the local branch of the General Film Company.

May Exhibitors in Town.

The second annual Pacific Auto Show at San Francisco has attracted thousands to this city during the past week, and included among the visitors have been many exhibitors. Among these have been Ed Stark, Hollister, Cal.; A. A. Richards, Lodi, Cal.; Frank Atkins, Marysville, Cal.; Hurst Bros., Reno, Nev.; J. Knowles, Sonora, Cal.; C. N. Williams and Emil Kehrlein, Fresno, Cal.; W. S. Wester, Woodland, Cal.; Bob Davis, Stockton, Cal.; J. W. DiStasio, Sacramento, Cal.; Frank Salisbury, Visalia, Cal., and Gus Johnson, Newman, Cal.

San Francisco Notes.

The Minerva Motion Picture Company has applied for dissolution.

The Western Feature Film Company has been incorporated with a capital stock of $25,000 by Abe Markowitz, Isabel Davis and W. Williams.

Ed Watson, formerly with the local Triangle exchange, is now booker for the Fox Film, and Chales I. Luntz has gone on the road for the latter concern, having filled the position of booker for some time.

Fred Dahnken, Jr., president of the Turner & Dahnken circuit, has returned from an Eastern trip, having cut short his stay in New York.

E. C. Jensen, Western division manager for the World Film, is making a trip to Seattle and the Northwest.

Robert McNeil, of the Panama theater, with William Bailey, has purchased the Lyceum theater and this has been consolidated with the Mission theater, formerly conducted by A. Eby.

Northern California Briefs.

Menlo Park, Cal.—A Liberty theater with a seating capacity of about 1,000 is to be erected at Camp Fremont.

Visalia, Cal.—Frank Salisbury, formerly of Kansas City, is now manager of the Theater Visalia.

Pacific Grove, Cal.—C. B. Clark has made improvements in the Iris theater, including an inclined floor, the installations of new seats and the remodeling of the foyer.

Stockton, Cal.—"The Man Without a Country" was recently shown for three days at the Yosemite theater, which has a seating capacity of 1,400, but a morning matinee was necessary on Saturday to accommodate the school children who were urged by the school superintendent to attend.

Corning, Cal.—Fleming & Rogers will shortly open the Star theater with a Mutual program, the opening attraction to be the "Game of Wits."

Portland News Letter

By Abraham Nelson, 601 Journal Building, Portland, Ore.

Cold Weather Hurts Theaters.

PORTLAND, ORE.—More cold weather has affected the theater business, particularly that of the suburban houses. The downtown shows experienced a small falling off of business, but in the suburbs the patronage was nearly nil.

"Van" Makes War Pictures.

W. A. Van Scoy, cameraman for Pathe in Portland, Ore., has been busy making films of the Government activities in the spruce forests of Oregon. Films showing the spruce as it is rived for airplane use and its fashioning in the big cut-up plant at Vancouver, Wash., have been photographed. Lieutenant Cutts, of the service, is engaged in showing the Government films to the loggers in the timber.

Portland, Ore., Man Receives Recognition

C. E. Couche, Portland, Ore., advertising expert, has received orders from the Eastern offices of the Fox Film to send the plates of all the advertising used in connection with "Cleopatra" to the New York office to be used in the campaigns exploiting the superfeature in the East. Mr. Couche's work has been recognized as among the best in the country in the display line.

New House in Petersburg, Alaska.

Portland received some Alaska business recently. C. W. Scarborough, of Petersburg, Alaska, wired to W. A. Stone, of the Service Film Company, for a complete outfit of equipment to open a show house at that place.

J. C. Stille An Expert on Cut-Outs.

J. C. Stille, manager of the People's Amusement, Portland, Ore., sprung a cut-out on Portland exhibitors that was a big surprise. It was a picture of Bill Hart standing alongside his horse, and he set it in the lobby of the Star theater where people coming up Washington street could see it, with the result that "Satan's Man," a two-reel reissue, did good business at the company's theater.

Pete Sabo Moves.

The Portland Moving Picture Machine Company, Pete Sabo, proprietor, has moved from its quarters on Washington street to the Strand theater building on the corner of West Park and Stark streets, pleasanter and larger quarters. He will carry a big stock of machine parts and will have a large basement storeroom for carbons and supplies.

With the Road Men.

C. O. Hawxhurst, representing the Desert Film Company, Salt Lake, was in Portland in the interests of "Who's Your Neighbor?" and "The Eyes of the World," placing the latter attraction at the Star. Mr. Hawxhurst stopped over in Portland en route to Seattle.

R. C. Montgomery, representative for Select, has been sojourning in Portland, calling on the city exhibitors. He reports that business around the town has never been better.

Ben Rosenberg, who is taking care of publicity for Metro on the West Coast, was a recent visitor in Portland and reports renewed Metro activities in the territory with Harry Lustig, Western representative, in charge at the Seattle office.

C. E. Waite, branch manager for General in Portland, is doing his own road work until another road man is selected. He made a trip into Bend recently.

Ted Johnson, traveller for Mutual, spends less time in Portland than most of the road men. However, he came in for a few hours recently and told of a successful three-weeks' trip into eastern Oregon. Mr. Johnson reports that the Liberty, Emmett, Idaho, C. D. Buckman, owner, is doing an exceptional business and that the Huree theater at Caldwell, Ida., has installed a new organ.

Vancouver News Letter.

By James M. Maxwell, 2770 Tenth Ave. West, Vancouver, B. C.

Manager Nelson Is Summoned.

VANCOUVER, B. C.—The affairs of the Dominion Film Corporation, a company formed some time ago to produce pictures in this Province, seem at a standstill stage. J. Arthur Nelson, managing director of this firm, was summoned to appear at the police court in answer to a charge of false pretences in connection with the alleged failure to repay a woman the balance of $800 which she says she invested. The case has not yet been decided.

The municipality of West Burnaby agreed to grant eleven and a half acres of land to this company for the purpose of establishing a film city on certain conditions, and the grant was to take the form of a bonus of $28,000, which was the purchase price of the property. The film company, it is understood, failed to pay the $300 trusteeship fees, and the deal did not go through. No local film or theater men were interested in the matter.

Many United States Stamps Mailed to Canada.

It might be pointed out that the Canadian exhibitors receive many self-addressed envelopes from firms in the United States, and that these invariably have American stamps on them to pay the return postage. As these stamps cannot be used in Canada they are wasted. They also have the effect of making the recipient feel that the sender was very casual in the matter of locating him.

H. Seelig, former newspaperman and magazine writer, has been added to the Triangle scenario staff and is specializing on two-reel comedies. During his career as a journalist Seelig encountered many experiences rich with comedy and human interest and expects to whip this material into scenario shape.

Spokane's Clemmer Celebrates Birthday

Opened Three Years Ago, Theater Has Shown Over Seventy Million Feet of Film and Entertained More Than a Quarter of a Million Children.

By S. Clark Patchin, E. 1811 Eleventh Ave., Spokane, Wash.

SPOKANE, WASH.—Three years ago the Clemmer theater, Spokane, opened its doors to the public (February 22, 1915) with Mary Pickford in "Mistress Nell." The anniversary was observed with special programs the week of February 17, 1918. The Clemmer management presented several unusual things, the Goldwyn production, "The Auction Block"; a new organist, Wendell O'Day, and duets and solos by Marie Scammell Lewis and Lawrence L. Lewis. Capacity crowds greeted them during the afternoons, and during the late afternoon and all evening the vestibule and foyer were crowded with people waiting for seats.

By way of historical review a few statistics were flashed on the screen showing that the Clemmer in three years has entertained 252,000 children—it was a leader in the special children's show movement—has shown 70,080,000 feet of film, and has used 45,000 inches of newspaper advertising space in heralding its attractions.

The Clemmer has been under the same management since it opened. It has shown the Famous Players, Lasky and Morosco productions regularly, as well as the big special features that promised merit worthy of exploitation at the Clemmer. In this number were "The Birth of a Nation," "Civilization," "The Battle Cry of Peace," "The Barrier," "Joan the Woman," "The Woman That God Forgot," "The Eternal City," and "The Manx-Man."

The Clemmer has shown exclusively all the productions of Mary Pickford, Marguerite Clark, Pauline Fredericks, Geraldine Farrar, Vivian Martin, Wallace Reid, George Beban, "Fatty" Arbuckle, Ann Pennington, and Harry Lloyd. The Clemmer recently contracted for the Goldwyn pictures, which are pleasing large audiences at the Clemmer weekly.

Spokane Expects Other Producers.

Moving picture producers in California are turning their eyes to the Northwest as the field of future production, according to C. E. Stilwell, president of the Stilwell Theaters Company, which operates the Casino, Class A, Rex and Unique theaters in Spokane. Mr. Stilwell has returned from Los Angeles, where he spent six weeks mostly in the moving picture studios there.

"We went into the possibilities of the Northwest as a producing center," said Mr. Stilwell. "The Southern producers tell me that light conditions in the Spokane country are the best in the United States outside of California.

"If the first pictures made in Spokane are successful from the photographic point of view other producers are bound to come here."

New Houses and Changes in Washington.

Tacoma. — An amusement company headed by H. T. Moore, for several years manager of the Colonial theater, is building a new motion picture theater at the corner of Market and 9th streets. It will be finished about the first of May. It will be named the Rialto and will seat 1,600.

American Lake.—C. M. Thall, manager for Cassady and McKee, an amusement company of Tacoma, is booking the biggest productions obtainable for the Liberty theater, at Camp Lewis. The motion pictures are being used when road shows are not available. "Intolerance" was shown there last week by special request of the commanding officer of the encampment.

Seattle.—D. Geddes, owner and manager of Ye College playhouse, a motion picture theater in the University district, who bought the Greenlake theater two months ago, has sold the latter to Messrs. Lackaye and McFall.

Seattle.—Miss M. Studebaker, for several years manager of the Dream theater, a First avenue house, will close this theater soon and will open another in the same block.

Seattle.—J. A. Reid is to be manager of a new motion picture theater that is being built on First avenue. It will have a seating capacity of 400.

Tacoma.—L. A. Drinkwine, manager of the Palace theater, returned this week from an extended pleasure trip in California.

Seattle Exchange Notes.

M. Rosenberg, president of the De Luxe Feature Film Company, announces that he will shortly open a branch office in Portland. Al. Rosenberg, secretary of the company, will have charge of this office until the hospital unit which he has joined is called to the front.

The Greater Features Company has bought the 28 reissues of the Mack Sennett comedies.

W. H. Code, owner of the Code theater, Nome, Alaska, who is spending the winter in Seattle, has bought the Rex Beach adventure pictures for distribution in the Pacific Northwest and in Alaska. These pictures will be handled from 218 Seneca street.

Sol Baum, Northwest manager for Bluebird, is spending several weeks in the Seattle Bluebird office.

A. H. McMillan, Spokane representative for Vitagraph, is visiting at the Seattle office for a few days this week.

R. D. Olmstead, road representative for Vitagraph, has just returned from a thorough combing of the Grays Harbor territory in Washington.

A. W. Eden, Northwest Fox manager, reports that he now has eight men on the road in his territory.

Two New Alaska Houses.

Cordova, Alaska.—Capt. A. E. Lathrop, owner of several motion picture theaters in Southeastern Alaska, is building two new houses, one at Cordova and one at Seward. Each of these houses will be called The Empress. The Cordova house will seat about 900, the Seward house about 1,000. The cost of the Cordova house will be about $85,000. It will be equipped with a unit Kimball organ.

THEATER CHANGES IN WISCONSIN.

By Frank H. Madison, 623 South Wabash Ave., Chicago.

MILWAUKEE, WIS.—"The Son of Democracy," shown at the Alhambra theater, has received the approval of leading Milwaukee citizens. Subscribers are writing to the communication columns of their favorite newspaper commending the film.

West Bend.—C. Davis & Son, of Miles, Iowa, have leased the Mermac theater from Otto Weber, the owner.

Sheboygan.—Fairyland theater has been leased by William Dietrich.

Janesville.—Double troubles hit Janesville exhibitors. In addition to the customary shortage of fuel, small-pox was prevalent, and the city authorities thought it an ideal time to suspend all public gatherings for a week.

Leonce Perret, author and director of "The Million Dollar Dollys," in which the Dolly Sisters will make their joint motion picture debut, is also author and director of "The Accidental Honeymoon," the last picture made by Capt. Robert Warwick prior to his enlistment in the services of the U. S. A. This last picture will be released shortly on the state rights plan by Harry Rapf.

Baltimore News Letter

By J. M. Shellman, 1902 Mt. Royal Terrace, Baltimore, Md.

Harry P. Moorhead a "Y" Secretary.

BALTIMORE, MD.—Harry P. Moorehead, who for so long a time managed the Clover theater, 414 East Baltimore street, now under management of Milton Caplan, has now become a Y. M. C. A. secretary and is located at Camp Meade. A school has just been opened at the military camp for moving picture operators. Mr. Moorehead has full charge. Any of Uncle Sam's boys who wish to become moving picture operators may receive training in this line while they are at the camp.

Lee Shubert Buys Colonial Theater.

The Colonial theater, 317-19 North Eutaw street, Baltimore, for a long time known as Blaney's, was sold at public auction on Thursday, February 21, to Lee Shubert, the well known New York theatrical producer, for $15,000. According to reports, Mr. Shubert bought the playhouse in order that his financial interest in it might be protected.

DeHoff Again Aids a Good Cause.

L. A. DeHoff, managing supervisor of the New theater, who also has charge of the picture bookings for the Garden theater just across the street, certainly knows how to collect the sheckels for good causes. On Sunday night, February 24, he arranged a very attractive program for a benefit to aid the local branches of the Salvation Army to collect their allotment of $25,000, which will go toward making up the $1,000,000 national war service fund. As a feature for the occasion, "Salvation Nell" was obtained by Mr. DeHoff. The amount obtained by collection was $300.

Anderson Aids Good Cause.

The Grand theater in Highlandtown, Md., is under the management of Charles S. Anderson, one of the most courteous men in the film circles of Baltimore. Sunday, February 24, he arranged a patriotic meeting in his theater under the auspices of the Highlandtown branch of the Y. W. C. A. to arouse the interest of the people in the community to a realization that this branch is for their use.

Management at Garden Theater Changes.

The management of the Garden theater, Lexington street and Park avenue, Baltimore, has now changed again, and E. Milton Krogman has become the manager of this popular vaudeville house.

Censor Board Vacancy Filled.

Governor Harrington has appointed Clarendon I. T. Gould to fill the position on the Maryland State Board of Censors made vacant by the expiration of term of service of W. P. Stone. Republican influence from Dorchester County has evidently had weight.

MICHIGAN THEATER JOTTINGS.

By Frank H. Madison.

Ithaca, Mich.—E. L. Struble has purchased the Genesta theater. His schedule for the rest of the winter calls for shows on Wednesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays, with Saturday matinees.

Calumet, Mich.—John D. Cuddihy has taken a three-year renewal on the lease of the Calumet theater, at $3,000 a year, an increase of $500 a year over his previous rental.

Dundee, Mich.—The Electric theater is now under the management of George Bunce, who will operate it with a five and ten-cent admission.

Flint, Mich.—Walter Jacobson has resigned as manager of the Garden theater, to devote his time to selling a carbon holder for motion picture projectors, which he patented. He is succeeded by Steve N. Willett. Howard O. Pierce, manager of the Majestic theater, and who has charge of the publicity of the Majestic, Garden, and Palace, will supervise the house.

Pittsburgh Promised Fine New Theater

Building of Former East Liberty Post Office to Be Rebuilt for Housing a Picture Show—W. W. Robinson Behind Company.

By Pittsburgh News Service, 405 Fourth Ave., Pittsburgh, Pa.

PITTSBURGH, PA.—A new theater project is being launched here for the remodeling of the former East Liberty Post Office building at Penn and Frankstown avenues, Pittsburgh, into a handsome photoplay house. The structure measures 35 by 200 feet, and the seating capacity of the theater will be about 1,200. The enterprise is being promoted by W. W. Robinson, Fulton building, and a company is in the process of formation, a large amount of the stock having been already subscribed for. Plans for the theater are under way, and it is announced that work will be started on the building as soon as the removal of the post office to its new location has been completed. Indications are that the house will be ready for opening in July or August.

The East Liberty section of Pittsburgh already has a large number of modern picture theaters, and its importance as the high class exhibiting center of the city will be increased materially by the addition of another big house. Within two squares of the projected theater are the Liberty, seating 1,500; the Cameraphone, seating 1,000; the Regent, seating 1,000; the Alhambra, seating 750, and the Rex, seating 350.

G. R. Ainsworth Will Manage New Exchange.

Guy R. Ainsworth, formerly a mainstay of the Pittsburgh exchange of the Select Pictures, and a well-known local film man, has joined the newly organized McElroy-Day Attractions, Lyceum building, and has been appointed manager of the Pittsburgh office. Mr. Ainsworth was Harvey B. Day's right-hand man when the latter was manager of the Select, and with Mr. Day's establishment of the new concern was chosen to head the organization here. Beside the home office in this city the McElroy-Day Attractions has branch exchanges in Cleveland and Cincinnati, with Mr. Day as general manager.

"Daughter of Gods" Fills the Liberty.

The Liberty theater, Penn and Shady avenues, Pittsburgh, the largest of the Rowland & Clark chain of theaters, played "A Daughter of the Gods" the entire week of February 25 to capacity business. The latest Douglas Fairbanks production, "Headin' South," will be the attraction at the Liberty the entire week of March 4.

Philadelphia News Letter.

By F. V. Armato, 144 North Salford Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Guy S. Burley Assumes Rivoli Management.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Guy S. Burley, who has recently assumed management of the Rivoli theater, has been in the show business for many years and is thoroughly versed in supplying high-class entertainment for the public. Mr. Burley conducted a film exchange in Newark, N. J., and also has managed several road shows. Carl Miller, the manager prior to Mr. Burley, resigned a short time ago to enter the real estate field.

Colored Man Couldn't Reach Management.

A decision was recently handed down by the courts regarding the refusing of admittance to colored people. At the direction of Judge Gorman, in the criminal branch of the Municipal Court, a jury acquitted F. W. Buhler and W. Goldberg, manager and director, respectively, of the Victoria theater, of "refusing to admit to a theater on account of race and color" a certain colored gentleman. In directing the verdict of acquittal, Judge Gorman said it had not been shown the defendant had refused anyone admission to the theater, but it was the act of one of their agents. In a criminal proceeding, Judge Gormon said, they could not be held responsible for the acts of an agent, unless it was shown that the agent acted under their direction. Such testimony was not present in the Commonwealth's case.

George Ames Takes Pathe Managership.

Announcement that H. M. Osborne, manager of the Pathe exchange, was transferred from Philadelphia to the Washington branch, and that George Ames, the manager of the local Goldwyn exchange, had resigned to go with Pathe, has attracted considerable attention here. Mr. Osborne, after three years of excellent service, leaves with the best wishes of his fellow employees and the local exhibitors. Mr. Ames is being congratulated upon his recent change and is assuming the management of the Pathe with his usual marked enthusiasm and with cheerful prospects ahead. O. H. Bower succeeded Mr. Ames as manager for the Goldwyn.

A. L. Widner Visits.

A. L. Widner, manager of the Vitagraph branch in Washington, recently visited Philadelphia. Mr. Widner was accompanied by D. E. Allen, who reported that they had just closed a substantial contract for the first showing of Vitagraph pictures at the Garden theater in Baltimore.

Theodore Jelenk Building.

Wilmington, Del.—Theodore Jelenk, a progressive exhibitor who recently sold out his interests in the Victoria theater, has completed plans for the erection of his new theater, which will cost in the neighborhood of $45,000. The theater will contain 1,200 seats, will be constructed of hollow tile and brick, having an arched front which will lead into a spacious lobby. Mr. Jelenk will start building about March 25, and expects to have the theater completed the early part of July.

Philadelphia Metro Makes Good.

Robert Lynch, manager of the Philadelphia Metro exchange, has made a creditable showing. After checking up the bookings on the "Slacker," the Metro office finds that this picture has played in 315 theaters out of possibly 500 in eastern Pennsylvania and southern Jersey. On one occasion the manager of the Allegheny theater laid two of his regular three-day-run features on the shelf in order to present "Draft No. 258" for a week's run. "Blue Jeans," another Metro production, was shown at the Victoria theater for an entire week and played to capacity business.

Abraham Max May Build Theater.

It is reported that the old market house at 1524 to 1536 South street, Philadelphia, is soon to be torn down to clear the site for a large moving picture theater. Abraham Max, of Camden, part owner of the Keystone theater, Tenth and South, recently purchased the property. His plans are to build one of the most attractive picture theaters in the southern section of the city. The lot is 96 by 140 feet and will be entirely taken up by the new improvement.

A Big Operating Room.

Joseph Jorden, operator at the Palace theater, 1214 Market street, Philadelphia, is equipped with one of the largest projection rooms in the city. The room is 20 by 40 feet and has a ceiling 30 feet high. Two motor-driven Simplex machines are operated by Mr. Jorden and his assistant, who are members of the Local No. 307, I. A. T. S. E.

"THE HOUSE OF GLASS."

Careful Plotmaking and Artistic Direction and Acting Mark Select Picture.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE recent Select picture, "The House of Glass," in which Clara Kimball Young has the central role, rejoices in an ably constructed plot, and with the playing of the leading woman and her company, under the direction of Emile Chautard, it is a particularly acceptable melodrama. Written for the screen by Charles E. Whittaker from Max Marcin's play, the care with which the heroine has been protected—while we watch the action at least—from weaknesses and foolish acts that lessen the average, normal spectator's sympathy for many a heroine, pleasantly distinguishes it from much melodramatic production of the day on both stage and screen. It tells a simple, honest story that is clear and understandable. The heroine's emotions and her fate become things that deeply concern the spectator.

The villain of the plot is the relentless police system. The girl is entirely innocent. She had fallen in love with a man whom she thinks a chauffeur. He is a thief. He tells her he has fallen heir to much money and presents her with gems. The police track him to her room and she is also arrested as an accomplice and sent to prison. They let her out on parole. Her innocence and this half-freedom make her despair and she jumps her parole and goes to the West, where she falls in love with a real man and marries him. She is seemingly all right so long as she doesn't return to New York. Her husband gets an appointment as general manager of the greatest railroad in the country and she has to go to the metropolis with him. She fears the daylight and the streets and suffers greatly. In the fifth reel the secret service man finds her. She decides bravely to face the music and forbids her husband to sacrifice his principles to help her. A way is found out, of course. It is a well written, artistically acted, ably staged and beautifully photographed picture.

"THE SIGN INVISIBLE."

First National Exhibitor's Circuit Presents Mitchell Lewis in the Story of a Converted Skeptic.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE Sign Invisible" deals with two skeptics, one a young doctor who has lost all faith in the fundamental principles of the Christian religion through the failure of prayer at the death of his mother; the other, a genial half-breed, Lone Deer, who has become imbued with the same disposition because his mother, a white woman, was discarded by her own people for marrying a red man. These two are brought together in a rude environment of the "North Woods" through an unfriendly clash at a barroom and into more friendly relations when the young doctor saves the half-breed's life by an operation. Both see the hand of God in the latter and become converted. Important factors in this conversion are an old clergyman and his spirited young daughter. The latter makes every effort to convert the young doctor, whose skepticism has turned him into a common drunkard, and she decides to guide his career forever after at the end.

Mitchell Lewis is easily the star, his personality strong and forceful, but attention is entirely fastened on the young doctor at first for reasons known only to the playwright and director, a perilous fault of construction, diverting interest, as it does, from the main character. As shown at the Strand theater, the impression made was that prayer when answered proves there is a God. Whether or not the audience desired to have it proved that there is a God by any such means was not manifested.

"EVE'S DAUGHTER."

Paramount Presents Billie Burke in a Drama of Individual Revolt by Margaret Turnbull.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

EVE'S Daughter" has a vital theme in that the subject is one which rises up in each new generation, and it is usually born in the rebellious bosom of youth at the beginning of a struggle against the depressing influences of a narrow environment. Billie Burke impersonates with girlish grace the daughter of a wealthy and puritanical miser, whose contemptible treatment of his family stirs rebellion in her proud young heart. At his death she inherits a comparatively small fortune and, in reaction, decides to "live her own life." This is the resolve of many an unsophisticated young lady who has but a hazy idea of what "life" means, and the miser's daughter is no exception to the rule. She drifts away from an earnest and manly suitor because his attempts to regulate her career mean restriction and remind her of her father. Still drifting she falls under the spell of an ardent adorer less scrupulous and finds herself in a hotel suite with him, where he has registered as man and wife.

Already badly compromised, the girl owes her rescue to some chance information about the ardent one's past and the determined ingenuity of her earnest suitor combined, to whom she turns in the end. The point made by the picture as presented at the Rialto was that revolt in the cases of young ladies who wish to "live their own lives" is usually futile unless they possess a strength of character sufficient to protect them from what is fatally false in that life. Besides the charming interpretation of Billie Burke, the work of Lionel Atwell as Courtenay Urquhart and of Thomas Meighan as John Norton is deserving of high praise.

"THE MIDNIGHT TRAIL."

William Russell in Five-Part American Production Gives Pleasing Performance.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

VIEWED in the light of the comedy-drama, "The Midnight Trail" is exceptionally entertaining. The picture, which is in five parts, was produced for the American Film Company by Edward Sloman and is consistent in action and well staged. William Russell, with Harvey Clark assisting the comedy of the situation as valet, is pleasing. His work is spontaneous, and the character that he portrays is well suited to his talents. Francelia Billington plays the feminine role in her usual charming manner.

The story of the play centers about the desire of a young millionaire to do detective work. Needless to say he is considerable of a sport and gets his name in the newspapers in connection with the aftermath of an automobile race in which he drives the winning car. By accident he happens in the office of a friend at the head of a detective bureau when a clergyman and his pretty daughter, from whom jewels have been stolen, enter to engage the services of a detective. He loses no time in getting himself appointed to the job, and so keen is his ambition that he goes so far as to impersonate a well-known detective supposed to be on the case.

It develops that through the discovery of the young millionaire the young woman herself is the thief, going to the vault and removing the jewels to another place while she sleeps. A fine vein of suspense is maintained throughout, and as the story reaches its climax, it wins for itself an unstinted amount of admiration.

"THE BELOVED TRAITOR."

Goldwyn Presents Mae Marsh and E. K. Lincoln in an Attractive Story of True-Hearted Devotion.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE Beloved Traitor" will win with almost any audience, just as it did when admirably presented at the Strand, though it is not strengthened by either its title or its preliminary symbolism, forecasting the conclusion. It is otherwise capably handled, especially in a storm scene, with which it opens. The story wins because it successfully contrasts the true love of a simple-hearted girl in a character-making environment, with the false pretenses of love among the sheltered ones of so-called "good society," especially those spoiled by luxury and parental indulgence. The point goes over that superior home training fails of its purpose when it replaces the natural affections of a woman's heart with seeming selfishness. This purpose is not preached, but it is felt.

Mae Marsh and E. K. Lincoln make a very impressive team as an orphan girl and a young fisherman in a narrow and picturesque environment. The young man develops a genius for sculpture and is taken away by a patron of the arts to

New York for study and wider opportunity. He there becomes a traitor to his first love, but her face is his inspiration, appearing in his work, and he is reunited to her when his illusions vanish. Lincoln and Miss Marsh are strongly supported by Hedda Hopper, George Fawcett, J. A. Furey and others, and they are delightfully contrasted in appearance and style, a contrast which gives visual vigor to both. On their fine interpretation and a direct simplicity of purpose the story's value rests, but that seems to be enough to carry the picture to a warm place in the great big audience heart.

"THE TRIUMPH OF VENUS."

Mythological Spectacle Written and Directed by Edwin Bower Hesser Has Moments of Beauty.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

BETTY LEE is the featured player in "The Triumph of Venus," a six-part mythological spectacle, written and directed by Edwin Bower Hesser and produced by the Victor Film Manufacturing Company. The picture has moments of beauty. There are other moments when it is not beautiful, caused by the lack of proper atmosphere and the extremely earthly characteristics of the male dwellers on Mount Olympus, Venus, Diana, Hebe and Juno; also Jove, Mars, Vulcan, Mercury and Apollo are seen in the flesh. The goddesses are very well impersonated when the mortal nature of their impersonators is taken into consideration. But the gods—Ye gods, but they are a sorry crew! No wonder they lost their jobs!

The best features of "The Triumph of Venus" are the swimming scenes, when the nymphs dispense with bathing suits and plunge into a picturesque stream. Some of the long shots are very attractive. There is also a series of scenes where an unconscious man rolls and slids down a stream that tumbles over rocks and falls and then drifts out to sea that will be greatly admired. Next to the gods themselves the biggest drawback to the picture is its story and the manner of its direction. The Mount Olympus scenes are amusingly inadequate, and the only touches of poetry to the whole affair are occasional pictorial bits.

Betty Lee possesses considerable of the grace and beauty of the Goddess of Love, and Phyllis Beveridge looks and acts Diana with equal success. Grace Hamel as Nea and little Bonnie Marie as Cupid create pleasing impressions, and William Sherwood and Hassan Mussalli are excellent as a sculptor and a fisher youth. The picture has been carefully edited, and the nude figures are kept far enough in the background to avoid the slightest offense.

"THE BEGGAR WOMAN."

Pathe Releases Russian Art Subject, Featuring I. I. Mozukin and Mme. Lesienko in Tragic Story.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

ONCE more the Russian Art Films must be given credit for a very capable presentation of a tragic story. "The Beggar Woman," perhaps, illustrates as well as anything they have done the power that may be brought out by simple, direct development of a plot that is more unusual in its main conception than in any of its complications. There are, in fact, but few complications; the story is clear-cut, and even slight in this respect. But the development foreshadows impending tragedy, and there is a certain valuable suspense at all times.

The story is uncompromising in its method of dealing with the hard and repellent facts of life. It first brings before the observer Mary Mar, a prima donna just stepping into fame, and Sergius, an already famous poet. The poet hears the prima donna sing, and at once succumbs to her charms. He meets her, and soon declares his love. The prima donna, recognizing a declaration of true love, where she was accustomed to hearing mere flattery, gives her heart to Sergius. In the course of time they are happily married.

The prima donna does much charitable work, and is taken ill after a visit to a certain poor family. She develops smallpox, and there are exciting scenes as the doctor orders numerous guests from the sumptuous premises. The stricken wife orders Sergius to leave also against his wishes. When next he sees her, after her recovery, she has lost both her voice and beauty. Sergius is overcome with repulsion, and subsequently dies; the wife lives to roam the streets as a beggar woman.

Such a story would be impossible with ordinary delineation. In the hands of Mozukin and Mme. Lesienko it fares a much better fate. Mozukin is polished and efficient in his character work as usual, and Mme. Lesienko gets some rarely pathetic effects in her portrayal of the unfortunate wife. As a whole the production is unusual and effective.

"THE GIRL IN THE DARK."

Carmel Myers Featured in Five-Reel Bluebird, Adapted from Walk Novel.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

SUSTAINED suspense in the opening situations gives this five-reel offering an immediate appeal. The plot is one of mystery, and though the general effect is rather slight for a subject of this length it is after all very entertaining and ingeniously put together. The adapter, A. G. Kenyon, and the director, Stuart Paton, must be given credit for some splendid atmospheric effects and a consistent development of the story even though it slackens a trifle in the fourth reel. The close brings the production up again with renewed interest.

Carmel Myers is attractive as Lois Fox, the girl who appears outside a country house on a wild, stormy night. Brice Ferris, owner of the house and hero of the story, portrayed by Ashton Dearholt, hears a sudden scream from the girl. He dashes outside just in time to rescue the girl from a group of Chinamen. He carries the fainting girl into the house assisted by his Chinese servant, Ming. The latter sees a peculiarly marked seal ring on the girl's finger, and attempts to steal it, but Ferris oversees this, and casts his servant out of the house.

It is soon apparent, as the story proceeds, that the Chinamen have designs upon the girl, and the plot is further complicated by the arrival of a stranger named Strang, who is also in search of her. In spite of all efforts to look out for her safety the girl is abducted and taken to the Chinese quarters. Later, by the combined efforts of the hero, Strang, and the police, she is rescued, and the story of the seal ring is related by Strang, who is in reality the uncle of the girl.

Others in the cast are Alfred Allen, Betty Schade, Frank Tokanaga, and Frank Deschon.

"NOBODY'S WIFE."

Five-Reel Universal Tells Story of North Woods—Louise Lovely and Hart Hoxie Featured.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS five-reel subject offers a plot that is developed in a somewhat desultory way, which robs it of any particular suspense, but at the same time keeps it from being so obvious as many stories of the kind turn out to be. Hart Hoxie, a robust type of hero, with a wide smile and ready courage, is cast as Jack Darling of the Northwest Mounted Police. Louise Lovely appears as Hope Ross, a girl upon whom the hero chances in a mountain cabin, with a young baby in her care.

The hero, who has been sent out to capture an outlaw, blunders into the cabin, and mistakes Hope for a girl known as Dancing Pete. He aproaches her rudely enough, but finding out his mistake, and that she has a child in her care he changes his attitude quickly. He thinks she is married, and the mother of the child.

Later the hero comes upon Dancing Pete, and complicates matters for himself by arousing the jealousy of her lover, the sheriff. The latter shoots at Jack from ambush, and inflicts a flesh wound upon his arm. Certain of these situations might have been pictured with greater conviction. The story is handled quite amateurishly at times, though it manages to hold the interest in spite of this.

Jack later in the story holds up a barroom and puts himself in the role of a villain for a time. But he does this in order to get a line on the sheriff, who is in reality the outlaw Jack is after, and had committed murder six years before. His ruse is successful, and he exposes the sheriff, and the latter is killed after seeking to get revenge upon Hope. The latter, it develops, is unmarried, and falls in love with the hero. The action in the latter part of the story is better than at the beginning.

Alfred Allen, Betty Schade, A. G. Kenyon, and Grace McLean are also in the cast.

"A SOUL IN TRUST."

Seven-Part Triangle Released on Regular Program; Also "The Hard Rock Breed," a Story of the West.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

"A Soul in Trust."

CATHERINE CARR is responsible for the story of "A Soul in Trust," a seven-part Triangle picture released on the regular program. The plot has many a twist and turn to it before it reaches the big situation, but most of the ground covered is fairly plausible, and there is real force and pathos in the final scene. A wealthy young Virginian, married to a Southern belle, has an affair with a mountain girl, and she becomes a mother. The man is thrown from his horse and fatally injured. Before he dies he tells his wife of the child, and asks her to get possession of it and give the boy the right bringing up. This is accomplished. Twenty years later the boy, now known as Dabney Carter, thinks that he has every right to the name. He has been carefully reared by his father's wife, and has repaid her in every way. Mrs. Carter loves him as an own son, and her one fear is that he will learn the secret of his birth.

Young Carter is employed as secretary to Senator Franklyn. A meeting with the young man's mother leads to the Senator's falling in love with her. In the meantime Dabney's real mother has become an adventuress, and attempts to blackmail Franklyn. This brings her in contact with her son. She tries to use him as an instrument to separate the Senator and Mrs. Carter by telling Dabney that Senator Franklyn had betrayed her and parted her from her child. The boy's foster-mother recognizes the adventuress, and appeals to her better nature. Realizing that she can only cause the boy pain and humiliation if he learns the truth his mother goes out of his life forever.

"A Soul in Trust" has been capably directed by G. P. Hamilton, and was photographed by Tom Buckingham. The excellent cast is headed by Belle Bennett as Mrs. Carter, Darrell Foss as the elder Carter, Lillian West as Nan Barker, Grover Franke as Dabney Carter, J. Barney Sherry as Senator Franklyn, Lee Hill as Jason Meredith, Lizzie Davis as Mammy Judy, and William Dyer as George Barker complete the list.

"The Hard Rock Breed."

Horny handed sons of toil and the human vultures that prey on them mix it up in several lively fights during the progress of "The Hard Rock Breed," a five-part Triangle production that follows a familiar form of screen story. Its author is Frederic Bechdolt. G. F. Jenks made the scenario, Raymond Wells was the director, and the picture was photographed by Pliny Horne.

Bill Naughton, the owner of a railroad construction company, sends his son out West to take charge of one of his contracts. Young Naughton is in a fair way to be ruined by too much gay life in New York, but develops unexpected grit and character when he arrives at Snowslide and finds that he must deal with a crooked superintendent and a plot to frighten him off the job. The boy's father was a hard rock man himself once, and began with a drill and a pick. His son starts right in to use his fists when necessary, and soon lets everyone know that he is the boss.

Shiela Dolan is the daughter of the foreman, and the father was once the elder Naughton's partner. Dolan is a good man, except for one fault—getting drunk. Shiela and young Naughton fall in love with each other, and the boy wins Dolan's promise to stop drinking by beating him in a fair fight. There is the usual attempt to kill the hero by a premature blast.

The locations are realistic, and the cast works with a will. Jack Livingston plays Donald Naughton, and Margery Wilson is the Shiela Dolan. The other members are Jack Curtis, J. Barney Sherry, Marion Skinner, Lee Phelps, George Chase, Louis Durham, Thornton Edwards, and Aaron Edwards.

"THE WASP."

Kitty Gordon as Youthful Heroine of Five-Act Photoplay Written by Willard Mack.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

A GERMAN secret agent puts the dramatic zest in "The Wasp," a five-part World picture, written by Willard Mack, and starring Kitty Gordon, who plays a youthful heroine surprisingly well for a lady whose seventeen-year-old daughter supported her mother in a previous screen drama. As Grace Culver the English actress has the role of a sharp-tongued young woman, whose outspoken opinions have earned her the name of "The Wasp." Her father has made a fortune in the canning business, and Brazsos, a secret agent in the employment of the German government, starts a strike in the factory. He then digs a tunnel under it and plans to blow it up, and is only prevented by Grace and by Harry Cortland, a famous Yale football player, who has fallen in love with Miss Culver and obtains a situation as her chauffeur so as to be near her. The two are captured by Brazsos and imprisoned in the cellar of the factory the night it is to be destroyed.

Grace had offended her father by refusing to marry Kane Putnam, the son of the factory owner's old chum, and had started off on a long automobile trip with the new chauffeur and her maid. After their adventure at the factory, and she learns his real name, the two are married that very night, and when Grace returns home she brings a husband with her.

The plot covers a good deal of ground, and was not made from one of Willard Mack's stage plays. Its lighter scenes are the best, although the melodramatic situations have considerable thrill. An original bit of business is after the explosion in the tunnel. A party of soldiers dig down to where Grace and Cortland are imprisoned and drag them above ground again. Lionel Belmore directed the picture.

As usual Kitty Gordon wears a choice assortment of gowns, and looks especially neat in riding togs. Rockcliffe Fellows as Harry Cortland, Lionel Belmore as Brazsos and Victor Kennard as Kane Putnam are the leading members of a competent supporting cast, which also includes Charles Gerry, Sandee Burbank, William Calhoun, Edward Rosemond, Edward Burns and Hazel Washburn.

"THE SONG OF THE SOUL."

Five-Part Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature with Alice Joyce Is Full of Misfit Psychology.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

SHANNON FIFE has been writing moving picture scenarios for several years, and "The Song of the Soul," a five-part Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, is credited to him. The story might have been made interesting, but it is filled with misfit psychology. Its characters are repeatedly doing something that is contrary to common sense, and the spectator is asked to respect a heroine who tries to build her happiness upon a lie. She is weak to a pitiful degree, and shows such a want of spirit and judgment all through the drama that she is in danger of losing the sympathy of the beholder.

Ann Fenton, who believes her supposed husband is an honorable man, discovers that he is a bigamist and the proprietor of a gambling house, and is left with an infant son to face the world alone. Here commences the series of it-didn't happenings. Her child is taken away from her and she is driven out of the small place where she has been living. Seven years later she returns to the village as the teacher of the school, and finds that her boy is being starved and beaten by a brutal farmer. Her disguise is penetrated and she is again told to leave. Before she goes she sees the farmer whipping the boy. She seizes the whip and lashes the brute, but goes away and leaves her son behind.

Later on a manly young doctor asks her to be his wife, and she marries him without telling him her past history. She then keeps up her deceit by asking his permission to adopt a boy whose guardian will release him for five hundred dollars. The doctor agrees. The boy is no sooner at home than his father turns up and tries to blackmail the woman he had betrayed. The doctor owns the house where his step-son's father runs his gambling hell, and the physician has threatened to have him ejected. The doctor's wife is told that she must prevent this or her secret will be given to her husband. While she is trembling with apprehension the doctor walks in, knocks the blackguard down, sees the police cart him off on a murder charge, and informs his wife that he has just been told her story and it will make no difference with his love for her. Of course not!—being a right-minded chap, but a very unobserving one—for a doctor.

The picture is well acted. Alice Joyce makes all that is possible out of the badly drawn character of Ann Fenton. Percy Standing, Walter McGrail, Bernard Siegal, Barney Randall, Edith Reeves and Stephen Carr give her capable support. Tom Terriss directed the production.

"HEADIN' SOUTH."

Douglas Fairbanks in Artcraft Picture by Allan Dwan Takes Part in an Exciting Man Hunt.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE latest Artcraft picture, "Headin' South," is a lively melodrama with Douglas Fairbanks comedy trimmings. His mission in the story is a serious one, but he accomplishes it with his usual display of joyful zest in living and doing the impossible, and the laughs are never separated by long stretches of dramatic intensity. "Headin' South" is the name assumed by an officer of the Canadian Mounted Police, who trails a murderer from the Far North down through California and into Mexico. The fugitive is known as "Spanish Joe," and, once south of the Rio Grande, he puts himself at the head of a band of Mexican outlaws and starts to raid on both sides of the border.

"Headin' South" pretends to be an outlaw himself, and becomes a member of the band. The estate of a wealthy Mexican family is captured by the marauders and made their headquarters. "Spanish" Joe is attracted by the beautiful daughter of the house, and the Canadian officer has to use his wits to prevent the girl and the other women of the household from being ill-treated before the arrival of a company of Texas Rangers. He is successful, of course, and is rewarded with the love of the beautiful Spanish maiden.

"Headin' South" has no side issues, and contains sufficient real interest in its serious moments to keep a tight hold on the attention of the spectator. It is not the biggest laughing hit of the Fairbanks series, but is always entertaining, and will cause many a grin and chuckle. The star does his work in the regulation Fairbanks fashion, and everyone knows what that means.

The production is a fine one. Directed by Arthur Rosson under the supervision of Allan Dwan, and photographed by Hugh McClug and Harry Thorp it presents a number of picturesque views of the Land of the Snows, and the Mexican scenes are equally impressive and true to life. The rides of the bandits and the Texas Rangers are full of thrills.

Frank Campeau as "Spanish" Joe keeps up his reputation for superior excellence in the line of "badmen." Catherine MacDonald looks the Mexican beauty, and James Madison is effective as aid to "Headin' South."

"HUNGRY EYES."

Monroe Salisbury and Ruth Clifford Appear in Five-Reel Bluebird Story with Western Setting.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

MONROE SALISBURY as Dale Revenal is provided with a characterization that suits him admirably in this story. He is cast as a mild-mannered Southerner of the "Virginian" type, good tempered as a rule, and easy with the ladies, but a devil when roused. He is introduced to the observers as a reformed horse thief in this number just arrived at a ranch with a letter of introduction to the owner. He is made welcome, and the opening scenes picture him fighting his way into good standing with the boys.

The hero also falls in love with Mary Jane, the ranch owner's daughter. The girl's father is about to cast her into the arms of a neighbor named Jack Nelda, a man much older than the girl, and as bad a man at heart as the hero is by reputation. Mary Jane finally pleads with Revenal to save her from Nelda, and in the course of the story he does so. Incidentally he proves himself a man by meeting Nelda and his hired assassin in a barroom face to face, when they are planning to kill him.

The story depends more upon the interest evoked by the characters than by any particular novelty of plot. Rupert Julian contributes an entertaining bit in his portrayal of John Silver, bringing out the rough, kindly humor of the individual. Ruth Clifford is appealing as Mary Jane. Other roles are taken by Gretchen Lederer, A. H. Barros, W. H. Bainbridge, Arthur Tavares, and George McDaniel. The story runs a little too strongly to close-ups, but is otherwise very well directed.

"BRONCHO BILLY'S LEAP."

George Kleine Releases First of Broncho Billy Reissues—Has Real Old-Time Western Quality.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

PRIMITIVE strength and simplicity of plot are the striking features of this first reissue of the "Broncho Billy" subjects. It would not be at all surprising if the public would again extend this old-time favorite a cordial welcome. There is a certain genuineness and vitality in these rugged plot conceptions, free from any great complications as they are, which renders them appealing.

In this number Broncho Billy is lying in wait under his blanket until the stage comes along. He is prepared to hold it up and make his getaway. But when the stage appears he sees that the horses are running away, with no one on the box but the daughter of the stage driver, who is making a vain effort to stop them. Billy mounts his bronco and dashes in pursuit, eventually rescuing the girl. He wins a kiss, and rides away happily even though he missed making a financial haul.

Just a trifle of a plot, but really well put over, and leaves the observer with a grin almost as broad as Billy's own. G. M. Anderson will, of course, be remembered in this role; also Carl Stockdale and Marguerite Clayton, who play the stage driver and his daughter.

The settings are good, the photography clear and attractive, and the film has been refurnished in the matter of headings and titles.

"THE FAMILY SKELETON."

Charles Ray Appears in Thomas Ince Five-Part Paramount Picture Badly Hampered by Its Scenario.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

CERTAIN phases of human existence are not only without interest, but are positively irritating. The story of "The Family Skeleton," written by Bert Lennon, comes under this head. Produced by Thomas H. Ince, with Charles Ray in the principal role, even the combination of these well tried moving picture experts has failed to endow the work with the qualities that win favor for creations of fiction. The trouble starts with the theme itself, the spectator being puzzled whether to take it seriously or regard it as a poor attempt at a joke. Either way it offers nothing entertaining.

The heir to several millions is informed on his twenty-fifth birthday that he is in great danger of filling a drunkard's grave, his father having been cursed with an insatiable craving for strong drink. The young chap at once starts to put himself to the test, and is saved by a scheme invented by his chorus girl sweetheart. Believing that she is to be abducted by an old admirer, an ex-prize-fighter, the millionaire pulls himself together and effects her rescue after knocking out Mr. "Spider" Doyle, the gentleman who carried her off.

An otherwise respectable young man engaged in stupefying himself with liquor for nearly the entire length of a five-part picture is neither an edifying nor an amusing spectacle. Even the buoyant and engaging personality of Charles Ray is not equal to the task of lighting up the gloom.

"THE MAN EATER."

One of Flagg Series, "Girls You Know," Portraying Humorously the Character of the Flirt.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

ONE of the latest numbers of the "Girls You Know" series by James Montgomery Flagg, which is being made by the Edison Company for the Kleine program. This one presents humorously the character of the girl who is never contented with a "latest" conquest, but pursues relentlessly her bombardment on the hearts of men, adding by each lucky catch one more scalp to her collection.

Peggy Adams plays the role of the fascinating feminine who, after bidding her soldier lover a fond farewell, turns again quickly to the beloved pursuit of man eating. Invited to be one of a gay picnic party she not only is successful in winning the admiration of the unmarried and much engaged young men of the party, but fastens her talons on the only married member. A conspiracy worked up by the women while the men go swimming, in which they hire a farmhand to be caught by the young woman in a game of blind man's bluff, only goes to prove how little faith can be placed in the best laid plans of mice and women. The young woman in a fit of fright rushes frantically to the stream where the men are swimming, and is soon the center of masculine attraction again.

"ANN'S FINISH."

Mutual Comedy-Drama, Entertaining in Quality, Features Marguerita Fischer.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE amount of enjoyment to be derived from viewing the Mutual-American five-part production, "Ann's Finish," depends largely on the audience before which it is shown. Marguerita Fischer does more than ordinarily well in portraying the character of the petted daughter of a lumber king who attends a certain boarding school for the purpose of putting the finishing touches to her scant supply of education. If one were to attempt an analysis of the story from the point of consistency considerable might be said. The production appears in the form of a comedy-drama, and has been well staged by Lloyd Ingraham.

As the story runs the daughter of a lumber king attending a different boarding school for the fifth or sixth time gets into considerable trouble through the fact that a young man posing as a burglar enters her room by the window while she sleeps. Discovering the supposed burglar, who afterward turns out to be a novelist looking for realism for a story, she is prompted by the kindness of her heart and the pleadings of the man to conceal him when the matron of the school appears on the scene, and upon his being detected she complicates matters by saying that he is her husband.

The end of the story discloses the fact that the young man is also the son of rich parents, and a lie promises to become a reality in the anticipated marriage of the pair.

"BEFORE AND AFTER TAKING."

Metro-Drew Comedy Reverts to Marriage of Henry Minor and Discloses Buried Hopes.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

AN amusing theme forms the basis of that number of the Metro-Drew comedies entitled "Before and After Taking." The story was suggested by Bertie Badger Moyer, and is consistently funny. The Drews are entertaining as usual, bringing to the comedy a reality without which there would be little left.

In this number Henry Minor, whose domestic fortunes we have followed in other numbers, is brought back to that period of his life immediately prior to his marriage, when he not only dreamed but boasted of the obedience to his will which was to be exemplified in his future wife, and of the things he would will that she should not do. The story then jumps ahead to the end of the honeymoon, when Henry makes known his wishes, when Polly weeps a bit, and finally ends up by doing just as she pleases to the disgust and discomfiture of Henry. The production will be enjoyed by the majority of audiences on account of its thoroughly human sentiments.

"HUCK AND TOM"

Five-Part Lasky Story From "Tom Sawyer" Features Jack Pickford.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

GIVEN its full title this five-part screen version of Mark Twain's famous book of boy life is known as "Huck and Tom"; or, "The Further Adventures of Tom Sawyer." The incidents in the picture are among the most interesting in the story, and the author's wonderful sympathy with everything connected with boys of all ages and his knowledge of the habits and customs in a Missouri River town before the Civil War are brought out in complete detail in the Jesse L. Lasky production. The picture opens with the visit of Tom and Huck to the graveyard at midnight in search of a wart cure, where they are the terrified beholders of the murder committed by Injun Joe. The scenes of the two boys pledging each other to silence, and of Tom's telling everything in the courtroom when the half-breed tries to swear the crime on Muff Potter are next shown, followed by illustrations of Tom's conduct when he finds himself a hero.

The picnic to the cave; Tom and Becky; the central figures of more excitement when they do not return with the party; the search; Tom's care of Becky, and his fright when he discovers the presence of Injun Joe in the cave with them; the rescue, and the death of the murderer at the door which stood between him and freedom are the other incidents that fill out the latter half of the story, and bring it to a dramatic close.

Jack Pickford hardly looks a fourteen-year-old boy, but plays the part so naturally and makes Tom so like the character as Mark Twain drew him that everything else is forgotten. Robert Gordon fits the part of Huck admirably, and Edythe Chapman as Aunt Polly, Clara Horton as Becky Thatcher, Helen Gillmore as Widow Douglas, Frank Lanning as Injun Joe, and Tom Bates as Muff Potter are of real value to the cast. Julia Crawford Ivers arranged the scenario, William D. Taylor directed it, and Homer Scott was the photographer.

GENERAL FILM PROGRAM.

"The Trimmed Lamp," An O. Henry Story, and Two Judge Brown Offerings, "Marrying Off Dad" and "Tad's Swimming Hole."

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

"The Trimmed Lamp."

AN interesting O. Henry in the Broadway Star Feature series is "The Trimmed Lamp," in which Mildred Manning, Alice Terry, and Elma Peterson appear in the principal roles. There is an unexpected development in the story, as the position of the two leading female characters is practically reversed before the end of the story is reached. Nan (Alice Terry) is a shop girl with high ideas, and always looking for a millionaire. Lou (Mildred Manning), her chum, is a laundry worker, not caring much for show or style, and satisfied with her lover, a man in her own station. After Nan finds her millionaire, and is insulted, she changes her views. In the meantime, Lou, who has met the same man, disappears; and in the end we find Nan contented and getting ready to marry Lou's former sweetheart, while Lou, who, for the sake of pretty clothes and luxuries, has gone with a millionaire without this formality, is shown as bitterly disappointed with life. The picture follows quite closely the written story, but lacks some of the fine touches of some of the previous productions of this author's works.

"Marrying Off Dad."

Two motherless boys unable to get out and play like the other youngsters, as they must keep house for their father, are the leading characters in this Judge Brown offering. They play hookey from school, and are taken to court. The judge, hearing their story, tells them to go out and find a housekeeper, which they proceed to do. The result is that the whole family is so pleased with her that they succeed in marrying her off to their father, after working up a scheme to make him jealous of the man next door. There are a number of bits of boyhood pyschology, and the production is interesting and interpreted by a satisfactory cast, including Wallis Brennan and Ernest Thompson as the two boys, Sadie Clayton as the housekeeper, and Ruth Hampton as the girl next door who helps the boys with their scheme.

"Tad's Swimming Hole."

In this Judge Brown story grown-ups will be carried back to the days of their childhood, and the scenes are very realistic, as a number of boys are shown enjoying themselves at the old swimming hole in the bend of the creek, and they are shown disporting themselves on the bank and in the water minus bathing suits; clad only in nature's garb. Tad and Mark, two urchins, are not members of the swimming hole gang. Mark, by showing he can do stunts, becomes a regular member, but forgets poor Tad, and helps the gang drive him away. Later, Tad, while stealing a swim all by himself, rescues the daughter of the owner of the surrounding land, and as a reward is given title to the swimming pool. In the meantime the boys are arrested by the former owner, and in court it looks as if it will go hard with them, when Tad rushes in, proves to the judge that he is the owner, and returns good for evil by declaring that he gave the gang permission to swim. Earnest Butterworth appears as Tad, Guy Hayman as Mark, and Ruth Hampton as the girl Tad rescues. This is an interesting offering, with several good human touches.

"REVENGE."

Edith Story Featured in Effective Five-Reel Metro Dealing with a Western Mining Camp.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

IN "Revenge," the five-reel Metro feature released February 25, based on Edward Moffatt's novel, "Hearts Steadfast," Edith Story is seen to advantage, and opportunity is afforded her for good work. The story is interesting, and the construction is better than in her first Metro production, "The Eyes of Mystery." There are several effective scenes, especially where the star indulges in reckless riding down steep hillsides and over embankments to reach her lover in time to save his life. There is also a well balanced supporting cast.

Alva Leigh goes to the Western mining town of Magnet to marry her fiance, Donald Jaffray, arriving in time to find that he has been murdered. She swears vengeance, and Duncan, the dance hall owner, contrives to throw suspicion on Jaffray's partner, Dick Randall. It later develops that Jaffray was unworthy of her love, and that Duncan is the murderer. In the meantime, in order to get rid of Randall, Duncan poisons the water in Randall's canteen, which he will need in crossing the desert. Alva, not knowing this, cuts a hole in the canteen so that the water will drip out. "Tiger Lil," in a fit of jealousy, tells Alva that Duncan is the murderer. Alva then realizes that Randall has borne the suspicion in order to shield Jaffray's memory, and that she loves Randall. So, mounting a horse, she dashes to his rescue, arrives in time, and, after expanations, all ends satisfacorily. "Tiger Lil" returns to the dance hall, and, in a quarrel, shoots Duncan.

Edith Story appears as Alva, and her handling of the part is excellent. The same can be said of Wheeler Oakman as Randall, Ralph Lewis as Duncan, and Alberta Ballard as "Tiger Lil." The production is well directed by Tod Browning, and starts with an effective scene where the stage coach catches fire. At the Claremont theater, on Broadway and 135th street, New York, this picture was applauded after its presentation, and the star's work in the rescue scenes was well received.

Comments

General Film Company.

WILD ALGY OF PICCADILLY (Essanay).—A burlesque comedy in which Arthur Bates appears as a London tenderfoot in a mining camp. He finally disguises as a highwayman, holds up the crowd and pummels the ringleaders, particularly one whom he discovers to be his long lost father, who deserted his mother twenty years before. About on the average with other comedies of this brand. Contains a few laughs and amusing situations.

THE TRIMMED LAMP (Broadway Star Features).—A two-reel O. Henry story, with Mildred Manning, Alice Terry and Elmer Peterson in the leading roles. An interesting production, but lacking some of the fine touches of some of the previous numbers. Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

MARRYING OFF DAD.—An interesting Judge Brown story dealing with two boys whose mother is dead. They play hookey, are arrested, and on advice from the judge get a housekeeper. Pa falls in love with her to the satisfaction of all concerned. Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

HUNGRY EYES (Bluebird).—A five-reel subject, featuring Monroe Salisbury and Ruth Clifford. The former plays the part of a reformed young Southerner in the West. The character is one very well suited to him and will please his admirers. The story itself is interesting, if not very novel in plot. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

THE GIRL IN THE DARK (Bluebird).—An enjoyable mystery subject, in five reels, featuring Carmel Myers. The opening situations are full of suspense and take immediate hold on the interest. The story has a rather slower gait in the third and fourth reels, but the mystery is well protected and the final reel brings up the interest again in a satisfactory way. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

Century Comedies.

SHE DID HER BIT (Century Comedy), Dec. 30.—A two-reel comic, featuring Alice Howell as a blacksmith's daughter. She falls in love with a "city feller" and bursts into high society after marrying him. The action is of the burlesque, knockabout type. Not much plot, but some of the incidents are laughable.

OH, BABY (Century Comedy), Feb. 14.—Some extremely laughable occurrences take place in this very acceptable burlesque number, which features Alice Howell. She appears as Minnie Grabit, just released from prison. She poses as a Salvation Army girl long enough to collect loose change, later becomes a nurse and finally a servant girl. The incidents are of the knockabout sort, and the eccentric characterizations are funny. A good subject of the type.

Famous Players-Lasky Corp.

SHERIFF NELL'S TUSSLE (Paramount-Sennett).—Polly Moran as Sheriff Nell brings out the promise made by the title of this two-part comedy and shows that she can keep pace with the comic daredevils of the screen. Supported by Ben Turpin, William Armstrong, Gonda Durand and Al McKinnon, Nell rides and shoots with her old reckless abandon and succeeds in circumventing a slick safe cracker who tries to throw the sheriff off the scent by entertaining her and the rest of the town at a slight-of-hand performance. Nell gets wise and shows the crook a few tricks herself.

"HEADIN' SOUTH" (Artcraft), Feb. 25.—Douglas Fairbanks is the main-spring of this five-part picture, which tells a melodramatic story with the usual Fairbanks trimmings. The star takes the part of a member of the Canadian Mounted Police, engaged in running down a man. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

EVE'S DAUGHTER, March 4.—The story of a young girl who decided to live her own life and came near spoiling it by drifting into evil influences, with Billie Burke very charming as the lead.

HUCK AND TOM (Lasky), March 4.—This five-part story from the celebrated Mark Twain "Tom Sawyer" book has the same charm as the other pictures made from the work. Jack Pickford and the cast are true to the originals, and the production is full of fine local color. This number completes the series. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

THE FAMILY SKELETON (Thomas H. Ince), March 11.—Charles Ray is the star of this five-part picture. He plays the part of a wealthy young chap who is afraid he has inherited a craving for drink and the story shows his fight to conquer the weakness. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

THE SIGN INVISIBLE (First National).—A story of the North Woods intended to prove the efficacy of prayer as a sign of the invisible God. Mitchell Lewis a capable lead.

Goldwyn Pictures Corp.

THE BELOVED TRAITOR, March 10.—A warmly sympathetic story of simple-hearted, true love, with some sensational scenes and Mae Marsh in the leading role. Won favor at the Strand.

Greater Vitagraph, Inc.

THE DESPERATE CHANCE, March 11.—Number Twelve of the "Vengeance and the Woman" serial is filled with excitement. Tons of rocks are showered on helpless human beings by the explosions set off by the villains, and several of the victims are dug out alive. For the doing of the seemingly impossible this serial, directed by William Duncan, is making a new record.

THE SONG OF THE SOUL, March 4.—Five-part Blue Ribbon feature, this picture has an unconvincing story written by Shannon Fife. Alice Joyce and the rest of the cast give a good account of themselves. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

King-Bee Films Corp.

THE ORDERLY.—Billy West appears as a disorderly orderly in a sanitarium, and indulges in a number of pranks with the patients, resulting in several laughs. Reviewed at length on page 1410 of last issue.

THE ROGUE.—In this number Billy West is run over by an automobile and is taken home by a pretty girl. Later he unwittingly effects the capture of two thieves and is acclaimed a hero. A good comedy number, with some particularly good scenes in which a white mouse is used. Reviewed in last issue.

HIS DAY OUT.—Billy West is seen in the character of an escaped lunatic in this number. It is full of slapstick, and has some good comedy situations in a barber shop. Reviewed at length in last issue.

THE STRANGER.—The opening scene shows Billy West rescuing beauty in distress from the hands of two western bad men. There are some good laughs in this picture, especially a comedy fight with the sheriff and scenes in a restaurant where he tastes hot tamale. A donkey is also introduced to good effect. Reviewed on page 1410 of last issue.

George Kleine System.

BRONCHO BILLY'S LEAP (Kleine-Essanay).—The first reissue of the one-reel Broncho Billy stories, featuring G. M. Anderson in his familiar characterization. The plot is simple, but the action is rapid and pleasing; the settings are also of the real West. Reviewed at greater length elsewhere.

PERU (Kleine-Lincoln & Parker).—A splendidly pictured and comprehensive scenic. This gives a fine idea of the South American country, with its rugged coasts, live, progressive cities, and interesting people. The animals are also shown, including camels, llamas and vicunas. The number has been carefully planned and constructed.

THE MATINEE GIRL (Kleine-Edison).—Another bright and snappy number in the James Montgomery Flagg series of "Girls You Know." Isabel Lamon plays the girl in this case. She falls in love with a matinee idol, but finds to her sorrow that he is already married. A simple plot, handled in a smart and effective way.

Metro Pictures Corp.

REVENGE, Feb. 25.—Edith Storey is featured in this five-reel production, in which she does good work. It is an interesting story of a mining camp, in which she learns to love the man she wrongly believes to be the murderer of her sweetheart. The supporting cast, including Wheeler Oakman, Alberta Ballard and Ralph Lewis, is excellent. Reviewed on another page of this issue.

BEFORE AND AFTER TAKING (Drew), March 4.—In the Metro-Drew comedy, "Before and After Taking," we revert to the marriage of Henry Minor and learn that his ideas of what his wife should be and her ideas of what she would be differed somewhat. The story of the picture, which was suggested by Bertie Badger Moyer, contains a good situation which is made the most of. A full review appears elsewhere.

Mutual Film Corp.

THE MIDNIGHT TRAIL (American), Feb. 25.—A William Russell feature of pleasing quality directed by Edward Sloman. The production, which is reviewed on another page of this magazine, treats of the story of a young millionaire whose ambition lay in a desire to become a detective. The picture takes the form of a comedy-drama and is very entertaining.

UP IN THE AIR (Strand), Feb. 26.—A Billie Rhodes picture in which an aeroplane figures largely. It is the old story of the father opposing a match between his daughter and her lover, and the final overthrow of the interferer by Cupid. In this instance the man to whom her father would marry her is lured into making love to her chum, and when a double wedding is about to be performed a man and a couple of children enter posing as husband and children of the chum. Fairly entertaining.

SCREEN TELEGRAM NO. 1 (Mutual), March 3.—The first issue of the Screen Telegram, which is taking the place of the news weekly known as the Mutual Weekly, contains interesting material. Among the items which it contains are a train load of food wrecked in Illinois, classic dancers at the home of Ruth St. Denis, in California, children of France receiving Christmas presents at the hands of Red Cross nurses, and students at Berkeley and California universities training for the big fight.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

THE REBOUND (Pathe), March 3.—The seventh number of "The Price of Folly" series, in two reels. Ruth Roland appears as a girl artist, who comes to the city to pursue her calling. The scenes in the art school provide an interesting variation for this type of story. The girl is made the victim of a fake wedding, but afterward discovers the truth and meets with real happiness. This is one of the most entertaining subjects of this series, and has considerable plot novelty.

THE GIRL OF THE PROPHECY (Pathe), March 3.—This is the final episode of "The Hidden Hand" and brings this serial to an interesting conclusion. There is a surprise for many observers who may have thought they knew the identity of the "Hidden Hand." We assumed early in the serial that a certain character was doubling in this role and one other, but the denouement did not have it so. Jack rescues Doris for the last time in this number, and the "Hidden Hand" comes to his death. The solution of the girl of the prophecy makes a good feature. The serial has been a very entertaining one of the melodramatic type.

JACKIE'S CLOTHES (Pathe-International), March 10.—A half-reel subject, picturing the work of a military clothing establishment at Charleston Navy Yard. Here suits for naval recruits are turned out by wholesale. The process is gone into thoroughly and is very informing as pictured.

SPIRITS (Pathe), March 10.—A half-reel animated drawing, shown with above. This shows the entertaining Katzenjammer Kids in some new tricks they play upon the Captain. His efforts to hold spiritualistic converse with the supposedly dead dog are amusing.

THE HOODED TERROR (Pathe), March 10.—Episode No. 1, in three reels, of the new serial, "The House of Hate." This gets a very interesting start, the chief incidents all occurring in the home of a munitions man named Winthrop Waldon. Pearl White appears as Waldon's daughter, whom he desires to marry to a cousin, Haynes Waldon, in order to perpetuate the family name. Winthrop Waldon is murdered in the last reel of this first instalment, and a strong mystery is at once established, as there are any number of people who might be guilty of the crime.

RANIER PARK (Pathe), March 10.—Another scenic number in the series called "Our National Parks." This half-reel shows Reflection Lake, Skyline Trail, Paradise Inn, Mt. Ranier and other special points of interest in this famous locality.

MESA VERDA PARK (Pathe), March 10.—On same reel with above. This gives some exceptionally interesting views of Cliff Palace and other homes of the Cliff Dwellers, which are justly described as the best preserved ruins in America. A splendid idea is given of these historic and peculiar dwelling places.

LOOK PLEASANT, PLEASE (Rolin-Pathe), March 10.—A comic subject, with numerous laughable moments. Harold Lloys appears as a debonair grocer's clerk, who acquires a photographer's studio and has fun taking pictures of various customers. The action is amusing throughout. Harry Pollard and Bebe Daniels also appear.

Select Pictures Corp.

THE SHUTTLE (Select).—Lewis J. Selznick presents Constance Talmadge in a five-part screen version of the novel by Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett. The story is about an American girl who goes to England and rescues her sister from a brutal nobleman who married her for her money. The star is as charming as ever. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

THE HOUSE OF GLASS (Select).—A five-reel Clara Kimball Young picture clearly written, artistically acted and directed and beautifully photographed. We recommend it as a particularly well-made melodrama that will grace the screen of any theater. For a longer notice see another page of this issue.

Triangle Film Corp.

THE HARD ROCK BREED (Triangle), March 10.—Jack Livingston and Margery Wilson are the leading players in this five-part picture, with scenes laid at a western railroad construction camp. There are several lively fights during the action. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

A SOUL IN TRUST (Triangle).—This seven-part feature on the regular program was written by Catherine Carr and contains a strong plot. Belle Bennett heads the cast. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Universal Film Mfg. Company.

CURRENT EVENTS NO. 42 (Universal), Feb. 23.—A diversified number, picturing the effects of a volcanic disturbance in New Zealand, march of U. S. Army troops in New York, caring for homeless French babies, and other subjects of interest. Cartoons from leading newspapers are the closing feature, as usual.

ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 13 (Universal), Feb. 27.—Training stunts at Camp Logan, Texas, Uncle Sam's coaling stations, food shortage in Cuba, shipbuilding activities, and numerous other subjects are treated in this number, which closes with Hy Mayer cartoons.

NOBODY'S WIFE (Universal), March 4.—A five-reel subject, featuring Louise Lovely and Hart Hoxie. The scenes are laid in the Northwest, the hero being a member of the Mounted Police and the girl a pretty young woman of the woods. The continuity of the plot is not very strong, but there is some novelty in the story itself. It makes an offering of average strength. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

AMBROSE AND THE WIDOW (L-Ko), March 13.—A two-reel comic, featuring Mack Swain as Ambrose. He has a series of rather amusing adventures at the beginning and finally weds a woman who desires to get rid of him. She asks a friend to put a bomb under Ambrose, but he escapes death. There is no great amount of plot in this; it is rather a series of amusing small incidents of a knockabout sort.

THE MYSTERY SHIP, NO. 16 (Universal Special), March 16.—This instalment contains no "big" scene, but consists of a number of entertaining personal adventures of the various characters. Betty, after being rescued once from Russell, again falls into his clutches, but Gaston is soon on the trail. Le Gage is blown up in an explosion and killed. Jack Fay escapes from his captors, after a hand-to-hand fight.

ON THE BRINK (Universal Special), March 16.—Episode No. 6 of "The Bullseye." This opens with the hand-to-hand struggle between Cody and Sweeney on a cliff. Cody falls over the edge, but is uninjured. Sweeney is captured and about to be hanged when Cora intervenes and saves him. The instalment closes with Cora again a captive, on the eve of her father's funeral. A characteristic number, which continues the story interest.

Victor Film Company.

THE TRIUMPH OF VENUS (Victor Film Co.).—Betty Lee has the title role in this six-part spectacle written and directed by Edwin Bower Hesser. It has moments of beauty but its artistic sins are many. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

World Pictures.

THE SPURS OF SYBIL (World), March 4.—Alice Brady plays an adventurous young woman in this five-part screen story who gives up a life of luxury and tries earning her own living for a year. She gains a lot of experience and a husband before the end of the time. A fairly entertaining story, well played and produced. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

THE WASP (World), March 11.—Kitty Gordon is featured in this five-part story written by Willard Mack. The English actress plays a society young woman who gets mixed up with a strike at her father's factory. Melodrama and romance are about equally divided in the plot. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

"THE BRASS CHECK."

Metro Presents Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne in a Five-Part Screen Arrangement of George Allan England's Story in the All-Story Weekly.

Cast.

Richard Trevor.....Francis X. Bushman
Edith Everett.....Beverly Bayne
Wellington Dix.....Augustus Phillips
Silas Trevor.....Frank Currier
Norma Glanor.....Ollie Cooper
Cornelius Everett....Rudolph De Cordova
Henry Everett.....Frank Joyner
Peter Glanor.....Robert Williamson

Directed by William S. Davis.

The Story: Henry Everett has perfected a process for making synthetic rubber, but when he approaches the rubber trust they cause him to be placed in an insane asylum when he will not sacrifice his invention for the pittance they offer. Richard Trevor leaves home because he does not fancy the somewhat ugly heiress his father has selected for him. He finds a letter and a brass check, and for the sake of adventure he claims the bag the check represents. The letter is from Edith to a detective, planning to get Henry from the asylum. Richard takes the place of the detective, and he not only secures Henry's freedom, but the acceptance of his terms and an interest in the firm through the simple expedient of shutting the trust into a cell with a real lunatic.

For the Program: The brass check was for a suitcase and a wife.

Locked the rubber trust heads in an insane asylum to win.

Advertising Phrases: The cellmate of the rubber trust heads thought he was the Kaiser. He must have been crazy.

Bushman and Bayne in a story of spirited action.

Feature These Players: Mr. Bushman as the resourceful Trevor.

Miss Bayne as Edith.

Stunt Suggestions: Tack a common claim check to the top of a card, and from it run one ribbon to a picture of Miss Bayne and another to an old suit case. Letter, "The suit case was what the brass check called for, but what it really brought was a wife. You may have read the story of 'The Brass Check' in the All-Story. Anyhow you'll want to see Bushman and Bayne in its realization at (house and date)." Send up ten toy balloons each with a brass check good for a pair of seats at any matinee performance. For the lobby try to borrow a lot of brass checks to be used as festoons, or you can build them up on the lines of the Chinese glass bells, and get a sound as well as sight attractor. Make liberal use of the portraits of the stars.

Advertising Aids: Two designs each one, three and six-sheets. Lobby sheet. Press sheet. Filler sheet. Ten minute novel for newspaper work. Slide. Herald. Lobby displays 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Cuts.

Released March 11.

"BEAUTY IN CHAINS."

Universal Presents Ella Hall in a Charming Screen Version of B. Perez Caldos' Novel of Spanish Life, Donna Perfecta.

Cast.

Pepe Rey Don Jose.....Emory Johnson
Dona Perfecta.....Ruby La Fayette
Rosarito.....Ella Hall
Don Cayetano.....Winter Hall
Jacinto.....Maxfield Stanley
Licurgo.....Harry M. Holden
Caballuco.....George E. McDaniel
Juana Troya.....Gretchen Lederer
Lieut. Pinzon.....William Hakeem

Produced by Elsie Jane Wilson.

The Story: The story of a little Spanish town queened over by Dona Perfecta. Her right hand man is the notary Cayetano, who hopes to marry his son to Rosarito, the Dona's granddaughter. But Rosarito has been betrothed to Pepe Rey, and Pepe writes that he is going to visit this fair cousin who is some day to be his bride. He has all of the city man's contempt for the village, and this gains for him the dislike of all save Rosarito, but as long as she is loyal, Pepe cares not for the others, and he wins his heart's desire in as gallant a fashion as any cabalero ancestor of old.

For the Program: A familiar tale of persistent love in a strange setting.

The man from Madrid knew just what to do.

Advertising Phrases: Seething love in Sunny Spain.

Got the best of his prospective grandmother-in-law.

Feature These Players: Ella Hall as Rosarito.

Emory Johnson as Pepe.

Ruby La Fayette as the scheming old grandmother.

Stunt Suggestions: As the locale of the play is in Spain dress your ticket seller in a mantilla and get such other Spanish color into the lobby as you can. The red and yellow will work up very nicely for window work, and in the newspaper advertising lay stress upon the fact that the play is different from the innumerable stories of the Mexican border; a difference well worth seeing.

Advertising Aids: One design each one, three and six-sheets. One sheet of star. Black and white lobby displays. Slide. Heralds. Press book.

Released March 11.

"THE GREAT ADVENTURE."

Pathe Presents Bessie Love in a Story of the Stage Adapted by Agnes Johnson from Henry Kitchell Webster's Story of the Same Title.

Cast.

"Rags" .....Bessie Love
Her Aunt.....Flora Finch
Mr. Sheen.....Donald Hall
Billy Blake.....Chester Barnett
Hazel Lee.....Florence Short

The Story: Ragna Jansen, known affectionately as "Rags," creates such a favorable impression at high school commencement that her friends declare she is destined to win fame on the stage. "Rags" is willing to believe this, for it matches with her secret estimates and ambitions. She goes to the great city, chaperoned by her prim and proper aunt. In the rooming house where they lodge, "Rags" makes the acquaintance of Billy Blake, a chorus man, who encourages her when trips to the various theatrical offices have brought disappointment to the ambitious country girl. Billy gives her the name of the manager of the show he is in, telling her the only way to approach him is to "hold him up." This advice "Rags" accepts literally, climbs the fire escape and passes a window opening into the manager's office, and at the point of a pistol demands that the showman shall give her employment. This unusual introduction leads to "Rags" securing a small role, and her personal accomplishments lead rapidly to advancement. Opportunity comes for "Rags" to substitute for the star, and the understudy proves her merit by outshining her principal. Sheen, the manager, is captivated, and the struggles of the girl against attentions that her charms and talents induce her manager to proffer constitute exciting episodes that lead to a satisfactory termination of the story.

For the Program: Secrets of the Stage Disclosed.

Intimate Pictures of Life Behind the Scenes.

From Country Girl to Stage Star.

Advertising Phrases: Her Name in Electric Lights.

Winning Her Way to Stage Glory.

Life on the Stage Shown on the Screen.

Feature This Player: Bessie Love, irresistibly charming in sparkling comedy drama.

Stunt Suggestions: It is hard to suggest any stunt that specifically applies to the story. For a general advertising idea, even the smallest village has boys who can walk on stilts. With trousers elongated to cover the stilts a grotesque and conspicuous figure, carrying a sign, would attract attention. Letter the sign: "This is a great adventure. See Bessie Love in The Great Adventure at (name of theatre)." You should fill your lobby with the pictures Pathe furnishes of cute and pretty Bessie Love. If there is an amateur dramatic society in your town try to interest them in this story of a country girl who won fame as a Broadway star. Don't forget that most girl graduates believe they were born to play Rosalind and Juliet for Belasco.

Advertising Aids: One one-sheet, two three-sheets, one six and one 24-sheet. Lobby displays, 11x14, both in sepia and colors; also 22x28. Slide. Two one-column cuts. Campaign book.

Released March 10.

"POWERS THAT PREY."

Mutual Presents "Powers That Prey," a Mary Miles Minter Comedy Drama, Produced by the American Film Co., Starring Miss Minter.

Cast.

Sylvia Grant.....Mary Miles Minter
Frank Summers.....Alan Forrest
Burton Grant.....Harvey Clarke
Jarvis M'Vey.....Clarence Burton
Mrs. Brackett.....Lucille Ward
Mrs. Sharon.....Emma Kluge
George Lake.....Perry Banks
Bobs .....Robert Miller

Directed by Henry King.

The Story: Sylvia Grant is suddenly called home from boarding school because of a conspiracy among grafting politicians to wreck her father's newspaper property and drive him out of town. Editor Grant decides to leave town for a time and delegate authority to an editor, in order to carry out certain policies. Sylvia is told by her father to go home and stay so that a member of the family may be on the ground, but she decides to take charge of the paper in her father's absence, and drive the crooks out of town. In this matter she has the co-operation of a clever city editor, Frank Summers. Her methods are so revolutionary that she wins the fight by sheer audacity, without knowing that she has come within an ace of wrecking the newspaper property.

For the Program: Vivid Picture of Newspaper Fight on Bossism.

What the Girl Editor Printed Brought Chills to Snobs of Society.

The Power of the Press in a Woman's Hands.

Advertising Phrases: What Newspapers Ought to Print.

Where Angels Fear to Tread.

How a Girl Cleaned Up a Town.

Girl Drives Political Bosses to Cover.

Feature This Player: Mary Miles Minter, dainty queen of the screen; pretty and charming, she entrances and delights with youthful beauty.

Stunt Suggestions: Your local newspapers might allow you to clip the tops of various newspaper front pages. Paste these headings on strips of cloth, wide enough to hold them all firmly. Arranged in perpendicular strips, the lobby would be uniquely ornamented in a way to attract attention. You can get co-operative ideas from your local newspapers, because this feature expounds the "Power of the Press" in convincing fashion. Street advertising stunts are hard to devise.

Released March 4.

"HUNGRY EYES."

Bluebird Presents Ruth Clifford and Monroe Salisbury in a Story of a Black Sheep Who Was Not as Black as He Painted Himself—and the Black Washed Off.

Cast.

John Silver.....Rupert Julian
Dale Revenal.....Monroe Salisbury
Mary Jane Appleton.....Ruth Clifford
Dudley Appleton.....W. H. Bainbridge
Jack Nelda.....A. H. Barros
Scotty .....Arthur Tavares
Bessie Dupont.....Gretchen Lederer
Pinto .....George McDaniel
Nellie .....Rita Pickering

Directed by Rupert Julian.

The Story: Dale Revenal comes to the Appleton ranch with a letter from John Silver, introducing him as the black sheep of his family, just out of jail for horse-stealing, but still a man worth while. Appleton puts him to work. Appleton's daughter, Mary Jane, falls in love with him, though he seeks to avoid her. Nelda, owner of an adjoining ranch, seeks Mary's hand, and tries to dispose of his rival by declaring that he has a wife in Yuma. Dale promptly admits the wife as the best way of killing Mary's love, but even this does not seem to work and Nelda plans a more elaborate frame-up that ends in Dale's justification and his own defeat after a series of shooting scrapes.

For the Program: A black sheep who was white within.

A story of love where life is ever young.

Advertising Phrases: Even a wife in Yuma could not shake Mary Jane's love.

Said he was a bad man, but he didn't act like one.

Feature These Players: Ruth Clifford as Mary Jane.

Monroe Salisbury as Dale.

Stunt Suggestions: On large sheets of white or light paper write in large script Dave's letter of introduction, "Dale Revenal, the same who hands you this, is my friend. He is the black sheep of his family. Just finished serving a sentence at Yuma for horse-stealing. Give him a chance. John Silver." Below attach a card reading "What followed the presentation of this letter can be seen in Hungry Eyes at (house and date). A Bluebird." The letter can also be used as the basis for a newspaper advertisement.

Advertising Aids: One design each one, three and six sheets. Stock one sheet of star. Colored and black-and-white lobby displays. Slide. Heralds. Player cuts in three sizes. Scene cuts one and two columns wide. Press book.

Released March 11.

"SUNSHINE NAN."

The Famous Players-Lasky Presents Ann Pennington in An Adaptation of Calvary Alley by Alice Hegan Rice, Author of Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch, Etc.

Cast.

Nance Molloy.....Ann Pennington
McPherson Clark....Richard Barthelmess
Dan Lewis.....John Hines
Mrs. Snawdor.....Helen Tracey
Mr. Snawdor.....Charles Eldridge

Directed by Charles Giblyn.

The Story: Calvary Alley has taken its place with Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch and Lovey Mary. Nan, the "alley rat," leader of the gang in their fights against the cathedral choir boys, does not regard it as luck when she is sent to the reform school for attempting to straighten out one of the matrimonal scrambles of the alley, but it sends her out a competent stenographer, and she gets a position in the Clark shoe factory, where she discovers the son of the owner planning to steal the invention of her pal, Dan. There is a dramatic rescue as young Clark steps into the machinery and, with the royalties Dan gets from his invention, Nan cleans up the Alley and makes it a place for homes instead of hovels.

For the Program: A worthy companion to Mrs. Rice's other stage, film and fiction successes.

A charming classic of the slums.

Advertising Phrases: Nearly kills young millionaire protecting sweetheart's patent.

Reform school proves turning point in life of girl gangster.

Feature These Players: Ann Pennington as Nan.

John Hines as Dan.

Richard Barthelmess as Clark.

Stunt Suggestions: Arrange for displays of all of Mrs. Rice's books with a card reading: "Ever notice that every one of Alice Hegan Rice's stories has been a success on stage and screen as well as between covers? Calvary Alley is the latest, and under the title of Sunshine Nan can be seen at (house and date) with Ann Pennington as the little Alley Rat." Get a card in the library and approach the literary clubs. For a street wagon use the sign: "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch. Lovey Mary. And now Sunshine Nan (Calvary Alley) with Ann Pennington and a Paramount cast (house and date). You can't afford to miss this one."

Advertising Aids: Two designs each one, three and six-sheets. Rotogravure. Photos, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Ten cuts each on star and production, one to three columns wide. Advertising layout mats. Slides. Press book.

Released March 11.

"THE DESIRED WOMAN."

Vitagraph Presents Harry Morey and Florence Deshon in the Story of a Worshiper of Mammon Who Finds Peace Only After He Has Lost His All.

Cast.

Richard Mostyn.....Harry Morey
Irene Mitchell.....Florence Deshon
Dolly Drake.....Jean Paige
Jarvis Saunders.....Charles Hutchinson
Jeff Henderson.....William Cameron
Marie Winship.....Eulalie Jensen
Andy Buckton.....Harold Forshay
Little Dick.....Aida Horton

Directed by Paul Scardon.

The Story: Richard Mostyn cleans up a hundred thousand dollars on a get-rich-quick swindle and goes to the country to recuperate. There he meets Dolly Drake and falls in love. He goes back to town to close out his affairs and return to her, but the old life has too strong an appeal. He stays on and marries Irene Mitchell, of his own set. Some time later the day of reckoning comes. His creditors close in upon him, his wife elopes, and his little boy, the one thing he truly loves, dies under the surgeon's knife. Broken in purse and spirit, he goes to Dolly, only to find that she loved the man she thought he was instead of the man he is. Yet this last stroke brings him resignation and he finds peace at last.

For the Program: Man puts love last; to woman it is first and last.

Success is the most costly thing in the world. It demands all and gives nothing in return.

Advertising Phrases: Loses wife, child and money in a single day, yet finds peace with itinerant preacher.

Swindling broker meets his deserts at last.

Feature These Players: Harry Morey as the stock broker.

Florence Deshon as the girl who marries him, then elopes.

Stunt Suggestions: Letter cards in large letters, "Don't buy Liberty Bonds," and add in much smaller lettering, "if you can get 50 to 100 per cent. on your investment elsewhere. But be sure it's a safe investment and not like Richard Mostyn's scheme in The Desired Woman. He swindled hundreds with his glittering promises, but his sins found him out at last. See the play at (house and date)." With a line like that you can get almost everyone to read. In the lobby offer one free admission for every hundred dollars' worth of wildcat stock presented at the box office. Make the sign large and emphatic and hook up with Mostyn.

Advertising Aids: One design each one, three and six-sheets. Window cards. Lobby displays, 11x14 and 22x28. Heralds. Slides. Plan book. Press sheet.

Released March 11.

"THE HARD ROCK BREED."

Triangle Presents a Story of Hard Rocks and Hard Knocks in the Battle of Life, By Frederic Recholdt. Scenario by G. E. Jenks.

Cast.

Donald Naughton.....Jack Livingston
Shiela Dolan.....Margery Wilson
Lynch Dolan.....Jack Curtis
Bill Naughton.....J. Barney Sherry
Mother Kelly.....Marion Skinner
Jim Smith.....Lee Phelps
Bunny Case.....George Chase
Mike Carney.....Louis Durham
Greek Louis.....Thornton Edwards
Shea .....Aaron Edwards

The Story: Shiela Dolan and Donald Naughton were born on the same day, twenty-five years before the play begins. Their fathers were foremen on construction work, but Naughton has progressed, through thrift and energy, to a position of wealth, while Dolan has contented himself with "booze" and consequent poverty. Naughton's son, Don, is started on the same road, his future further blighted by a tendency to snobbishness. Naughton, now a contractor, sends Don to another job, as foreman, to take the place of Carney, who is a crook as well as keeper of the Gem saloon, where he sells rum to his men and thereby secures a monarchial sway over them. His henchmen and partner is Greek Louis. Don assumes a snobbish attitude toward his men and thereby centers their dislike upon himself. Carney and Greek Louis plan to undermine young Naughton and get the job for drunken Dolan. They import anarchists and I. W. W.'s, create an intolerable condition, and then Naughton's real manhood, inherited from his hardy father, asserts itself. Shiela Dolan has absorbed the prevailing dislike for Don, and Smith, the company engineer, who loves her, is manly enough to take Naughton's part, in the conviction that whiskey drinking has smothered Don's real disposition. Out of the conflict comes the complete reformation of Don, and the birth of an abiding love between Don and Shiela that works the complete transformation of the elder Dolan and brings the sum total of happiness for all.

For the Program: Out of Hard Knocks on Hard Rocks Comes Happiness.
John Barleycorn Licked in a Stand-up Fight by True Love.
When Real Love Enters the Heart an Appetite for Whiskey Can Be Cured.

Advertising Phrases: Through Life's Hard Knock Dan Cupid Gained a Victory.
How a Strong Man Weakly Fighting "Booze" Became a Giant at the Call of True Love.
The Right Kind of Love and Any Kind of Whiskey Won't Mix.

Advertising Stunts: Statistics prove the picture show theater has been the saloon's greatest enemy. With that in mind, there is opportunity for appealing to everybody but saloonkeepers. Two men might wander the street strongly contrasted in apparel. Let the shabby and unkempt man have a sign on his back, "I'm a Hard Liquor and Hard Rock Man. See me at the (name of the theater) in The Hard Rock Breed. The neatly dressed, extremely prosperous man might bear the sign: "I'm a Real Hard Rock Man, because 'Booze' Never Licked Me. See me at the (name of theater) in The Hard Rock Breed." If nature has left any suitable stones in your neighborhood it would attract attention if a big rock were hauled through the streets on a wagon while men beat with hollow, wooden sledges upon its surface. Banner the wagon: "See the Hard Rock Breed" at (name oftheater). Rows of empty bottles strung across the lobby might carry the banner: "The Hard Rock Breed emptied thousands of these bottles before Dan Cupid put the lid on."

Advertising Aids: One design each one, three and six-sheets. Special process art heralds. Slides. Lobby displays, 11x14 and 22x28. Electros and mats. Photos. Triangle magazine. Press sheet.
Released March 10.

"THE SEA PANTHER."

Triangle Presents a Tale of the Salty Sea. Story by Kenneth B. Clark, Recalling the Buccaneers and Freebooters of Early Days.

Cast.

Paul Le Marsan.....William Desmond
Molly Tarpley.....Mary Warren
Will Kip.....Jack Richardson
Captain Saunders.....Arthur Millet
Esther .....Lillian Langdon
Braga .....Lee Hill

The Story: Paul Le Marsan, gentlemanly freebooter, whose piratical exploits have gained for him the name of "The Sea Panther," captures the British ship, Lady Devon, aboard which is Molly Tarpley, en route to join her uncle, proprietary governor of the Carolinas. Le Marsan falls in love with his prize captive and with his sword cows members of his crew who seek to lay hands on her. All the captives are taken to the pirate town of Cayo del Muerto in the Bahamas. Le Marsan takes Molly under his protection and she is forced to share his home with him. She is overwhelmed by the barbaric splendor of the house which is filled with loot of the Spanish galleons, but she steels herself against the love which is being fanned for her bold and romantic captor. Le Marsan is true to his promise to protect her as long as she is under his care. He proves his devotion to her by fighting with swords a death battle when Barga, a fellow pirate captain, seeks to win the girl from him. Finally, realizing that he cannot have the girl's love, but determined to fulfil his promise to her, Le Marsan takes the girl back to the captive ship. The vessel is headed for the Carolinas, but has not gone far when Le Marsan and his band are overcome by the captain and crew who have been smuggled aboard. During the night Molly invades the captain's room and steals the key to the irons and liberates Le Marsan. Then she helps him prepare a rope and watches him lower himself over the side of the ship and row away to freedom.

For the Program: Love is the Loot of This Spanish Galleon.
Romance of the Sea When Pirates Said Might was Right.
Love Steals the Key and Liberates Its Prisoner.

Advertising Phrases: Cupid Makes Captain Kidd a Piker.
Love Dulls the Pirate's Sword and Rules the Foaming Wave.

Stunt Suggestions: For exhibitors along the seaboard on both coasts this feature should lend itself readily to ideas that will couple it with maritime life. Inland it will be hard to devise stunts for a feature that applies strictly to early-day piracy. Old prints of pirate crafts, pictures of buccaneers and engravings of like nature might be borrowed for lobby display. Advertise for these old prints in your local paper, and when they are loaned have a neatly painted card display the name of the accommodating friend and give a brief description of the picture. Special prizes for the rarest print might be offered. If you worked hard enough on the idea, you would probably assemble a collection that, in itself, would be interesting and instructive—besides affording good publicity, with a special story in your newspaper describing the collection.

Advertising Aids: One each one, three and six-sheets. Heralds in rotogravure. Lobby displays, 11x14 and 22x28. Slides. Electros and mats. Press sheet.
Released March 10.

"THE FAMILY SKELETON."

Thomas H. Ince Presents Charles Ray in a Diverting Story of a Young Millionaire's Struggle Against An Imaginary Curse of Drink.

Cast.

Billy Bates.....Charles Ray
Poppy Drayton.....Sylvia Bremer
Dr. Griggs.....Andrew Arbuckle
"Spider" Doyle.....Billy Elmer
Billy's valet.....Otto Hoffman
Wheeler .....Jack Dyer
Directed by Victor L. Schertzinger.

The Story: Bates inherits his father's millions and thinks he has also inherited his father's capacious thirst. Just to prove that he hasn't he drinks until his nerves are frayed. Poppy Drayton, leader of the famous "Beauty Chorus," decides that something must be done to check Billy in his self-styled losing fight, so she plans an abduction that startles Billy into his normal self again and very nearly proves the ruination of the young prize-fighter hired for the heavy part.

For the Program: The curse of drink is an awful thing to have when you haven't got it.
Drank because he thought he must.

Advertising Phrases: Thought he was a dipsomaniac when he was only a "nut."
Willard could not put up such a fight as Ray and Elmer.

Feature These Players: Charles Ray as the supposed victim of drink.
Sylvia Bremmer as Poppy.
Billy Elmer as Spider.

Stunt Suggestions: If you can get some of those little papier mache skeletons, fasten them to whiskey bottles and use a card: "He thought the Family Skeleton was a thirst, but it wasn't, though it took a knowing chorus girl to keep Billy Bates from drinking himself to death. See Charles Ray in The Family Skeleton at (house and date). It has one of those zippy Ray fights." If you cannot get the skeletons drape the bottles as ghosts. For street work have two men get into an argument noisy enough to attract a crowd. When the crowd is large enough let them strip off their coats and show on their backs, "If you want to see a fight, go to the (house) tonight and see Charles Ray lick Spider Doyle in The Fmaily Skeleton." The coats are resumed, after an interval, and the performance is repeated further along the street. Decorate the lobby with whiskey bottles if you can get them.

Advertising Aids: Two designs each one, three and six-sheets. Rotogravure. Photos, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Ten cuts each of star and play, one to three columns wide. Advertising layout mats. Slides. Press book.

Released March 11.

"THE DEBT OF HONOR."

William Fox Presents Peggy Hyland, the Delightful English Star, in a Story of War Times and Spy Secrets.

Cast.

Honor.....Peggy Hyland
Chester Holbrooke.....Irving Cummings
Frank Schiller.....Frank Goldsmith
Irma Middleton.....Hazel Adams
Stanley Middleton.....Eric Mayne

Directed by O. A. C. Lund.

The Story: Honor is adopted from an orphan asylum by Senator and Mrs. Middleton, and grows into a lovely girl. War comes, and the Senator is engrossed in business. He does not notice the growth of an affair between his wife and Frank Schiller until one night he sees their figures in an embrace, silhouetted against the window shade. Irma, to shield herself, declares Honor to be the woman, and she keeps silent rather than tell Middleton the truth. The affair progresses, and Irma and Schiller are killed in his home in a spy raid, it having been proven that she is giving Schiller information as to the movements of the transports. Honor and Chester marry, and in turn "adopt" the broken-hearted Middleton.

For the Program: An intimate picture of the Washington of today.

Orphan girl adopts man who first adopted her.

Advertising Phrases: Adopted daughter proves of finer fibre than her foster-mother.

Slain as spy in husband's presence.

Feature These Players: Peggy Hyland, who is making her debut with Fox.

Irving Cummings as Chester.

Frank Goldsmith as the spy.

Stunt Suggestions: In the window of novelty shops introduce a sign reading, "Almost anything in this window could be used to transmit a message from one spy to another. How many ways can you figure out? For a good suggestion see The Debt of Honor at (house and date). Peggy Hyland's debut with Fox." For other window cards get a deck of Angels or similar fancy backs and touch out with colored ink some of the dots. Letter: "These cards have marked backs, not to enable cheating, but to let one German spy communicate with others. Look closely and you'll see how it is done. For other ways of communicating see The Debt of Honor at (house and date)."

Advertising Aids: Two designs each one, three and six-sheets. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Press sheet. Newspaper mats free.

Released March 10.

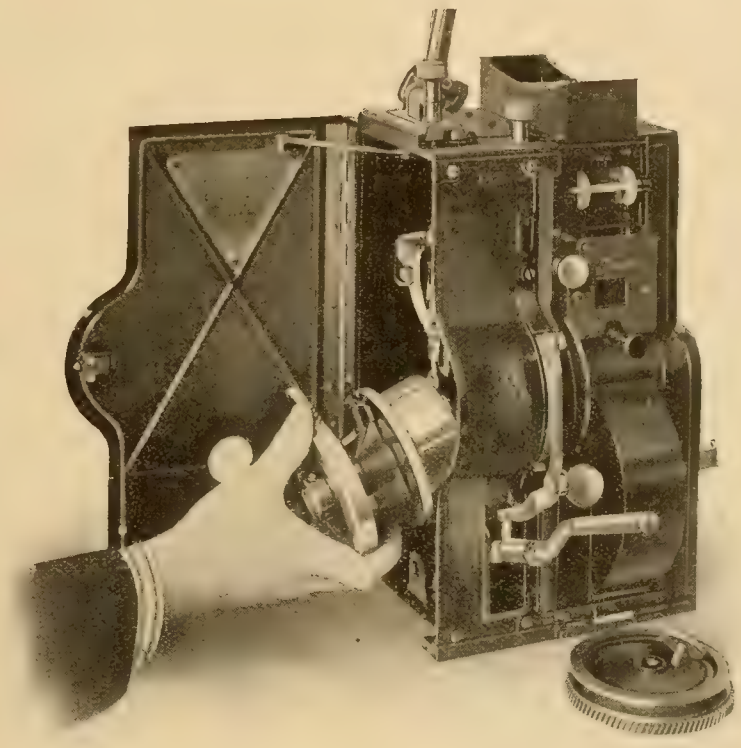
Simplex

Quick Accessibility

The Oil Chamber, which contains the complete Intermittent Movement, and carries the Register Sprocket, can be taken out and replaced in about one minute with no tools except a screw-driver.



Now, we don't claim that the Simplex needs no attention, but we do claim:

(1) that it is less likely to go wrong;

(2) that although its vital parts are enclosed, away from dirt and danger of injury, they are as accessible as if they were out in the open;

(3) that this is one reason for the permanence of its perfect projection, and

(4) that these claims are substantiated by the almost universal acceptance of the Simplex, despite vigorous, and often unfair, competition.

We could only show a "still" here. Wouldn't you like a demonstration?

Sure Fire Helps to Success

The CHALMERS PUBLISHING CO., publishers of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD and CINE MUNDIAL, the leading trade papers devoted to the Motion Picture Industry, are also publishers of the only library of practical text books dealing with the cinema art adapted to the every-day needs of those already engaged in the business or about to engage in it.

These text books, six in number, have been written by men carefully selected for their proven knowledge of the subjects to be covered, being almost without exception veteran members of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD'S editorial staff; entirely without exception these men are at present actively engaged in the motion picture business—they are not dreamers or theorists.

Each text book has been written to provide real help to the individual who reads it—consistent with the unswerving policy of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD—a genuine "Dedication to Service."

Motion Picture Handbook for Managers and Operators

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Third Edition

The most complete, exhaustive and instructive work ever published on the projection of moving pictures. Contains complete instruction with detail illustrations on all leading makes of American projection machines and practical information on wiring, lenses, carbon settings, screens, theatre equipment, etc., etc. 700 pages and over 300 illustrations, $4.00, postage paid.

Picture Theatre Advertising

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

A real help and business builder for exhibitors, theatre managers and owners. It tells all about theatre advertising, type, printing and paper, house programs, lobby displays, newspaper advertising, posters, heralds, etc., etc. 300 pages. $2.00, postage paid. P. S.—Mr. Sargent conducts a weekly department in this same style in the Moving Picture World, which contains many up-to-date business-getting ideas.

Motion Picture Electricity

By J. H. HALLBERG

An up-to-date work on the electrical equipment of picture theatres by a practical electrical expert. Contains chapters on electricity, D.C. and A.C. current, resistance and resistance devices, electric service, wiring, lighting, etc. Also contains practical suggestions and all necessary reference tables on wire sizes and capacity, weights and measures, heat units, etc., etc. 260 pages, illustrated. $2.50, postage paid.

Modern Theatre Construction

By EDWARD BERNARD KINSILA

Our newest book is one that will fill a long-felt want to those contemplating the building of a theatre. This is a very complete and exhaustive work by an architect with many years of practical experience in theatre and studio construction. Fully illustrated, with considerable data as to requirements, construction cost, building laws, etc. $3.00, postage paid.

Technique of the Photoplay

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Third Edition

Complete instruction in photoplay writing, including study of plots, how to obtain and how to develop; writing the synopsis; studio requirements; script preparation and marketing; technical terms; examples of actual scripts in facsimile typewriting, etc. 400 pages. $3.00, postage paid.

Screencraft

or the Making of a Photoplay

By LOUIS REEVES HARRISON

A comprehensive and thought-provoking treatment of the subject in a series of chapters, similar to a university course of lectures, by a successful writer of photoplays. Also contains a complete working scenario and several sample pages of manuscript. 150 pages; illustrated. $2.00, postage paid.

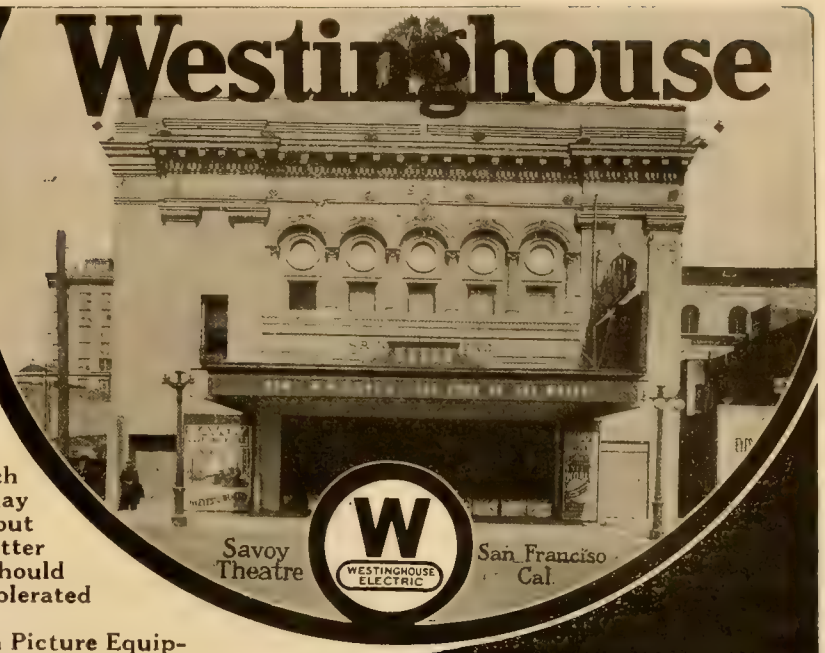
Good Westinghouse Projection



THE community in which you are located, dictates the extent to which architectural display may be carried; but the flutter and sputter of poor projection should not, and need not be tolerated in any locality.

Westinghouse Motion Picture Equipment takes the flutter out of projection. Pictures are clear and definition perfect.

Good projection increases receipts. It is a patronage builder.

GEORGE K. SPOOR
presents
ASK WHEN TAYLOR HOLMES in
A PAIR OF SIXES
DISTRIBUTED BY THE GEORGE KLEINE SYSTEM .
George K. Spoor Says:
This is the greatest picture in which the famous comedian, Taylor Holmes, has appeared. He is supported by an all star cast, including Maude Eburne and Alice Mann. I am convinced it is the best farce comedy yet screened. It's a show. If you are a showman you will please your patrons by booking this picture. Arrange your dates NOW!

Three Producers Have Accepted Our Invitation To Use Universal City

And there's room enough for all the rest!

Since our double-page advertisement appeared last week, urging film-producers to eliminate waste by closing their studios and making all their pictures in Universal City, we have arranged with three concerns to do that very thing. The Astra company starts with one producing unit this week, then adds two more later in the month. The George Beban company has also made arrangements to use the Universal City studios. And a new concern, not yet named, has also closed a deal with us for stage space and equipment.

This is the first step toward THE ONLY PRACTICAL SOLUTION of the great expense problem. It means an economy THAT IS BOUND TO BENEFIT THE WHOLE INDUSTRY, including everybody from the exhibitor to the producer.

. . . .

We again urge other producers to put aside all pride of studio ownership and look at this proposition from the cold blooded, business standpoint of SAVING the dollars that are now wasted in heavy individual overhead. Even if you can't rent your studio to some one else for other purposes than studio work, it will still pay you to CLOSE IT TIGHT AS A DRUM, pay the rent or taxes and insurance and STILL SAVE A TREMENDOUS SUM OF MONEY.

. . . . .

Universal City has EVERYTHING you need; in fact, you can make most of your pictures right there, without even leaving the city limits to get the kind of scenery or background you want!

. . . .

It's ready. And we're quoting reasonable terms. The only profit we seek to make out of this plan is a reduction of our own overhead—which is just as good as profit. And in the end it will enable you to make and sell pictures for less money without sacrificing a penny's worth of quality. Communicate with

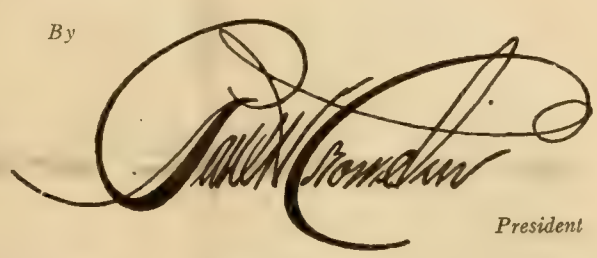
"Little Talks with Foreign Buyers" No. 4

"Inter-Ocean Foresight"

By



President

IF YOU never knew that foresight was a vital element in Inter-Ocean's dealings with its foreign customers, let us disillusion you right now. We give satisfaction because we put ourselves in the customer's place. We picture ourselves standing in the shipping office in HIS town while the clerk takes a look at the shipments that have come in that morning, and finally announces: "Something for you, Mr. Film Man!" Is the film in perfect condition, through perfect packing by the shipping department of the American exporter? Are sufficient posters included in the shipment? Will there be invoice trouble, or has the shipper properly attended to that, too? The result is that our customers receive fine treatment and complete satisfaction and "stick to Inter-Ocean!" Another result is that the best advertising Inter-Ocean can get comes from the people who have dealt with us, and who write us in warm appreciation of our work:

COLONIAL FILM EXCHANGE

We are highly satisfied with the film, its condition and your foresight in sending posters and the proper invoice for custom's purposes. We appreciate this all the more since it is so seldom that American film handlers ship films to foreign parts in the proper way that you do.

Yours very truly,

Something Still Finer for Mr. Franklin and Shea's Hippodrome.

HAROLD B. FRANKLIN, the brilliant Managing Director of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, writes Goldwyn to say

"It was our extreme pleasure to play Mabel Normand in 'Dodging A Million' at Shea's Hippodrome and I wish to tell you how pleased we were with the production.

"The combination of magnetic Mabel and the unusual story delighted our patrons. This kind of production distinctly shows how far the motion picture has advanced in the last few years. We cannot help commend the Goldwyn productions for their artistic standards and box office value."

Goldwyn takes pleasure in telling this able Manager and the highly successful Mr. Shea of a Mabel Normand picture even bigger and finer than "Dodging A Million"; more laughable, more human, more appealing and thrilling—one that will play to even bigger attendance at Shea's Hippodrome and thousands of other theatres. This next production offers

A Second Sensational Mary Garden Production —Bigger Than "Thais."

A MAGNIFICENT emotional drama of today; in the spirit of today; in the gowns of today.

A star who is daring, thrilling, stormy and volcanic.

A beautiful, wonderful woman driven to the limit of desperation. Sacrificing her honor. Stripping herself of her wealth for the man she loves. Placing herself in the grip of an enemy of all humanity.

And then—a heart-stirring redemption with the final reward of martyrdom.

Only when your audiences have seen this overwhelming drama will they realize the marvel of Here's the Box-Office Angle That No One Can Fail To See!

OUR THOUSANDS of exhibitors played Mary Garden in her Goldwyn and golden "Thais" with a profit for their houses.

Mary Garden came up to all expectations and and promises. She disappointed no one. Everybody knew her. Everybody was eager to see her. The public swamped the box-offices to gaze upon one of the world's greatest women.

House records were smashed everywhere. So tremendous is her drawing power that she conquered zero weather, snowed under all competing pictures booked against her and she wiped out the losses of Garfield Mondays by bringing turn-away patronage on other days.

Goldwyn goes publicly on record that "The Splendid Sinner" is a many times greater story and production than "Thais."

Any exhibitor can figure in a minute how wonderfully THIS Mary Garden production will help his house, thereby launching his season of Spring-time prosperity.

Do You Know the Thrilling Story of HEART OF THE SUNSET

DO YOU KNOW of beautiful Alaire Austin, ranchwoman and heroine of the Border, who was loved by Dave Law of the Texas Rangers and by crafty General Longorio, the Mexican leader, and who could never forgive her own dissolute husband?

Do you remember when Texas was on tenterhooks over war with Mexico, when the bluejackets swarmed into Vera Cruz backed by the guns of Uncle Sam's fleet, when the rebel raiders "shot up" American towns along the Rio Grande?

Would you like to know what is the most terrible death in the world, as conceived by General Longorio? Do you remember the time when even the Church and its revered priests were not safe from insult and attack at the hands of the maurauding Mexican bands?

Would you like to see how a vain and ambitious man decides between taking a beautiful woman or the Presidency of his country? All of these things contribute to the red-blooded, stand-your-ground-and-shoot action of "the picture of a thousand thrills." "Heart of the Sunset" is ready for immediate release.

PICK OF THE PICTURES

Mr. ALAN DALE is America's profoundest critic.

He sees and reviews all kinds and makes of pictures.

Writing in Picture Play Magazine of April, Mr. ALAN DALE says:

"There is a certain quality about the Paralta pictures—and I don't know that I can exactly analyze it—that seems to bring the screen close to the spoken drama. The attention to detail, the explicit photography, and careful selection of casts make these pictures, to my mind exceedingly valuable."

The Public reads Picture Play.

These Are Pleasant Days

An air of congeniality hovers over Triangle these days.

Exhibitors come and go, talk of the Triangle pictures that have made their mark in filmdom, discuss new methods of increasing business and meet in a spirit of mutual co-operation and helpfulness which has contributed not a little to the success of the large Triangle family.

Enthusiastic letters of commendation for Triangle's policy have been coming in. Exhibitors enjoy sitting down and writing a word of satisfaction over the fact that Triangle is dealing with them on a fair and square basis; that Triangle has borne the burden of the reel tax, that the pictures are right and register so profitably at the box office.

The visits of Triangle salesmen at various theatres are pleasantly spent. The welcome of the exhibitor is a genuine one. He likes to sit down and discuss pictures and policies with the Triangle man. Business has lost its sterner side and has become mutually pleasant and profitable on both sides of the fence.

The crowning fact of it all is that Triangle pictures and Triangle policies have been proving profitable to exhibitors.

The fallacy that a picture must have a hundred thousand dollar or a five hundred thousand dollar star has been very thoroughly exploded. Too many stories have left Triangle and proven theatre fillers of the first order to permit this false theory to stand. Exhibitors have found that it isn't necessary to pay such enormous, forbidding prices for films that there is nothing left on the profit side of the ledger.

Were Triangle a company owned by Triangle exhibitors and run co-operatively by them according to their own ideas—proven practical by the box office test—it could not meet the demands of exhibitors more perfectly, more successfully or more profitably.

Triangle business is increasing every day. Exchange managers write bright, cheery letters with great regularity, filled with the spirit of optimism and usually enclosing contracts. A quiet spirit of enthusiasm runs through the whole great Triangle organization. There is not much noise, bluster or making of great claims. But "still waters run deep."

These are pleasant days.

Do you not think it might be profitable for you to become a member of the great Triangle family?

BECAUSE!

Because the editors realize, from their years of experience in recognizing news values, that the facts furnished by Chief William J. Flynn surpass anything else available for national interest, and that they can find no other subject, no other authority, that will command attention given facts so startlingly portrayed in

"THE EAGLE'S EYE"

Because these hundreds of big exhibitors realize that no other production of any description can compare, in all of the big vital qualities that are requisite to the interest and entertainment of their patrons, with the marvelous story that Chief Flynn has given to the screen. And so, for the first time, they are booking a serial

"THE EAGLE'S EYE"

Because they know that it is a certain success, possessing all the known elements of past successes of any description, and many more, distinctively its own. New precedents have come into being with America's Serial Supreme

Exhibitor Cooperative Buying Is Wholesale Buying

Why buy at retail when you can secure wholesale price with

The United Picture Theatres of America, Inc.

If you have only two or three days to offer, you pay the maximum prices and are compelled to accept any terms or conditions that may be imposed. If you have a circuit of 30 or 40 days, your terms are better and the prices are lower.

BUT—

When you as a member of a national cooperative organization buy nationally, you are then part of a unit that controls 2,000, 3,000 or 4,000 booking days, and your purchasing power in the market is increased several thousand fold.

Isn't it obvious that you can cut the price of film 30 to 50 per cent., at the same time obtaining favorable terms, checking waste and extravagance, and thereby enabling the producer to make you better pictures?

That is in a nutshell the United Picture Theatres plan. Write us for details today.

Cooperation Has Proved a Practical Success

Ask any person who belongs to a cooperative movement whether it has benefited him or not.

The United Picture Theatres of America, Inc.

Does not offer an untried plan, but applies to films nationally the methods of cooperative societies.

Local exhibitor circuits all over the United States are demonstrating that cooperation works. In Great Britain the circuit is the standard, and the lone, unattached house the exception.

Vaudeville, drama and burlesque long ago learned the lesson that in concerted action there is strength. The U. B. O. house, the Klaw & Erlanger house, the "burlesque wheel" theatre derive advantages from union that they could never attain separately.

Just as they have eliminated waste, obtained uniform excellence of production and the utmost price-economies, so can you. EXHIBITORS OF AMERICA, SAVE YOUR BUSINESS FROM DISASTER AND PLACE IT PERMANENTLY ON A PROFIT-MAKING BASIS BY UNITING IN A NATIONAL COOPERATIVE ORGANIZATION WHICH YOU YOURSELVES WILL CONTROL. We're For You!

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD is edited with a singleness of purpose, namely, the greatest good for the greatest number in the moving picture industry. It is part and parcel of the industry—was born with it—and understands thoroughly that its past and present success has been dependent upon the sincerity with which it served the industry and that its future will also be measured by the solid progress of the industry.

This realization is your best guarantee that the MOVING PICTURE WORLD will always be "for you"—and if it's "for you" you owe it to yourself and to the industry to be "for" it.

There are scores and hundreds of exhibitors, and moving picture business men in general, who have, for years, shaped their business policies with the aid of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD. Its editorials have crystalized the best thought of the industry and have pointed the way to success. Its news columns have constantly been filled with matter of a helpful nature—information of use to every individual in the motion picture industry in the daily conduct of his affairs. Many a subscriber has testified that a single issue of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD has proved of ten times the value of a whole year's subscription to the paper. The advertising pages of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, in addition to selling the product of the manufacturers, provide an interesting weekly bulletin of up-to-the-minute happenings in the industry.

If you're taking the moving picture industry seriously—and you must if you hope to succeed—you need scarcely be told that it is good business for you to support the trade paper that is constantly working for your best interests.

Facts and Comments

NOT in some time has the writer attended a meeting of motion picture exhibitors of New York state at which were assembled so many real business men as were to be seen at the recent meeting held at the Hotel Astor, New York City. In the past few years the personnel of the organization seems to have completely changed, and from the indifferent, do-nothing attitude of former days there has appeared some semblance of a determination to meet the questions which must be met and to follow them through to a finish. The trouble with the organization in the past was that it never got anywhere. Its members would meet in varying numbers here and there, have a good time, pass a few high sounding resolutions and go home in the belief that a great deal had been accomplished to put the exhibitor out of his misery. But nothing ever happened. One of the results of that policy was to cause a great deal of dissatisfaction among the up-state members, who justly believed that the organization was of no special benefit to them.

Looking into the faces of the men at the Hotel Astor meeting it seemed that a new light was there; that they meant what they said and that they would start something and finish whatever they started. Up to now there has been too much politics in the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, and its high officers have used their positions too much to further their personal undertakings. Let us hope that the New York organization will work more for the benefit of the trade it represents.

EVIDENTLY our remarks upon the several co-operative propositions that are now being offered to motion picture exhibitors have set some men in the trade to thinking. From Detroit comes this observation:

> Detroit exhibitors have not as yet taken seriously to the several plans for booking pictures from the manufacturers direct. Some of the "wise" boys feel that these direct booking plans will never work out for the reason that if an exchange cannot please 100 customers how can any plan be devised to satisfy 2,500 exhibitors? There are so many perplexing problems in the booking plans as outlined by both sets of men behind them. For instance, would each one of the exhibitors in each locality have to play every picture contracted for? After all isn't the direct plan of booking getting away from the "open booking plan" and getting right back to the program where the exhibitor takes the picture scheduled for release regardless of whether it is suitable to his theater? Detroit exhibitors interviewed on this matter are not averse to the direct booking plan and would like to see it work out successfully, but of course they have the right to express their doubts.

It will be observed that the Detroit exhibitors not only see the faults of the co-operative plan, but they recognize in it a reversion from the much praised "open booking" plan to the old program plan against which organized exhibitors have resolved so persistently. Here again we have an example of the fatuity of Mr. Ochs, long the boasted champion of the exhibitor and loud supporter of "open booking," but now engaged in again exploiting the exhibitor to his own profit. He is the titular head of one of these co-operative plans, a position hardly in keeping with the restrictions of the National League, which bars from membership all engaged in the making and marketing of pictures. There is a-plenty in these co-operative projects to keep exhibitors thinking for some time.

Another angle of the same scheme is revealed in a letter written by an exhibitor in a small town in Iowa to the manager of the exchange where he gets his pictures, explaining the proposition as it was put up to him. He wrote:

> There was a man here last night from Minneapolis representing a company who he said would open an office in Des Moines and handle all kinds of subjects, Bluebirds included, and by so doing be able to furnish exhibitors with any kind of service now used at one-half of prices paid now for the reason that this arrangement would eliminate the overhead expenses of so many separate exchanges—all paper at one-half of present cost, no reel tax or deposits, etc. In short, a revolution in the business. He had a scheme for membership in the concern and he seemed to have caught several exhibitors near here, as he had their checks, etc. He claimed that all the producing companies were in it and had a large list of them. I did not see fit to invest, and I would like to know if there is anything of this kind in progress. Kindly advise.

There you have a sample of the selling talk commonly used to put such a scheme over. Loud pedal on the cost of service; anything and everything at half-price, no deposits, no reel tax, and it listens so well that the exhibitor, anxious to get Bluebirds, Paramounts and Metros at a cut rate, signs on the dotted line and hands over his check. All the trials and tribulations incident to doing business with regular producers end when the new system begins to work and life will be just one merry round of pleasure. Oh, Boy!

STANLEY MASTBAUM is dead, and with his death passes one of the strong men of the motion picture industry. For several years he has been the dominating figure in the Philadelphia field—practically the dictator. We will not say that his mastery of the exhibition business in that field has at all times been the wisest or that it has conserved the common interest of exhibitors, but it has been successful in so far as it affected the interest of himself and his associates. And that is something in these days of war taxes, advance deposits and shutout contracts. However, few of us are altruistic; the doctrine of the survival of the fittest still prevails and, in a business sense, Stanley Mastbaum prevailed, despite all efforts to dislodge him, in his own bailiwick. Among his friends Stanley Mastbaum was a charming entertainer, and his business confreres have many lively recollections of good times at which he was the presiding genius. His death was as untimely as it was sudden. Still a young man he had far to go as careers are measured these days and we join the motion picture host in laying our regrets upon his bier.

THE Liberty Loan Night proposition, brought forward by the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, is beginning to take definite form. Attention of Secretary McAdoo has been called to the movement and all the several bureaus and committees working on the third Liberty Loan throughout the country have been instructed to get in touch with the exhibitors and work in conjunction with them. At the recent meeting of the New York State Exhibitors' League a resolution pledging the members to the plan was adopted and others have given it their indorsement. But one thing remains to be done: that is to make the movement a success. Will you do your part?

A STIRRING note on the question of an open Sunday for motion picture theaters has been sounded by the Rev. William H. Taylor of Nashville, Tenn., who addressed a large audience at the Knickerbocker theater of that city on the subject "A Reasonable Sunday." The speaker declared that one of the darkest of superstitions of all those embedded in the ecclesiastical tenets and the laws of the land is the idea of making Sunday the coffin of all the other days of the week. It is the attitude of churchmen that has made Sunday the terror of the young, a season of boredom to many otherwise religious people and driven thousands from the church and belief in the humanitarian influences of the church. When the Evangelical denominations come to realize that their mission in this free country is not to impose the autocratic rule of a state religion—something which does not exist here—upon the people they will find the people turning to them instead of against them. Now their insistence upon a Puritan Sunday is rapidly bringing them into general disfavor.

Great Stories Untold

By LOUIS REEVES HARRISON.

THE most remarkable experience occurring to a critic who knows anything about writing stories for the screen is to find a production of masterful treatment which falls absolutely flat on the audience. The critic's natural inclination is to draw attention to all the fine points of some such costly and carefully-made product, but it is made for the audience, not for the reviewer, and that final verdict in front is the one on which success or failure of the producing concern hangs.

There may be an interesting plot, fine direction, highly intelligent interpretation by an actor of ability and elaborate settings, involving a vast outlay and good taste, but what is the use if the people watching it sit cold and unresponsive to the last deadly silence at the conclusion? On the other hand, a feature costing one-fifth, even one-tenth, as much, exaggerated in action to the point of melodrama, interpreted by low-salaried types under commonplace direction, but vitalized by that inimitable quality which has sent novels and plays on the high road of success will win from the outset and hold long after the costly fabric of fiction has been forgotten.

Nothing could be more fatal than to disregard audience opinion, yet instances are rare when a screen story is withdrawn because of undoubted evidences of disapproval among those for whose satisfaction it is made, on account of the heavy loss of time, money and effort involved. The product which fails is sent on its long journey to score thousands of other failures, while the producers of it try again, ever hopeful of making a hit. It would not be unwise to enlist trained and discriminating critics to point out the salient weakness in advance.

It requires a dramatic instinct almost superhuman, for instance, to convince people of such a manifest impossibility as the dominance of individual desire on earth over the purposes of the Creator of the Universe. The common acceptance of God is that of a Supreme Being, capable of regulating human destiny irrespective of personal wishes, hence that much-used theme, the "answered prayer," requires a gift on the part of the dramatist of making miracles seem entirely natural and plausible. A more cordial recognition of merit in a generally good product might be given with that idea omitted altogether.

The advantages of a standpoint where the trouble of making too many explanations is obvious. This leads straight to the first thing to be done in judging a story written for screen publication "What has the author intended to do?" In order to determine whether or not the story will prove in every respect a "marketable commodity" it must be taken for granted that it will interest the audience the more that it is something people have had enough of already. Thus it would seem that definite purpose and originality come first in attempting a selection.

Now any author who has written and sold a hundred stories for the screen will tell you truly that it is easier to sell a script containing an imitation of what has been done than what is entirely bright, new and entertaining. This is because an idea prevails that certain situations cause people to laugh, others to shed tears, others to feel a sense of fear. Hence the regular opening of a storm scene, with vivid flashes of lightning, whether the storm is essential or not, or mother's death to rouse pity, when mother's life might be far more affecting, and the regulation comedy expedients, such as the heiress changing places with her maid.

In most stories depending upon stock situations and incidents there is lacking one big and vital necessity, "a group of real people of strong and interesting personality," "idealized in some cases to suit the author's definite purpose, yet not so much so as to mar the illusion of reality." So the story telling art is defined by a great novelist. He may color them as he pleases after drawing them from life, but he must convince us in the end that what has happened to them could happen to any and all of us under similar circumstances. As for the vitality of incident and situation, one must consider that the receptive audience mind should be addressed with "what is in the air."

"What is in the air" by no means confines us to the leading events of the day. The day may never come when we enjoy meeting splendid men and sweet women on the screen and feeling better for it. Great characters in any form of story leave a bright trail of influence behind them, so also do those obscure ones who deeply engage our sympathies, and we must not forget those whose sunny hopefulness and incarnate the joy of living. But all these are yet to come in screen presentation.

The fact that five reels are presented every day, in every theater, with no other definite aim than the embracing of a hero and a heroine at the finish shows a sad lack of resource. We are called upon to admire this state of things, whether or not we find it admirable, by the easily pleased occasional patron of the picture show, but most of us are guility of going often, and all of our opinions are not heirlooms. With the embrace steadily in view from the outset, as it usually is, we endure the performance with much the same philosophy we enjoy while sitting in the waiting room of a dentist.

There are few things quite so depressing as going to a supposed place of entertainment and being compelled to sit in a darkened room through an hour of picture inanity. The inferior picture hits the whole business a knockout blow. There is not the slightest doubt that producers high and low are trying to accomplish the best they know how, but it is little short of a personal tragedy to have to endure some of those accomplishments. We see a number of characters and episodes apparently planned to develop something or other and watch with patience, hopefully, until we find there is nothing of consequence to be developed.

It used to be the regulation thing to show the sufferings of political prisoners sent to endless suffering in the slow-clad wilds of Siberia. Why? Because it had been endlessly done. None of that is going on just now. But, if great stories are to be told, why not picture the tri-comedy of the present situation, the ineffectual struggle of ill-formed young democracy against the older and more autocratic organizations of military government? Why not? Because few real stories of the day we are living in are being told. There is abundant opportunity for drama in that struggle, and the eyes of millions of people are focussed upon that spot.

What is going on under our eyes, the actual dramas of existence—where are they? Those old Siberian plays were almost countless, because one was an imitation of the other. Moving pictures will jump forward to a hundred per cent. better business in all the different branches when we trim off dead branches and weed out the stale and the useless. It lies entirely within ourselves to work together for a new and vital growth, which shall double our popularity and our usefulness.

Simplicity and Sincerity

By Robert C. McElravy.

ABOUT every so often a rash critic starts in to get himself disliked by demanding simpler methods in screen presentation. But now, when prices are booming and the war tax is consuming excess profits, such comment is not so unpopular. Moreover, producers are driven to curtailing expenses whether they would prefer to do so or not.

One visible effect of the war up to the persent time is that it is gradually shaking us down to a consideration of real values, in contrast with the "bunk" that was so prevalent a short time back. Now there is probably nothing essentially wrong with a little harmless "bunk"; it has its time and place along with other things in life. Years ago P. T. Barnum paved the way for a great deal of it with his famous remark that "the American public likes to be humbugged." A certain amount of it is all right, but we should at least try to vary it and keep it interesting.

There has been a great deal of bluff and bluster connected with the making of moving pictures in the past. It would have been remarkable if the pictures had escaped it, considering that it permeated the legitimate stage, literature, business and almost every activity of American life. Moving pictures as a matter of fact were born on a high wave of bunk; they were originally accepted by the public as a light, frothy form of amusement, not at all to be taken seriously. That is the reason many intelligent people still take that view of them.

But there has been at all times in the history of moving pictures an undercurrent of geniune strength, and in these days the froth is subsiding and the undercurrent is coming to the fore. Those individuals who have formed the habit of refusing to look seriously at this new art now find themselves slightly chagrined at what seems to be a sudden change in the situation. There is now visible a certain genuineness and vitality in the films they had not hitherto suspected. Their importance in the amusement world is in no wise second to that of the stage itself, and during the present season it might be well claimed that the film average has been somewhat the higher of the two.

As a matter of fact, there has been no abrupt change in the situation, so far as the making of films is concerned. The change that is now so apparent has been worked out in a gradual, painstaking manner. The producers who have for years been studying their art have now got it under better control than previously. They are able to go about the construction of pictures in a simpler, more effective manner. There is less waste and less of "raw haste, half-sister to delay."

The continuity writers must be given credit for much of this noticeable improvement. These quiet workers are really in a way the persons upon whom the whole fabric of screen production rests. They are the ones who must quietly plan out the allotted time for action, the introduction and delineation of characters, and the whole movement of the story itself. The director is a busy man—too busy to scheme out continuities while he works, as in the old days.

The possibilities of the screen are also becoming better understood than previously. This has not decreased the amount of work put in on given productions, but it has given continuity writers and directors an assurance in devising scenes and situations. They have their objectives better in hand when the charge begins, and that is no doubt as valuable in the making of pictures as in trench warfare.

The tremendous urge for more action, which used to possess our producers, is not quite so apparent now. They pause now and again to create real characters, and this means much. There will no doubt come a day and that very soon, when the screen will have its Uriah Heeps, its Colonel Newcomes, its Micawbers, its Becky Sharps and other famous characters, as well as the gamblers, vampires, cabaret girls and other ready-made and instantly recognizable parts which until recently have predominated. The comic artists, who now appear in proper person and depend upon their own individualities for effect, may at some future day be joined by imaginable comic characters who will become as well known and beloved by the public at large as were the characters of Dickens and other great writers. There is no reason why scenario writers should hesitate to create special characters any more than would a novel writer.

Character creation is a step toward simplicity and sincerity of presentation. Here you have an added interest without the cost of elaborate, spectacular settings; it is a genuine value and not one that is merely bought and paid for, because it is inherent in the story itself.

The screen today is rapidly getting into the position of Kipling's "ship that found herself." It has done more or less floundering about, but it has been valuable floundering, even though expensive, and the cheerful part of it is that it will never have to be done over again.

Is Life "Deceased"?

By Robert C. McElravy.

MR. METCALF, the dramatic critic on "Life," gets a very pessimistic slant on screen entertainment. He says he goes to see the films every little while "inspired by the claims of those impressed by the commercial bigness of the movie industry into the belief that it must have something to do with art." He adds that "In the field of realism and utility, such as recent war pictures and the like, no one can deny the value of the films. But when we enter the field of the imagination there is the same old disappointment. The only improvement is in minor and mostly mechanical details." He continues in this vein, saying, "The nimble nickle is still the objective. The big-eyed, baby-girl heroine, the vamping adventuress and the slap-stick comedian are the great magnets for the coin of the multitude." He winds up his article with this: "Until the movie patrons tire of the sort of thing now supplied to them—and that may possibly happen—those of us who would like to see the screen drama developed with all its artistic possibilities must continue to grieve over lost opportunity."

Dear! Dear! Things are indeed in a very sad way. We think our neighbor over on "Life" must be having a little bilious attack. Certainly there is an archaic ring to his graceful periods. It makes one wonder just what he means by going to the "movies" every little while. Perhaps he hasn't gone often enough of late years.

Has Mr. Metcalf seen Mary Pickford in "Stella Maris?" Does he know that this baby-girl heroine of yesterday has become an artist of today in her own right? Has he seen Clara Williams in "Carmen of the Klondike?" Has he seen the recent productions of "Les Miserables," "Thais," "Lest We Forget," "A Man Without a Country," the Russian Art Films, the O. Henry stories, "The Eagle's Eye," "The Studio Girl," the "Lincoln Cycle"? If Mr. Metcalf will look up some of these subjects, we think he is too good a critic to overlook their merits. He should at least be more specific.

Come, come, "Life"! Be a good sport for once! Cease this patter about art and put in a live film department. If your readers think you are neglecting the "movies," as you intimate, you may depend upon it there is some truth in their attitude. You can't expect folks to stay home every night of the week to read "Judge" and "Vanity Fair"!

Censorship Advocates Have Their Say

Argue Against Maryland's Repeal Bill Before House Committee—Measure May Come Up Any Time.

ON Wednesday morning, March 6, a hearing was held at Annapolis, Md., before the House Judiciary Committee on the censorship repeal bill, recently introduced in the House by Representative Delaplaine of the Frederick delegation. Fifteen minutes were granted the representatives of the Maryland Exhibitors' League and the film industry generally, who were present to finish the arguments which had not been concluded at the hearing on Thursday, February 14. This meeting was to have been a joint hearing, including the Senate Judicial Proceedings Committee, but most of the senators were engaged in other work, so this was impossible. The hearing before that body will be given on Wednesday, March 13.

Those who were lined up for the repeal of the Censor Law included Eugene B. McCurdy, second vice-president of the Maryland Exhibitors' League; Harry E. Reddish, E. C. Sandell, W. A. Stumpf, Frank Durkee, Philip Miller of Annapolis, Charles E. Whitehurst, president of the New and Garden theater companies; Sam Spedon, of the Moving Picture World; W. Stephen Bush and Jack S. Connolly. The opposition included Mrs. Marguerite E. Harrison and Charles E. Harper, of the censor board; William Purnell Hall, Father Wheeler, rector of St. Patrick's Church, who represented the Holy Name Society; Dr. William P. Burdick, of the Public Athletic League, and Miss Armstrong, of the Henry Watson Children's Aid Society.

Mrs. Harrison, in replying to a speaker's assertion about the solving of the child problem by censorship, said: "If censorship has not entirely solved this child problem it has solved the problem of the adolescent boy and girl by giving them what they should see, or, rather, by keeping them from seeing what they should not see. The Maryland Censor Board feels its responsibility not only to the public, but to the motion picture industry as well, and the many eliminations and few rejections made by it prove that its work has been constructive rather than destructive."

All the others in the committee present to oppose the repeal of censorship had something to say on the question. When they were finished there was not time for any of the others to speak. It is now understood the bill has been put in the regular order of business and will be brought up any time.

JULIAN ENTERTAINS NEW YORK FRIENDS.

Rupert Julian, recently arrived in New York from the West Coast, gave a late, private showing of his new offering, "The Kaiser," at the Broadway theater Friday night. The picture followed the regular performance at the theater, and the premiere was attended by members of the trade, press and other invited guests. Light refreshments were served after the showing.

Liberty Loan Night Is Now a Fact

National Association of the Motion Picture Industry's Committee Indorses Plan of Moving Picture World—Plans Are Completed for Distributing 100,000 Specially Designed One-Sheet Posters for Lobby Display.

PLANS for the Third Liberty loan drive are practically completed. The committee appointed by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, of which Adolph Zukor was named as chairman, has been working with the committees in Washington which have the plans for the drive in charge and have formed large plans and have secured large quantities of advertising matter for the use of picture theaters. The preparations are given in further detail in a report from that committee prepared for the Moving Picture World and which reads as follows:

"The Moving Picture World's suggestion for a Liberty Loan Night in the motion picture theaters of the United States, which was heartily indorsed by the Committee of the National Association appointed to co-operate with the Treasury Department, promises beneficial results, not only for the government and the cause of liberty, but for the exhibitors themselves.

"Recent issues of the Moving Picture World shown to those in charge of the publicity and exploitation of the Liberty Loan in Washington brought forth the comment that exhibitors in arranging for Liberty Loan Night would find the chairmen of local Liberty Loan Committees not only enthusiastic to co-operate but in a position to carry the plan to its complete success.

"It was at first suggested that one night during the period of the loan drive, which commences April 6, should be nationally recognized as the day to be set aside for a special drive in motion picture theaters. Subsequently the Washington comment was to the effect that exhibitors should set their day in co-operation with the local committees, the names of the chairmen of which could be obtained by any exhibitor from the bank with which he does business or from the newspapers. In the larger cities it would be feasible, it is said, for a group of theaters in suburbs or in sections of the cities to select the same night, and in the smaller communities supporting two, three or four theaters to make Liberty Loan Night the same for all the houses.

"With the announcement of April 6 as the date when the Liberty Loan drive starts, the Publicity Bureau of the Treasury Department authorized the details of the publicity and advertising to be worked out in association with the motion picture theaters of the country and the exchanges.

"These plans were worked out by Adolph Zukor, chairman of the industry's committee to co-operate with the Treasury Department, the other members of which are Jules E. Brulatour, George K. Spoor, Marcus Loew and Walter W. Irwin.

"The plans embrace the distribution and exhibition of one hundred thousand posters, specially designed in one-sheet size for theater lobby display. There are five different types of posters, and to each exhibitor of the country will be sent several days before the loan drive commences a package containing the five posters. Secretary McAdoo requests that one or more of these posters be given permanent display throughout the period of the loan campaign. Being one-sheet size they fit admirably into the advertising machinery of the exhibitor and unquestionably many exhibitors will post the one sheets in permanent frames for the period.

"In addition to the poster display, which in the opinion of the Treasury Department is one of the important forms of publicity activity of the drive, in view of the fact that millions of people a day pass in and out of motion picture theaters, a motion picture animated trailer has been prepared by the Treasury Department and will be distributed to every theater in the country. The trailer will flash the new Liberty Loan flag, a picture of Secretary McAdoo speaking, a title of his message to the public, and will conclude with a close-up of the Liberty Loan button, so successfully employed as a means of identification of loan bondholders in the previous campaigns.

"Exhibitors, who will receive the trailers through the mails on or about April 1, are cautioned to give it their personal attention that it is not returned to the exchanges attached to features or news pictures inadvertently. It is the desire of the Treasury Department that the loan trailer should be shown every day at every performance and in order to guarantee this a special watchfulness on the part of the exhibitor is necessary that the trailer does not get out of his hands. The film exchanges also are urged, in the event that the trailer is returned from the theater, to see to it that it is sent back with the next order of film shipment.

"None of those whose daily work brings them into touch with the motion picture industry has an adequate idea of the potentialities of the screen when properly used for patriotic or national purposes. It is impossible to overestimate the usefulness of the motion picture in this direction, and Secretary McAdoo has been among the foremost in whose hands is placed the success of the administration's program to recognize this fact."

Picture Theatres' Aid Not Underestimated.

It will be gathered from the foregoing that Secretary McAdoo and his assistants have not underestimated the great value of the publicity which motion picture theaters can give to this drive or the influence that will be exerted through the screen. As a further indication that such is the case comes a letter from the publicity department of the Liberty Loan Committee which reads as follows:

New York, March 7, 1918.

Dear Sir—A copy of the March 16 issue of the Moving Picture World has just reached my desk and I certainly must say you have done more than your share in helping us in our effort to place the Third Liberty Loan before the public. This is splendid work indeed and this committee deeply appreciates your co-operation.

Very truly yours,
JOHN PRICE JONES,
Assistant Director of Publicity in Charge of Press Bureau.

How to Co-operate With Local Loan Committees.

Referring to the report of the work of the Motion Picture Committee it will be noticed that the Washington Loan committees suggest that the same night be not designated for the entire country, but that different dates be named for different localities. Every community will have its Loan Committee, and theater managers are requested to work in conjunction with that committee. We would suggest that exhibitors everywhere get in touch with these local committees at once and perfect the necessary arrangements.

William A. Brady Approves Plan.

When the Moving Picture World's plan for Liberty Loan Night was explained to William A. Brady, president of the N. A. M. P. I., he made this enthusiastic comment:

It's a great idea. The motion picture today is the world's most effective agency for the dissemination of an idea—for arousing to fever heat enthusiasm for a great and just cause. It has a circulation that can never be attained by any newspaper and it reaches every and all kind of people. By adopting the admirable suggestion of the Moving Picture World for a Liberty Loan Night in every motion picture theater in America in connection with the drive for the Third Liberty Loan, the exhibitor, the distributor, the producer and every cog in the wheel that goes to make up this great business will be lending effective, substantial aid to the Government—just as the motion picture business has done in the past, and will do in the future for all time.

New York State Convention Goes on Record.

At the convention of the New York State Exhibitors' League the Liberty Loan drive plan was presented in a series of resolutions offered by William Brandt, of Brooklyn, and adopted unanimously. The resolutions read:

Whereas, The United States Government is at war; and

Whereas, In order successfully to prosecute the war to a speedy and successful termination; and

Whereas, It is the desire of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of New York State to help and assist the Government in its endeavor; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the exhibitors of New York State, in convention assembled, indorse the plan to set aside one day during the next Liberty Loan drive for the purpose of assisting the Government; and be it further

Resolved, That the day be known officially as Liberty Bond Day and that patriotic pictures and music be used, that the fronts of all theaters be decorated with flags, signs and banners calling attention to the purpose of the day; and be it further

Resolved, That Liberty Bond salesmen be privileged to solicit subscriptions in the motion picture theaters of the State that day; and be it further

Resolved, That the Four Minute Men be asked to speak on that special matter on that day; and be it further

Resolved, That Secretary McAdoo be asked officially to recognize that day by proclaiming it Liberty Loan Day at all motion picture theaters; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to Secretary McAdoo.

Bronx Exhibitors For It.

New York, March 8, 1918.

Editor Moving Picture World, New York City.

Dear Sir—Your editorial in the Moving Picture World of March 16 is of the most timely and important nature to the exhibitors of this great country, and one that will receive a hearty response from them.

The exhibitors of Bronx County have lent and always will lend their best endeavors to further the interests of our Government in every manner possible, and will in accordance with your valuable suggestion try (if such a thing is possible) to outdo all previous efforts and make this next Liberty Loan drive a great patriotic success in the moving picture theaters of Bronx County.

Great enthusiasm will be created and the exhibitors of this League will do more than their share in making "Liberty Loan Night" a huge success.

Wishing you and your valued publication all the success in your wonderful work, we remain,

Very truly yours,

CINEMA EXHIBITORS' ASSOCIATION OF BRONX CO.

Henry Cole, Executive Secretary.

Three Baltimore Exhibitors Approve.

You can tell the Moving Picture World that I am in favor of a Liberty Night. I am not looking for any credit. I am mighty glad of the suggestion and the Liberty Loan in behalf of the Government and the boys at the front can count on my theater at any time.

WILLIAM E. STUMPF, Ford Theater.

Good idea. I had intended to give and already have given the Government the privileges of my theater. I shall have a Liberty Loan night and all that goes with it.

MILTON CAPLON, Clover Theater.

The Liberty Night strikes me right. There isn't an exhibitor in Maryland who won't have one. Whether you put my name on the honor roll or not I will certainly have a Night at my theaters.

E. B. McCURDY, Eureka and Lafayette Theaters.

The F. I. L. M. Club of New York Elects

New Officers Chosen for Year—Decide on Three Business and One Social Gathering Each Month.

THE F. I. L. M. Club of New York held its annual election at a recent meeting and the following officers were chosen: I. Chadwick, Metro, president; William E. Raynor, Pathe, vice-president; J. A. Hammell, General Film second vice-president; Miles A. Gibbons, K. E. S. E., treasurer; Samuel Zeiler, Universal, sergeant-at-arms, and C. B. Hoy, secretary.

It was also decided that there would be three business meetings a month and one social session. The first social session is announced as a dinner for the members and their gentlemen friends to be held at Healy's on March 20. It was decided that the F. I. L. M. Club make these social sessions functions of importance and of variation.

The F. I. L. M. Club also announces that Carey Wilson of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit has become a member of the club.

Strong co-operation given by the various members is making the F. I. L. M. Club one of the most important and beneficial organizations in the film industry. The principal object of the club, co-operation between exchange and exhibitor, is at last being realized and is doing as much good for the theater-owner as the distributor.

"My Four Years in Germany" Approved

Opens to Enthusiastic Body of Spectators Filling the Knickerbocker Theater, Sunday Evening, March 10.

THE screen version of Ambassador James W. Gerard's book, "My Four Years in Germany," opened at the Knickerbocker Theater, Sunday evening, March 10, to a body of spectators that filled every seat in the house and showed its appreciation of the picture by frequent outbursts of applause and also by hearty cheers when a particularly strong appeal was made to its patriotism. "My Four Years in Germany" is not a photoplay, but a historical document that sets forth in clear and concise terms the facts that led to the United States' entrance into the Great War.

The Kaiser and his war lords are introduced, Ambassador Gerard being the central figure. The subject is handled in a dignified manner, but Germany's double dealing and inhuman methods in her desire for conquest are shown in their true light.

Charles A. Logue, who made the scenario, displays excellent judgment in his choice of material. There are scenes of blood and horror, but they are never overdone, and America's reply to the Kaiser's remark that the United States wouldn't fight is worked up into a stirring patriotic finish as the troops of the Allies and then the soldiers of Uncle Sam are shown marching eagerly to the defense of justice and humanity.

Ambassador Gerard occupied a box at the opening and, when the last reel had been run off, there were loud calls for a speech. The spectators were on their feet, but resumed their seats when the Ambassador began his remarks. After referring to the screen's ability to bring home the facts concerning Germany's crimes against civilization, Mr. Gerard voiced his hearty approval of the picture and his faith in its success as an important aid in educating the people.

The production, directed by William Nigh, is worthy the subject. A review of the picture will appear in a later issue of The World.

WHO STARTED THIS STORY?

When the "Birth of a Race" was presented at Chicago someone started a story that gave to the public the impression that the late Charles Frohman and his brother, Daniel Frohman, were in some way identified with the production. The fact that neither is in any way connected therewith is pretty well understod by the motion picture trade, but the story has brought forth denials from Daniel Frohman on his own account and from Alf Hayman in behalf of the estate of the late Charles Frohman. The name Frohman gets into the wrangle because the picture was made by the Frohman Amusement Company, so named because of an arrangement with Gustavus Frohman when the company was organized, for the use of his name, which arrangement has since been continued, though Mr. Frohman has no personal connection with it.

JAKE WELLS WINS IN VIRGINIA.

Richmond, Va., March 11.

Virginia Legislautre adjourned today without acting on censorship. Virginia exhibitors did great work stalling bill. Also they succeeded in getting through a license bill that will save thousands of dollars for Virginia exhibitors. This is the answer of the exhibitors to those people who have been trying to make Jake Wells sponsor for censorship. All expenses were borne by exhibitors—no outside help.

"The Kaiser" Comes to the Broadway

Rupert Julian As the Mad Dog of Europe Appears to Advantage in Renowned Production.

THE Broadway Theater, New York, was the scene on Saturday night, March 9, of the opening of Rupert Julian's master production, "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," presented by Renowned Pictures Corporation, in seven reels, and described on the program as "an amazing expose of the intimate life of the mad dog of Europe."

A large and enthusiastic audience was present, including many soldiers and sailors, together with Truman H. Newberry, former Assistant Secretary of the Navy. The picture was well received, there being much applause, together with quite a correspondingly large amount of hisses, most of which were directed at "the Kaiser," admirably portrayed by Rupert Julian. Admiral von Tirpitz, portrayed by Mark Fenton, also came in for his share of hisses, as did other representatives of the German Government and its armed forces.

Great applause marked the finale, showing the Allies in possession of the Imperial Palace in Berlin and the Kaiser a prisoner of the King of Belgium. In this scene were introduced the leaders of the Allies, including Generals Pershing, Haig, Joffre and Diaz, and Ambassador Gerard, portrayed by Joseph Girard, was, of course, prominent in a number of scenes.

The entire theater, marquee, lobby, auditorium and stage, was decorated with the Stars and Stripes, together with the flags of the Allies, and prominently displayed in front of the theater was a pirate flag bearing a skull and cross bones, and a legend to the effect that it is the flag of the beast of Berlin. The girl ushers were picturesquely dressed in Belgian costumes.

During the intermission Burr McIntosh, a prominent member of the American Defense Society, made a stirring patriotic speech. Before the presentation of the picture several selections were given by the Naval Band of the U. S. S. Recruit, "The Star Spangled Banner" opening the performance; and at the conclusion of the showing the audience was addressed by a representative from the land craft at Union Square, who called upon them to do their share in the war.

The Grand of Pittsburgh Opened

Adolph Zukor and Marguerite Clark Attend Initial Performance and Make Speeches.

ADOLPH ZUKOR, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and Marguerite Clark, Paramount star, journied to Pittsburgh last week to attend the opening of the million dollar motion picture theater there owned by Harry Davis, the Grand. In the party accompanying Mr. Zukor and Miss Clark, were Miss Cora Clark, the star's sister, and John C. Flinn, director of advertising and publicity for Famous Players-Lasky.

A novelty of the occasion was Miss Clark's speech of dedication which was flashed in animated form on the screen while she sat in the audience. Her admirers demanded a personal address, however, and would not be quieted until she so obliged them.

Miss Clark's screen speech proved a distinct novelty and opened the way for unlimited possibilities in this direction in the future. Following the ovation she received on entering one of the boxes with Mr. Zukor, the house was darkened and the attention of the audience was riveted on the screen where was flashed a picture of Miss Clark writing at a desk. There was then shown the text of her message, which read:

"To My Dear Pittsburgh Friends: "I think I can write a better speech than talk one. I want to congratulate Harry Davis and all the people of Pittsburgh upon the beautiful new Grand Theater where they are going to have so many hours of clean, wholesome entertainment. Some people say that in this time of war and stress we should not enjoy ourselves, but Mr. Davis says, and so does President Wilson, that clean entertainment is good for the nation and helps the people back up the boys who are 'over there' and who are going 'over there.' I wish I could go over. I would tell the Kaiser what I think of him.

"But there is one thing we can all do. We can buy Liberty Bonds and next month I am going to make a tour to sell Liberty Bonds, and if everyone will help me I will come to Pittsburgh—(applause)—I knew you would! So congratulating you again on the wonderful theater and looking forward to our next meeting in the cause of the Liberty loan, I am, very sincerely yours, Marguerite Clark."

Mr. Zukor in a short address spoke as follows: "It is a distinct privilege to have been invited by Mr. Davis to attend the opening of his beautiful theater in Pittsburgh. Not only Mr. Davis but the city of Pittsburgh is to be congratulated upon so wonderful a temple dedicated to the motion picture. In such a theater as this will be shown the finest screen attractions of our time, and the theater should occupy a distinct place in the community life as a recreation and educational center. Mr. Davis, I not only congratulate you, but, in the name of those whose efforts will find expression on your screen, I thank you for the opportunity we will have to co-operate with you to entertain and instruct the people of your wonderful city."

As the chief attraction of the opening, Mr. Davis selected the new Douglas Fairbanks-Artcraft picture "Headin' South."

The theater seats 3,000 persons, and more than 15,000 admissions were registered on the first day. A special program of music had been arranged and was interpreted by the large symphony orchestra which Mr. Davis has secured as a permanent all-day feature for his house. Mayor Babcock of Pittsburgh attended the opening and made a particularly appropriate speech.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

New York State League Convention

Exhibitors Hold a Two-Day Session at Hotel Astor—Officers Elected and Plan for Big Liberty Loan Day Indorsed.

NEW YORK STATE exhibitors, affiliated with the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, met in convention at the Hotel Astor, New York, on Tuesday and Wednesday, March 5 and 6. About seventy-five exhibitors were in attendance and took a lively interest in the proceedings. It was in fact the most business-like convention that has been held by exhibitors in New York for some time.

The first session was called to order at 11:40 o'clock Tuesday morning, President L. A. Buettner presiding, when reports of officers for the year were read. These reports showed that the affairs of the organization were at a rather low ebb. President Buettner attributed it to lack of co-operation and lack of funds, a condition which naturally paralyzes the efforts of any administration. The causes were not defined.

President Buettner appointed the following committees:

Credential Committee—Thomas Howard, chairman; N. Vinegrad, W. H. Hollender, A. J. Wolf, F. P. Elliott, Sydney S. Cohen.

Law and Legislation Committee—John Manheimer, chairman; Charles O'Reilly, Walter A. Zeisler, Henry Cole, Rudolph Sanders, George Cohen, Charles A. McCarthy, M. J. Gerson, S. Suckno.

Grievance Committee—John J. Wittman, chairman; Charles Steiner, I. Rothman, William Richner.

By-Laws Committee—Henry Cole, chairman; Sidney Ascher, S. I. Berman, Benjamin Appel, M. Mueller.

Committee on Resolutions—S. S. Cohen, I. Hartstall, M. J. Gerson, Charles Haring, M. Grossman.

This business concluded, the Tuesday session was adjourned to meet at eleven o'clock Wednesday morning.

Wednesday's Session.

It was twelve o'clock before the convention got down to business Wednesday morning, but there was an appreciable increase in the number of exhibitors present over the preceding day. Upon calling the meeting to order President Buettner asked for reports of committees.

A number of resolutions were offered by the Committee on Resolutions, principal among which was one indorsing the Moving Picture World's plan in behalf of the Liberty Loan, which was unanimously adopted. It reads as follows:

Whereas, The United States Government is at war; and

Whereas, In order successfully to prosecute the war to a speedy and successful termination; and

Whereas, It is the desire of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of New York State to help and assist the Government in its endeavor; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the exhibitors of New York State, in convention assembled, indorse the plan to set aside one day during the next Liberty Loan drive for the purpose of assisting the Government; and be it further

Resolved, That the day be known officially as Liberty Bond Day and that patriotic pictures and music be used, that the fronts of all theaters be decorated with flags, signs and banners calling attention to the purpose of the day; and be it further

Resolved, That Liberty Bond salesmen be privileged to solicit subscriptions in the motion picture theaters of the State that day; and be it further

Resolved, That the Four Minute Men be asked to speak on that special matter on that day; and be it further

Resolved, That Secretary McAdoo be asked officially to recognize that day by proclaiming it Liberty Loan Day at all motion picture theaters; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to Secretary McAdoo.

mended that its members give their support to those manufacturing companies that do not charge the fifteen-cent film tax; the deposit system was condemned at some length; the salary of the secretary was abolished, and the fixing of the date and place for the next meeting was left to the Executive Committee.

A motion was made and carried providing that the annual dues for the maintenance of the state organization be increased from $2 to $3. Another motion by Sydney Ascher provided that the previous special levy of $10 per member be rescinded and that a special tax of $5 be levied for 1918, and that the local organizations be responsible for its collection. This was adopted without dissent.

Chairman Cole of the Committee on By-Laws had nothing to report, but said that when the by-laws were framed copies would be sent to each member for approval, and that when returned to the committee final action would be taken.

It was decided that the Executive Committee should be composed of all the state officers, the president and vice-president of each local and the chairmen of all committees of the state organization.

An adjournment was taken for luncheon at 1:30 o'clock, during which a group photograph of the members was taken.

When the meeting again convened it was addressed by Gustavus Rogers, the lawyer who has charge of the Sunday law violation cases now before the Court of Appeals of the State of New York. Mr. Rogers reviewed his past services in behalf of the exhibitors, and assured the convention that he would do all that he possibly could to win these cases. A vote of thanks was accorded him.

Election of officers for the coming year was the next business in order, and resulted as follows:

President, Sydney S. Cohen of New York; first vice-president, Sam Suckno of Albany; second vice-president, Walter A. Zeisler of Schenectady; third vice-president, Rudolph Sanders of Brooklyn; fourth vice-president, L. A. Buettner of Cohoes; secretary, Sam I. Berman of Brooklyn; treasurer, John J. Wittman of New York; sergeant-at-arms, William Hilkemeier of New York.

Delegates to Boston National Convention—For Manhattan, Charles Haring, John Manheimer, Ike Hartstall, M. Edelstein, Thomas Howard; for Bronx, John J. Wittman, Henry Cole, N. Vinegrad; for Tri-City, L. A. Buettner, George Roberts, Fred P. Elliott; for Brooklyn, Rudolph Sanders, M. Grossman, Lederer A. J. Stockhammer, Louis Levine; for Queens, M. J. Gerson. Alternates, Gus Koenigswald, M. Weinstock, B. Lyons, Charles Steiner, William Hilkemeier, for Manhattan; Charles McCarthy and Messrs. Silverman and Powers, for Tri-City; Henry Haring, M. Bigal, William Hollender, M. Shapiro, Mrs. Wrightmeyer, for Brooklyn; M. Suckno, M. Solomon.

The newly elected officers were duly installed, after which the convention adjourned to meet at the call of the president at such time and place as might be designated by the Executive Committee.

Among those present were:

Fred P. Elliott, Albany; Isidore Edelstein, Mount Morris Theater, New York; Benjamin Appel, Secretary, Tri-City League, Kings Theater, Troy; Allen Brothers & Peyser, Empire Theater, Port Richmond, S. I.; N. Vinegrad, Nicoland Theater, Bronx; Walter A. Zeiser, Schenectady; Morris S. Sherman, Schenectady; Gus Koenigswald, Sunset Theater, Brooklyn; John J. Wittman, Eldorado, Bronx; Adolph J. Stockhammer, Brooklyn; Charles F. Haring, New York and Brooklyn; F. A. Gorman, New York; Samuel Rhonheimer, Brooklyn; S. Suckno, Albany; J. Celler, Brooklyn; Michael Warshower and Abraham Teffelstein, Penn Theater, Brooklyn; Samuel Fisher, Brooklyn; Milton M. Goldsmith, Attorney for National League; A. L. Kurstor, Reyun Theater; A. J. Wolf, New York; Thomas Howard, New York; R. Sanders, Brooklyn; William Rich, Brooklyn; I. Rothman, Park Theater, Brooklyn; M. Solomon, Crescent Theater, Bronx; Sol Coleman, New York; George Roberts, Albany; T. Hartsman, Brooklyn; Henry Haring, Brooklyn and New York; Charles A. McCarthy, Hoosick Falls; M. J. Gerson, Whitestown, L. I.; George Cohen, Poughkeepsie; Charles Steiner, New Lork; Louis F. Blumenthal, New York; I. N. Hartstall, New York; William H. Hollander, Brooklyn; S. I. Berman, Brooklyn; Sydney S. Cohen, New York; Charles L. O'Reilly, New York; John Manheimer, New York; Lee A. Ochs, New York; M. J. Gerson, College Point, L. I.; William Hilkemeier, New York; L. A. Buettner, Cohoes; Henry Cole, Royal Theater, Bronx; H. L. Rosenthal, New York.

New Hampshire League Meets in Boston

Granite State Branch Accepts Boston Hospitality—Plans to Boost Exposition.

FOR the first time since the organization was formed, the New Hampshire branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America held an important meeting, Tuesday, March 5, at the headquarters of the Massachusetts and Rhode Island branches, 127 Pleasant street, Boston. A fairly good-sized delegation of Granite State exhibitors were present at this session. President Charles Bean presided. The reason assigned for the meeting of the New Hampshire in Boston was that it is a centrally located place and that exhibitors from that state were in town on Tuesdays, arranging and rearranging their bookings.

Ernest H. Horstmann, former president of the Massachusetts branch of the league, addressed the meeting on the proposition of "manufacturer to exhibitor direct." He explained the proposition and answered questions.

Another speaker at the session was Samuel Grant, manager of the National Exposition, which will be held in the Hub July 13 to 20. His topic for discussion was the part New Hampshire exhibitors are going to play in the exposition this summer. He suggested that the Granite State men make arrangements to conduct popularity contests in connection with the publicity campaign for the convention. Three months' duration for these contests would be sufficient, he explained.

Adjournment was taken until the first Tuesday in April.

Exchangemen Plan for Coming Convention

Discuss Means of Entertaining Delegates of Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of Northwest.

EXCHANGEMEN of Minneapolis got together at the Hotel Radisson on February 26 to discuss ways and means of entertaining exhibitors attending the annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of the Northwest in Minneapolis. The exchangemen assured the exhibitors, when the latter held a meeting the following day, that they would cooperate with the corporation in every way possible to make the convention a big thing and to entertain the visitors. The exhibitors have voted to try out a new plan for convention entertainment.

Heretofore exchanges have had booths on the convention floor and have had really little to do to make exhibitors welcome outside of visiting with them when they called at the various booths. This year it is planned to allow time for the exchangemen to take the visiting theatermen in charge and entertain them their way. This plan has met with the exchangemen's unanimous approval and promises to work out to the satisfaction of all concerned.

No dates or place for the convention have been selected, but it is expected that this year's sessions will last three days and headquarters will be at the West Hotel, as in the past. James G. Gilosky, president of the corporation, is still in California, but he is expected home early next month and will preside. It is expected that Clyde H. Hitchcock, present secretary, and Charles W. Campbell, St. Paul, will be candidates. It is not expected that Mr. Gilosky will run for the presidency. David G. Rodgers, a candidate last year, is now a national officer and no longer an active member of the Northwest body.

EXHIBITORS OF FLINT, MICH., ORGANIZE.

The exhibitors of Flint, Mich., have formed a local association and they will meet every two weeks. Lester Matt of the Strand theater is president and Fred Hartman of the Princess theater is secretary. It is known as the Flint Theatrical Managers' Association.

BAY STATE AND RHODE ISLAND LEAGUE MEET.

The Massachusetts and Rhode Island branches of the National League held their semi-monthly meeting shortly after the New Hampshire meeting was adjourned. Several important matters were taken up. More than a score of Bay State exhibitors attended.

Seelye Goes West to Visit Trade

United Picture Theaters Announce Exchange Heads in Several Centers—Ochs Also on Tour.

MR. SEELYE, vice-president and general manager of the United Picture Theaters of America, Inc., announced March 4, before starting west for a tour of the principal exchange centers of the country, that by the end of the week one hundred high-grade exchange men in the United States would be enlisted under the United banner.

A. S. Abeles, formerly New York exchange manager for Pathe and more recently special representative, is now in charge of the New York United office, with Aaron Korn assisting. Mr. Korn leaves Paramount after two years of successful service.

H. M. Osborn has opened a United exchange in Philadelphia. Stanley Hand, after three years as World Film manager in Boston, will handle the New England territory for United.

M. F. Tobias, who has covered the Albany section for years, now represents United in northern New York.

N. I. Filkins, Pathe manager in Buffalo for four years, has signed to look after the interests of the United co-operative association of exhibitors in western New York.

D. F. O'Donnell has transferred his activities in Washington from Pathe to United. He will have in the Virginia and Maryland territory two of the best salesmen in those states.

C. W. Bunn has opened offices in the Consumers' Building in Chicago to promote the United propaganda in the section which depends upon Chicago for film distribution.

During his tour of organization Mr. Seelye will spend several days in Los Angeles.

Lee A. Ochs, president of the company, addressed meetings of exhibitors of New York State, Eastern Pennsylvania, New Jersey and New England last week, and now is beginning a tour of the west and south that will not bring him back to New York until June 1.

Mr. Ochs goes to meet groups of exhibitors and explain to them the program for exhibitor co-operation in the purchase and presentation of film features that has been devised by the executives of United Pictures. This week he is scheduled to visit Cleveland, Detroit and Chicago, spending four days in the metropolis of the Middle West.

Beginning with a day in Indianapolis, Mr. Ochs will spend two days next week in Cincinnati, St. Louis and Memphis, going on for the week of March 25 to Little Rock, Dallas and New Orleans. He has arranged to give three days each to the exhibitors of Texas and Louisiana before starting north the first week of April by way of Atlanta, Charlotte, N. C., and Washington. The end of that week will find him in Pittsburgh, after which he will head west again and reach Kansas City on Monday, April 8. Oklahoma City and Hutchinson, Kan., follow, and then for the week of April 14 Lincoln, Neb., Omaha, Des Moines and Minneapolis.

Butte, Mont., is the next stop, and Mr. Ochs will spend April 23 and 24 there before traveling down to Boise, Ida., and on to Spokane. The last few days of April and the first week in May will find Mr. Ochs in Seattle and Portland.

From Monday, May 6, to Wednesday Mr. Ochs will meet the exhibitors of San Francisco and vicinity before going to Los Angeles for ten days. Traveling east from Los Angeles, Mr. Ochs will be in Salt Lake City on Monday and Tuesday, May 20 and 21. Two days in Denver will follow and then he will start for New York by way of Chicago.

Baker at Work in Los Angeles

New Metro West Coast Production Chief Will Be Responsible for Pictures Made on Pacific.

GEORGE D. BAKER is in Hollywood, Cal., to take charge of Metro's West Coast studio in the capacity of manager of productions. Mr. Baker will exercise final judgment on the stories chosen for the stars, in addition to supervising all activities in connection with the output of the studio. He will be personally responsible for the quality of the Metro pictures made in the Hollywood studio. With Mr. Baker went assistant Charles Hunt, who has been associated with him during his entire experience with Metro. Mr. Hunt will be Mr. Baker's "general factotum" at the western plant. Mrs. Hunt left with her husband, and Mr. Baker's sister, who is her brother's housekeeper, will follow in a short time.

George D. Baker.

Edith Storey, Viola Dana, Bert Lytell and Harold Lockwood are the stars who will be associated with Mr. Baker in California. The three first named will come under his personal supervision, and he will cooperate with Mr. Lockwood and the Metro-Yorke company, of which Fred J. Balshofer is president.

Mr. Baker was long identified as director with Edith Storey when she was a Vitagraph star. He also is the man who made "Revelation," in which Nazimova has come into her own as a motion picture star.

George Baker is thoroughly conversant with all branches of the theatrical industry. He is the man who directed the late John Bunny in the famous Bunny comedies. He was the "Baker" in the theatrical firm of Baker & Castle, which produced "Graustark," "The Goose Girl," and other successes, previous to which he was an actor of note. He has also been cartoonist and newspaper reporter. He is an all-round man with an all-round intelligence, and his promotion to the position of production manager of his firm's West Coast plant is a substantial recognition of the fact that he is a man of both vision and constructive ability.

Campaign On in New York For Sunday Shows

Allied Motion Picture Committee to Back Bill to Legalize Exhibitions on First Day of Week

THE allied interests of the motion picture industry have launched a vigorous campaign to amend the state penal laws of New York to legalize the exhibition of motion pictures on Sunday. A bill is about to be introduced into the state Legislature. An Allied Motion Picture Committee of the State of New York was organized at the offices of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry on Thursday, March 7. This committee is already pushing a strenuous campaign throughout the state to gain the passage of the measure.

This allied committee numbers: John Manheimer, chairman; Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, secretary; W. A. Zeisler and Charles L. O'Reilly, assistant secretaries; Max Spiegel, secretary Mitchel H. Mark Realty Corporation, owners of the Strand Circuit of theaters in the state, treasurer. Mr. Manheimer is president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of New York State, Local No. 1, and Mr. O'Reilly is first vice-president of the same organization.

The following vice-chairmen were named for the committee: The members of the executive committee of the Exhibitors' League of New York State, the presidents of every producing, distributing and supply and equipment company; the presidents of all trade papers, and such additions as Sydney Cohen, president of the Exhibitors' League of New York State, may name. The executive committee of the Exhibitors' League of New York State numbers its officers as follows: Sydney S. Cohen of New York, president; Samuel Suckno of Albany, first vice-president; Walter A. Zeisler of Schenectady, second vice-president; Rudolph Sanders of Brooklyn, third vice-president; L. A. Buettner of Cohoes, fourth vice-president, treasurer; John Wittman, the Bronx, secretary; Samuel Berman of New York, and the members of the law legislative committee, which numbers, besides several of the officers already named, John Manheimer, chairman; Henry Cole of the Bronx, George Cohen of Poughkeepsie, M. McCarthy of the Tri-City branch, and M. J. Gersen of Queens.

Many of these men were present at the organization meeting of the allied committee. Other prominent exhibitors present were M. S. Silverman of Schenectady, Benjamin Apfel of Albany and Troy, G. J. Sheer of Cohoes, Fred Elliott of Albany.

The committee is lining up every one of the 1,200 exhibitors of the state behind the bill. At the Hotel Ten Eyck, in Albany, probably on Thursday, March 14, an important get-together meeting will be held. At this time the complete organization of the state campaign will be mapped out.

Already an active newspaper campaign has been started. The allied committee is making a systematic effort to put every important newspaper in the state behind the bill to amend the laws regarding Sunday motion picture exhibitions.

The allied committee makes it clear that the bill as proposed presents the opening of Sunday motion picture theaters as a matter of local option. Specifying 2 p. m. as the opening Sunday hour any possible confliction with religious services is eliminated. The bill as now proposed is substantially the same as the bill introduced last year in the state Legislature by Assemblyman Clarence J. Welsh of Albany. This bill had the emphatic approval of the state conference of mayors.

Another important point in the new campaign for the amendment of the penal laws is the fact that the whole industry is behind the move. The allied committee directing the campaign includes every branch of the industry.

The organization of the allied committee and the launching of the campaign follows closely upon action taken at a recent meeting held at the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry's headquarters. At this meeting the Sunday closing committee, consisting of William A. Brady, Adolph Zukor, represented by Arthur S. Friend; Walter W. Irwin and Lee A. Ochs, approved of the introduction of a measure into the state Legislature to legalize the open Sunday screen theater.

The presentation of the proposed bill will have an entirely new war-time argument for its passage this year. There are 1,200 motion picture theaters in the state, and half of these are closed on Sunday. This closing means the positive loss in war taxes to the Government of $500,000 in a year. Aside from the item of war tax loss the closing of theaters on Sunday means that a direct channel of communication between the Government and the people is cut off. The importance of the screen theater in handling the Liberty Loan drives, the war saving stamp campaigns, and in aiding Food Administrator Hoover has been proved. The closing of theaters on Sunday means a direct blow to Government propaganda.

Every angle points to the amendment of the state penal laws, and the allied committee is starting its campaign with unbounded enthusiasm.

The bill as approved by the allied committee follows:

"Section 1. The penal law is hereby amended by adding at the end of article 192 a new section, to be Section 2154, to read as follows:

"2154. Motion Picture Exhibitions on the First Day of the Week. Notwithstanding the provisions of this article or any other general or local act it shall not be unlawful to exhibit motion pictures on the first day of the week after 2 o'clock in the afternoon in a city or village, if an ordinance shall not have been adopted by the common council or other legislative governing body of the city or village prohibiting such exhibitions on such day and after such hour; and the adoption of such an ordinance is hereby authorized.

"This act shall take effect immediately."

Lima Theaters Face Sunday Closing

Irate Grocer Is Arrested for Sabbath Trade—Goes on Warpath to Close Everything.

THEATER managers in Lima, Ohio, have reason to be alarmed by an attempt to close all business houses on Sunday as well as theaters. The affair had a trivial start, but it looks as though the plan to close all forms of business on Sunday will be carried out. A local grocer not a member of the Grocers' Association, remained open on Sunday and was arrested.

At the trial the grocer accused the Grocers' Association of causing his arrest and promised, according to report: "If I cannot stay open on Sunday, then everything else in Lima will close on that day."

The grocer in question with a party of friends visited every establishment open Sunday, March 3, and included in their trip the local picture houses. At each place the party made purchases and on the following Saturday the business men as well as theater managers will be informed that the penalty of the law will be inflicted on those who attempt to open on the Sabbath. Smith threatened to procure warrants from the justice court. If this action takes place, it will mean the enforcement of ancient so called "Blue" laws and will even prohibit the sale of newspapers or the operation of street cars on the seventh day.

Moss to Build New Theater on Heights

Building Department and Property Owners Grant Permission After Long Litigation.

AT A meeting of the Board of Appeals, of the New York Building Department, held March 7, permission was granted to B. S. Moss, head of the Moss Theatrical Enterprises, which operates a chain of theaters, to erect a playhouse at Broadway and 181st street.

The erection of a playhouse in that locality has been in litigation for about two years. In August, 1916, the so-called building zone regulation was passed which prohibited the erection of theaters in residential locations unless special permission was obtained from the board. On two occasions the Moss interests urged they be granted permission, but without success.

Finally plans were submitted which satisfied the property owners of the neighborhood and met with the approval of the board. Work will begin immediately. The theater will seat 3,000 and will be highly ornate in character.

"Maryland, My Maryland, Where Art Thou?"

Lack of Any Showing of Personal Interest Among the Exhibitors at Senate Committee Hearing Surprises World Man.

By Sam Spedon.

ON Wednesday, March 6, we attended the hearing of the Maryland exhibitors before the Senate Committee at Annapolis, advocating the bill for the repeal of State censorship. The hearing was set for 10 A. M., and we expected to see an overwhelming attendance of exhibitors, but there was not an exhibitor present at that time. "Jack Connelly," the representative of the industry, who acted as spokesman, stated to the chairman of the committee that there were only two speakers (referring to the two trade paper representatives) to go on with the exhibitors' plea. It was thereupon agreed to postpone the hearing until Wednesday, March 13. Your humble servant with the other trade paper representative and Mr. Connelly adjourned to the hearing before the House committee, to listen to the opponents of the repeal bill in answer to the exhibitors' arguments made before the committee on the week previous. In courtesy to the exhibitors the chairman accorded them fifteen minutes to present any further arguments which they might have to present. Seven speakers spoke in opposition to the bill, and by the time they were through the speaker favoring the bill was almost forgotten.

During the hearing, about noon, five or six exhibitors put in an appearance. Guy Wonders' name was mentioned as a supporter of the bill, and surprise was expressed at his absence in Annapolis at a time when so much importance was attached to the repeal of legalized censorship for the good of the industry.

In conversation with one of the exhibitors at the hearing, he said: "I am not opposed to censorship an account of the extra expense it incurs, but I am opposed to it on principle. I consider it discriminating and unconstitutional. I can't understand why every exhibitor doesn't oppose it on principle and not on a question of profit and loss."

We did hear that one or two exhibitors at a previous hearing had overreached themselves by expressing themselves too freely, without regard to finesse and diplomacy. They reflected upon the qualification of the members of the board of censors, whose sincerity is unquestioned, instead of calling attention to the intrinsic merits of legalized censorship as a matter of justice and injustice to the industry and the public.

No comment is necessary to call attention to the lack of cooperation in repealing State censorship in Maryland. If it is repealed we must conclude that it will be repealed on the judgment of the legislators and not by the united efforts of the industry in general, nor the exhibitors in particular.

While many of the exhibitors contributed to defraying the necessary expense of presenting their case, they did not display their interest with their presence at these hearings, which is so essential in giving weight to their interest and the importance of the measure under discussion.

Unless the exhibitors and distributors of Maryland make a better showing at the hearing before the Senate committee on March 13, they will have no one but themselves to blame if the repeal is defeated.

First National Chiefs in Town

Blank of Des Moines, Gordon of Boston and Lieber of Indianapolis Bring Reports of Reviving Business.

DURING the past week A. H. Blank of Des Moines and N. H. Gordon of Boston, two of the prominent franchise holders in the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, spent several days in New York looking over the film market and giving special attention to "Tarzan of the Apes" to prepare for special exploitation of the big Broadway attraction in their own territories. Robert Lieber of Indianapolis was also represented by his brother, Herman Lieber, and S. Barret McCormick, managing director of the Circle theater, the famous Lieber house of that city.

Mr. Blank reports the resumption of big business throughout the Middle West after a winter that has already passed into history as the most temperamental on record. During the seven years that he has been in the exhibiting field the Des Moines exhibitor has built up an enviable reputation as a developer of prosperous territory.

In Iowa alone Mr. Blank owns and operates five theaters—the Garden in Des Moines, the Strand in Marshalltown and the Family, Garden and Casino of Davenport. He is also building a new $600,000 house in Des Moines, seating upward of 3,000, to be known as the Rialto. This theater will be opened about May 15, is said to be the very last word in temples of the motion picture art, and no expense is being spared to make it the finest in the Middle West. The Strand of Omaha is another valuable property that has known great prosperity under Mr. Blank's administration.

For several seasons Mr. Blank has controlled the distribution rights to Triangle pictures in Missouri, Kansas, Iowa and Nebraska. For a time he also distributed the Selznick product in the same territory.

Encouraging news is also brought from Boston by Mr. Gordon, who says the film fans are beginning to react normally again after the recent spell of depression. Mr. Gordon has done clean-up business with both "Alimony" and "Daughter of Destiny" within the past few weeks. He expects to start the big spring drive with "Tarzan," for which a special publicity campaign is now under way, embracing billboard and newspaper advertising. It is Mr. Gordon's intention to give "Tarzan" a run in one of the large legitimate theaters of the Hub before releasing it generally throughout New England.

Messrs. Lieber and McCormick look forward to prosperous times in Indianapolis.

Max Linder Coming Back to Us

Famous French Comedian, Restored in Health, Expected in the United States in a Few Weeks.

MAX LINDER, the famous French comedian, who was compelled to terminate his Essanay contract on account of a sudden and serious physical breakdown after only three of his scheduled twelve productions were made, has so successfully recovered his health that he will return to the United States in April or May, and, surrounded by a capable comedy company, will make a new series of pictures, which will in all probability be written especially for him by Tom Bret, well-known scenario and title writer.

Max Linder.

At the time M. Linder was signed by George K. Spoor of Essanay to make a series of twelve comedies for that company much publicity was given his coming here. His first three productions were well received, especially his first comedy, "Max Comes Across." This picture was made in Chicago, but the strenuous work of the studio and varying climate did not suit him as he was at the time still convalescent from serious injuries received during the first year of the war, when he was serving with the French army, so it was decided to make the future Linder productions in California.

Even under the ideal working and climatic conditions of California he suffered slight relapses of trouble with his old wounds, causing a complication of lung and stomach ailments, necessitating a retreat to the high altitudes of the Arizona mountains. Shortly after this it was decided to abandon the present series of pictures, Mr. Linder and his corps of assistants returning to France. After attending to the immediate affairs of the Cinemax, his French motion picture studio in Paris, Linder went into the mountains of Switzerland, where he is now.

Satisfied that he has now so fully recovered his health and strength as to permit him to resume studio work, Mr. Linder has retained the services of Thaddee E. Letendre, Times Building, New York, as his American representative, and has signified his intention of returning here in a month or two.

With "The Wizard" in Retreat.

Joseph Smiley, who is frequently seen in Goldwyn productions, is often cast for the role of an inventor, a part he has played in many film plays during his long career. Lately he has been mistaken more than once for the great Edison, himself, much to the amusement of the genial actor.

Stanley Mastbaum Dies Suddenly

Noted Philadelphia Film Man Was Organizer of Stanley Booking Company and Interested in Many Theaters.

STANLEY V. MASTBAUM, well-known motion picture house proprietor, died suddenly at the home of his mother, Mrs. Fannie E. Mastbaum, 1822 North Broad street, Philadelphia, at two o'clock March 7. He was ill but a few days.

Mr. Mastbaum, had he lived until April 1, would have been thirty-eight years old. Comparatively a young man, he made himself a dominating figure in the motion picture world by a sheer force of personality, his business acumen and his remarkable knowledge of just what the public desired in the way of good, clean entertainment.

From early childhood Mr. Mastbaum had a keen commercial instinct. He was educated in the public schools in Philadelphia, where his father was a member of the Young, Smyth Field Company, wholesale drygoods and notions. After finishing his schooling he entered the employ of Gimbel Brothers as a buyer of Oriental rugs, tapestries, etc., of which he was considered one of the best judges in America.

While connected with the Gimbel stores he traveled all over the world seeking the old and unique. He also was a connoisseur of etchings and other varieties of art.

Subsequently he went into the real estate business and his success was phenomenal. When he felt the need of a partner the firm of Mastbaum & Fleisher was formed; then Mastbaum Brothers & Fleisher, Inc.

About seven years ago Mr. Mastbaum made a study of the motion picture business and became interested in the Regent and Bijou Dream theaters of Philadelphia. He made a diligent study of what the public wanted and provided it, and in this way established a clientele that endures to this day. Later he took charge of the Stanley theater, also of Philadelphia, which is regarded as one of the most successful photoplay theaters in this country.

The Late Stanley Mastbaum at His Desk.

He was managing director of the Stanley Company, the Stanley Booking Corporation and the Stanley theater, all of which bear his name, and he also had the personal direction of theaters in New York.

Mr. Mastbaum was a wonderful student of character, of splendid personality and enthusiasm. His employees declare him to have been a live wire of knowledge, ambition and excellent judgment. He had every department of his many enterprises at his finger tips all the time.

Mr. Mastbaum still found time in indulging in his favorite diversions, which were entertaining his personal friends lavishly, playing a game of golf or writing books on whist—a game in which he was an expert—and doing a good turn for a needy one.

Mr. Mastbaum was a member of the Masonic fraternity and many clubs and business societies. He was widely known for his benefactions, although with characteristic modesty he refrained from keeping account of his many charities. He was popular in social and financial and other circles in Philadelphia and New York.

The funeral of Mr. Mastbaum was held in Philadelphia on Sunday, March 10, and was attended by a host of the business associates and other friends of the late film man.

Hodkinson Names Roth as a Co-Partner

Californian Theater of San Francisco to Show Films Distributed by New Yorker.

W. W. HODKINSON announces, through his home office, 527 Fifth avenue, that the first solid and well laid foundation stones of the new structure which he promised the exhibitors he was to build are now appearing.

The announcement consists only of the statement that Eugene Roth, of the Market Street Theater Company, San Francisco, has become one of the co-partners in the great Hodkinson plan, which is designed to circle the United States in a distributing system, controlled by the exhibitor instead of the producer.

Mr. Roth's allegiance to the Hodkinson plan just follows that of Greves & Ellison of Denver, well-known film men of that section, whose Rialto and Princess theaters are the pride of Curtis street. Messrs. Greves' and Ellison's activities will be mainly centered in the territory covered by Colorado, Utah, Wyoming and New Mexico. By virtue of this arrangement Hodkinson service of selected product will be shown in the best houses in Denver and the surrounding territory.

The Salt Lake section of the West has also been "tied in," but Mr. Hodkinson is not yet ready to disclose his completed arrangements. The same condition prevails in the Indiana section of the Middle West, which is all lined up and only waiting for Mr. Hodkinson's return to New York for full announcement.

Mr. Roth's sphere of influence as far as the Hodkinson plan is concerned will, of course, naturally center about northern California and San Francisco, but a more definite announcement concerning the territory that he will immediately supervise may be expected later.

Although Mr. Hodkinson has only been away from New York about three weeks his success has been exceptionally gratifying, and he is quoted as saying that only a very short additional time will be necessary for the completion of all that he set out to do.

Massachusetts Musicians Are Enjoined

Court Declares Exhibitor Cannot Be Forced to Employ Five Men When He Only Wants Organist.

AN important decision affecting moving picture exhibitors was handed down recently by the Massachusetts Supreme Court, when the court enjoined a musician's union in Haverhill from forcing the owner of a Haverhill moving picture theater to hire a five-piece orchestra when he only wanted an organist.

It was the opinion of the court that the case vitally concerned the rights of an employer to a free flow of labor, and at the same time has to take into consideration the rights of combinations of workers whose union might be adjudged according to law.

The court ruled that to permit a musicians' union to enforce the employment of five men when a single member of that union would answer all the requirements of the business would be unfair to the employer.

The decision draws a comparison with what unions might do in case the claim of the Haverhill body was allowed. Carpenters and masons, it sets forth, might insist that any person wishing to build a house be forced to put up a ten-story building or not get union help.

"If it is legal," states the court, "for a union of musicians to combine for the purpose of forcing a plaintiff (who wants an organist only) to employ an orchestra of several pieces, that is to say if that indirect purpose of enabling the union musicians to earn more money justifies the adoption of the minimum rule, it is hard to see why it is not legal for a union of carpenters (for example) to refuse to work on a building belonging to the plaintiff unless he uses in the construction of it hand-made doors, window frames and window sashes in place of doors, window frames and window sashes made by machine."

CHANDOS BRENON IN NEW YORK.

Chandos Brenon, brother of the producer, Herbert, paid a hurried visit to New York last week. He has returned to Montreal after consulting with the committee of the Producers and Exhibitors' Affiliated, and submitting a proposition for marketing productions in Canada on the same direct booking plan that the Producers and Exhibitors' Affiliated are working on in the United States.

Mr. Brenon represented his brother at the executive committee meeting. He has complete charge of the exploitation of Brenon pictures in the Dominion.

J. A. Berst Resigns from Pathe

Paul Brunet Is Named as His Successor as Vice-President and General Manager.

J. A. BERST resigned as vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchanges, Inc., at a meeting of the board of directors held on Thursday, March 7. It is known he had contemplated this action for some time. In 1904 Mr. Berst, who was born in Paris, and began his business career as a boy with Charles Pathe, was sent by Mr. Pathe to the United States to develop the market here for Pathe films.

The stock of films Mr. Berst brought with him was small and some of them were only about fifteen feet in length. He rented offices on Twenty-third street, New York, and sold his stock himself. His infant business prospered so much that he engaged a cashier and an office boy. His efforts brought such results that in 1908 it was decided to install a factory equipment at Bound Brook, N. J., where the main Pathe American factory has ever since been located. The year following the big studio in Jersey City was built and production of American pictures on a large scale begun.

In December of 1913 Mr. Berst resigned and became treasurer of the General Film Company. Early in 1915 he accepted the vice-presidency and general managership of the Selig Company. Then he became the president of the General Film, which office he resigned early in 1916 to become vice-president and general manager of Pathe.

Paul Brunet, controller of Pathe Exchange, Inc., succeeds Mr. Berst. Mr. Brunet's association with the organization dates back for three and a half years, to the time when the old Eclectic Film Company was distributing the Pathe product. During all that time he has been in close touch with the financial and exchange ends of the business, and his system of exchange control has been responsible for a marked increase in efficiency. His department at the Pathe Exchange administrative offices has admittedly been the best organized and directed of all the various departments. It is due to his efforts and ability that the Pathe system of accounting is recognized as among the best of any company's in the business.

For the past two years in addition to his duties as controller Mr. Brunet has been assistant treasurer and a director in the company.

Mr. Brunet has no statement to make at the present time regarding the policies which he will pursue, save that Pathe Exchange, Inc., will be in closer touch with the great world organization of Pathe and will thereby benefit accordingly.

THREE PRODUCERS ACCEPT LAEMMLE INVITATION.

That Universal's invitation to all producers to close down their studios, move into Universal City plant and so cut down on their present overhead has struck a responsive chord is evident from the statement issued by Carl Laemmle to the effect that three producers already have accepted this invitation.

The Astra company, the George Beban company and one unnamed organization are the producers mentioned in the Universal announcement. Astra has already started one company at work in the Universal City studio and plans to have three units working by the end of the month. The Beban and the unnamed organization will also be operating at full blast within the next thirty days.

It is also stated that negotiations are now proceeding which will, in all probability, result in the closing of other large producing plants on the West Coast. The names of the companies affected by this deal will, in all likelihood, be made public within the next few weeks.

AMATEUR SCREEN NIGHTS AT THE PROSPECT.

Secrets of the moving picture studio are to be revealed at B. S. Moss' Prospect Theater in the Bronx next week when "Making Movie Stars," one of the playlets on the bill, will be presented.

The sketch, conceived and managed by A. J. Duffy, a United Booking Office alumnus, aims to reveal to picture-goers the inside workings of a studio. A company of seven, headed by Director Tom Ward, is required. All the paraphernalia of a motion picture studio is assembled. Members of the audience are invited to take part in the acting of the picture.

At the end of the week the picture, made little by little at each performance with patrons acting some of the characters, will be assembled at the Prospect the following week.

Pettijohn and Levine Issue Statement

Representatives of Producers and Exhibitors Say Theater Men in Thirty-two States Have Approved Plan.

A STATEMENT has been issued by Charles C. Pettijohn, general manager of the Producers and Exhibitors' Affiliated Direct Sales Plan, addressed to the exhibitors of this country and Canada. After detailing the work which has been done during the past sixty days by Louis Levine and himself, as the authorized representatives of the Allied Exhibitors' Convention, Mr. Pettijohn says:

"We are now able to assure the exhibitors definitely that the plan will be in practical operation on a scale of vastly greater magnitude than was at first contemplated within a very short time.

"Exhibitors' units in thirty-two states have definitely approved this principle of cooperative booking and completed arrangements to participate in the benefits to be derived from the undertaking. The balance of the states, which have not yet been reached, constitute only 24 per cent. of the total days of bookings necessary to assure the successful completion of the plan."

Olive Thomas

WHEN Triangle announced that Olive Thomas, dainty Broadway star, had been engaged to create important film roles at Culver City, screen critics as well as the public showed more than ordinary interest. Decided approval followed her appearance in "Madcap Madge" and "An Even Break," her first Triangle vehicles, and an even greater success in "Broadway, Arizona," in which her sunny and whimsical personality finds the part of a musical comedy star especially adapted to her training before the footlights. "Indiscreet Corinne," "Limousine Life" and "Heiress for a Day" have been Miss Thomas' last vehicles.

Olive Thomas.

Miss Thomas was born near Pittsburgh, Pa., about twenty years ago. There were no actors in her family, and her parents were very much opposed to her leaning toward the stage. Florenz Ziegfeld saw her dancing in a contest atop the New Amsterdam Roof, that mecca of metropolitan beauty and gaiety, and immediately engaged her for his "Follies." She was also given a part in the Frolic, and during the 1916 season her popularity grew.

Life before the public made such a strong appeal that she entered the larger field of film endeavor, because of the opportunity for "plenty of dainty clothes, fun, and laughter."

Coupled with her intense love for excitement (she is a most vivacious person) is a true feminine affection for children and a broad devotion to all that breathes of the great outdoors. A brunette with gray eyes and golden brown hair that photographs unusually well, she reaps in abundance the admiration which every normal good-looking woman craves.

TRIANGLE RENAMES MOUNTAIN STUDIO.

The Triangle Film Corporation has changed the name of its big ranch studio in the heart of the Santa Monica Mountains from Hartville to "The Triangle Ranch Studio." Of this eighteen-hundred tract, fronting the ocean, where the Triangle stock runs like any other cattle ranch, are filmed the Western thrillers featuring Roy Stewart, directed by Cliff Smith.

TULLY STORY FOR MAY ALLISON.

Metro Pictures Corporation has purchased from May Tully an original screen story for the use of May Allison, who will begin work on the production as soon as she completes "Social Hypocrites," which is being directed by Albert Capellani.

Chicago News Letter

David L. Rodgers Ends Long Trip

National Organizer of the M. P. E. L. of A. Talks Interestingly of His Work and Business Conditions in Sections Traversed.

DAVID G. RODGERS, national organizer of the M. P. E. L. of A., arrived in Chicago Thursday, February 28, from St. Louis, concluding an extended tour of the middle west, the Pacific Coast and the southwestern states. It was in October last that Mr. Rodgers left this city for Manhattan, Kan., to attend the state convention there, and from that point he visited in succession St. Louis, Kansas City and St. Joseph, Mo. In Kansas City he was successful in securing a large following of exhibitors for the League.

He next visited Minneapolis, where he attended the semi-annual convention, and then left for Spokane and Seattle, arriving in the former city on November 28. He immediately went on to Seattle, where the state convention was about to be held and which was attended by fully 90 per cent. of all the exhibitors in the state. Portland, Ore., was next visited, and there quite a number of members were added to the League organization.

Leaving Portland Mr. Rodgers made his next stop at San Francisco, arriving there December 19. Owing to a lack of harmony among exhibitors in that city, Mr. Rodgers did not accomplish as much as he had expected in the strengthening of the League. Oakland was next visited and a strong league organization was formed, with headquarters there, in which Berkeley and Alameda are also represented. Sixty-five theaters were represented at the meeting and every exhibitor joined the organization. During the proceedings, a charter for Northern California was requested. The music tax question was rife at the time and every member contributed money to fight it, with the result that it was defeated.

At this point Mr. Rodgers interpolated that Turner & Dahnken, owners of the largest chain of theaters in California, had already made checks out, amounting to $375, which they were about to mail to meet the music tax. On Mr. Rodgers' advice, however, they decided at the last moment not to do so, thereby saving that amount of money.

Los Angeles was the next stopping point, Mr. Rodgers arriving there January 9. While there he visited practically every theater in the city, numbering about 400 in all. A successful meeting of exhibitors was held during his stay, at which seventy were present, representing about 200 theaters. A committee was appointed to decide whether or not a charter should be secured from the M. P. E. L. of A. A decision was not arrived at immediately, but on February 22 a letter was written by Glenn Harper, a prominent theater owner and secretary of the Theater Owners' Association, Inc., to Mr. Rodgers (which was received by Mr. Rodgers on his arrival in Chicago), to the effect that the Los Angeles exhibitors had accepted the charter to become affiliated with the League.

Mr. Rodgers then journeyed to El Paso, where he remained three days, in organization work there. A unanimous vote was passed that the El Paso organization should join the state league.

The next stop was San Antonio, where Mr. Rodgers remained until he received a wire from President Ochs, in New York, to come on to Chicago to attend a meeting that will be held here Thursday, March 14.

While in San Antonio, Mr. Rodgers was visited by a delegation of exhibitors from Dallas, who came on to consult him on matters pertaining to state organization.

On his way to Chicago, stops were made at Houston and St. Louis, in the interests of the League.

On being asked about the condition of business on the Pacific Coast generally, Mr. Rodgers said that in the state of Washington business was very favorable, although Seattle was not doing the business it enjoyed before the war. This decline is attributed to the loss of many men in the city by reason of the army draft. In Portland Mr. Rodgers stated that business was very good, much better than in Seattle, and this he believed was due to the fact that this city was not so keenly affected by conscription. Mr. Rodgers especially mentioned the Liberty theater, Portland, because of its excellent management and its popular manner of doing business. He praises Manager Merrick highly for the courtesy extended by him to patrons and for the polite manner in which the ushers, dressed in Colonial costume, looked after the wants of the patrons.

Mr. Rodgers, in reply to a question, said that big feature films seemed to have the largest demand on the Pacific Coast.

Admissions have been raised all along the coast, as a rule, and only a few five-cent houses can be found in that territory, and they are in Los Angeles. The general raise in admissions has been from 10 to 15 and 20 cents. In San Antonia prices have been raised as high as 25 and 30 cents, this being due to the large attendance from the training camps for soldiers and aviators in the adjoining district. Indeed, prices of nearly all the necessaries of life have been exorbitantly raised in San Antonio and have caused great dissatisfaction among soldiers and visitors.

Picture Theater Conditions in New Orleans.

T. O. Tuttle, manager of the New Orleans branch of the George Kleine System, spent several days in the city during the week of Monday, March 4. Mr. Tuttle has had long experience in exchange business, having been with the General Film Company for several years and with the George Kleine System of exchanges since 1913. He has been stationed in New Orleans since September, 1916.

During a conversation with Mr. Tuttle I learned that there were 120 theaters in the Crescent City when he arrived there and that at the present time the number has been reduced to 70. As in other cities, however, Chicago included, while the number of theaters has diminished, the seating capacity has either remained the same or has been increased. Mr. Tuttle states that the seating capacity of the 70 moving picture theaters in New Orleans today is just about the same as the capacity of the original 120.

The houses which have disappeared were located chiefly in the suburbs, and they have been replaced by modern houses of larger seating capacity. The best types of picture theaters in New Orleans at present are located in the heart of the business district—on Baronne and Canal and St. Charles streets.

Among the finest and most modern houses are the Strand, seating 1,750; the Liberty, now in course of construction and to be finished some time in April; the Globe, seating 750; the Tudor, seating 900, and the Trianon, seating 750. The Sanger Amusement Company owns the Strand and Globe, the Boehringer Amusement Company owns the Liberty, while Josiah Pearce & Sons are owners of the Tudor and Trianon.

The admission prices for the large houses run from 10 to 20 cents, with the war tax added. The programs in such houses, as a rule, include a feature, a weekly, a comedy (two reels), and frequently an educational—an average of nine reels. This seems an altogether extravagant program for the money. In addition to the lengthy and high-class program offered by the Strand for the price mentioned there is a 20-piece orchestra, a large pipe organ and a soloist. This is certainly offering too much by far for the money.

The smaller city houses in the business district, seating from 250 to 450 people, charge 10 cents for a program of eight reels. On this program there is a second or a third run feature, a comedy and a weekly. Here again too much is offered for the money.

The suburban theaters, which seat from 450 to 750 people, offer programs of from seven to ten reels for 10 cents, including the war tax, and several of these outlying theaters offer vaudeville in addition to the seven or ten reels at 5 and 10 cents. This is extravagance with a vengeance.

Is it any wonder that moving pictures are held cheap in such communities?

Mr. Tuttle informed me that Perfection pictures are in good demand throughout his territory and that they are exhibited in twenty theaters in New Orleans. He also stated that 30 per cent of all theaters in Mississippi, Alabama and Louisiana—the territory covered by his office—book pictures of that brand.

Liberty Theater, New Orleans, Will Open in April.

Mr. Boehringer, vice-president and general manager of the Boehringer Amusement Company, of New Orleans, and Mr. Grandjean, manager of publicity for that company, came into the city Thursday, March 7, and accompanied by T. O. Tuttle, manager of the New Orleans branch of the George Kleine System, made a pleasant call at this office.

Mr. Boehringer came on specially to meet George Kleine in connection with features of the Perfection make which will be booked at the new Liberty theater, to be opened some time in April. This structure, when completed, will represent an outlay of $150,000, excluding the value of the site, which is placed at $100,000. Mr. Boehringer has devoted much thought and considerable time to the planning of this house, which he has endeavored to make the last word in perfect moving picture theater construction.

The house practically has been built around the operating room. This room is 47 feet wide, and is located midway between the lower floor and the balcony, in the center of the house. It is 85 feet from the screen and perfect projection has been secured for every spectator, no matter in what part of the house he is seated. Two Power's 6B machines and one Power's dissolving stereopticon will be installed. The projection machines are fitted with automatic arc controls and motors. A Minusa screen, 16 by 21 feet, is used.

The seats have been made by the American Seating Company, of Chicago, from designs furnished by Mr. Boehringer, and are large and comfortable. The ventilation system, which has been described as perfect, has been installed by the Typhoon Company. The interior decorations are most elaborate, having been done by Giuseppe Rossi, who had charge of the interior decoration of the Knickerbocker Hotel, New York, and of other famous buildings there.

Mr. Boehringer has devoted careful attention to the providing of music for the accompaniment of his picture programs. A regular fourteen-piece orchestra has been engaged to accompany the feature picture and a special jazz orchestra of five pieces has been secured to play the accompaniment to the short slap-stick comedies.

Continuous presentations will be given at the Liberty. Features of the Perfection, Pathe and Paralta brands will be booked, and spot bookings on open time will be made for the remainder of the programs. Two changes weekly will be made.

The seating capacity of the Liberty is 1,750, with 1,150 chairs on the ground floor and 600 in the balcony.

Chicago Local Will Move Headquarters Next Month.

The regular monthly meeting of Chicago Local, M. P. E. L. of A., was held at headquarters, Masonic Temple, Friday, March 1. The new officers of the local were installed, and a censorship committee was appointed by President Joseph Hopp. On this committee are Sam Atkinson, chairman; Ludwig Schindler, Rocco Nazigato, Mrs. M. McFadden and I. Berkson. This committee will look after the interests of the league in all matters relating to the censorship of moving pictures.

It was decided upon at the meeting that the headquarters of Chicago Local shall be removed from the Masonic Temple to the twelfth floor of the Century building, southwest corner of Adams and State streets. The removal will take place some time near the close of April, when the lease of the present quartrs expires.

A pleasant surprise was then given President Hopp, who was presented with a solid silver chocolate set, of four pieces, in recognition of the high esteem in which he is held by the members of Chicago Local.

David G. Rodgers, national organizer of the M. P. E. L. of A., who had just come in from San Antonio, was present at the meeting.

Joseph Hopp Candidate for Chicago Alderman.

At the recent primaries held in Chicago Tuesday, February 26, Joseph Hopp was elected over his opponent by a majority of 300 votes for alderman of the twenty-fifth ward, this city, on the democratic ticket. This honor came to Mr. Hopp wholly unsolicited, and he is held in such high favor in his home district that it is believed he will have a good chance at the coming election to defeat his republican competitor in the same ward.

It would be a signal mark of honor to have an exhibitor elected to a seat in the City council, not to speak of the timely influence that might be exerted in the interests of the film business in the city when the occasion calls for it.

If Chicago exhibitors in the twenty-fifth ward will only put their shoulders to the wheel in bringing Mr. Hopp prominently before the voters, there is a good chance of his winning. Arrangements should be made right away for an intelligent, clean campaign by the entire membership of Chicago Local.

Chicago Film Brevities.

Giles P. Cory, head of Giles P. Cory & Company, the fiscal agents for the Birth of a Race Photoplay Corporation, was fined $1,000 one day last week for selling the stock of that company without having secured a state license. Cory's attorney pleaded for a reduction of the fine to $100, but the presiding judge ruled that the higher figure must be paid. The case of F. W. Sherwood, alias F W. Snook, another broker held for selling the stock without a license, was to be heard Saturday, March 9.

The members of Chicago Local 110, I. A. T. S. E., moved their headquarters last week from 219 South Dearborn street to the Gately building, 59 East Adams street, where the entire seventh floor is occupied by their offices and club rooms. Visiting members of the International Alliance are cordially extended the privileges of the clubrooms.

"Lest We Forget," Metro's feature exposing Germany's barbarism in sinking the Lusitania, will be shown at the Ziegfeld during the week of Sunday, March 10. Rita Jolivet, who was one of the passengers saved from the vessel, appears in the leading role. Miss Jolivet arrived in the city Friday, March 8, and will deliver patriotic speeches for several days.

Harry Birch, formerly cameraman of the Mutual Weekly and who is now filling the same position with the Gaumont Weekly in Chicago territory, has received many congratulations from a wide circle of friends on the recent addition to his family of an eight-pound healthy boy. Mrs. Birch and the baby are both doing well.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of March 10 at New York's Principal Motion Picture Houses.

THE RIALTO.—"Ruggles of Red Gap," with Taylor Holmes as the hero of Harry Leon Wilson's story, was the picture feature at the Rialto for the week of March 10. Lawrence D'Orsay and Frederick Burton are in this amusing picture. The Animated Magazine, the third installment of Yellowstone Park pictures, and Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew in a new comedp were also shown. The vocalists were Carlos Mejia and the Rialto Chorus.

THE RIVOLI.—Douglas Fairbanks in "Headin' South," an Artcraft production, led the bill at the Rivoli. The picture is a typical Fairbanks feature. Frank Campeau and Katherine MacDonald are in the cast. Scenes in the Hawaiian Islands, a new comedy and the Animated Pictorial were included in picture program. Helena Morrill, Miguel Vidal and the Rivoli Chorus furnished the vocal numbers. Yussu Katayama performed a Japanese dance.

THE STRAND.—Mary Pickford in "Amarilly of Clothesline Alley" was the magnet at the Strand, and presented the biggest laughing hit of her career. As the little scrub girl who is introduced to swell society she does a droll character bit. "Depths of the Sea," "Strange Fisherman of Russia," a new comedy and the Strand Topical Review were also on the bill. Rose Lind and Edith Alvord were the soloists.

EIGHTY-FIRST STREET THEATER.—Enid Bennett in "The Keyes of the Righteous" and an installment of "The Eagle's Eye," the first half of the week; Madge Kennedy in "Our Little Wife" and the first installment of "The Son of Democracy" the latter half.

LYRIC.—"Woman and the Law," a William Fox picture, produced by R. A. Walsh, is making a hit at the Lyric.

KNICKERBOCKER—"My Four Years in Germany" began its New York engagement Sunday night.

News of Los Angeles and Vicinity

By G. P. HARLEMAN

Propose Zones for Motion Picture Studios.

MOVING picture studios now in operation within the city limits will not be disturbed by legislative action of the council if that body approves a report filed by the joint committee appointed by the Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association, the Realty Board, Hollywood Board of Trade and the Chamber of Commerce. The committee advises that an ordinance be enacted creating five general zones within which all moving picture plants hereafter built shall be located and the creation of minor zones for each of the plants now in operation outside of the proposed main zones.

In its report the committee stated that its suggestions had been approved by the Los Angeles school board, various local improvement associations and the Motion Picture Producers' Association, all of which organizations were consulted by the committee.

The committee recommended that additional police regulations be made and that the studios be supplied with places inside the lot or building for the use of applicants for work, thereby preventing crowds from gathering to the annoyance of persons in the neighborhood; that any work involving the use of explosives or that creates unusual noise should be prohibited during certain hours of the night also is recommended.

The committee stated that the proposed ordinance will meet with the hearty approval of everybody concerned and will work no hardships upon anyone.

George Beban to Build Studio.

As has been announced in this department George Beban, the well known character actor lately with the Lasky company, has started a film concern of his own. Mr. Beban is going to build a studio of his own, located either in Culver City or in the West Adams district. A local architect is working on the specifications, and while this studio is not going to be one of the largest in Los Angeles it is intended to be exceptionally well equipped. Until the new studio can be constructed Mr. Beban and his company will produce pictures at the Paralta studios on Melrose avenue.

George Beban.

George Stout, for many years manager of the Keystone Film Company, is the general manager of the Beban organization. The entire cast of players has not been selected. Sarah Kearnan, well known character woman, has been signed, as has also Bob White, whose last camera appearance was in the feature production "Lost in Transit." Little Bob, by the way, is the young son of Mr. Beban. Other players engaged are Del Clawson, cameraman; Arthur Ford, assistant director, and W. H. Carr, master of properties. Monte M. Katterjohn will write Mr. Beban's first story.

Pays $7,500 for Album of Film Stars.

An appeal to patriotism brought a bid of $7,500 for a photograph album filled with pictures of film stars. The bid was made by Mrs. William A. Clark, Jr., and the auction was held at the conclusion of the brilliant midnight frolic of the Show of Wonders of the New York Winter Garden given by Los Angeles society leaders as a Red Cross benefit at the Hotel Alexandria.

The book, which is dated February 13, 1915, is a souvenir of a gala ball of the Photoplayers and was auctioned off once before for a thousand dollars.

Al Christie Talks at San Bernardino.

As guests of the officials of the San Bernardino Annual Orange Show, Al Christie, with Eleanor Field, Bobby Vernon and other members of the Christie Comedies Company, went to San Bernardino, where they filmed scenes for "By Orange Aid."

Good atmosphere and unique settings were obtained in and around the concessions of the show and in one of California's largest packing houses of the citrus belt. Lights were shipped from the Hollywood studios of the company and used for interior work, the filming of the scenes causing much interest among the audiences of the show. Later a banquet was given the visitors by the officials of the city, where Al Christie told of the growth of the business and of some of his experiences in his seven years of directorship.

Ora Carew Engaged By Diando.

Ora Carew, who has been starring in Keystone and Mack Sennett comedies, will desert the realm of comedy for the more serious drama. Ora has just been engaged by the Diando Film Company to appear in the new fifteen episode serial which will be released by the Pathe Company.

Griffith's Big One Is "Hearts of the World."

D. W. Griffith is going to first reveal the results of what will probably be his greatest screen effort to the people of Los Angeles. His new war drama on which he has been working for nearly a year is to be shown at Clune's Auditorium in the near future. The name of the production is "Hearts of the World."

Louis J. Gastnier Arrives on the Coast.

With the arrival here of Louis J. Gasnier, president of Astra Films, Los Angeles welcomes still another phase of cinema production. His first star, Fanny Ward, returned to Los Angeles a few days since, and others from the Pathe ranks will be assembled under his banner. It is the present plan to keep six companies here, and Norman Manning has been engaged as assistant to the producer.

Niblo—Bennett.

Fred Niblo, well known as a dramatic actor, and Miss Enid Bennett, Thomas H. Ince star, were married recently in Christ Church and left on a honeymoon trip of several weeks. They will visit New York and other eastern cities before returning. Among those present at the marriage ceremony were Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. Ince, John Lynch, C. Gardner Sullivan and the bride's mother and sister.

Harvey Thew Goes to Fox.

Harvey F. Thew has joined the forces of the Fox Film Corporation and will be connected with its scenario department at the Hollywood studio.

Charley Kessel Is In Los Angeles.

Charles Kessel, of the Triangle head offices, and one of the best known motion picture men in the business, is in the city, making his headquarters at the Alexandria.

"I'm in the West," said Mr. Kessel, "to look over Triangle affairs, and I find them in very good condition. They're making good pictures at the Triangle Culver City studios, and they are making them without any waste."

Browne Told to Get Ready.

John Barton Browne, assistant director at the Lasky studio, has received information that he may be called to France again shortly. Mr. Browne received an appointment from the War Department last September and has been awaiting orders ever since. He will be connected with the ambulance service of Base Hospital No. 35. This will be his second term of service in France, as he went in the American ambulance hospital corps to the French front on the opening of the war.

King W. Vidor Directing Judge Brown Films.

"Bud's Recruit," one of the early Judge Willis Brown juvenile films, released by the General Film Company, is making a hit over the country. The picture returned to the Stanley theater in Philadelphia for the second time, to run a full week. Extra prints of this subject have been made to cope with the demand. Besides an interesting story Director King W. Vidor, who produces all the Judge Brown stories, added a patriotic punch to this picture that has a national appeal.

King W. Vidor.

There is an abundance of laughs and pathos crowded into this two-reel subject, that make it a very desirable attraction. Other Judge Brown features released or in the making which Mr. Vidor has directed are "Chocolate of the Gang," "The Lost Lie," "Tad's Swimming Hole," "The Preacher's Son," and "The Accusing Toe."

Ad Club Entertains Miss Pickford.

Mary Pickford was the guest of honor at the weekly luncheon given at the Hotel Clark by the Ad Club, of Los Angeles, this week. Miss Pickford drew an ovation from her friends the advertising writers.

Brabin Resigns From Metro.

Charles Brabin has resigned as Metro director. Mr. Brabin directed that corporation's stars in the East before coming to California. He was for a number of years one of the principal directors of the Edison and Essanay Companies.

Gunn in Barriscale Company.

Charles Gunn, the former Triangle actor, has been engaged as leading man by the Bessie Barriscale Company. Prior to his screen work Mr. Gunn was in the Alcazar Stock Company in San Francisco, where Bessie Barriscale, Howard Hickman, Louis Bennison, Bert Lytell and other well knowns then held forth. Since the Alcazar days, Gunn has appeared in stock plays in nearly every leading city of the United States.

It Is Chaplin Studios, Inc.

In accordance with plans which he had had in mind for some time, Charles Chaplin this week incorporated under the name of Chaplin Studios, Inc., the members of the new organization being, besides Charles Chaplin, his brother Sydney Chaplin and Thomas Herrington. The capital stock is $200,000, with $300 subscribed.

The incorporation will in no way affect Chaplin's contract with the First National, according to both parties, but was done merely as a matter of business convenience, especially as Sid Chaplin will himself go into the production end of the business, making comedies with himself in the leading role. It is also possible that other features may be made at the Chaplin studios.

In regard to extra production at the Chaplin studio, Syd Chaplin, who is Charlie's manager, stated that it was possible, if a good dramatic story were offered to the new corporation, Mr. Chaplin might act as its producer, though there was nothing definite at present in the matter.

Russell Directing Ethel Ritchie.

Albert Russell is directing Ethel Ritchie, Balboa star, in a new series of twelve two-reel pictures, comprising for the greater part Western drama. Jack Jevne is the author of the first of the series. Tom Morgan is assistant director and H. M. Van Depole cameraman. The leading man is R. Henry Grey, and the supporting cast includes Daniel Gilfether, Eddie Peters and others.

Jackie Saunders Is Home.

Jackie Saunders, the Balboa star, arrived in Long Beach recently from New York after an absence from the Balboa studio of over two months. Miss Saunders was accompanied on her transcontinental trip by her brother, Eddie.

An Important Foreign Deal

Max Glucksmann Takes the Bulk of Triangle Productions for 1916 and 1917 and All Forthcoming Releases for 1918 and 1919.

MAX GLUCKSMANN, of Buenos Aires, through his New York representative, Mr. Jacobo Glucksmann, has just signed a contract with the Triangle Film Corporation, which is said to be one of the most important foreign deals recorded during the present year. It includes about 175 features, 100 two-reel Sennett comedies and 100 Triangle comedies, all of which have already been released in this country, and also covers all the forthcoming releases of the same company for 1918 and 1919. As it may be readily estimated, the contract runs well into six figures, and a new high mark was reached for South America by the initial payment.

When interviewed by a representative of the Moving Picture World just a few hours after the transaction was officially closed, Mr. Jacobo Glucksmann insisted on passing all the credit for the successful consummation of the deal to H. Winik, of the Western Import Company.

Max Glucksmann.

"Mr. Winik is to be congratulated," said Mr. Glucksmann, "for his part in the negotiations. From a casual conversation he developed the idea of our taking hold of the entire Triangle output, and I must say that some of the difficulties in matters of detail, which as a rule are the hardest to overcome, needed no discussion in this case. I have been watching the entire motion picture field very closely during the past few years and I was well aware of the enviable reputation enjoyed by the Triangle Company, as repeatedly testified by exhibitors everywhere, and the high quality of its releases and the excellent cooperation and service given export buyers by the organization facilitated the closing of this far reaching deal in an extremely short time. In South America there is a strong and growing demand for high grade subjects, and through these Triangle releases the chain of Glucksmann exchanges will have the opportunity of developing and gratifying the local taste for American productions."

Max Glucksmann's business was established in the Argentine Republic in 1890 and since that time it has steadily expanded both in the number of lines of goods handled and the territory covered. It is today one of the weighty factors in South American trade. Before the war Max Glucksmann was considered in European markets among the best foreign customers. With the establishment last May of the New York buying office, this concern has greatly increased its relations with American motion picture producers and it has adhered to the policy of taking their entire program of productions for his territory. At the present time Max Glucksmann owns and operates several of the largest theaters and stands in the front rank as a film renter in the republics of Argentina, Chile, Uruguay, Paraguay, Peru and Bolivia. Besides presenting select European productions, he has contracts with the following American firms: Triangle, Essanay, Pathe, Balboa, American, Thanhouser, Mutual-Chaplin, Selznick and U. S. Amusement Corporation.

Capital Film Incorporates in Indiana

Concern Will Operate Exchanges Throughout the Country and Build a Studio.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., expects soon to have a great manufacturing and distributing moving picture plant. The Capital Film company, a newly organized concern, was incorporated at Indianapolis February 27, under the laws of Indiana, with a capital stock of $2,500,000. The company is backed by a number of bankers and financiers throughout the state.

The officers of the new company are W. H. Miller, of Flora, Ind., president; L. E. Barnes, of Crownpoint, vice president; C. J. Daugherty, of Crownpoint, secretary, and Edward A. Spray, of Frankfort, Ind., treasurer. The directors in addition to the officers, include O. W. Moore and Ben Ringold, of Indianapolis, and Samuel Werner, of St. Louis. George V. Moss, of Frankfort, is named as general counsel for the company.

According to Mr. Spray, the stock in the company, which has been subscribed and paid for, is held by a group of Indiana bankers, with one or two exceptions. He says the company's principal assets are a quantity of negatives.

Officials of the company announced that offices will be opened soon in the Merchants Bank building in Indianapolis and that distribution operations will be begun soon. The company plans to have its headquarters in Indianapolis, with branch offices in Boston, Buffalo, New York, Cleveland, Detroit, Omaha, Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City, Minneapolis, Denver, Spokane, Seattle, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Dallas, New Orleans, Atlanta, Pittsburgh, Washington and Philadelphia.

"As soon as we get our offices established we will begin at once to look for a suitable location for our studios and manufacturing plants," said Mr. Spray. "It is our intention to release a regular program of twenty-one pictures a week through our offices, which, including sub-exchanges, will number close to fifty-four. If our plans do not miscarry we will be filming our own pictures and manufacturing the negatives here in Indianapolis by June 1."

The incorporators of the new concern are O. W. Moore, formerly branch manager of the Uniform Film Service Company in Indianapolis; Edward A. Spray, a banker of Frankfort; William H. Miller, a grain dealer of Flora; Lewis R. Barnes, sheriff, and Charles J. Daugherty, banker, of Crownpoint; Sam Werner, one-time tobacco dealer in St. Louis; and Markwood Slipher, president of the Crescent-News and interested in banking ventures in Frankfort.

Lorimore Creates Executive Staff

Famous Players-Lasky Australian Manager Names Four Men to Assist Him in Island Continent.

THE increasing business of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in Australia has led Alex Lorimore, managing director of that branch, to appoint four executive directors to assist in the general conduct of the organization. The men, who have all been selected for work they have accomplished in the past, are F. W. Wynne-Jones, C. H. Gilbert, William R. Hoggan and D. Lotherington.

This strengthens considerably the position of Paramount and Artcraft pictures in Australia, inasmuch as the whole of the business and its general management are not dependent on one man. The new arrangement relieves Mr. Lorimore of a great deal of the detail work and permits him to devote more of his personal time to important affairs as well as to build up the branch offices to keep pace with the requirements of the expanding business. The main office is located in Sydney, with the principal branches at Perth and Melbourne.

Mr. Lorimore is revising the personnel of the entire organization by promotions, eliminations and additions. Paramount and Artcraft pictures are exploited in Australia the same as in America, on the basis of stars in the productions.

MORE TERRITORY FOR NEW YORK'S SELECT.

A readjustment has been made of the territory served by Select's Boston and New York Exchanges. Under the new arrangement the western Connecticut territory, embracing the district lying west of the Connecticut River, will be served from the New York Exchange.

In taking over the new district Branch Manager Henry Siegel made such arrangements that there will be no interruption whatever in service to the exhibitors effected.

Sunday Case Goes Over to March 20

Gustavus A. Rogers Appears in Court of Appeals for Victor Bergstrom, Convicted of Sabbath Violation.

Albany, March 4.

ARGUMENT of the Bergstrom Sunday moving picture case originating in Schenectady was today put over until March 20. The case was on the Court of Appeals calendar for today. When the case was called, Attorney Gustavus A. Rogers and a representative of John B. Stanchfield's office appeared before the court and requested that the argument go over for three weeks. The court refused the application, but consented to hear the arguments in two weeks, the usual period granted to attorneys for the preparation of briefs and arguments.

The point for decision in the Court of Appeals is whether Sunday moving picture shows come within the classification of theatrical performances, which are prohibited by the Sunday laws. Legislation is soon to be introduced in the Legislature, it is understood, permitting Sunday moving picture shows, and drawing a dividing line between theatrical performances and moving picture shows on Sunday.

Attorney Rogers Saturday filed with the Court of Appeals the substitution of himself for Kohn & Levy, of Schenectady, as attorneys for Victor Bergstrom, the appellant from a conviction of violating the Sunday laws in permitting a moving picture show in Schenectady on Sunday. Mr. Rogers represents big moving picture interests who are vitally concerned in the case.

The Bergstrom conviction was upheld in the appellate division, which held, as it did in the Bender case, that moving pictures are theatrical exhibitions and therefore within the prohibition of the Sunday laws. The appellate division, second department, in the Henleb case, ruled that Sunday moving pictures are not a violation of the law, in direct opposition to the ruling of the third department. The Court of Appeals has never decided the question which will be presented in the Bergstrom appeal.

The final decision is vital to the motion picture interests of the state, as on the ruling of the court will hinge whether Sunday movies are to be permitted in the state or whether they must be closed all over the state.

Clare Making "Go" of Hippodrome

Former Actor Takes Over Dallas Theater and Proves Rothapfel's "Bill Your House" the Right Dope.

THE great Fox spectacle, "Cleopatra," started a week's run at the Hippodrome theater, Dallas, on March 5, and thereby hangs a tale. Arthur Clare—Englishman, "legit" actor in the old days, and "movie" actor more recently—has bought the Hippodrome. So such big things as "Cleopatra" are coming direct to Texas for initial runs.

Mr. Clare has ideas. He believes, for one thing, that Rothapfel knows what he's talking about, and he is using newspapers for local advertising and "Hippodrome" is writ even larger than the title of the picture. Also when a patron goes into the Hippodrome lobby he's struck with Hippodrome individuality.

"Bill your house rather than your picture," said Rothapfel. It has been proved in Dallas. Others failed where Clare has succeeded. They said the theater was out of the general run of the crowds, but the crowds have been made to change their runs. Sticking to his idea was what won out, and incidentally "The Crisis" almost proved a crisis indeed some weeks ago. Playing that picture the beginning of the end was almost in sight, but a big feature on the following day—a Sunday—pulled the tide of things over, and it has been smooth sailing ever since.

TILL TO MANAGE SELECT IN NEW ORLEANS.

Select Pictures Corporation has appointed H. G. Till manager of its newly established New Orleans branch, to take effect immediately. Mr. Till, who is one of the youngest managers in the business, has also had an unusual rise. As late as 1910, Gifford Till, as his friends call him, was still a college undergraduate in Louisville, where he was born. He was successively in real estate, railroad engineering and the oil business.

It was only in 1917 that Till first entered the ranks of the motion picture industry. As a salesman attached to the staff of C. C. Ezell, manager of Select's Dallas Exchange, he had remarkable successes on the road. This led to his promotion in the Dallas branch, and finally to his selection for the important position of Branch Manager in New Orleans.

How It Is Done at the Strand

A Discussion of Methods Which Have Actually Been Worked Out Successfully.

By Harold Edel, Managing Director.

"JUST how do you know if your show actually pleases the public?" was a question put to me recently. The box-office receipts at the end of the week is the final answer, perhaps, but it is up to every manager to know soon after his show has been given a fair trial, say on the second day, just how much it pleases his patrons and what offerings do not meet with favor. In vaudeville, an act is often removed from the bill after the opening day because of its inferiority, even though its salary is paid for the full week. More often, an act is placed on another spot in the bill, where it will appear to better advantage. Little changes are made here and there in presentation, etc.

This same idea should be followed out by the exhibitor. If a film is so unpopular with an audience that it hurts the entire show, it is best to drop the picture entirely from the bill and offer a substitute, in the event of its being so large that its absence in time would be missed. Very often a manager may be wrong in his judgment in a film or the presentation thereof. In some cases, a few small changes in its mode of screening may change its entire aspect on the bill. Then again, ideas in lighting and presentation which a manager may have decided were entirely novel, might be lost or prove unpopular with an audience.

Just how to find out—and find out early—when a change should be made. We must please our audiences no matter what our own ideas on a given matter may be. It therefore resolves itself on finding out as to when is the audience pleased and what displeases it. At the Strand Theatre every Monday morning, I call together the house manager, the ushers, the orchestra leader and the projecting chief. A minute discussion of the entire show is entered into. There are frequently arguments pro and con and many good ideas are advanced and very often acted upon. All discussion, however, is based upon the reports of each usher on what remarks he has overheard from the patrons.

Strand ushers are instructed to keep their ears open as well as their eyes. There is plenty of idle time for them during the running of a show, even in a crowded house, when they have little else to do but to listen to those around them. Ushers are more directly in touch with the thoughts of the audience than anyone else. It does not take them long, after the opening of a show, to find out what pleases and what displeases the audience. They form the best channel to the patron's pulse the manager has. No manager has time to sit in his theater all day listening to the verdict of his patrons. Nor can he be all over the house to get a common consensus from the roof to the front row of the orchestra.

I will frankly say that quite often we find on Monday morning that something which we thought would prove exceptional had proved far from being a sensation. We all make mistakes, that's why rubbers are found on the ends of pencils. However, it does not take us long to make corrections. Hardly a Monday passes but that changes of some nature are made in the opening bill of Sunday. Sometimes it is merely a matter of lighting, a change in the weekly, a rearrangement of a short reel or a shortening of a musical number. It is for this reason that I write these articles the latter part of the week, thus giving ideas that have have stood the test and met with the audiences' approval.

Many exhibitors, perhaps, do not realize the importance of a close unity between manager and employees. The manager should be friendly with the usher under his supervision, though this does not mean that he should permit discourtesy. He should make the usher feel an interest in his work and the theater and should hear and encourage all suggestions and ideas from every member of his organization. The Czar-like "boss" gains nothing through his attitude. If anything, his employees are afraid to talk any more than they have to and hence they merely speak in "yes sirs" and "no sirs." A manager can be dignified yet friendly and through this attitude he can get the most out of his associates. The show of a theater should reflect not only the best ideas of the manager but the very best thoughts of everyone connected with the theater. Close co-operation and intimacy will serve to bring out many valuable ideas and views that mean dollars and cents to the progressive manager.

Women Managers Make Good in Texas

In Gainesville Two Houses Are in Competent Feminine Hands—They're Succeeding in Other Towns, Too.

WOMEN as moving picture theater managers have made good in Texas. It would take the fingers on perhaps more than two hands to enumerate them, and in the telling there would be an interesting story. The thought comes as the result of the visit to Dallas distributing managers recently of a number of these business women, whose brains work like men's brains and whose business acumen is above adverse criticism. Up at Gainesville there's a friendly rivalry between two women managers—Mrs. C. C. Braggins and Mrs. J. W. Cassidy. Each conducts a model theater and each gets her full share of patronage.

Mrs. R. T. Hooks, of the Star theater at Mineola, Texas, has converted a former "lemon" into a big paying proposition. All she wants now is a woodyard, she says. Farmers have sold their cotton, and with the fuel scarcity they want to trade firewood for moving picture tickets—not that they aren't mighty good cash patrons, spending readily the proceeds from the cotton sales.

Some months ago Mrs. J. W. Forester and her husband, returning from their Kozy theater at Healdton, Oklahoma, with the day's receipts, were attacked by a highwayman. Mr. Forester was shot and killed. Since then Mrs. Forester has successfully conducted the theater and is still doing so.

Because Mrs. J. W. Saunders has sold the Queen theater, Crockett, Texas, film salesmen don't want to make that town any more. Mrs. Saunders is to be married again—a lieutenant in the aviation service is the fortunate man.

Mrs. W. F. Burney has opened a theater at Sour Lake, Texas, after conducting very successfully for some months the Palace at Galveston.

Miss Johnson of the Liberty at Houston is one of the best known and most popular theater "men" in Texas.

And there are others—these are just a few, which go far to prove the suffrage contention that a woman can accomplish a man's work.

PRISONERS PRAISE O. HENRY PICTURES.

Among the many ardent admirers of the picturized O. Henry stories distributed by General Film Company are the inmates of Sing Sing prison. These photoplays are shown as a regular part of the weekly screen show under the auspices of the Mutual Welfare League, of which Philip J. Smith is chairman. No pictures shown in many a month have made a greater impression upon the inmates than the Broadway Star Feature series, according to Chairman Smith, who writes:

"Our impression of these stories is but a poor attempt to show our appreciation in part for the privilege and pleasure of screening them. No other photoplays portray pathos so true to life as your version of O. Henry's masterpiece, an author who never camouflaged his characters."

ROSE—SIEGEL.

Miss Belle Siegel, production secretary of the Rivoli-Rialto executive staff, and Joseph La Rose, production manager, are enjoying two weeks' honeymoon in parts unknown. They slipped away after a quiet wedding, which came as the climax to a romance that had flourished during the past two years while they worked side by side. Miss Siegel was private secretary to Mr. Rothapfel up to the time when the operating of two theaters made it necessary for her to specialize on the production end of the work. Mr. La Rose has been stage manager and film expert for the Rialto since it opened and holds the same position at the Rivoli. Both Mr. and Mrs. La Rose will remain as members of the executive staff.

WEISFELDT RETURNS TO CHICAGO.

General Manager M. J. Weisfeldt, of the Wholesome Films Corporation, is back at the Chicago office after a flying trip east. Enroute he visited Marion, Ohio, where the Wholesome production of "Little Red Riding Hood" at the Marion Theater, February 22, played to record crowds.

Little Mary Burton, the star in "Little Red Riding Hood," was a guest of the Marion theater, Washington's Birthday, appearing personally before the performance to the delight of the huge crowd.

Mr. Weisfeldt announces the appointment of Miss Kate M. Lacey, of Columbus, Ohio, as representative for Wholesome in that territory.

Spokes from the Hub

By Marion Howard

TEN days in New York is a good tonic, provided one does not strike an incipient blizzard at an unexpected moment and cannot get to cover quickly enough to avoid a cold. Thus did my little visit get a setback and a call for home and old-time remedies. However, it was not so bad as you will see, so far as the picture game goes. My first Saturday after arriving was one to remember, beginning with a call at the Actors' Equity Association to greet an old friend, Frank Gillmore, who is acting secretary. His only appearance on the screen was with Ethel Barrymore, in "The Lifted Veil," but he has been on the stage many years, always with credit. There I ran across Howard Kyle, one of the officers, who told me that he was making some sort of a deal with W. A. Brady, whether stage or screen I did not find out, but whichever it is, Mr. Brady is to be congratulated on having his co-operative services.

From there I ran in to see Richard A. Rowland and was greeted by a young assistant in uniform. Then over to the Rialto to see "The Light Within," splendidly put on, with unusual music and a credit to Mme. Petrova and to Mrs. L. Case Russell for writing such a strong play. I liked especially the combination of the professional and the mother, and what a fine bit of work was the nursery scene with the lad, the dog and the patriotic bits—all human. As predicted, Mme. Petrova has at last found a place on my mind's map as one who can register real emotion. "That night," as they say on the titles, I saw a vastly different screen play at the Lyric in "Lest We Forget," an absolutely needless and harrowing picture, telling nothing the world at large does not know. It is not likely anyone will "forget" the Belgium invasion and the Lusitania horror. These are the days when the horrors of war ought not to be thrust upon us when we go out for entertainment and to get away from the printed pages telling of the struggle "over there." In "The Little American" we had the Lusitania affair done wonderfully well, and way ahead of this later presentation, but why "rub it in"? Rita Jolivet, of course, did well, but one woman near me exclaimed, "Gee, where did she get all those glad rags so soon after her escape from the Germans?"

Monday I went to the Rivoli to see "A Song of Songs," and the least said soonest mended. Of course Elsie Ferguson is good—she is built that way—but to give her such a part is an offense to her admirers. It was elaborately staged and followed the story well, but the spectacle of Elsie as gloriously drunk and living an open life with a bad lot of a man is not edifying. Some laughed a bit at the sudden entrance at the close of the two men with almost the same words on their lips. It was really ludicrous, again, can they tell us why the villain entered Elsie's bedroom by the window, when the vampire had piloted him up the stairs inside the house headed toward her door. No wonder this picture has been censored in some places. Then I called on the Goldwyn offices and was courteously welcomed by Dwight S. Perrin of the editorial department, who offered to pilot me over to Fort Lee to their studio. Then round to the Paramount offices to see John C. Flinn, the publicity director, and others worth while. Here I saw a run off of "The Blue Bird," and believe me, it is a great picture, following the Maeterlinck play most reverently as one expects from the master hand of Maurice Tourneur, whose French blood stands him in good stead in such a spectacle. I enjoyed every bit and shall indorse it everywhere for both adults and kiddies. There are some fine colored lights here and a wonderful presentation of figures in silhouette in a pretentious home of the rich seen through the window of the poor little Tyltyl and Mytel across the way. While it is not to be released until Easter it is good at any season of the year.

Various other calls were made that afternoon, one to the dainty offices of Clara Kimball Young, on 42d street, where her representative greeted me and expressed regret that Miss Young was at New Rochelle rehearsing in her forthcoming picture, "The Reason Why." I, however, caught a glimpse of her another day at the funeral of Vernon Castle, which was attended by many screen and stage players. At the Pathe and Petrova places I did not meet with any success and got no further than an office boy and a young telephone operator. F. Schaffer, at the General Film, and Mary Follett (both formerly of this city) were glad to see a Hub woman. The former generously gave me scores of pictures of their players to use in my scrap books sent to France to convalescent men.

Saw "His Royal Highness" at Loew's—good vehicle for Blackwell, but old story and not very enlightening, since it does not end right with an impostor on the throne. Lionel Belmore was excellent. So was Kate Lester, one of the grand dames of the screen. Had luncheon with Mr. and Mrs. William H. Foster at their spacious offices down town, where there is a large staff preparing and filling orders for pictures for the cantonments and elsewhere in many states here and in France. They have five offices in Paris and George Balsdon went across last week to arrange for the distribution in France, he having been released by the Vitagraph Company for the purpose. They are sending out 20,000 feet a day and maintain several offices in the country, and two here in the Hub. Looked in on the Triangle office and found a greeting from C. H. Bristol, who reported good business.

Two pleasant features of the trip were the unveiling of tablets, one at the Strand to the men of that theater at the front, and a fine thing to do for the living; the other the tablet at the Rivoli in honor of S. L. Rothapfel. It is the gift of the Famous Players-Lasky Company and a fitting tribute to one of the most versatile and cleanest-cut men in the game.

Best picture seen since returning from New York? "A Petticoat Pilot," given us by the Lasky players, and full of interest here in the Hub, as it is done around Cape Cod folks and is flawless in detail. Such a delicious pair of old sea captains as Theodore Roberts and James Neill we have not seen in any picture of late. Of course, Vivian Martin, that appealing little witch, gets the house strong everywhere, and it was easy to see how she "bossed" the old men and "ruled the roost." Many of us recognized the scenes the director tried to reproduce (presumably in New Jersey) and we owe a debt to Joseph Lincoln for this story so well adapted for the screen by Gardner Hunting. There wasn't a discernible out in it all, and I was glad to note the hand it got.

"Rimrock Jones" was seen the same day, and surely Wally Reid had some stunts to do, and it was "meller" to a degree. I, for one, prefer this actor in something apart from the wild and wooly.

Clara Kimball Young scores again in "The Marionettes," clever picture, wisely chosen for one of her temperament: then, too, we get a glimpse of her charming boudoir with its effete fittings, but why in Heaven's name did they not let Anita Loos' titles go without such awful figures surrounding them? Give us the straight words minus attempted adornments. Here we have the star "evoluting" from the frump to the butterfly as a result of a little preachment of the Punch and Judy players (wrongly called Marionettes), and it is evident that this was a plot on the part of those dear friends of "hubby" to show her how she could win his admiration as well as love. Alec B. Francis is unusually good here, and they gave Emile Chautard carte blanche evidently, as there was atmosphere to burn.

On the same bill at the Exeter I saw "Keys to the Righteous," with that compelling young star Enid Bennett. Well, this was a good picture clearly showing the supervision of Thomas H. Ince and the clever directorship of Jerome Storm. We somehow expect much from the pen of C. Gardner Sullivan. This picture is secure in its strength, and I congratulate the Paramount on being able to release it with such dependable players.

"Broken Ties" is a strong play in which Montagu Love stands out conspicuously. Not before have I noted any special stirring of the soul in his work, he being usually cast for other sorts of roles, but here in one scene he speaks volumes with his eyes, as he is made to realize that his mother may be involved in a murder which he is obliged to condemn as a criminal lawyer. It was a little bit of expression, lost maybe to all, but I will never forget it. June Elvidge, Arthur Ashley and Pinna Nesbit in the play—some cast! Splendid World offering.

Notes.—The Hub's new Mayor, Andrew J. Peters, bars "The Birth of a Nation" here. Well, we had it four months and about all fans saw it then, so who cares!

Motion Picture Educator

"Cauterets" (Pathe).

A PICTURESQUE group of scenes photographed in the Haute-Pyrenees, France, presented by Pathe in a half-reel scenic is entitled "Cauterets." The picture introduces the spectator to a little town on the border line between France and Spain, and includes scenes of great beauty from the surrounding basin. Views along a dashing mountain stream with numerous waterfalls are attractive. Ancient bridges and picturesque types of architecture are also a part of the subject. The film is nicely tinted in natural colors.

"The Thunderer of the Waters" (Reiben).

Niagara in its winter dress rushing its eternal way over the rocks of ages is beautifully presented in film by the Reiben Films Corporation. This film was exhibited at the Rivoli theater during the week of February 24 and is a revelation in the winter beauty of the great cataract. Closeups of the falls, the cliffs about hung with tremendous icicles formed from the spray of the rushing waters, and views of different parts of the river above and below the falls are attractively presented.

"Yellowstone National Park" (Rothacker).

The first instalment of a series of views of the Yellowstone National Park made by Rothacker of Chicago, and presented at the Rialto during the week of February 24 for the first time in any theater, were exhibited through the courtesy of the Northern Pacific Railway. These views have been photographed by the most careful of cameramen, judging from the fact that little if anything has been left out of the round of wonders which the Yellowstone presents. The picture opens with scenes on the Great Northern route as it skirts the Yellowstone river on its way to the park. The first stop for the spectator is Gardiner, the only northern entrance to the park. Then we are taken through the pass between Golden Gate and Dunsen mountain with its beautiful gorge, and finally after passing Silver Gate, Hoodoo Rocks, Mammoth Springs and Fort Yellowstone, we arrive at the Terraces. Hymen and Jupiter terrace, Mammoth terrace and Pulpit terrace and the beautiful Virginia Cascade and canyon are shown in the picture. Then come the geysers, Fountain geyser, Daisy geyser, Grotto geyser and a closeup of the bubbling punch bowl. The Paint Pots and Handkerchief Pool with remarkably clear closeups of each are among the best presented features. This series will be continued at the Rialto.

"Peru" (Kleine-Lincoln & Parker).

A comprehensive scenic number picturing the interesting country of Peru. The scenes include glimpses of its coast line, islands, harbors and cities. Callao and Lima are two of the latter which come in for special delineation. The attractive architecture and statuary of this progressive land makes an entertaining feature. The birds and animals of this section of South America are also shown. The subject is one of pleasing scope and shows careful planning and editing.

"Jackie's Clothes" (Pathe).

An instructive half-reel subject picturing the manufacture of uniforms for sailors and marines at Charleston Navy Yard. The work is done largely by girls, and is carried out on a wholesale plan. The entire process of cutting, stitching, finishing and packing for a shipment is demonstrated. An animated cartoon in which the Katzenjammer Kids perform accompanies this number.

"The Making of a Newspaper" (Universal).

The first instalment of an excellent series of pictures appearing in the Screen Magazine opens at the very root of the industry, showing the logs being taken to the mills to be ground into wood pulp, which is the basis of paper. Then we see the pulp plaques or mats being sent in to the factory on a moving belt, after which they are thrown into the heater and mixed with sulphite pulp. Blue coloring is added to make the paper white. The pulp is then put into tanks and passed through screens to eliminate water before entering the paper machines. Once in the paper machine it is first rolled out and then baked, after which it is thinned to the proper thickness, glossed, and then cut by rotating knives into desired widths. In part two will be shown how the business and editorial departments of a newspaper office are conducted.

"Scientific Fish Farming" (Chester).

A well-photographed and instructive picture showing how fish farming is carried on, the methods of caring for and hatching young fish and eventually the shipping of them for the purpose of stocking the streams of the country. It is interesting to note the method of making them ready for their journeys to various parts of the land. The fish are placed in receptacles which are partly filled with water. The water is charged with oxygen and ice is placed in each receptable. The result is that the fish arrive at their destination little if any the worse of the journey.

"Making an Aviator" (Universal).

In the 62nd issue of the Screen Magazine will be found a lucid illustration of the thorough manner in which the young recruit in the aviation corps is taught the manipulation and mechanical construction of his machine. The picture presents in detail what happens from the time the rookie arrives at camp and presents his pass to that splendid moment when he soars through the clouds in an imaginary search for Boches. We, too, can learn considerable about the aeroplane from the picture as we watch instructions being given in getting acquainted with the controls, the manipulating and tilting of balancing planes and the demonstration of the engine.

"What a Careless Hunter in the Woods Can Do" (Universal).

This picture, which is contained in the 62nd release of the Screen Magazine, tells us that more than two million dollars are spent yearly by the government in protecting the National Forests from fire. It also shows how the careless throwing away of a lighted cigarette can do unlimited damage. One of the interesting features of the picture shows the actual work of keeping under control the fires that beset our great forests during the dry season.

"Children's Dances" (Pathe).

A valuable part of the series on the analysis of motion which has been photographed by the Pathe Ultra-Rapid camera covers a number of children's dances of the classic type as well as other styles. The slow action in which the movements of the dances are presented enables the observer to analyze the various steps, and affords interested people an opportunity to learn the dances.

"Wild Fowl Nurseries of Southern Oregon" (Universal-Finley).

An interesting and beautiful series of views introducing the various kinds of wild fowl that inhabit the southern coast of Oregon have been photographed for us through the efforts of William L. Finley, Game Commissioner of Oregon. During the week of February 24 these pictures formed a much-appreciated part of the Rivoli Animated Pictorial, the magazine section of the program of the newest of New York's moving picture theaters. In this picture are presented the snipe with its eggs and young, the great blue heron, sea gulls and grebes. Each variety of wild fowl is shown in its own native haunts where the habits of the birds can be noted, and in each instance the young and the eggs of the fowls are shown.

"Animal Traits" (Educational).

A Ditmars number in which appear some fine illustrations of the temper of the wild horse of Tibet as well as pictures of the African and Indian elephant. The former is possibly the most ferocious of the horse kind and has to be let in and out of his stable by means of a door manipulated by a chain. A dummy of a man set up in his range receives rough treatment and affords considerable amusement to the spectator. The amicable manner in which the elephants submit to oil baths in the heat of the summer, and obedience to the keepers, is also shown.

"War and the Motorcycles" (Paramount-Bray).

An interesting bit of film appearing in the 109th release of the Pictograph gives an excellent idea not only of the strenuous character of the training of an army motorcycle corps, but of the value of this branch of the army in the rapid transportation of messages over difficult places. They are also employed with basket equipment in other lines of transportation at the front. The picture is interesting and well illustrated.

Pictures New York for China

Universal Makes Three-Reel Picture of New York and Its Environs for Wealthy Chinese Merchant.

JACK COHN, editor of the Universal Animated Weekly, Screen Magazine and Current Events, has just completed a three-reel picture of New York City and its environs for James Yu Chung Tong, son of the president of the China Tea Company. The picture was designed for the purpose of giving his relatives and friends in China, and particularly his father, a comprehensive idea of the greatness of the American metropolis and of his own activities during his visit here. Every phase of New York life is covered in the picture—the seething commercial life, the theaters, the art museums, the educational institutions and the skyscrapers.

This is probably the only film, primarily for Chinese use ever made in this country, and in which Chinese titles have been incorporated. While Mr. Tong does not contemplate using the film in a commercial way, he expects to exhibit it before the Chamber of Commerce in Shanghai, the headquarters of his father's tea company. It is also possible that it will be exhibited in the schools in and about the city.

Two Good Subjects for Pictograph

Views of Crater of Kilauea and Explanation of Mechanism of Torpedo Obtained by Bray Cameramen.

ONE OF the strongest of recent Paramount-Bray Pictographs is the 109th release in which appear some fine views of the crater of the Hawaiian volcano, Kilauea, and also an explanation of the mechanism of the torpedo by means of diagrammatical drawings by E. D. Parmelee of the Bray studios.

The views of Kilauea include several closeups which suggest startling daring on the part of the cameraman, and in which he appears to have approached close enough to the sputtering mass to have risked getting a severe burning.

In the explanation of the inner workings of the deadly torpedo each detail is carefully projected. In other words, there is no chance of misinterpretation of the meaning of the illustrator.

Items of Interest.

In the compilation of the Rialto Animated Magazine for the week of February 24 Manager Rothapfel gave first place to the Hearst-Pathe pictures of the boys from Camp Upton as they marched down Fifth avenue on Washington's Birthday. He introduced them to the inspiring melody of "Johnny Get Your Gun," played in spirited rythm by the Rialto orchestra and played them down the avenue to the finish with the good old tank "Britannia," where the great crowd broke from its moorings and turned loose in a frenzy of patriotism. The other features of the magazine were "The Horse Drive" from the Universal Screen Magazine, "Lion Cubs" from Pathe, and some pleasing views of poilus on furlough indulging in the exhilarating sport of skiing.

A volunteer body similar in general character to the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures of this country is now reviewing motion pictures in Shanghai, China. The following excerpt from a letter received from S. E. Hening, executive secretary of the Review Committee for China, regarding the methods adopted by this reviewing board is interesting:

"The Film Review Committee, composed of 70 representative Chinese and foreigners in Shanghai, has for the past two years undertaken this work (that of the naming for recommendation of suitable films to schools and other individual film users through China) on a voluntary basis. The committee receives the hearty support of two leading film agents in Shanghai and on four afternoons each week a group sits for two hours reviewing films. The committee stands for the showing of only the best films and earnestly hopes to be instrumental in raising the tone of films shown in China. In addition to the support being given by the film agents and the renters of films, the committee invites the moral support of the public."

While this committee has not undertaken to review films specifically for Shanghai, its recent adverse report regarding a certain well-known American picture showing the nude, was supported by action of the municipal government.

An exhibitor who has made a success of special performances for young people has found a way of appealing to parents that brings the young people in the afternoon to the performances arranged especially for them rather than in the evening when the pictures are intended for adults. He took two columns in the local papers and addressed himself in an article to the women of the city. He says: "I explained to them that they should realize that younger children grow tired in the evening and that if they are brought to the theater then they are likely to give the parents trouble. Note, that I do not refer to the annoyance of other patrons, even by inference, but I did point out that it would conduce more to their enjoyment and that of the children to come to the afternoon show. This advertisement probably attracted more attention than any that had ever appeared in the local paper and the results were immediate."

Whenever he is unable to secure a program that he thinks will be desirable for the young people, this exhibitor throws on the screen in advance a slide reading: "Children Will Not Enjoy This Show," together with a couple of lines saying: "Tell the Little Ones to Wait for ————," which refers to a succeeding picture, generally the following attraction, which will be suitable for young people. He says that whenever he has a picture that he can recommend in this way, the receipts increase from ten to twenty dollars.

The vizualization of subjects of instruction has been receiving much attention from the Board of Education of Philadelphia as the coming method by which pupils can best be taught history, geography and kindred subjects, according to a recent issue of the Philadelphia Record. A peculiar situation is also said to exist in the Philadelphia schools whereby the high schools are provided with fire-proof booths but no machines, while the elementary schools have the machines in many instances, but no booths. The money for booths for these schools has not yet been appropriated. It is stated, however, that through a revision of the six-mill tax rate the establishment of a central film exchange might be undertaken, as well as the equipment of schools with proper apparatus for the projection of moving pictures.

National Educational Association Meets

Convention Ignores the Great Possibilities of the Motion Picture As An Aid to Teachers.

THE forty-eighth annual convention of the National Educational Association of the United States met recently in Atlantic City, N. J. To say that it is one of the most important conventions to "speed up" education is only partially to describe it. So universal was it in its character that representatives from every State were present; so thorough was it in its nature that leading men and women from the state superintendent to the teacher of the "Little Red Schoolhouse" were among the delegates. From this it can be seen that the present and future of the American youth in school is considered to be the backbone of the nation. From the great program, covering every phase of present-day education sufficient to engage the attention of the delegates for ten days, great results are naturally expected.

Despite the thoroughness and evident desire for completeness by those in charge of the themes both for addresses, discussions and committee work, the one glaring omission lay in the fact that the educational advantages of the moving picture were entirely omitted.

It is passing strange how at this present time a company of educational leaders can get together and presumably study every possible advantage for a greater and more progressive education and be either forgetful or willfully blind to the educational powers of the moving picture. The omission from the elaborate program of any mention of educational cinematography is unpardonable and certainly places those in authority in an unenviable, non-progressive light. What an opportunity was lost! Surely the results already proved by the uses of the moving picture in both schools and colleges are sufficient to have caused some recognition of the pictures and their place in education. Speaking with many of the leaders present the writer was pleased to find a universal expression of regret at the unexplainable omission and the lost opportunity.

Educational conventions in England now study the question of "the place of the moving picture in the schools." Time was required for securing for this subject a place upon their programs, many teachers being possessed of the foolish fear that the introduction of the picture method of teaching would tend to decrease the number of teachers required. It was soon found, however, that this was as great a fallacy as that spirit which opposed the coming of steam railroads for fear that stage coach makers would lose their work.

They are wiser in these days, and from now on in the future will not be afraid of open discussion of this important topic in their conventions. What will the National Educational Association do in the future? From what the writer could learn there is little doubt that the next great convention will see the moving picture occupying its rightful place, not only as an aid to education, but as one of the chief instruments of a well-equipped school.

The commercial exhibition connected with this convention was a most commendable one. It seemed that almost every possible educational opportunity and instrument had been well thought out and provided for. Even the moving picture machine was in evidence, a mute rebuke to all that its applied powers had been so pitifully overlooked. Without doubt this great lack is not likely to be repeated in the future, for, as far as it possibly can the Moving Picture Educator believes it to be its duty to keep the matter in the mind of the proper authorities with the firm conviction that no future similarly great convention can take place and be complete without giving the educational powers of the moving picture no small place in its deliberations. How Cronk Got the Children

Fourteen Thousand Little Ones Who Failed to Get Free Tickets Just Had to See the Show.

MANAGER Ben Cronk of the new Allen Theater, Toronto, put on a lively little stunt for Saturday, March 2, when he conducted two special children's performances during the morning hours for the presentation of "The Seven Swans" in advance of the regular run of this feature at the theater. The special matinees were held under th auspices of the Daily Star and the theater was filled to capacity twice, which means that three thousand children took advantage of the opportunity. Coupons were printed in the newspaper for one week. The first to apply for tickets were the lucky ones. It is estimated that 17,000 children tried to get coupons and the 14,000 disappointed ones were not satisfied until their parents had promised to take them to the Allen for a regular performance during the week of March 4 when the picture formed the attraction.

This special advertising plan was undoubtedly one of the finest publicity stunts ever carried out in Toronto for any theater. The whole programme for the week was good. Besides the feature, "The Seven Swans," the bill included "The Eighth Annual Round-Up," a new Sennett comedy, a news weekly, the Screen Magazine, a violin solo by Luigi Romanelli and the orchestra overture.

The Allen theater now has an eight-page periodical, which is issued weekly, and contains breezy advance notices, pictures, programmes, etc. This theater specializes with Famous Players-Artcraft releases.

Metro Makes Picture for Army Use

Film to Be Used to Teach Moral Hygiene to Soldiers and Sailors Directed by Edward H. Griffith.

AS AN illustration of what the motion picture trade is doing to help in the practical training of the National Army and other branches of the service, a three-reel picture called, "Fit to Fight," was recently shown to a few trade newspapermen. It is not for general distribution, as its object is to teach moral hygiene, and it will not be formally reviewed. The War Department is satisfied with it, and much credit for effective service is due to Edward H. Griffith, who wrote and directed it, as well as to the Metro Film Corporation, which provided facilities for its production. There is a short film showing the terrible effects of certain diseases and this, which is to be used as an introduction to the three-reel story, was made by the Goldwyn Company.

Among the able players who freely gave their services in the making of the picture are Raymond McKee,—there is a snappy boxing match in the film as part of the story and McKee holds his end up well,—Paul Kelly, William Wadsworth, Corporal Robert Hamilton, Private Samuel Burbank and Jessie Stevens. Much credit is due to these patriotic workers who have done a good bit toward licking the Kaiser.

Henderson Rounding Out Double Century

New World Director Has Record of 199 Pictures, But Didn't Help Griffith Make "The Birth of a Nation."

THE only director assisting David W. Griffith who didn't help him produce "The Birth of a Nation"! This is the unusual distinction possessed by Dell Henderson, who has just made a contract with World Pictures and who has been assigned to the direction of Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley.

Mr. Henderson's advent with the World will mark a unique event—namely the direction of his two hundredth picture. He declares he is going to celebrate the occasion by making the picture the biggest and best thing he has ever done.

After being five years with Biograph, Mr. Henderson went to Triangle, then to Famous Players and then to Frohman's Empire Company. He has directed comedies in association with Mack Sennett. His particular forte is society drama.

DISCOUNT FOR FILMS RENTAL IN BULK.

Manager H. C. Garner of the Toronto K. E. S. E. office has adopted an unusual plan for the marketing of a number of features throughout Ontario. He calls it "selling pictures by the wholesale." Garner has arranged three assortments of ten features each and for each combination of ten the rental charge is $100. No time limit is placed on the booking arrangement for these "blocks" of features, but a discount of 10 per cent. is given for full payment in advance.

To use Mr. Garner's own words, these releases are not the very latest, but they are not worn out locally, figuratively speaking. Exhibitors can choose any or all of the three assortments, but choice from the three assortments is not permitted for the price quoted. Mr. Garner also has been working on a plan for special combinations of comedies to be booked in a similar way and at attractive prices. The discount detail for cash in advance also holds good for the comedy series.

COLONEL HOUSE GETS A GOLD PASS.

Colonel E. M. House, President Wilson's personal friend and unofficial emissary, has been the recipient of a perpetual pass, engraved on gold, admitting him with Mrs. House and party to the Rivoli and the Rialto at any time. The pass bears Mr. Rothapfel's signature and the explanatory note that it was presented in appreciation of Colonel House's presence in the presidential box at the opening of both the theaters for which it was issued.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

A Pretty Poor Showing.

WRITING from a middle western point an exchange man who knows the game from away back, reveals a remarkable condition of affairs when he speaks of houses closed, or practically so, with scarcely an effort to keep going. To give his exact words:

> During the past two months fully five hundred theaters have cut down to one day per week or have stopped showing altogether. Of course, they blame it on the weather, but I honestly think if they knew how to advertise and would read the department you carry in the World every week; follow out some ideas suggested, they would be many times better off.

Of course there will not be lacking those who say that the exchange man is merely looking at the lost film rentals and not at conditions generally; that he can see things only from his own selfish point of view, but this is not so. The writer is a man of decidedly more than average intelligence. He knows his business thoroughly and he knows intimately the territory of which he writes. Undoubtedly business is bad in spots, and assuredly it is worse in some sections than in others, but that is just the time when the people, as a whole, take to amusements. In panic times the theaters, particularly those with the small admissions, are well filled. There is a demand for amusement, but it must be amusement. Get plenty of comedy into the program. A rebooked Keystone will bring more trade than a war drama, if the patron is certain that he is going to see comedy and not mawkish sentiment and a poor imitation of patriotism. It is foolish to try and keep open with whatever you happen to have booked. Now is the time to plan programs, to throw out sinister melodrama and the like. This is the time when houses must be managed, but if they are managed and not merely run, they can be made profitable. And just remember that while the gruesome play may pack the house, and win all sorts of praise from the patrons, it is not the box office takings but the after effects that should be considered. If you go $40 above the average with a certain attraction and it kills $10 worth of business a day for the next two weeks, you have not made money on the attraction. That is the way to look at business; not by the day but from the point of view of yesterday and tomorrow and next month. If you will do that and advertise intensively, you will not have to close up, but you must get after the people and prove to them that they actually save money by coming to see your shows. Give them the best you can get, but make your standard the entertaining value and not the rental price. Make your house as light and cheerful as possible. Have light music and plenty of it. Get ushers who can smile. Hire a doorman with a grin. Get a box office girl who is pleasant to look at, and judge your success by the laughter and not by the applause. We recall one night some years ago when money was so tight in New York that the grocer gave you a check instead of money as change, and the butcher gave you his check in change for the grocer's check. There were half a dozen bread lines on the Bowery and things generally were pretty desperate. We wanted to cash a check and we went to one of the Bowery burlesque houses. It was on a Saturday night and the treasurer was packing up the day's receipts (a sell out for two performances) to sell to a bank for two per cent. Right next door to the theater was one of the bread lines and at nine o'clock men were already waiting the midnight opening, but there was plenty of money for theater tickets, though some of the drama houses were starving. Don't take anything that comes along Book entertainment and you can not only keep open but buy Liberty Bonds. But it must be entertainment and not merely film.

The Right Idea.

Here's a bit from the Third Street, Easton, Pa., that might be useful some time. Make people realize that a good show is not merely good film subjects, but good film subjects shown under the most advantageous conditions. You can, if you go at it right, make every house in town a boooster and an advertisement for your own—if you go at it right—and then you can use something like this:

> Occasionally you will notice that another theater shows a short picture at the same time that we do but, If You See It Here You See It Presented In The Proper Way. It's like eating turkey without the "fixin's." Here you get the "fixin's" and everything else.

Exactly and precisely right now is the time to start to train people to realize that your house means just as much to them as someone else's films, and perhaps a little bit more. You should have done this when you first started in the business, but it is not too late yet if you begin right away.

Those Wild West Waltzes.

Ed Rosenbaum, the publicity man for King-Bee, is sending out a bunch of advertising suggestions for the handling of the Billy West waltzes that are so full of meat he will have Hoover after him if he is not careful. He has a lot of suggestions, but he rings the bell and gets the "good" cigar when he remarks that "eighty per cent of theatergoers have ambition to become song writers." Then he goes on to suggest a contest with a small prize for the best lyric to be written to the music, the contest to be run in conjunction with the local paper. Eighty per cent. is right; perhaps it might run even a little higher. But remember that if you offer a prize you cannot add that the copies will be given out to patrons of the house on a certain day, unless you want to take a chance of going to jail. If you use the contest idea, get the matrix offered and let the paper publish the melody, that all may have a chance, else it is a lottery. The company can supply you with the mat. You can get your end of it by announcing that a regular piano copy will be given to patrons on a Billy West day, but where a prize is to be offered, every person, patron or not, must be given access to the material. Mr. Rosenbaum has other good suggestions in his ideas sheet, but the prize lyric scheme will bring you constant advertising for several weeks, not alone in the paper, but with your patrons. It is the best stunt we have seen offered for a long time.

Another to Find Out.

The Avon theater, Decatur, Ill., run by the Carrier Amusement Co., has passed up vaudeville and pictures in favor of better pictures, but it has not entirely deserted vaudeville in that it runs each week one musical act to stay the week with a daily change of musical numbers. They can get better acts on a week's contract than they can on splits, and the musical act is merely an orchestra in disguise. The scheme may commend itself to others who are afraid to wholly abandon vaudeville though they find that the type of vaudeville they can get does not harmonize with the pictures of today. It will pave the way to the establishment of an orchestra of local favorites and at the same time break the suddenness of the jump. The next thing the Avon can do is to jump the price above ten cents with a five cent balcony. They can do it with the pictures they are showing, and they can do it if Steve Farrar can get twenty cents and play to big business on features down in Eldorado. They made the announcement in an eight page program with a lithographed cover, but every time the printer wanted to be very impressive he dug up some Old English and the reader has to skip to the next Roman. A printer who will use eight point Old English for emphasis is an argument for the restoration of the public whipping post.

Booming Intolerance.

If we had a state rights feature, we think we would loan it to S. Barret McCormick for a week just to get his specimen ads for the press book. Here are a couple of recent ones on Intolerance, its first showing at popular prices. Both are fifteens, one three and the other four columns wide. You will notice that Mr. McCormick lays rather greater stress upon the prices than on the play. Practically the entire theater going public knows of the play. If it does not, there is plenty of small type to tell all about it, but the big selling point is that it may now be seen at prices ranging from ten to twenty-five cents, and Mr. McCormick plays this fact up even above the title, knowing that the title will care for itself. In each case there is an attractor cut that tells more of the story than could the same space given to description, and he has the description as well. For a study of proportionate values, this display would be hard to excel. Of course price should be featured above the play only when the price is the novelty.

Split the Cut.

The Palace, Wichita, Kan., sends in a pair of advertisements without comment, but we presume they are to show an unusual use of a mat. If you will compare these two advertisements, you will find that they are both laid out with the same cut, but in the case of the shorter space, the cut has been sawed across, getting a new effect with the use of but a single mat. Both use a three column space, the shorter seven and the other ten inches. Of the two we prefer the composition of the smaller. For one thing the house name is where it belongs, and the type text is better than that in the reverse cut. It also gives a better display to the name of the star through the white space above. Many of the mats sent out could be manipulated with decided gain if Exhibitors will only realize that with a saw they can do about as they please. At a pinch a common hack saw will serve its purpose if you have not access to a plant with the proper circular saw. Just because an advertising layout has been made by a man in New York, it does not follow that you cannot do better, so far as your own house is concerned. Take the tip and see what you can do. Then send in samples.

McCormick and Thais.

S. Barrett McCormick, of the Circle, Indianapolis, outdid himself in advertising Thais. It is a pity we cannot reproduce the best example of his work, but it is too good to spoil through too great a reduction, and it is too large to be given in proper size. It is a page-deep advertisement five columns wide, the sides being held in two columns ornamented with hieroglyphics and crowned with Sphinxes. Across the top is an arch lettered with the name of the star and play below this, cropped to fit, a picture of the star in her most striking costume. There are five lines of display type, the house name and a space 3x4 inches for the full program. This is all the text advertising in 105 column inches. The rest is all cut display. Those cuts sold more seats than any text possibly could have done. Another display is five nines, and here, too, there is more cut than text talk because the star and the play are both known and all that is necessary is to announce the coming of the attraction and trust to the cuts to do the rest. To show the care Mr. McCormick gives the small details, notice the house name in the upper left hand corner. Most of you are familiar with this trade mark, which is generally white against the blackest sort of a black. In this you will notice the right hand end of the cut has been lightened to blend into the drapery. It is not as light as the curtain, but it is enough lighter than solid black not to spoil the effect. A dead black right there would have thrown the entire display out of balance.

Means Something.

Lately the Majestic, Jackson, Mich., celebrated its second anniversary as a picture and combination house under W. S. McLaren, and the Jackson Patriot gave them rather more than a full half column of congratulation and appreciation. The theater is two blocks from the shopping district, and it was contended that the alternation between pictures and traveling shows would be fatal, yet the house has prospered and the Patriot exults and tells why, and the "why" is nothing more than the same old story of good business judgment plus intelligent advertising. The house is run in connection with a sister house, with a joint weekly program that is readable, good newspaper space is taken, though the expenditure is not lavish, and the house is run to please the patrons. We join the Patriot in its appreciation of Mr. McLaren.

Says It Worked For Him.

Steve Farrar, of the Casino, Eldorado, Ill., says this half page brought him crowded business, so it must be good. It drops about ten inches across a six-column page. At first glance it seems to be a bit too full of type, but you will notice that it is laid out so that the big message is entirely apart from the panel on the left, and even that is easy to read—and readable. Steve has been trusting mostly to throwaways to reach the mining crowd, but now that business doesn't come as easily as it did, Steve is going after it. He took on a better service and is doing more and better advertising. Also he is getting twenty cents. Perhaps business did drop a couple of weeks after the increase, but Steve knew that it would come back and stay back, so he had the nerve to sit tight and wait for it to come in. Steve is one of those optimists they have been talking so much about lately. Another name for the genus is "level headed."

Better Read It.

For something more than two years we have had as a tailpiece to this department an advertisement for Picture Theater Advertising, and yet, the other day, we asked one of the real old timers if he had a copy and he sent a check back with the reply that he didn't even know we had written such a book. If you have never done so, read that advertisement and unbelt the two-spot. Any one of a couple of hundred ideas may be worth more than two bones to you, right now, and you'll have the rest of the book free.

For the Program.

If you've been in the same house as long as Mr. Ryan has, here is something that it will pay to run in the program:

It sort of hammers home the suggestion that you have become one of the local institutions.

LOOK BACK

There's a lot of you who will smile as you stop for a minute and look back to the time when you had to stand on tiptoe to reach the cashier's window. We remember some of you fellows when you used to come here in knickerbockers. Now we see some of these same friends coming back with that same best girl or another. The "Garfield" has helped along many a romance, and we like to look back on those days.

ESTABLISHED 1909

Signs of the Times.

Announcing a special early opening for a double bill, the Third Street Theater, Easton, Pa., adds a note to the effect that no extra heat is required for this added time as the building must be heated for mercantile purposes. How strange that would have sounded a couple of years ago. And Mr. Buss gives us a new one when he speaks of Tom Sawyer as a "literature character." That is an improvement over the usual character in literature, and worthy of adoption, but make it "literature" and not "literary," which is something else again.

Mr. Bleich Reports.

When the war tax came on and the reports of schemes for handling the tax were numerous, we asked George A. Bleich, of the Empress and Grand, Owensboro, Ky., to report on the success of his schemes. One of these was a strip of nine ten-cent coupons selling for 90 cents, and the other was a "twin" ticket, admitting two persons for 25 cents. We expressed some doubts as to the feasibility of the latter since in some sections it has been held that any class of seats must be priced uniformly and that a man paying 10 cents might not sit in the seats for which others were charged 15 cents without paying a two cent tax. Mr. Bleich is one of the keenest observers in the film business, and we are glad to give the report of his experiment. He writes:

It is recalled that you desired to know how my plan covering the War Tax on admissions would work out. Having had nearly three months to try same I can report "bully."

The coupons, which I have modified slightly, are extremely popular and the sales astonishingly large. They are sold for 99c. each, being a strip of nine admissions netting 10c. per person.

No pennies are handled by my cashier except in the matter of passes. A straight charge of 15c. is made adults who do not hold coupons and I have kept the price for children at the old rate of 5c., paying the tax myself.

The proposition of selling "twin tickets" good for two persons, at 25c., I have about abandoned. Not because I feared trouble with the Federal authorities in the matter of the tax question, but because it has been proven that there is little objection to the straight charge of 15c., and I was therefore out the difference.

The custom officials in this district take the stand with me that I am permitted to charge whatever I please—the law not stipulating any prescribed amount, and I could charge one person 10c. and another $1.00 for the same show, the tax to be deducted proportionately, so if there is any one who cares to use the "twin ticket" plan I firmly believe no trouble would ensue.

But I recommend my coupon admissions to everybody, and likewise the holding down of the charge for children. It must be kept in mind that it digs into a family pretty hard when the little ones must each pay the price formerly charged for an adult admission. I have studied the question of charge for children from all angles and I know that it pays to hold the cost for them down to a minimum. Not that I care particularly for children's patronage, but because if I am to have that of the parents or the big brothers and sisters I know there must not be too much burden on them when they bring the little ones.

Prices vary with me. I do not hold to any set figure, but gauge the charge by the attraction offered, taking extreme care that value is given at all times. An elevation in price is taken by my patrons as a signal that something extra good is to be seen and they certainly turn out big.

As I said before, my sales of the coupon tickets are very large. Selling them at 10c. net (although they cost the patron 11c.), they are accepted as of 15c. value. If 20c. is charged for a show we require that one 5c. ticket be bought to accompany the coupon, and if it is a 25c. show that an extra 10c. ticket accompany it, and so on.

Exhibitors ought to use every effort to sell coupon tickets. They encourage attendance; the holder will bring his friends and now with the war tax to contend with they simplify the collection of same very much.

Will be glad to send any of your subscribers samples of these coupons on request provided postage is furnished.

We agree with Mr. Bleich that the coupon ticket is a good scheme. We held that belief long before the tax matter came up and have had no reason to change our opinions. But Mr. Bleich touches upon a still more important matter when he urges the old prices for children. It is better to get the advanced prices from the parents only than to get no money at all from the family, and undoubtedly many will attend if they can still bring the kiddies for the old prices.

A Three-Year-Old.

The Victoria, Buffalo, celebrated its third anniversary the other day. Of course it played it up in all the language Edward Hyman is capable of, and he certainly can throw the language around, but he is breezy and not boastful. That's the secret of the Victoria's success. Its advertising does not disgust. The —est adjectives are not much used at the Victoria. They are not required. Douglas Fairbanks, for example, is not lauded as "the funniest man in the world," or some similar bromide. He is announced as "He's a ginger snap. A regular Jazz Jay. All bound round with fun." You get the same idea without feeling you ought to call the management liars.

Private Criticism.

We are always glad to send the carbon of any comment in this department where the Exhibitor is in a hurry, provided that a return envelope accompanies the request, but we do not think it is quite fair to the others to ask for a criticism that does not run in the department. If the proposition troubles you it is not unlikely that the same thing may bother others, and the idea of the department is to let all the Exhibitors profit from a study of the other man's success and failures. Be a sport and let the stuff run through.

Late, but Good.

These programs of the Mikadow, Manitowoc, Wis., are a bit late coming in, but they offer good inside page designs and they are as welcome now as they would have been last October. Of the two we personally prefer the more regular arrangement of the top box. A regular layout is more suggestive of a well ordered program on the screen. Another example is a piratical flag in Benday with "Fifteen Men on a Dead Man's Chest. Yo ho, and a Bottle of Rum" at the top with "Treasure Island" below. The flag should have been a solid black instead of Benday, and the house name and date should have been added, otherwise the idea is good, though it is seldom that the raw head and bloody bones are permissible in theatrical advertising.

Booming Fatty.

Verne Wickham, of the Liberty, Long Beach, Califronia, worked hard to clean up on Fatty Arbuckle's second "made-in-Long-Beach" comedy. He took three fourteens and he was given five fifteen for a cartoon that he got up. To escape the deadly "(Advt.)" there was the barest mention that Fatty would have as his guests certain other film people at the Liberty for the showing of his film. This was more effective work than an open advertisement would have been. The display advertisement is well done, though the type banks appeared rather crowded and the fact that Fatty would appear in person the following night was left to an eight point line, while the immediate appearance of Kerrigan and Lois Wilson that night was played up heavily. It is not possible to divide space between two attractions. The Kerrigan panel hurts the advertisement materially, from an advertising viewpoint, though in consideration of the fact that Wickham had them standing in the rain for more than an hour, we do not believe that he worried much. But while he speaks of the crowd standing in the rain for an hour, he does not speak of having opened the house, that the crowd might keep dry. That would have been a better advertisement than a couple of full pages and several cartoons.

For Neighborhood Houses.

"Built around the corner from where you live—for your convenience," is the newest slogan of the Victoria, Buffalo, and one of Edward Hyman's best efforts to get the locality house idea into a nutshell. In the same bi-weekly issue every announcement starts with "The Victoria" and some argument in favor of the house. These announcement tops are changed for each issue, and they must keep someone pretty busy, but they are worth watching.

Where It Began.

In commenting upon the program of the Theater Louisiana someone remarks that it is well to remember that this is the house responsible for the line "When you leave this theater you can take only one thing with you—an opinion." Yes. And it's well to remember, too, that it was advertising for exhibitors that first gave it to the rest of the exhibitors.

A NEW HELP FOR MANAGERS

Picture Theatre Advertising

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT (Conductor of Advertising for Exhibitors in the Moving Picture World)

A TEXT BOOK AND A HAND BOOK, a compendium and a guide. It tells all about advertising, about type and type-setting, printing and paper, how to run a house program, how to frame your newspaper advertisements, how to write form letters, posters or throwaways, how to make your house an advertisement, how to get matinee business, special schemes for hot weather and rainy days. All practical because it has helped others. It will help you. By mail, postpaid, $2.00. Order from nearest office.

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is inclosed.

Butt the Buts.

CULTIVATE clearness and fluency of diction in your synopses. Learn how to construct sentences. Some synopses have sentences of from ten to twenty lines in length, connected with a series of "buts" that hook the phrases up like a string of cars coupled together with links. For example the story starts off:

> Mary Adams wants to study art in Paris, but the war is on and she cannot go, but she persuades her father to let her go to New York to study, but her rich aunt objects, and says if she does she will cut her off her will; but Mary is stubborn and goes to New York, but she is homesick and wants to go home but her pride prevents her, but John Jones also comes to New York to study art, but he has to support himself, so he gets a job in an office, but he and Mary see a lot of each other, but Aunt Hannah comes to town and visits Mary and she takes Mary home with her, but Jim keeps on.

Then the next sentence is started and another dozen "buts" are used up on that. Instead try for something like this:

> Mary Adams is prevented from prosecuting her art studies in Paris by the war. She persuades her father to let her go to New York to study. Her rich aunt threatens to cut her out of her will if she does. This does not alter Mary's determination. She goes to New York and sticks it out in spite of her homesickness. Jim Jones comes to New York to share Mary's studies. He obtains a position in an office, which pays his expenses, and spends the evenings in the art school. Aunt Hannah comes to New York and persuades Mary to return home. She goes, leaving Jim to study alone.

State your propositions smartly and clearly. Frame them so that each individual fact is grasped separately. You will stand a far better chance of being understood.

Soon—Perhaps.

About half the replies to the last polisher spoke of the good the writers derived from these contests and asked for another. We will try it soon because the number of replies to the "Uncle Tom's Cabin" were encouraging after the small response to the "Othello" contest, but handling the replies entails no little extra labor, and until we get the new Advertising Aids in smooth running order we cannot undertake another. Meantime if you have an idea of your own for a polisher contest that does not involve the handling of original plots, shoot it in and we will think it over.

Still Hope.

Not long ago we asked a friend why he had left the script staff of a leading company, and he replied, "I laughed so much I couldn't do any work, so I quit." He went on to explain that the situation was such that he could not work with any contentment. About a dozen high-priced writers were on the staff as continuity men. The chief was perhaps the least able man of the lot, but a friend of the Big Boss. Nothing could be done before he had suggested changes, and after it had been done he suggested more changes, just to prove that he was a hard worker. Most of the staff were doing original work on a bonus, and the bonus represented about what they would be willing to sell their work for as free lances, and the staff salary was all velvet. The company was paying three prices for stuff, and then getting stung because too many interferences were spoiling the work. It was no place at all for an honest, hard-working writer, so he sent in his resignation. The condition was a little worse than in other studios, but not much worse, and there is still hope that some day the big bosses will get wise to conditions and have a housecleaning that will bring about a free market for good stories.

Remember Your English.

In the synopsis polisher contest we got one submission from a young woman who last summer sent us a high school magazine in which the old graduates were represented by a number of articles, one of which she wrote. Her synopsis started off with the statement that the Shelbys were passing the afternoon at "there" plantation. There were perhaps twenty or more similarly glaring errors in about 800 words. She knew better, so she had not the excuse of ignorance. It was plain carelessness. It is fatal carelessness. No editor can become interested either in the story or the writer. If the story is in any way good he is apt to fear that it is a stolen plot since plotting presupposed intelligence, and the really intelligent person does not misspell common words, nor does the intelligent person permit carelessness in any form interfere with the chances for success. After you are successful you can do as you please, but until you have arrived, you must do all you can to create the impression of competency. The paper should be good, the typewriter should be well aligned and supplied with a well inked ribbon. The synopsis should be so inviting that the editor feels that the story must be good. If he takes up a story bristling with grammatical errors and mispelled words he cannot help feeling that he is going to waste his time reading the stuff, and it will take an unusual story to convince him to the contrary. A story misspelled and on poor paper may be better than the more attractively typed submission next it, but it is poorly advertised, to say the least, and advertising is more than half of any selling proposition.

Hard Work.

We have said before that one of the best sources of instruction in story writing that we know is the editorial advertisement in the Popular Magazine; not every issue, but very often. For example, in the January month-end issue, this occurs:

> Just now we are thinking of hard work as an adjunct to talent and ambition in the making of the good writer. In writing stories there is no doubt at all that the industrious plodder is continuously beaten by some one of apparently more gift and genius. But industrious plodding is not hard work—it is mechanical, easy, persistent work, and it will never raise a man very high. What you need in the shape of work is something more intensive and difficult. You can't develop muscle without expending a lot of energy. You must strain and sweat your body to make it strong. You can't become a good mathematician by easy plodding. You must torture your mind and soul with the most wearying conceptions to get anywhere at all in the science of numbers. Working hard is not just spending so many hours at a desk or typewriter and turning out so many words. It is really using the whole of the mind, and is so arduous and fatiguing a thing that not every one is capable of it at all.

In other words plodding without improvement will get you nowhere. You must not only work, and work hard, but you must study as you work; must strive to give more to your story than you gave to the last one. Unless you do this, you will never get above the grade of your early efforts, but if a person really is a writer each past effort makes the next story better.

Backing Up.

Not long ago the author wrote that he had seen a play which killed one of his best stories, since the idea was the same. We did not say anything. Then later he wrote that he had seen a story on the screen not unlike a story he had seen some time before. The story was "Betty Takes a Hand," in which Betty sets up a boarding house in her aunt's home in the absence of her relative. The author had seen this story five or six years ago, so we jumped him back another twenty-five years to Gillette's "All the Comforts of Home" in which the same idea was used. Don't be in too much of a hurry to throw down your story because it happens to be like something you have seen on the screen. If it is just like the infringing story, change it markedly, but you must expect to duplicate some basic plot when you write any story. All you can do it to put up a new building on the old foundation. For that matter we do not hesitate to send a story to a company that has made one something like it, but we are careful to add a note to the effect that it resembles their other story. This is largely a matter of judgment. Just as a bit of practice work look up "Betty Takes a Hand" and see how much different you can make that story. There are still many good stories to be written around that theme.

Technique of the Photoplay

By

EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

A book replete with practical pointers on the preparation of stories for the screen, answering the hundred and one questions which immediately present themselves when the first script is attempted. A tested handbook for the constant writer of picture plots. "Straight-from-the-shoulder" information from an author with a wealth of real "dollars-and-cents" experience.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second sets of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Automatic Signal Device.

N. Telland, Great Falls, Montana, says:

> Attached find photograph of an automatic signal device which has been in operation since you visited this city. Was anxious to have you inspect same when you were here, but you had been on the train many hours and were practically all in, hence I did not bother you at the time. The device may, as you will see, be set to give the operator warning at any desired point from end of film. A fork rides the film, not touching the picture but traveling on the sprocket hole track, the same as do the tension springs. Its weight is very little and absolutely no harm is done to the film. The magazine remains fireproof, or as much so as it was before installation of the device. All electrical contacts are exterior. A buzzer and lamp give the warning. Would be glad to forward the device for inspection should you so desire. Your verdict means much to me, but if the device fails in merit I would like your frank opinion to that effect.

Sorry you did not show it to me when I was there, Brother Telland, even though I was tired. No, I hardly think it would pay to send the device here, because I could not very well ask any one to mutilate their magazine to test it unless they intended to keep it. Evidently the machine consists of a miniature transformer, reducing from 110 to 12 volts (should think 2 to 4 volts would be better), which same is utilized to ring a bell and light a lamp when the arm riding the film drops to a certain pre-determined point, which may be fixed to suit by adjusting arm X in the right hand illustration, by means of screws Y in the left hand picture. A seems to be the buzzer and B is, of course, the lamp. The thing is entirely practical, only it strikes me there might be considerable variation in distance when an out-of-center reel is encountered. The electric sparks, if any there be, seem to be thoroughly isolated from any possible contact with the film, so that we may say, barring exception I have named, the device will work perfectly. The point then comes: will friend manager buy it? And there we stick. I don't know, but I doubt it—that is to say I doubt that enough will to make it pay to manufacture. But that, friend Telland, is your business venture and it is up to you. The device, as such, looks very good. That is about all I could say until you have some of them in actual operation in other than your home territory, so that I can get what will be an unbiased opinion from several operators. I am no wizard, therefore cannot say with certainty just from looking at a thing of this kind how it will "take" with operators.

More About Lenses.

George Deutsch, Poughkeepsie, New York, comments on friend Miller's letter headed "Lenses Little Understood" as follows:

> Brother Miller is quite correct in saying the lens system is very little understood. This is so true that in many instances screen results are sadly marred, if not practically ruined. To my mind it is essential that every operator have a good elementary knowledge of lenses and the laws which govern their action and the action of light. They should also know what the various aberrations really are, what their practical effect is, and how to set about their correction. A knowledge of the various types of lenses and their uses and how to properly take care of lenses is very essential. It is of prime importance also that the operator know how to intelligently test a lens, so that he may know whether or not the lens he buys is what it should be.
> Friend Miller's classification of lenses is not quite according to ethics. Lenses, except such as are intended for special purposes (usually merely a modification of one of the regular types), may be roughly divided into six groups. The following is rough and arbitrary: (1) The single, non-achromatic, or "spectacle" lens. (2) The double meniscus, or periscopic. (3) The single achromatic. (4) The Petzval portrait. (5) The rapid rectilinear. (6) The anastigmat. Miller's single meniscus (one glass) and his "spectacle" belong to one class, and the single meniscus is no longer used by photographers of the impressionistic school, lenses better suited to their purpose being now available. The single achromatic he describes fairly well, but it may be made of more than two glasses cemented together, though two is the usual number used. This type of lens is used in the fixed-focus Brownie cameras, and both camera and lens may be purchased for much less than five dollars. The R. R. (Rapid Rectilinear) is composed of two achromatic elements. They are not used as an ordinary projection lens, as he says. The Petzval Portrait type of lens is the one most commonly used for projection. This lens has a very large relative aperture (meaning relative to its focal length.—Ed.), but a very saucer-shaped field of focus. However, inasmuch as the field covered is small as compared to focal length of lens used, it adapts itself to motion picture projection work very nicely. Its definition over this small field is critical, and I don't know that an anastigmat would improve matters over the main portion of the picture, though toward the edges the anastigmat would most likely give evidence of its superior qualities. However, I very much doubt that an anastigmat having the same relatively large aperture as the Petzval Portrait type could be made. As to Miller's F-7 anastigmat fitted with diaphram, why, it is evident he did not give this particular thing sufficient thought.

I fully agree with friend Deutsch that the operator should know the various things he has named. Operators are handling light and lenses every day, and no man can intelligently handle that which he does not understand. As to the Petzval type and the anastigmat, why, I certainly would like to see a really conclusive test made of lenses of those types and of various grades. Personally, I firmly believe the high class lens is worth its price for projection purposes.

How About This, Wayne?

A man who says he is a traveling salesman, but who does not write a very salesmany letter, writes that he visited some Ft. Wayne, Indiana, theaters and carefully observed screen results. Projection at the Grand theater he dismisses with the brief but comprehensive word "punk," with the prefix "very." Oh, yes, he also added the remark that the operator seemed to be asleep, as the picture was out of frame much of the time. At the Transfer theater projection was, he says, "just fair," but at the Strand he sighed with joy, for all was superlatively well. Beautiful house, seating 1,400, fine orchestra, good projection light, fine focus, etc., etc., et cetera.

Would be interested in hearing what Ft. Wayne has to say about this. The seller of goods promises more from his next stopping place—Cincinnati. I'm a bit suspicious, though. He is mighty well posted on operating room vernacular.

Real Bright Exchange Manager.

South Dakota writes:

Attached find samples from Vitagraph, "Message From the Mouse." Wrote the Minneapolis office with regard to punch holes and other faults in film we are receiving. Told exchange manager I found at least ten punch holes in one subject. His reply was, "About the only way we can do away with punch marks is to do away with operators"! Now what do you think of that? The only thing left me is to send my kick to Father Richardson. The attached samples were all cut out of today's show. Must compliment the Goldwyn. We always get films from them in first class condition.

I might say to the Minneapolis exchange mis-manager that about the only way we will get rid of films in rotten mechanical condition will be to get rid of exchange managers of his type at least. For his information, if the producer did his plain, ordinary duty and incorporated a proper change-over sign in the negative film itself there would be no need for punch marks, though that is no excuse for the operator punching film. But, again, if the exchange made a proper inspection and check-up it would instantly know who punched any given film, and the charging of the damage to the theater about twice would stop that theater on the punch proposition, so you see, Mr. Get Funny Manager, after all the basic fault lies with the producer, and your own skirts are not any too clean. The samples show entire lack of inspection. Sprocket holes gone on one side for 5 inches. Splice ½-inch wide. Big chunk ripped out of film, etc., etc. No legitimate excuse for it under heaven if the films came from the exchange direct, as they presumably did. Sending out films in this condition is a crime, even as it is a crime for operators to punch and otherwise unnecessarily injure films. Films are worth about $125 per reel. They are intrusted to your care, Mr. Operator, on the presumption that you are a trustworthy man, a competent projectionist, and a man with common honesty enough to commit no unnecessary outrage on the property of another man. That the exchange mis-manager commits an outrage on you by sending films in bad condition does not excuse you for abusing his films. Two wrongs never in this world made a right. But please do not think the Madison operator has abused the films. I am not hitting at him at all, but speaking broadly of the mutual duty of the exchange manager and operator to each other.

Backs Up Our Views.

George Deutsch, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., says he has himself made a shutter very similar to the one described under title, "Wants Advice as Regards Shutter," in recent issue for his Power's 6-A, and thinks it an improvement. Says he cannot account for it unless it is the balancing up of conditions. He continues:

You know the result of one wide blade and the rest of the shutter equally divided. A very nearly like condition would be had if there was one wide opening the size of the main shutter blade, and the rest equally divided. In this case we have one unbalancing wide blade set opposite one unbalancing narrow light opening, and it may be that one effect offsets the other.

Reversed objective lenses alone could not produce the condition described in "Can You Answer This, Mr. Operator?" Dec. 29 issue. Do you know that the average man accustomed to handling 4, 5 and 6-inch lenses will get a 2¾ lens back end front?

I do not, Brother Deutsch, nor do I see why he should, especially in view of the curves being more pronounced. As to the shutter problem, why, you have indorsed my own views concerning the why of its action. The same thing was up, in a slightly different form, under "Some Interesting Experiments" some weeks ago.

From Oklahoma City.

Wesley Trout, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, burns up typewriter ribbon with the letter quoted below:

This is the second time I have written you about projection. Have been seven years at the crank, and have always had class screen results. Why? The answer is easy. I have bought and STUDIED every book which would give increased knowledge of my profession, and always have tried to give just a little better work this month than I did last. You will always find my sprockets clean and my projector and other machinery in as nearly first class repair as I am able to keep them without running repair bills to excess. The operator should, as you have many times said, be at his machine, watching the projection of his picture very carefully. A city of this size should have first class projection, but I have visited some of our theaters where the picture jumped very badly; also there were other faults in the screen result (Your criticism does not tell us anything, unless you show that the fault was due to carelessness, incompetency or neglect on the part of operator. An operator cannot give high-class results with restricted current, worn machines and inferior carbons. You must take into consideration the fact that friend manager all too often makes it a practical impossibility for the operator to deliver the goods on the screen, and then yells his fool head off because the operator does not do that which he has made it impossible for his to do.—Ed.). Another thing: many operators leave the operating room door open, which is not right; also the union is not so strict with union theaters as with the two non-union houses. Is that right?

We have a fine bunch of boys here (Can vouch for that statement myself.—Ed.) who try to do their best. I am simply pointing out a few faults which should receive attention. Aside from operating I install projection equipment, do electric work and project special pictures. Price ten dollars per day. I am a licensed operator and intend to join the union here soon.

If you have been operating for all those years you should have been in the union long ago, Friend Trout. Man alive, if you don't look out you will be as bad as the exhibitor who won't, dont and can't be coaxed to join his league. For heaven's sake don't put yourself in the same class with that foolisher. As to keeping the operating door open, why, if it opens into the auditorium, there can be no excuse, because the audience is then endangered, and in case of fire there might be many injured and killed, since a panic would almost inevitably result. But on the other hand, what about the SOLID IVORY TOP architect or other person who PLANS AN OPERATING ROOM WITHOUT A FRESH-AIR INTAKE FROM THE OUTSIDE OF THE BUILDING, and without even adequate ventilation outlet? Can you reasonably expect even an operator to go into a bottle, pull the cork into place and then start a heating stove which produces both heat and poisonous gases? Yet that is pretty close to what thousands of managers did demand of the operator before this department took the matter up, and is what very many of them are still demanding, utterly regardless of right, and even of common decency. It is quite right that the operating room door be kept closed, and it must be kept closed if the door opens into the auditorium, but is only the most common kind of common decency to supply the operating room with an abundance of fresh air, taken from outside the building, not from the top of the auditorium, where it is hottest and most impure, at the same time supplying a 16-inch exhaust fan to pump out the poisonous gases generated by volatilizing carbons, and the hot air, as well as the smoke and gases from burning film, should there be a fire. While in your city last spring I had evidence that its men were energetic and enterprising. I am, therefore, loath to believe the faults referred to are due to their negligence. My compliments to the Oklahoma City men; also to Friend Trout, who, I hope, will make good on his promise and get into his organization. Perhaps you only fancy there is closer regulation of the non-union than of the union houses.

Enterprise Optical Does Record Business.

I called the attention of the Enterprise Optical Company, manufacturers of the Motiograph projector, to a rumor current in some quarters that they had gone out of business. In reply Mr. O. F. Spahr, manager, says the company was never more active than at present. Its export business is, so he says, satisfactory, the domestic sales for 1917 showed a very substantial increase over the sales of 1916, with exports on the upgrade.

We are glad to know of the prosperity of the Enterprise. If we can get that corporation to keep this department advised as to changes and improvements in their machine, so that you, friend reader, may know what is what with relation to the Motiograph, all will be well. I have called Mr. Spahr's attention to the fact that his company owes it to you to keep you posted, and do it through the medium you have, through the years, learned to look to for such information. Doubtless we shall be able to give you the full, up-to-date dope on all Motiograph changes in future. If not, it certainly will be the fault of the manufacturer, and no one else.

In An Awful Fix.

W. H. Shepherd, Davenport, Washington, sends a dollar for Halifax, and says:

Here is hoping they get thousands of dollars from the operators of the U. S. A. They certainly will need it. News is very hard to find here, as there is only one theater. We therefore have no one to pick a fuss with.

Oh, yes, Brother Shepherd, they got the thousands all right, I don't think. You are in a perfectly terrible fix. Not a darned soul to scrap with but yourselves. How perfectly awful. Still it might be worse, so cheer up.

Fitting Shutter to Local Conditions.

W. B. Allen, Edmonton, Alberta, says:

Since receiving December 15 issue of World I have been studying your article, "Interesting Experiments," relating to revolving shutter. It certainly is interesting. I, myself, did considerable experimenting with shutters of all shapes and sizes before being satisfied that I had the best possible one to suit my conditions. Altogether too many operators fail to realize the importance of adapting their revolving shutters to their local conditions. I once visited an operating room in this city and noticed the idle projector having a main shutter blade of extraordinary width. Drew the operator's attention to the matter only to hear him say: "Why, it's a standard Power's shutter." The shutter was unquestionably the Power's No. 2. Doubtless you have yourself met with many incidents of this kind in your wide travels.

Regarding the article named: The "A" shutter is a mystery. I think it is up to the department opticians to explain its action (I believe it has pretty well been done, though not in print at time your letter was received.—Ed.). I have an idea as to the why and wherefore, but putting it into words is something else again. I tried the same shutter out, only with a 70° blade, but it increased instead of reduced flicker in my case, so I went back to my old one. This shutter I have tried with long and short focal length lenses, and find it quite satisfactory. Its only necessary modification comes when used with short E. F. lenses. Then I change it to "B." It seems to me the Simplex people are playing safe if they propose adopting the shutter in question as their standard. They should certainly have no trouble with travel ghost. But I suppose all other machine manufacturers do the same (Yes. They are literally compelled to, because of lack of knowledge on part of operators. If they did not send a blade wide enough to fit all but perhaps the very worst possible local condition, they would be flooded with howls from "operators" (?) who would instantly condemn the new machine because there was travel ghost, instead of knowing what was wrong and remedying it temporarily until a blade of proper width to suit local conditions could be procured from the manufacturer. And thus is light wasted and abnormal flicker tendency set up through lack of knowledge on the part of the operator of one of the vital, fundamental, basic items of his craft.—Ed.). You will note the difference between my shutter and Shutter "A," December 15 issue. Quite some, is it not? And now with regard to intermittent speed. I don't know the Simplex speed, because I never handled that make of projector, but imagine all United States machines are pretty much the same in this respect (Not so, Brother Allen. One of our standard machines has the speed of approximately 4 or 4.5 to one.—Ed.). However, assuming the various machines to have a 6 to 1 movement (I wish it were true.—Ed.), I cannot personally see why they could not have a 6.5 or even a 7 to 1. There are very many theaters where the film is speeded up to 90 or more feet per minute. Has not this the same effect, insofar as wear and tear on both machine and film be concerned, as a 6½ or even a 7 to 1 intermittent movement? My proposal is: install a 7 to 1 movement. Decrease camera speed (if necessary) and put on some motor control which will render impossible the running of the machine above 75 feet of film per minute. Concretely I would say: decrease camera speed to 50 feet of film per minute; limit projection to 75 feet per minute, which would surely cause the figures to jump fast enough to suit even the most rabid speed demon and use a 7 to 1 intermittent. Under this plan there would be, I think, no more film damage than now, less flicker and better general results. Another thing: with camera speed reduced to 50, any attempt to project at greater speed than 75 would cause the screen action to be so utterly ridiculous that it would not be tolerated by the audience.

An interesting proposition. Also I am not so sure it does not at least furnish food for thought. Certainly with maximum speed set at 75, and made to stay set by slower camera speed, a 6 to 1 movement would be entirely practical, and that is fast enough to give us the shutter we want. I am not sure, however, that a camera speed of 50 is practical. In fact the tendency is to increase, rather than decrease camera speed, and up to a certain point this seems to me to be good. I have presented Brother Allen's letter rather as an interesting subject for discussion, than in the belief that his plan can be brought into reality. This much is true, viz.: no intermittent on the market today is as fast as is necessary to bring about the best possible shutter condition. There is, however, another way of partially working out the shutter problem than by increased intermittent speed and that is by increased shutter diameter or increased shutter speed. The latter plan is now used by one projector, the shutter of which revolves one and one-half times to each picture. This helps out a lot, but does not do all that a fast intermittent would do. I cannot spare space to publish drawing of shutter A, because space is at high premium and any one can quickly lay out the shutter for himself. Its main blade is 70° and each interrupter 60°. Its light openings at either side of main blade are 60° and the one opposite main blade is 60°. This means that blades occupy 190° and openings 170°, hence the shutter cuts considerably more than half the light, which it seems to me is not necessary with a Power's and with the shutter set 9 inches from the lens, presumably at dissolving point of light ray. Allen claims no flicker at 95, using 55 amps. d. c. and with no film in. Just how good this is would depend somewhat on character of screen. On cloth or plaster it would not be anything more than just fair. Lens diameter is 1 7/16", 7" E. F. and 5 5/16" B. F. Your modification for use with short focal length lens is published, because it is excellent in more ways than one. Not only does it enable the placing of the shutter blade close to lens where lenses of extremely short focal length are used with a Power's projector, but it may be reversed and used thus to reach the dissolving point when it is a considerable distance beyond end of shutter shaft. Such a shutter might be made to reach several inches beyond the end of the shutter shaft, if made of sheet aluminum, reasonably well braced and carefully balanced by attaching a drop of solder at four points of its periphery and filling them until exact balance is had.

Highway Robbery.

Henry Oscar, Calvert, Texas, is troubled about his electric light bill and seeks advice. Friend Oscar says:

As a subscriber I take the liberty of seeking advice on a very important question which has bothered me for some time, viz.: our electric light bill. Am using two Power's 6-A machines, taking current through a mercury arc rectifier. My bill for current for 1917 was $890, with current at 10½ cents per k. w. I see individual light plants advertised in the Moving Picture World, and want to know whether or no they are practical and desirable. Also, do they generate current at small cost? What is the best outfit, and where can I buy one? What is your candid opinion about these outfits for picture shows? I open every day at 2.30, close at 6, open again at 7 and close at 1.30. Have been told that a gasoline engine and a Westinghouse generator is the best combination.

Isolated light plants, properly handled, are giving good results and producing current at from 2½ to 5 cents per k. w., though at present high prices of gasoline those figures would doubtless be boosted to some extent. But, always provided you handle the machine intelligently, you certainly should get current from it at decidedly less than your present rate. With power at 10½ cents per k. w., it should pay you to install an outfit. Excellent reports are had of the Universal Electric Generating Set, advertised in this paper. The machine is well made and, from all reports, is delivering the goods. If it is big enough for your needs I think you will do well to investigate its points of excellence and ask for full information as to the k. w. output per gallon of gasoline. The machine itself is well made. I have personally examined it and can vouch for that fact. Whether you would want a 110 or a 60-volt machine depends on conditions, but with a 110-volter you would need much larger capacity since you would be compelled to waste a large percentage of the power developed in resistance. If you can get along with the 60-volter it will be much cheaper in operation. The combination you name is good, provided you get the right kind of generator, but selecting a generator for your class of work is a very nice job. Personally I would prefer an outfit made for the purpose. The Universal ought, I would suppose, to be big enough for your needs. Write them (see advertisement for address) giving number amperes used at arc, number of lamps and wattage of each lamp; also number and size of motors and kind and voltage of present current. But remember this: no matter how good the outfit you may get, it must have careful, intelligent care. You can't buy an engine and generator, set it down on the floor of a leaky shack, squirt some cheap oil at it occasionally and expect to get results. The Uinversal is very simple and easily handled but those things, necessary to be done must be done at the appointed time and done right.

A Live Wire Free Lance.

Leonard H. Roos, a live Canadian boy, writes us upon a neat letterhead, with cut out openings on one side just the size of a frame, attached to which, so that they may be viewed through the opening, are five different samples cut from some of the motion pictures which he has made. They are exquisitely toned and tinted, and he has every right to be proud of the samples thus exhibited.

He sends a drawing which is here reproduced and writes us as follows: "What has become of the correspondence club? That was certainly a great idea you started, but why not keep it up? I know that I enjoyed reading letters of some of the boys who have written to me, and I wish that more of the boys would send in things of interest in their work to be published in the department. I, for one, would like to hear what the other chaps are doing."

We are always glad to hear from Mr. Roos, as he has written a number of times and always has something interesting to say.

The correspondence club seems to be an intermittent sort of thing. Sometimes in one week a dozen or more letters will come in asking to be enrolled in the correspondence club, and then a month will pass with hardly a request. Yet it is evident from a number of letters received that quite a number of the boys have found interesting correspondents among those whose names have been published.

It has given me great pleasure lately to meet over one hundred of the readers of this department who are now enlisted as members of the photographic section of the Signal Corps, and to find that a large number of them had note books in which they had preserved clippings and formulas from this department. Some of them told me that, although they had never written, they had always followed the doings of the other boys with great interest and would like to know more of what is being done by other fellow-craftsmen.

The department is always glad to hear from the boys and to publish anything of general interest that may be sent in.

This is an invitation to any of you who see this to sit down and write to the department about some of the interesting things which you are doing. Now, don't be backward in coming forward.

Tinting Motion Picture Film by Means of Colloidal Inorganic Salts.

(Communication from Eastman Research Laboratories.)

Certain inorganic compounds such as the ferrocyanides of iron and uranium, lead, sulfide, etc., when precipitated in gelatine in the collodial condition are highly colored and transparent, and advantage can be taken of this fact for the tinting of lantern slides and motion picture film. For a blue tint, the film is first immersed in a 1 per cent. solution of potassium ferricyanide and finally washed. The depth of tint obtained varies with the concentration of the ferric alum, the time of immersion, the time of rinsing, and the temperature of the solutions,, but is practically independent of the concentration of the ferricyanide. Uranium ferrocyanide (orange) and lead sulfide (brown) tints may be obtained in a similar manner. By precipitating a mixture of iron and uranium ferrocyanides in suitable proportion, tints intermediate between blue and dark orange may be obtained. Any tint may be duplicated within narrow limits, while the wearing qualities of the film are not affected by the process. The tints are stable to light, though the iron and uranium ferrocyanides are soluble in alkali.

An Optical Printer.

The ingenious device illustrated below is a printer for printing from a standard size motion picture negative on to a smaller film used by one of the many small home projecting machines upon the market.

It projects the image from the negative film upon the small positive film in the printer at the left. By its use positives for use in a home projector printed from any standard negative; or a dupe negative may be made on the small-sized film from any standard size print.

The two movements, that of the small size and the standard size, are connected to one shaft so that they move in absolute synchronism. It is made adjustable so that the entire frame or picture upon the standard negative may be condensed upon the small film, or if desired, any particular portion of the standard negative may be enlarged or reduced upon a small film. Such a machine made with both heads for standard size film might be used to great advantage for trick work or for changing the frame line on ordinary standard size film. The news weeklies which use films from many different cameras of different frame line would find such an apparatus particularly valuable because the frame line of the negative would not make any difference as to its location upon the positive, a slight change in the adjustment of the printing head being all that is necessary to shift the frame line to any desired position.

The very excellent and complicated machine work on this particular instrument was done by Mr. G. J. Badgley of New Rochelle, New York, who is at present completing a design of a very ingenious camera for use in taking motion pictures from aeroplanes.

Music for the Picture

Notice.

QUESTIONS regarding music, addressed to this department, will receive a carbon copy of the department's reply by mail, when 4 cents are enclosed. Special replies by mail on matter which cannot be answered in this column $1.00.

"Music Service for the Exhibitor."

A WELL-KNOWN producer confessed to us the other day that he did not know the difference between a score, a setting or a cue sheet, and supplemented the remark by saying he did not believe one producer in ten knew what he was paying for in the matter of the much-abused term, "Music Service for the Exhibitor."

For the information of exhibitor, producer and orchestra leaders, we will try to classify specifically all forms of music pertinent to "Fitting the Pictures."

MUSICAL SCORE—A musical score is a compilation of either original or standard music, prepared in synchrony with each and every dominant scene of the picture, carrying throughout themes and counter-themes to denote the characters portrayed on the screen. Each number should be in key sequence and arranged in such a manner that there be no obvious break during the playing of the entire score. They must of necessity be short, and for that reason requires varied orchestral treatment to avoid monotony. Many occasions arise where there are two characters in the foreground, and two themes must be blended together, showing two emotions at one and the same time. Frequently a standard number must be changed in tempo and rhythm to convey the proper idea. Special legitimate effects sometimes must be arranged by the use of the orchestral instruments themselves to obviate shoddiness. All these things call for superb orchestration and a thorough knowledge of instrumentation. A real musical score requires almost as much ingenuity, careful thought and untiring efforts as an opera score, for in every way it meets the same obstacles, which must be overcome. The scores for "The Birth of a Nation," "Ramona," "Civilization," "Intolerance," or "Peer Gynt," will live and continue to be classed as epochs in the picture industry. These are prepared only for the big run features.

MUSICAL SETTING—A musical setting is comprised of standard selections placed loosely, in rotation, in a folder, for the purpose of fitting a picture. There is no synchrony, and because of that fact, no key sequence is considered, for it may happen that where the break occurs the key will fit the following number perfectly. For practical purposes one theme only is used, although it is sometimes feasible to use two. This music cannot possibly fit every foot of the picture, but can hold the atmosphere in a general way and carry the picture. These are used in every theater and are frequently prepared by the aid of cue sheets.

MUSICAL CUE SHEET—A musical cue sheet is a prepared list of cues, indicating where the music should be changed, and suggesting certain selections which are suitable for use, with the tempo and character of each noted to allow for substitution. The approximate time is shown, and sometimes a three-word description of the scene to be fitted is given. Cue sheets are distributed by the picture producers for the benefit of the exhibitor who cannot procure his film in time to see it before the first performance, and are good, bad, or indifferent, according to the ability displayed by the writer of them.

MUSICAL SUGGESTION SYNOPSIS is a concise musical review of the picture with suggested numbers that may be used as a theme. Atmosphere, period of time, location and big moments are noted, and frequently selections are mentioned for use in the climaxes.

At the present time of writing, the above is a complete classification of music for the pictures. The rapid growth of the industry, bringing with it new ideas, may cause changes to be made in the method of musical presentation, but now we can only rely on four forms denoting picture accompaniment.

The importance of music as an adjunct to the picture has been but recently recognized, and there is considerable confusion in the minds of producer, exhibitor and layman regarding its classification. By definition, example and qualifications, we have tried to standardize music for the pictures in order that the producer will not be further mulcted by unscrupulous arrangers, and exhibitors will know what they are getting when called by its proper name.

Scores and settings are frequently regarded as one, and the same thing and capital is made out of it by those fakers who throw together loose music and demand score prices for it. In many respects the two are alike; they are played as an accompaniment and must fit the picture. The difference lies in the necessary qualifications required by each.

A score must follow the picture minutely, foot by foot, as an accompaniment follows the voice. It must be in perfect synchrony. By this we mean that if a dominant scene has a footage of 150 feet, and the film projection calls for 15 minutes to the thousand feet, the appropriate selections should run exactly two minutes and fifteen seconds. Naturally the number of measures required will be governed by the tempo selected. An adagio or andante sostenuto number will not be as long as an allegre or allegretto. The following examples, indicative of the time duration of fifteen seconds, will show a marked difference, and by using these as a basis, one can readily understand how an entire score can be in absolute synchrony.

A score must have key sequence—in other words, each successive number must be in a relative key to the one immediately preceding it. As students of harmony well know, there are five relatives to every key, so the task is not so great as would appear on the surface. Besides using the legitimate relatives, it is permissible to use an enharmonic key, or one which begins with a note common in the chord of the preceding key; for example: Going from the key of F to the key of A major, we find A is the third of the chord in the key of F, and is also the tonic of the key of A. The best results are obtained when they finish and begin.

At (A) you will notice the upper A is held in common, the F falls one-half tone, and the C rises one-half tone, while at (B) these progressions similarly obtain, but in different voices.

The following examples of enharmonic keys are the only ones available and must be used judiciously lest discord appear in the change:
1—5 flats, key of Db, has for its enharmonic 7 sharps, key of C sharp
2—6 flats, key of Gb, has for its enharmonic 6 sharps, key of F sharp
6—7 flats, key of Cb, has for its enharmonic 5 sharps, key of B and vice versa.

The following table of relative flat keys is worked out in the sharp keys in exactly the same manner.

Given the key of		C
Relatives	G E min.	A min.	F D min.
Key		F
Relatives	C A min.	D min.	Bb G min.
Key		Bb
Relatives	F D min.	G min.	Eb C min.
Key		Eb
Relatives	Bb G min.	C min.	Ab F min.
Key		Ab
Relatives	Eb C min.	F min.	Eb Bb min.
Key		Db
Relatives	Ab F min.	Bb min.	Gb Eb min.
Key		Gb
Relatives	Db min.	Eb min.	Cb min.
Key		Cb
Relatives	Gb Eb min.	Ab min.	E major Db min.

Our contention is not that these keys should be used in sequence, and selection made with this in mind only. By no means. A number must first be selected for its suitability alone, and then if it does fall within the rule for key sequence, it should be transposed to a key relative to the preceding number. Before deciding the key for transposition, the orchestration should be carefully scrutinized lest a key be selected that will carry some instrument out of its range. This would be calamitous and make the work of transposition absolutely abortive. Where there appears to be no key suitable for transposition, it is better to write an original modulation for approximately a fifteen-second length. This should be tacked on the end of the preceding number and not used at the cue for the next number. Of course, allowance should be made for it in the timing.

The qualifications required for a musical setting are by no means so exacting, nor do they entail such minute detail or painstaking effort. It must fit the picture in a general way and portray the big emotions depicted. No special orchestral arranging is necessary, no blending of themes is possible, nor is key sequence counted upon to work out satisfactorily. Synchrony is not attempted; the principal problem is simply to fit the picture with standard music. This form of musical accompaniment is not a score and must not be classed as such.

Turning from the playable music to the suggestion sheets, remarkable as it may seem, we frequently see producing companies advertise their cue sheets as scores. This is misleading to the exhibitor and his orchestra leader, and is most detrimental to the company itself.

The difference between the cue sheet suggestions and the musical suggestion synopsis is again the difference between detail and generality. In both cases the picture must be seen in order to suggest proper music, but when a cue sheet must be prepared, it entails the use of a stop-watch to catch the time, a stenographer to get the titles, and an assistant to note the effects. When the data has been obained, each number must be selected with care, looking to its suitability, and practicability, for small combinations, as well as for its probable existence in the library of the average orchestra leader. Of course, the tempo being given, he has a chance to substitute if he deems it wise, and this is made easy because of the given time duration. Cue sheets are sent out when no score is prepared, and from them the leader can compile his musical setting.

Many leaders prefer to disregard cue sheets for some reason or other, and yet they require some idea of the picture they must fit. These fellows used to read the reviews of the pictures in question and thus learn its general trend. As an aid to this class of musicians, the musical suggestion synopsis was adopted and has received many high commendations for its brevity and conciseness. It is also an aid to those leaders who have been neglected by the exchange, or whose cue sheet has been delayed in the mails. It suggests the music required in a general way and leaves to the judgment of the orchestra conductor the proper presentation of his picture.

Music service in any form is absolutely essential to the up-to-date theater, and every producer should see to it that he is getting the service he is paying for under its proper classification.

Music at the Rialto.

During the week commencing March 3 we visited the "Temple of the Motion Picture," and as far as a critic is permitted to enjoy anything, we drank our fill of good music.

The overture, "Capriccio Italien," by Tschaikowsky, was immense. Hugo Reisenfeld has never done a better bit of conducting. His tempi were most accurate, and his interpretation showed a thorough grasp of the composer's intention.

Miss Annie Rosmer sang "The Bird Song" from "I Pagliacci," but failed to give it birdlike notes. She was decidedly ill at ease and possessed the amateurish habit of beating time, not only with her feet, but legs, body, head and shoulder swayed rhythmatically. As a dance the song proved interesting. Not satisfied with one selection from this opera of Leoncavallo, M. Desire La Salle rendered the Prologue with a beautiful quality of tone. His voice is exceptionally good and there was no need of flunking the A flat in the finish. Probably nervousness forced him to take the F instead. As this is not traditional it spoils the finale and loses for him much applause that he really deserves.

We could not understand the inconsistency of costuming the lady and then having the Prologue sung in evening dress. Why not have the entire performance a costume affair since the Rialto chorus also appeared in the peasant regalia seen in the streets of Italy.

This number, "Funiculi-Funicula," was well put over. The singing was distinctly enunciated and the costumes atmospheric. As a sequel to the picture "One More American," featuring George Beban, it was most appropriate. It is just this little artistic touch that makes the Rialto so popular, and there is no question that Dr. Reisenfeld's directing has its drawing power. In fact, he is too good. When his assistant takes the baton the difference is so apparent the audience feels sorry for the poor fellow.

The feature was well fitted, but lacked the American-Italian flavor and seemed a bit "choppy." The muted trumpet call of "The Star Spangled Banner" was a bright idea, but when on one occasion the player fell asleep and missed his cue, the attention of the audience was forcibly called to it by the snapping fingers of the conductor. Better lose the effect than detract from the picture in this manner. Take the offender out after the performance and "shoot him at sunrise" if you wish, but don't chastise the patrons and belittle the player.

Musical Suggestion Synopsis.

ANN'S FINISH (Mutual—Five Reels)—No theme necessary.

This picture is dramatic. Open with a couple of light melodious numbers, then follow with misteriosos and dramatic tension music. You will need a few agitatos and a couple of good "hurrys," a sad number just before closing, and a bright selection to finish. Your "fill-ins" must be big to carry the picture. Cue sheet can be obtained from the Mutual exchange.

BELOVED TRAITOR, THE (Goldwyn—Five Reels)—Theme for the Heroine—Andantino. Suggest "Extase D'Amour"—Roze; "A Dream"—Borch, or "A Deep Sea Romance"—Lake.

The story deals with the depth of love for a man. There are no dramatic moments in the picture. One agitato is needed for the rescue of the father from the sea, and would suggest "Scotch Poem"—MacDowell, as most fitting. The entire selection of "The Pearl Fishers" can be used nicely. A Valse Caprice is needed in the last reel for the ballroom scene. Pastorales will fit many situations showing exteriors. Cue sheet can be obtained from the Goldwyn exchange.

GIRL WITH THE CHAMPAGNE EYES (Fox—Five Reels)—Theme—A Melodious pastorale. Suggest "A Shepherd's Tale"—Nevin; "Nymphs and Fairies"—Bemberg, or "Murmuring Zephyrs"—Jensen.

You will need plaintive music in abundance, some dramatic tensions and agitatos, with a few misteriosos. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Fox exchange.

GREAT ADVENTURE, THE (Pathe—Five Reels)—Theme for Heroine—Moderato. Suggest "Adieu"—Karganoff; "Serenade"—Chaminade, or "Starlight"—Zulueta.

A comedy-drama requiring light treatment. An agitato is needed for the rescue scene. Some light opera selections will also fit in nicely. Cue sheet can be obtained from the Pathe exchange.

HEIRESS FOR A DAY (Triangle—Five Reels)—Theme for Heroine—Andante. Suggest "Elysuim"—Speaks; "Lullaby"—Foley, or "Extase"—Ganne.

The music should be light—two popular waltzes, two popular two-steps, and a fox trot are needed. In the last reel note the ballroom scene and a bit of dramatic action. Cue sheet can be obtained from the Triangle exchange.

LIGHT WITHIN, THE (Petrova—Five Reels)—Theme for Heroine—Andante Moderato. Suggest "Arioso"—Frey; "Meditation"—Delmas, or "Romance"—Wieniawsky.

The picture is big, and needs careful treatment. Pathetics abound, and dramatic music is much needed. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Petrova Picture Co.

MARRIAGE BUBBLE, THE (Triangle—Five Reels)—Theme—Andante. Suggest "Reverie" — Vieuxtemp; "Romance" — Rubenstein, or "Souvenir"—Geehl.

Melody is needed in this picture. Two dramatic selections and a pathetic will fit nicely. Note the fire scene in the last reel. Cue sheet can be obtained from the Triangle exchange.

ROUGH LOVER, THE (Bluebird—Five Reels)—Theme for Helen—Dainty Moderato. Suggest "In Poppyland"—Albers; "Eleanor"—Deppen, or "Roses and Memories"—Arthur.

Light music will fit the picture with a sprinkling of weird misterioso stuff for the seance scenes. Cue sheet can be obtained from the Universal exchange.

SHOES THAT DANCED (Triangle—Five Reels)—Theme—Andante Suggest "Intermezzo"—Whelpley; "Heart's Desire"—Losey, or "Love Song"—Flegler.

Light music, fox trots, two-steps, popular songs, waltz intermezzos and a few light misteriosos will fit the picture. Cue sheet can be obtained from the Triangle exchange.

SIX SHOOTING ANDY (Fox—Five Reels)—Theme for Hero—Moderato. Suggest "Legend"—Friml; "Romance"—Mericanto, or "Serenade"—Liandon.

Another "Western" atmosphere effusion. Treat it with breezy stuff. Many "hurrys" are needed, a few galops and one or two misteriosos. A few dramatic selections will fit the last two reels. Cue sheet can be obtained from the Fox exchange.

SOUL IN TRUST, A (Triangle—Five Reels)—Theme—Adagio. Suggest "The Stars Are Calling"—Stern; "The Swan"—Saint Saens, or "Inspiration"—Edward.

Note the storm in the first reel and use "The Tempest," by Grieg, if possible. The music must be heavy throughout the entire picture. Many dramatics, pathetics and a few agitatos are needed. Cue sheet can be obtained from the Triangle exchange.

WEAVER OF DREAMS, THE (Metro-Rolfe—Five Reels)—Theme for Heroine—Valse Lento. Suggest "Just a Little Love"—Silesu; "Waters of Venice"—Von Tilzer; "Doucement"—Roberts, or "Destiny Waltz"—Baynes.

The story has a pathetic side to it and will need some semi-heart-throb stuff to accompany it. Where Dana tells her uncle of her dreams use fantastic music, such as "Dance Fantastic" or "March of the Dwarf"—Grieg. A couple of dramatic pieces only are needed. Cue sheet can be obtained from the Metro exchange.

WILD WOMEN (Universal—Five Reels)—No theme necessary.

The picture opens with Western stuff, then you will need Hawaiian music for the cabaret. Some misteriosos and "hurrys" follow, with a big moment when the ship's crew mutiny and the ship takes fire. Later we have South Sea Isle atmosphere, and Oriental or Hawaiian music is needed. Cue sheet can be obtained from the Universal exchange.

WOOING OF PRINCESS PAT, THE (Blue Ribbon—Five Reels)—Theme for Heroine—Allegretto. Suggest "Garden of Love"—Ascher; "A Little Story"—Lack, or "Nodding Tulip"—Trinkaus.

The music needed will be light stuff—waltz intermezzos, melodious serenades, caprices and polkas. Note the court scene in the fourth reel and select a processional march for it, such as "Swedish Coronation"—Svendsen, or "Hail America"—Drumm. The last reel calls for a little melodramatic music. Cue sheet can be obtained from the Vitagraph exchange.

Rambles 'Round Filmtown

With WALTER K. HILL.

SCENARIO writers have at least one friend who thinks of their future welfare and would have these deserving adjuncts to the screen take their place with the playwrights of the stage. This booster for the scenarioist is the editor of the Omaha (Neb.) News, who lately printed, as a leading editorial, the following appreciation of the craft. Here are the capition and the editorial:

"Why Not Feature Scenario Writers?"

"When the movie program opens the spectators have an opportunity to learn all about the feature except the name of the scenario writer whose brain fathered the film in the first place. Even the camera man is judged more deserving of a place in the title footage.

"Spoken drama has its recognized and reliable writers, both highbrow and lowbrow, who have a following that insures patronage. But the screen has as yet developed no scenario writer known to the general public whose work is its own recommendation. Isn't there an opportunity for producers to broaden the interest in their product by giving credit to the movie-wright? Wouldn't just this sort of advertising draw a better class of workmen into scenario writing?

"Producers admit they are deliberately flooding the screen with stars. They wish to introduce enough competent players to the public so that no handful of players will be able to monopolize the market and demand fabulous salaries.

"Not many years ago plot and characterization were so crude that scenario authorship did not warrant pride in workmanship, but many recent films show real quality. To be recognized as a popular movie-wright would be a distinction.

"We will continue to have our favorite stars and our recognized producers of quality films just as we have our Bernhardts and Belascos. There seems to be reason to hope for a Barrie, a Cohan, a Shaw, and a Walter as movie-wrights."

Passing Eve the Apples.

Sylvia Arnold, who made her motion picture debut with Bushman and Bayne in "Red, White and Blue Blood," has been engaged to play Miss Bayne's sister in "Breaking Into Eden." Miss Arnold is the daughter of a Metro exhibitor, George Jacobs of the Paramount Theater, Newark, N. J., and inherits her talent from her parents, who have been in the theatrical business for years.

Anything to Oblige a Friend.

Rialto-Rivoli Rothapfel, giving consent to use the letter in the first sentence, wrote to Metro a lengthy protest against Mr. and Mrs. Drew retiring from the screen in favor of the spoken drama. Turning over the pages of the same papers in which R.-R. R.'s letter appeared we find the obliging Vitagraph anticipating the plaint by offering "Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew in the Vitagraph comedies that made them famous." That's what we call the proper spirit. But we can't quite understand how Albert E. Smith found out that R.-R. R. had written that letter to R. A. Rowland.

Somebody's Kidding Somebody.

Heard two traveling men talking in a hotel lobby about "The Birth of a Nation." One said he saw it in Omaha and did not like it. At a Porkless Luncheon.

A certain film man, well known to the trade, has discovered that it doesn't pay to "kid" people who earn their living by being clever. One day last week he had lunch with a party that included Tom Bret, the scenario editor. At the close of the meal he took out his watch, looked at it, and said to Bret:

"Tom, I must leave here in one minute. Now, tell me everything you know." Without batting an eyelash—just like that—Bret came back:

"I'm sorry, but one minute isn't long enough for me to cast all my pearls."

C. A. ("Doc") Willat is spending very little of his time on Broadway. Despite the war-time reductions in train schedules, he is taking the fame of Technicolor to exhibitors in every important city east of Pittsburg—and will soon start West.

Special Notice to Exhibitors.

Don't get uneasy and restless when you see a stranger enter your house, after stealthily buying a ticket, and slipping it to the doorkeeper without announcing who he is or why he comes. Very likely he or she will be nothing more than one of Universal's "Secret Service" men, coming in to see how the public like the picture you are showing.

The Rambler deems it a duty to acquaint exhibitors with the names of some of these "Secret Service" agents, taking it for granted that the men we have in mind will continue the "secret service" they were identified with in connection with Universal's past activities. Here are some brief descriptions, and some names, proving that exhibitors have nothing to worry about in the promised nation-wide gum-shoeing of Universal's "Secret Service" men.

That fine, upstanding, manly chap in the uniform of a Naval Lieutenant is very likely to be Wells Hawks. The boyish, smooth shaven, Troy-collar looking laddie may be "Hurry Home" Van Loan. The fellow with the rubber-rimmed glasses will probably be Frank Payne. Doubtless the man under the "two-gallon" silk hat will be Si Goodfriend. A pair of sleuths, of about even height and build, disguised behind a couple of motor-shoes with glass in them, will possibly be Sam Palmer and Kenneth MacDougal. Watch out for a chap in a Stetson "soldier" hat—that's sure to be "Bobby" Burns, if he hasn't taken "Eagle's Wings" overseas with the Irish regulars.

New England showmen may well rest easiest of all—for Eddie Mullen has that territory, and Eddie's mind is mostly on his baby. Exhibitors along the Jersey shore are besought, in all earnestness, not to worry when a tall chap with a leatherette manuscript-case enters their portals—that'll be Jerry Wilson, guaranteed harmless. Will Page is too busy with "Chu Chin Chow" to devote much time to "secret service"; but he may want a "rest period" once in a while. L. E. Letendre makes a business of going to picture shows; and he's a Holyoke Frenchman, above suspicion.

Little Rosie Schulsinger may happen in once in a while, but she's too nice a girl to disturb any man's show by asking her seat-neighbors how they like Universal pictures. Charles Wisner Barrell may be "among those present"—but we doubt it. The gentleman with the blonde cane draped over his arm is Raymond Cavanaugh and the pyramid towering above him will be Burton Rice.

Others who may or may not be doing Universal "secret service" will possibly include numerous other publicity men who have, at one time or another, performed mimeograph service for Universal. For instance: Phil Mindil, Edward C. White, Bob Doman, Harvey Gates, Hector Struckmans, John Grey and the Original and Only George Universal Stevenson. Is anybody missing?

When Pete Schmid, publicist for Famous Players-Lasky, made his cross-country journey last summer as principal missioner for Douglas Fairbanks he widely increased his already great popularity. "Although he was an American,
His name was Schmid,
And he was eating sauerkraut
And drinking Pilsner beer,
And was feeding his pet dachshund
Pretzels.
The cold sweat stood out on his brow,
For he had just realized that the tube of glue
He had been carrying in his hip pocket
Had burst,
And he was stuck fast to his chair.
He groaned in anguish, as he said to himself,
'Good Lord, if they play the "Star-Spankled Banner"
I'm lost.'"

Tragedy in the Silent Drama.

Jack had left his Western home with a minstrel show. He was a good "hoofer" and his clogs landed him on Broadway, and his fame got him "into the movies." Like hundreds of other boys he neglected to write home and tell his mother all this, and when she saw his name "headlined" at the local picture show she went, for the first time in her life, to "see the pictures."

The mother arrived while the film was moving, and as she groped her way down the darkened aisle, Jack danced onto the screen. For an instant the mother paused, gazing in wonder at the picture. Then she shouted:

"Jack, you slacker, quit your dancin' around and go enlist."

She wondered why her boy kept on "clogging" and did not answer.

She was still wondering as they led her from the theater.

And as she half turned for a last look over her shoulder Jack was still "hoofing."

In proof he pointed to the many successful plays and "best sellers" that have been "flivvers" on the screen, and insisted that the scenario was to blame in almost every instance. Pressed for further particulars he handed out the following recipe for making a "flivver":

"Take a successful novel or play, add SOME salary of the director, soak your credit for a star, and season with costly sets, cast, and costumes. Now put all through a scenario-grinder, stir in the mushroom adaptation, continuity leaks, and onion subtitles, mix in what brains you have, and serve on a lost bank-roll."

Lieutenant Wickersham (left) and Lieutenant Hess (right), of the 158th, are seated at the feet of Theda Bara, having been secretly photographed during a "rest" period while William Fox's production of "Salome" was in work on the West Coast. It seems as how 4,000 members of the 158th had gone to the polls and voted as to who should be their "Godmother."

We are informed by the Fox mimeograph that the election was tremendously exciting. Every press agent in Filmtown was represented by from one to seven candidates. The "Godmother" system of space-stealing was going strong. The Leslyemasons, Gurleywelches and Jimhoffs were falling for it better than anything that had yet been used to hook up the World War with the film business.

From the time the polls opened until long after they closed soldiers surged up to the ballot boxes and cast their first "Godmother" vote. When the ballots of the registered and duly qualified votes had been counted it was discovered, to the great joy of the Fox publicity department, that Theda Bara had received exactly 3,999 votes. One ballot had been defectively marked by an excited soldier. The name he had written was "Bead Thara"—so that one was counted for the Fox screen queen to make it unanimous.

The two Lieutenants were commissioned to personally bear to Miss Bara the report that she had been elevated to the fast-growing ranks of "Godmothers." Miss Bara, following the bent of female politicians, wanted to immediately "set 'em up" to the boys. But she was promptly notified that the law forbid treating the soldiers of Uncle Sam with either red liquor, light wine or lager beer.

So the best compromise she could think of was to show the two Lieutenants the grapes from which table d'hote drinks are, sometimes, made. The cameraman had cunningly devised a blind from which he "shot" the soldiers and the famous vampire. Look at the Lieutenants, and see if you can guess what thoughts are passing through their minds.

Just at a hazard, Lieutenant Right may be thinking: "Well, being 'Godmothered' by a screen queen is all in a soldier's day's work."

Possibly Lieutenant Left is thinking: "Wonder what mother would say if she knew I was being 'Godmothered' by a screen queen."

Lieutenant Left, by the way, has the stare of a man who is thinking of something apart from the noble art of space-stealing. Or is he so strongly resisting temptation that he will not even look upon the grape?

Ticket Bill Up in Bay State Legislature

Introducer of Annual Censorship Measure, However, Says He Will Wait for End of War Before Resuming Operations.

WITH only one theatrical bill before this Legislature the moving picture men of Massachusetts are not worrying over additional restrictive measures this year. The only bill now at the State House is one to regulate the price of tickets.

That hardy annual—the censorship bill—did not make its appearance at this session. The usual author of the bill in past years makes the explanation that owing to war time legislation he did not introduce the bill at this session.

"Next year," declared this representative, "I will have a censorship bill which will deal with the situation as I believe it should be dealt with. Since the war broke out the moving picture interests have shown a fine spirit of patriotism. They have used their lobbies for government advertising, they have let Four Minute speakers in the interest of government propaganda occupy their stages, and their films, especially the weekly news reels, have been very inspiring in their patriotic subjects.

"In view of the patriotism of the moving picture exhibitors I believe they are deserving of a rest from censorship this year. But it is to be noted that the producers who have been the cause of censorship in the past are this year devoting their energies to producing patriotic films. This is commendable. But I fear that with the end of the war, if it ever comes, there will be a return to the objectionable films which in the past have raised so much opposition to the moving picture houses. I am awaiting such a turn of events to press my censorship bill again."

The bill to regulate the sale of tickets is House Bill No. 729 and was introduced on the petition of Frank W. Thayer. It reads as follows:

"Section 1—All tickets to theaters and other places of amusement shall state thereon the price at which said tickets are to be sold.

"Section 2—No person shall sell or offer for sale in this Commonwealth a ticket for any theater or other place of amusement in excess of the amount stated on said ticket.

"Section 3—Any person violating any of the provisions of this act shall be punished by a fine nor not less than ten nor more than one thousand dollars for each offense."

Cheaper Ticket Tax Is Increased

Province of Quebec Now Charges Two Cents Excise on All Theater Admissions to Thirty-four Cents.

ACCORDING to Montreal exhibitors, the Quebec Provincial government has abolished the use of the one-cent war tax tickets, thus raising the special tax assessment tickets that cost up to 35 cents from 1 cent to 2 cents. Government representatives recently took back the rolls of one-cent tax tickets and distributed the two-centers in their stead. Thus the Government jumped the tax 100 per cent. on all low-priced admissions and gave the people of moderate means another jolt. The tax on higher-priced seats remain as before: Three-cent tax on tickets valued at 35 cents to 74 cents; 5 cents on tickets from 75 cents to $1.49, and 10 cents for tickets $1.50 and higher.

Montreal exhibitors were also "advised" to go easy with the admissions of children to their theaters, the warning coming from police officials after the newspapers had published the statements of moral reformers regarding juvenile delinquency. The theater managers are now requiring every child to bring a note from mother. The manner in which these messages are presented indicates that most Montreal parents think that the picture show is a proper place for their offspring, regardless of the whinings of the uplifters.

Deitrich Leases Plimpton Studio

De Luxe Pictures, Featuring Doris Kenyon, Will Be Made in Westchester—Lloyd Lonergan Studio Manager.

THEODORE C. DEITRICH, president of De Luxe Pictures, Inc., has leased the Plimpton Studio at Yonkers, where "The Street of Seven Stars" will be made by Doris Kenyon at the head of her own company. The studio is one of the best in Westchester County and has recently been completely outfitted by Horace G. Plimpton with every requisite for the production of high-class motion pictures.

Actual work on "The Street of Seven Stars" will commence about March 11. Together with her director, John B. O'Brien, Hugh Thompson, her leading man, and ten other members of the cast, Miss Kenyon left March 3 for Lake Placid, where the week will be spent making exteriors. During their stay in the north the entire company will be the guests of the Lake Placid Club. Other exteriors will be made later in the south, probably in New Orleans.

Work in the studio will start on March 18. Mr. Deitrich has engaged Lloyd Lonergan, formerly vice-president of the Thanhouser Company and for many years associated with that organization, as studio manager. E. C. McCarthy, recently of the Pathe forces, will be his assistant.

Many Sales on "Tarzan of the Apes"

Rights to Orient, Japan, Australia and South America Have Been Disposed Of.

THE foreign sales on "Tarzan of the Apes" are being made as readily as the bookings on that picture in this country. D. P. Howells, of 220 West Forty-second street, purchased the rights to the picture for India, Burma, China, Japan, Straits Settlements and Dutch East Indies. The release in this territory is dated for early in June. The story has already been done into the Dutch language and the book and story have permeated well into a great deal of the country under Mr. Howell's contract.

A. Uno, representing the largest Japanese buyers, in turn has secured the Japanese rights.

Joseph R. Miles and Emil R. Manheimer, acting as a corporation, have purchased from the National concern the entire South American, West Indian and Central American rights, taking in the British, Danish and Dutch West Indies, the three Guianas and Cuba. It is the intention of Miles and Manheimer to send J. Parker Reid through their territories and propel the production as a special feature in cities such as Rio de Janeiro, Buenos Aires, Valparaiso, Montevideo, Santiago, Callao, Caracas and Bogota.

Through J. D. Williams the concern of Millard Johnston, known as Australasian Film Company, purchased the Australian and New Zealand rights, and it is understood they, too, will exploit the picture as a special feature in the higher class theaters of the island continent.

It is contemplated now that Harry Reichenbach, who conducted all the activities of the Tarzan production, including all sales and exhibitions, will go to England and exploit the picture there.

Freuler Retiring Older Prints

Mutual to Remove From Branches All Subjects Not of a Recent Date.

THE Mutual Film Corporation, in execution of President John R. Freuler's policy of "perfect prints," has taken off the market and retired from branch circulation all old subjects beyond a decidedly recent date. This is a move for the elimination of film which does not present the highest and most modern entertainment values to the public.

"While there is much of the film retired which is still capable of earning some rentals from the theaters, we feel that it is the best policy to get it off the market in behalf of the better and newer film in our branches and in behalf of the picture industry in general," observed President Freuler.

"It has come to my attention that some concerns are circulating old releases on a 'give-away and next to nothing' basis as a trade deal aiming at increasing the volume of business on their new film," said President Freuler. "This is a mistake both from the viewpoint of the theater, the individual concern and the industry as a whole.

"One of the serious elements of the condition of overproduction is the fact that it has taken some film too long to die. Money has been spent by distributors to keep film moving and to keep it alive, which should have been sent to the refineries for junk long ago. Every time an old, obsolete picture goes on the screen the art of the motion picture suffers an injustice and the commercial possibilities of the newer and better pictures of today are invaded."

Minister Sounds Call For Sunday Pictures

The Rev. William H. Taylor, of Nashville, Declares for a Reasonable Sunday and the Freedom of the People

THE Rev. William M. Taylor, minister of the First Unitarian Church, of Nashville, Tenn., lectured Sunday evening, March 3, at the Knickerbocker theater in that city on "A Reasonable Sunday," during which he advocated the establishment of moving pictures on Sunday in Nashville. The Knickerbocker, one of the leading uptown moving picture shows, was packed to its 1,500 capacity, and many people were unable to gain admittance. During the afternoon free moving pictures were shown to the audience, and served further to carry out the purpose of the meeting by showing that no harm could come from this class of entertainment.

In opening his talk Dr. Taylor declared that one of the darkest of superstitions of all those embedded in the ecclesiastical tenets and the laws of the land is the idea of making Sunday the coffin of all the other days of the week. The childlike spirit of happiness has been crushed, he said, under the iron heel of Sunday laws, and all humanity is forced to wear a frown where it should wear a smile.

"I shall undertake to prove to you," said Dr. Taylor, "that the ultra-conservative Sunday is overdrawn, that history condemns it, that nature abhors it, that the constitution of the United States ignores it, that Sunday laws are a solemn farce and a burning shame, and that they are a warfare on the rights of man in the interest of modern tradition and ancient despotism.

"Laws restricting the rights of the people on Sunday are contrary to every principle of our national government, and are by right unconstitutional. The constitution of the United States declares, 'No religious test shall be required as a qualification for any office or public trust under the United States.' Congress shall make no laws respecting the establishment of religion or prohibit the free exercise thereof."

Need Sunday Entertainment.

Continuing, Dr. Taylor said, "Nashville will soon double its population through the establishment of the government's great powder plants. Thousands will come from cities where they have enjoyed the privileges of Sunday entertainment, and with the show houses in Nashville closed on Sunday time will drag heavily with them. They will have some kind of pastime entertainment. A clean, wholesome picture is both entertaining and elevating, and is in reach of the poor.

"Even now some of the Nashville young people are on the retrograde morally for lack of innocent diversion on this day. Young men tell me that if Nashville had had Sunday moving pictures in the past they would have been saved from shameful practices which they took up for no other reasons than to break the monotony of Sunday afternoons.

"There is but one thing in the way of Sunday movies in Nashville, and that is the prejudice of some very serious but deluded souls. Surely there could be no minister in Nashville, the Athens of the South, who would be so archaic as to oppose Sunday moving pictures, as some of the ministerial alliances have done in other cities, closing the innocent diversion to the soldiers of our army who have placed themselves on the altar of the nation for the service of democracy. For such meddlesome ministers I have only contempt. I like the spirit of one of Nashville's holiest and most humanitarian ministers who called on me in reference to this matter, saying he agreed with me that the people should be entertained on Sunday, but thought the churches ought to furnish this entertainment. I replied to him that even if the churches did furnish this entertainment, the people would not feel free to enjoy it, since they had been forbidden for so long a time to laugh in the church.

Interested in the People's Freedom.

"I am not interested in any picture theater or other business, but I am interested in the freedom of the people. When Patrick Henry said 'Give me liberty or give me death,' he was not simply giving expression to a preference, but was expressing the law of life. No flower can bloom, no tree can bear fruit, no bird can plume itself and sing its love songs, no vegetables, insects nor animals survive life without liberty, nor can man blossom and bear the fruits of a spiritual life under repressions."

The sentiment in Nashville at this time is at the boiling point in favor of Sunday moving pictures. There is talk of a citizens' mass meeting to draw plans and resolutions to present to the city officials with a view of having the moving picture theaters open in Nashville on Sunday. From present indications it looks as if the pictures will come.

Sunday pictures continue to run in Memphis and Chattanooga, both cities of which naturally come under the same state laws as Nashville. The "open for charity" basis prevails in Memphis, but in Chattanooga regular admission prices are paid. Thousands of soldiers quartered at Fort Oglethorpe was the prime reason for the Chattanooga theaters opening on Sunday, and the same situation will exist at Nashville with several thousand employees in the city working on the government's $250,000,000 powder and projectile plant, with some 20,000 or more men with their families coming to Nashville.

MINISTERS VISIT AMERICAN LABORATORY.

The graduates of this spring's output of ministers in the various theological colleges are going to take a sensible view of motion pictures, for the majority of them are picture fans. The fact was brought out during a recent visit of a party of fifty graduates of McCormack's Theological Seminary in Chicago, when they were the guests of the American Film Company recently. The young men showed great interest when they were being taken through the plant and shown the technical processes of the making of pictures.

"Get acquainted with the exhibitor and his problems," the ministers were told by Richard R. Nehle, general manager of the American. "Find out just what good pictures mean and the needs of entertainment of your community. Get it firmly fixed in your mind that the motion picture is as much a part of the community as the public schools and then co-operate with your exhibitor to put on good, clean, but virile pictures."

SANTA BARBARA TO BE SHOWN ON SCREEN.

The cameramen of the American Film Company studios at Santa Barbara have prepared a notable film consisting of beauty spots of Santa Barbara, which are to be shown at the prominent picture theaters of California this spring. Among these scenes will be several of the American Film Company studios, with their artistic gardens that are the pride of Santa Barbara citizens, who vie with each other in producing wonderful landscape gardening effects in that city.

Exhibitor at Fault for Ruinous Overhead

So Says Carl Laemmle, Universal Chief, and Tells How Much Money May Be Saved to Industry

FRESH from his recent attacks upon wasteful and extravagant film producers, Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Compnay, has come forward with the direct charge that the exhibitor himself is to blame for much of the ruinous overhead bearing him down. Mr. Laemmle's statement is based upon the results of a tour of observation recently undertaken by Joe Brandt, assistant treasurer of Universal. This trip included the territories from which the loudest exhibitor complaints have been heard. Among the facts laid bare by Mr. Laemmle are:

That hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of films are lying idle and useless upon the shelves of the exchanges, because exhibitors have neglected to return the lithographs and photographs loaned to them for advertising purposes.

That totally unnecessary expense is thrust upon the exchanges as the result of the loss of film cans, reels, leaders, trailers, film cases, straps and reel bands.

That an enormous loss is annually experienced because of carelessness in preparing films for shipment back to exchanges and because of indifference in the matter of taking proper care of mounted paper rented to the exhibitor.

That even greater loss is caused to both exchanges and their accounts as the result of unnecessary and willful delays in returning shows and in forwarding them on certain trains.

"My statement means just what it says," the Universal's chief emphatically declared. "The time has come when mealy-mouthed compliments and pussyfoot praise of all things and all persons connected with the moving picture industry should cease. Instead it is up to every man who has the welfare of industry at heart to take a vigorous smash at anything which menaces its successful existence.

"The other day Mr. Brandt, who had just returned from a tour of some of our exchanges, laid before me his report covering the sources of exchange leakage. I should consider myself as a traitor to the men who helped make Universal —the exhibitors—unless I gave this report the widest publicity.

"Do you know that Universal is annually compelled to shelve thousands of dollars worth of films in excellent condition, simply because some exhibitors make a practice of retaining the advertising matter loaned them? This material is of no earthly use to them after the pictures have been shown, but it is vitally necessary to exhibitors who have still to present these subjects. Naturally, no man will book a production unless he can obtain the necessary advertising props, with the result that after a comparatively limited life these films must go on our shelves.

"While on his tour Mr. Brandt made a special trip to one theater which was reported as being a flagrant offender in this respect. He discovered hundreds of posters lying stacked up in the cellar, while enough photos to fill up a good sized packing case stood in one of the corners. Practically every prominent exchange organization was represented in the advertising thus literally kicked around.

"Thanks to the pride which operators now take in their calling the film butchers in their ranks are gradually growing fewer. There are plenty of them left—and the heartbreaking abuse given so large a percentage of the films sent out from the exchanges will testify.

"Our exchange managers are constantly reporting incidents in which pins, safety pins and even tenpenny nails were made to do the duty of film cement. Some operators apparently run their shows with their eyes shut, because we frequently find sprocket holes ripped for lengths of five and six feet. Still others believe in the value of oil baths for films. And these are the men who would cry loudest if a show were to come to them unexamined. Naturally, film treated to such abuse is unnecessarily shortlived and makes its final trip to the refiners weeks sooner than would otherwise be necessary.

"Mr. Brandt told me of one returned show which was brought to his attention. Apparently anxious to get home in the shortest time, the operator hadn't bothered to finish winding up the film. Instead, he took the thirty feet that still remained unwound and rammed them into the case, piling another reel atop of the heap. This cost us the price of an entire new scene to replace the damaged section and, in addition, caused us to disappoint the exhibitor who was to have run the picture next. In this particular instance, the reel bands came back—tucked away in a corner of the case.

"Not long ago, one of our New York managers told me that at a meeting of the F. I. L. M. Club every exchange man present dwelt upon the apparent impossibility of getting the average exhibitor to see that all the apparatus that goes with the shipping out of a show is returned to the exchange.

"It was the consensus of opinion that the life of a film case was about three weeks—a liberal estimate; reel bands, about two trips; film cans, one week; reels, about four weeks; trailers, about two trips; film cases, two weeks and a half; straps, one and a half trips; these all cost money and must be replaced.

Train Connections Are Important.

"With trains being taken off daily by the Government it is absolutely up to the exhibitor to make every effort to see that our shows are returned to us in good time. The missing of just one train may cause the loss which comes as the result of disappointing a customer. Too many exhibitors are in the habit of retarding this matter of making proper train connections in returning their shows as a matter of small importance. Not until they themselves are held up because of another exhibitor's carelessness do they realize what indifference in this respect means.

"There isn't a manufacturer in business today who wouldn't be tickled to death to give his accounts 100 per cent. perfect service, but the exhibitor simply won't allow it.

"After all, the manufacturer is compelled to make a charge for the rental of his production as will enable him to make a profit. If the cost of doing business is kited because of waste in any department, whether production or distribution, the rental price of the product must go up accordingly.

"The exhibitor," said Mr. Laemmle, "can help us effect a saving that would make even the money that leaks away via the medium of the studios appear small. He can bring this about by merely looking over his house in such a way as would bring to light the evils I have outlined. Making sure that his operator is a competent man will help. Returning his shows and advertising matter will help. Paying particular attention to the manner in which the shows are returned will help.

"Most important of all," the head of Universal concluded, "it would ultimately mean that the exhibitor would be given the benefit of the tremendous saving his co-operation had made possible."

PARALTA PLAYS SETTLE IN NEW QUARTERS.

Paralta Plays, Inc., are now comfortably settled in their new offices on the twelfth floor of the building at 6-8 West Forty-eighth street. After moving from the old quarters at 729 Seventh avenue Paralta was forced to make temporary arrangements due to the fact that the new offices were not yet completed.

In their new home Paralta has the entire twelfth floor as well as a projection room, scenario department, and film vaults which have been erected on the roof. The arrangement of the offices and the connection with the private projection room afford the best possible layout for efficiency and even this will be vastly enhanced within a few months when the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, through which Paralta Plays are being released, will move into the same building and occupy the eleventh floor, which is directly beneath the Paralta offices.

The offices of the Mastercraft Photoplay Corporation are also on the same floor with Paralta in the new building.

JOHNNY HINES SIGNS WITH WORLD.

Johnny Hines, the clever young comedian who made such a hit with Marie Dressler in "Tillie Wakes Up," has signed a long-term contract with World Pictures and will shortly be co-starred in a new production with Madge Evans.

Mr. Hines has played important parts with William Gillette, George M. Cohan and in a number of successful dramatic productions. His first film portrayal of importance was that in which he was featured, "The Cub."

Metro Reaching Out on West Coast

Production Manager and Two Stars Leave New York—Treasurer Engel Now in Los Angeles.

THE departure for the Pacific coast of two Metro stars, with their entire companies, and of a new manager of productions, marks a new era of expansion at Metro's West coast studio. Harold Lockwood and Bert Lytell are the stars in question, and George D. Baker, long a member of Metro's directing staff de luxe, in the New York studio, will supervise all productions made in the West. Mr. Baker is accompanied by his assistant director, Charles Hunt, who has been associated with him ever since his first Metro picture. They will be followed in about a month by William S. Davis, who expects to leave for the Pacific coast as soon as "Breaking Into Eden," the picture starring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, which he is now directing, is completed.

Even the floor space at the Western studio is being increased. The working space has been augmented by 1,400 feet, and a number of mammoth diffusers have been added to the lighting equipment. Good pictures have always been made at the Hollywood studio, but Richard A. Rowland, Metro's president, believes that the result of the new policy of expansion will mean still better pictures. Joseph W. Engel, Metro's treasurer, is now in the West, and is superintending the new arrangements.

Harold Lockwood has just been in New York making arrangements for a long absence, since future Metro-Yorke productions will be made in California and vicinity. His first picture in the Western location will be "Pals First." The Lockwood company has already arrived in California, under the guardianship of Fred J. Balshofer.

Bert Lytell will complete his first Metro screen production, "The Trail to Yesterday," in California, and will stage further productions there. Much of this magnificent production will be photographed in Arizona, where Mr. Lytell and his company have already gone. The picture will be the first photodrama directed by Edwin Carewe since his return to Metro. The Grand Canyon of the Colorado will be the locale of many of the scenes. Mr. Lytell is fortunate in the securing of Anna Q. Nilsson as leading woman. Harry S. Northrup, John A. Smiley, Ernest Maupin, and "Danny" Hogan will be included in Mr. Lytell's supporting cast.

"Treasure," the screen vehicle which Edith Storey will use to follow "The Claim," has already been placed in production at the Hollywood studio. Lew Cody has been engaged as Miss Storey's leading man.

Another West coast production under way is "The Night Riders," with Viola Dana as star. It is a Kentucky story without a feud.

First National's Exchange Equipped

New York Quarters at 509 Fifth Avenue Now Ready for Business.

WORK has just been completed upon the offices of the First National Exchange, Inc., at 509 Fifth avenue, New York, and the entire force from R. H. Clark, treasurer, and Carey Wilson, manager, down to the assistant office boy, is now in permanent quarters, where the product of the First National can be handled to the best advantage.

The offices are finished throughout in mahogany, with plate glass partitions separating the different suites, giving light to every part of the floor. Owing to the amount of space that will be required for business purposes the new projection room will be erected on the roof and is expected to be ready for the showing of films within a short time.

Carey Wilson, who was confined to his home by illness for some weeks during the worst part of the winter, is back on the job, handling his many duties with all of his old-time ginger. Wilson's staff includes H. Kram, I. Hanover, David Rosengarten and Ben Levine, all rated among the most efficient film salesmen in the metropolitan district.

Interpret Songs by Acting the Story

Leading Players in Universal Pictures Give Realism to Broadway Song Hits, Synchronizing with Music.

TAKING up an old idea where faulty development had previously left off, Harry Cohn, general manager of Song Hits in Photoplays, Inc., has created an interesting ten minutes for cinemas and vaudeville houses by putting Broadway's "best sellers" in the popular music line into action, by clever screen players, that synchronizes with the song as it is rendered by a vocalist. Several months ago the idea was imperfectly produced, but Mr. Cohn has gone at his present venture with the equipment of Universal City behind him and has consequently shoved the antique "illustrated song" into the waste-basket, along with its "song boosting" detriments to good entertainment.

So well did D. O. Reece, manager of Universal's Minneapolis exchange, like the idea conveyed by Song Hits in Photoplays that he lately resigned his position in Twin Cities and came to New York as general traveling sales manager of the song-films. Every week there will be turned out, at Universal City, one of the latest Broadway songs—the kind they sing in vaudeville and musical shows. These films will be added to the catalog that has already been made, and each will provide about ten minutes' entertainment.

Franklyn Farnum, leading the company featuring "Over There," "Homeward Bound" and "It's a Long, Long Way to Berlin"; Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran in "I Don't Wanta Get Well," Carmel Meyers in "San Domingo," Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber in "My Sweetie" and "Meet Me at the Station," Neal Hart in "One Day in June," Little Zoe Rae in "Just a Baby's Prayer at Twilight," Dorothy Phillips in "Bluebird," Kenneth Harlan in "A Dixie Boy Is Missing," and Monroe Salisbury and Ruth Clifford in "The Mason-Dixon Line," are names familiar to exhibitors of Universal features; players who have their works completed and ready to be distributed in 500-foot reels.

Proctor's vaudeville theater in New York was the first to show the product of Song Hits in Photoplays, Inc. As a result of Harry Cohn's hustling the other Proctor theaters, in the east, are playing the attractions; they are featured on the Poli Circuit, in New England, and, while Mr. Cohn was in California he lately contracted with Alexander Pantages to show Song Hits in Photoplays in every house on the Pantages Circuit from Twin Cities to the Coast. The New York Strand was the first big picture theater in the East to program the new-style song demonstration.

De Mille's New Picture Is Praised

"The Whispering Chorus" Shown to Invitation Gathering in Hollywood Theater.

CECIL B. DE MILLE'S latest production for Artcraft release, "The Whispering Chorus," was given its first showing before an invited audience on Monday evening, March 4, at the Iris Theater, Hollywood. The guests applauded without stint this picture by Cecil B. DeMille and Jeanie Macpherson. In many ways the production is a departure from Mr. DeMille's previous work and strikes a distinct high-water mark. Its all-around excellence brought repeated bursts of applause as the action developed.

Among those who attended the preview and congratulated Mr. DeMille and Miss Macpherson heartily upon their achievement were Jesse L. Lasky, Thomas H. Ince, D. W. Griffith, Mack Sennett, George Melford, Marshall Neilan, Donald Crisp, William D. Taylor, J. Stuart Blackton, Douglas Fairbanks, Allan Dwan, William S. Hart, Charles Ray, Dorothy Dalton, Mary Pickford, Louise Huff, Jack Pickford, Wallace Reid, William C. DeMille, Wilfred Buckland, Ann Little, Thomas Meighan, Albert Dorris, Kenneth McGaffey, James Young, Sessue Hayakawa and Jack Holt.

Johannesburg Has Film Making Plant

African Film Productions to Manufacture All Kinds of Pictures—New Concern a Subsidiary of African Theater Trust.

ONE subsidiary of the African Theaters Trust (Ltd.), of Johannesburg, is the African Film Productions (Ltd.), whose headquarters likewise are in that city, writes United States Consul John P. Bray, stationed there. The company was organized for the manufacture of films. Although all kinds of pictures are being produced, it is especially endeavoring to stage the various interesting incidents of South African life and history. Scenic films also are features of the work. The topical gazette, called the African Mirror, is a picturization of the principal events of interest that take place from time to time throughout British South Africa and Portuguese East Africa.

On the outskirts of the city and well within the municipal boundary the company has its plant, which consists at present of only one building of stone, occupying a space 172 by 114 feet. The interior of this building is arranged in the most modern fashion, and is so complete in every detail, with its carpenter shop, storerooms, bathrooms, dining rooms, studios, and administrative offices, as well as spacious rooms in the basement for technical work, such as cutting negatives, developing, washing, drying, perforating, mixing chemicals, printing, and the assembling of films, that the appearance given is one of stability.

The exterior also has its effect in producing this impression, for almost adjoining the administrative building there is an open-air stage, measuring 90 by 60 feet, and close by a foundation has been laid for another large edifice which is to contain a warehouse for the scenery and props to be used in special picture production, as well as quarters for the native colored employes. Another stage, to be inclosed with glass and have the appearance of a huge summer house, is to be constructed for indoor work.

The future plans of the African Film Productions (Ltd.) provide for the erection of a building to be used almost solely for the production of educational films. The construction of an artificial river and lake is also contemplated, and it is stated that a zoo is to be added to the plant, to contain wild animals native to South Africa.

A feature of special interest surrounding the plans for the future is the building of native villages. It is said that this will embrace the grass hut of the Zulu, the mud contraption of the Hottentot, and even the cave of the Bushman. In all events, if this plan is carried out, it will be of great educational interest to the people of this city, as well as to the traveler.

American Films Predominate in Australia

About 95 Per Cent. of Pictures Shown Come from United States—Serials Meet Some Opposition.

AUSTRALIA has about 800 theaters in which picture shows are given, and of these 450 are in towns and cities and 350 in smaller communities says United States Consul William C. Magelssen, stationed at Melbourne. Of the 450 houses presenting pictures in the larger centers about 40 have continuous performances from 11 a. m. to 11 p. m., or else a continuous program during the day and a special program for the evening, while the others in the larger communities give a regular program in the evening with matiness on certain days. Many have matinees every afternoon during the week. In very few places in Australia are theatrical entertainments of any kind permitted on Sundays. At the 350 houses in small communities, the number of performances given varies. In many places pictures are screened only once or twice a week, while more performances are given in others, depending upon the patronage.

Most of the city houses accommodate more than 1,000 persons. A few have seating capacities as high as 3,000. The country houses rarely have a capacity of more than 1,000. Prices of admission are high. They vary from 6 to 60 cents, according to the entertainment and the location of the seat. In addition to the cost of the ticket, a theatergoer pays an amusement tax of 8 1-3 per cent. of the price. The usual prices for the continuous performances are 6 and 12 cents, while tickets for regular performances cost from 6 to 60 cents.

Most of the films now shown are imported from America, and an average performance in an Australian picture theater is similar to that seen in an American house. Products from the United States average 95 per cent. of the total.

Prices paid for the use of films vary from $48.66 to $243.32 per week for houses in the country and suburban districts, while for the larger houses in the cities a weekly service may cost as much as $486.65. It is customary to change the program twice a week in the country and suburbs, while in the cities the same program is presented for a whole week. Usually it is made up of about 8,000 feet of film.

American films have been predominant here since the outbreak of the war, and on the whole have proved satisfactory to Australian audiences, but on account of the high admission prices serial pictures find some opposition, as many persons cannot afford to attend every performance of a serial. Under such conditions, productions of that type prove a deterrent. Probably it would be advisable to supply fewer firearm and sex problem films to this country, as the audiences have been satiated with such pictures.

Previous to the war the most prominent machines on this market were the Pathe and the Erneman. These no longer are procurable, and American machines have taken their places. All carbons in use now are American. An effort was made by Australian manufacturers to supply this demand, but their goods did not prove satisfactory. In lenses the English Dalmeyer seems to be the standard. Some American lenses are on this market, but so far have not been recognized as standard. This probably could be overcome if the American manufacturers gave increased attention to the proper exploitation of their wares.

Our agent in Buenos Aires, Severo Norsa, recently sent us a review of the motion picture business in Argentina during 1917. American pictures are in undisputed ascendancy throughout South America, so much so that Mr. Norsa mentions the fact that some of the intellectual leaders in those countries are asking themselves what will eventually be the effect of this "exotic" artistic irruption which the public is welcoming with open arms. There is no doubt that American moving pictures, if they hold the interest of the Latins for a few years longer will make some deep changes in the habits and customs of the people. As an instrument for practical Pan-Americanism the screen has no rival.

It seems that the South American public is becoming more and more sophisticated in the matter of films. Melodrama, pictures dealing with the underworld, the white slave variety and others of similar trend find little favor. Detective and spy pictures, if the stories are worth while, meet with ready acceptance. There is no market for historical films. American pictures with European stories, or in which American actors are supposed to depict Latin characters, are rejected in toto. Mr. Norsa cites the three screen "Carmens" shown in Argentina during the past year, with Geraldine Farrar, Margarita Silva and Theda Bara respectively. He ascribes the honors to Margarita Silva.

The first film of animated catroons made in Argentina was released in Buenos Aires about two months ago. It deals with local politics and the cartoons are inserted as complement to a story in which actors and some expensive settings take part. It runs for a length of about 5,000 feet. The picture has already been shown in Buenos Aires for sixty consecutive nights. According to Cine Mundial's agent, the profit on the first fifty exhibitons amounted to about $25,000.

Among the Exporters.

The Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, of New York, has lost no time in arranging for the distribution of its pictures in foreign markets. During the past week contracts were signed with John Olsen & Company, one of the most important cinema firms in Scandinavia, for the releasing of Goldwyn pictures in Sweden, Norway and Denmark. The Olsen organization has its headquarters in Copenhagen and covers Northern European territories.

Similar contracts are about to be signed with other companies for the distribution of the Goldwyn output in Italy, Spain and France.

Through Arthur Ziehm, of Goldwyn export department, distribution contracts for Chile, Bolivia, Peru and Ecuador were also signed last week.

That the Goldwyn Company is becoming increasingly active in reaching out for the world markets is indicated by the fact that within three weeks it has announced the consummation of plans for releasing its productions in Australia through J. C. Williamson Films, Ltd.; in South Africa through the South African Film Trust; in New Zealand and Tasmania through the New Zealand Picture Supplies Co., Ltd.; for India and Burmah through K. D. & Brothers; for Argentina and Uruguay through the Sociedad General Cinematográfica; and for Puerto Rico and Santo Domingo through Saenz & Gonzales.

A New York exporter who controls the rights on some of the most expensive pictures produced in this country called at the office of Cine-Mundial, our international edition, early last week with a couple of letters he had just received. One was from Spain and the other from Mexico. Both were written in Spanish. The writer of the European letter said something which amounted to this: "I understand that you control the pictures to be made by this famous actor and I wish to remind you of the fact that about a year ago, when he was working for ———— company, I tried to buy all his pictures at a reasonable price. I made my offer direct to the producer. We did not come to terms, and the result was that another party went to London, got the films and exploited them in Spain. I believe the concern in question is still ignorant of the whole transaction; in fact, I know that it has kept on offering the 'rights' on these same pictures to other Spanish exchanges." The buyer from Mexico was not interested in any rights. He offered a ridiculously low price, but stated that he was willing to take chances. This point was made quite plain in his letter. "I do not wish to buy the rights on the pictures," said he, "because you are not in a position to guarantee that they will be respected in Mexico."

The exporter in question smiled when the letters were translated to him and stated that he was not worrying, as he had, like a cat, nine different ways of protecting his rights.

We hope that at least one of them is found effective.

Mexico, with its 15,000,000 inhabitants, is the worst market for American producers, and it should be the best one in Latin America, even without excepting Argentina or Brazil. As soon as a practical method is devised whereby American manufacturers will be able to control their output in the home markets—the real source of the evil—Mexico is bound to become one of our most important customers, as the public there shows a decided preference for our pictures. The same thing applies to Spain, although in a larger scale. Being practically a non-producing country as far as films are concerned, it should develop into a much better customer of ours than France, Italy or any other European nation outside of Great Britain, and this no doubt will be the case as soon as American producers and distributors either follow the advice of Mr. Marion, of the Kalem Company, and establish their own agencies in the peninsula or make up their mind to do business on an absolute direct basis with the local exchanges.

Grinding the Crank

With Thornton Fisher

This Kind of a Guy Is—Fishball

PERHAPS none of Simon P. Fishball's pictures contains even a small portion of the dramatics and heroics of his own vicissitudes in the attainment of his present commanding position in the field of the movies.

That the public might learn something of the factors that have made Mr. Fishball a dominating figure in the world of pictures the writer was designated to interview him at length.

Armed with a jimmie, a pair of brass knuckles and a blackjack the interviewer hit the trail to the office of the Fishball Artful Pictures Combination. It was a heatless Monday. Icicles hung from the chin of the elevator man who elevated us to the sixteenth floor of the Fishball Building. Entering the reception room the interviewer was peremptorily stopped with "Who dya want to see?" At our mention of the name Simon P. Fishball the face of the youthful guardian of the gates blanched. A gasp escaped the seven assistant secretaries. The radiator pounded its metal chest. Lowering his voice to an almost inaudible whisper the youth repeated, "Simon P. Fishball." Few men had ever so unceremoniously entered and demanded to see the president of the Fishball Artful Pictures Combination.

"Wait," said the youth. "You had better talk to the forty-second assistant secretary." And so saying forthwith disappeared only to return a minute later with a cadaverous looking young man with heavy bone glasses, who explained that it would be impossible to see Mr. Fishball without making an appointment nine weeks in advance. "But," we pleaded, "the public must know at once the history of Mr. Fishball's life and—" But at this he raises his hand deprecatingly, saying, "Mr. Fishball's time is so valuable that he walks up the stairs to keep his chain of thought from being broken by saying 'good morning' to the elevator man. His vast interests and colossal plans for the future of the pictures occupy his every waking hour." It looked like a hopeless task to attempt to see the great man. It was not until the twenty-fourth assistant secretary was reached that our patience deserted. Ten years' newspaper experience did not teach us to cry "quits" so soon when in search of an interview, even though the subject itself was such a bear-hound for work that he had to make an appointment once a month to have lunch with his own wife and daughter.

"Ah, the knuckles!" thought we as the secretary indicated that there was nothing more to say and turned. Then it happened. The knuckles caught him ten degrees below the nostrils, and he became as senseless as the Bolsheviki.

Fighting our way through the frenzied mob of secretaries we reached the inner door and plunged through the glass paneling and found ourselves standing before the desk of the magnate himself. He was busily engaged at the time trying to kill an occasional fly with a rubber band, but stopped long enough to greet the interviewer.

"Mr. Fishball," said we, "the editor of our paper has requested us to discover the secret of your success. I also wish to make some character drawings if you will submit to my questions and pencil."

Mr. Fishball waved acquiescence, and a most delightful and inspiring hour was spent in that office, where the destiny of the pictures is directed.

Simon P. Fishball's life has been one of sturdy manhood pitted against heavy odds, which were conquered by sheer tenacity of purpose, inspired by a vision of the ultimate triumph of pictures.

It was at 11:45 p. m. when he first saw the light of day, and there in the little cottage back of the gas works he grew to boyhood. He was the sole protector of the home, his father spending the evenings down at Joe's playing "stud." At the age of twelve he was employed by the local butcher, who tells to this day an anecdote characteristic of the boy's business sagacity. It seems that a lady customer had purchased some pigs' feet and complained that she had not received full weight. "Young man," said she to young Simon, "I ordered a pound of pigs' feet and they ain't but three-quarters of a pound in this package." Without a moment's hesitation the lad said, "Just a minute, lady, and I'll call the boss." This is only one instance revealing even then the business acumen that has made his name a "by-word" in the industry.

From this menial job he progressed, working as hair sweeper in a barber shop. The boss barber said that young Fishball could sweep up more hairs than any man he had working for him.

Then a period when Simon loafed for six months, finally getting a job as bucket holder for a window washer. So efficient did he prove that in eight months his salary was increased twelve cents a week. You will note that each step was one of progress. Then he married and went to work for his wife's old man, who ran a picture framing store. Here he came in contact with art lovers, the connoisseurs and the old masters. Fate decreed that one day a man should walk in and ask if he (Simon) had ever seen a moving picture. "What are them?" asked Simon, another incident showing how quick the young man was in learning about the great world without. "It was explained, and that day," says Mr. Fishball, "was the turning point in my career."

Three days later, with a capital of twenty-two dollars and fifty-nine cents, he plunged into the moving picture business, from which he has extracted so much of the world's goods. The business he launched in those early days has now grown to one of thirty-million dollar value.

He paused reminiscently at times as he unfolded the great drama of his life with its tortuous path. "What are your future ambitions for the pictures, Mr. Fishball?" we inquired as we closed the interview. "My ambitions?" he repeated softly as he gazed into space. "Ah, that is it!" his face lighting up as he said it. "My ambitions are for moving pictures every place—moving pictures in the subway, moving pictures in the kitchen, pictures in the bathroom, pictures in the cellar, pictures on the street car, pictures on the sidewalk; in fact, pictures everywhere."

As I strode toward the door and hastily glanced around my last sight was that of the great man again busy at his desk shooting flies with the rubber band.

Harbin Has Three Picture Theaters

Nearly All Patrons of Houses in Manchurian Center Are Russian—Admission Prices 18 to 75 Cents.

THE United States Consul at Harbin, China, writing in a recent issue of "Commerce Reports," says that there are three motion picture theaters in that city known, respectively, as the Orient, in the New Town, and the Modern and Decadence, in the Priestan. There is also a motion picture theater at Station Manchouli, owned by the proprietors of the Harbin enterprises.

Of the three Harbin houses, one has a capacity of 600 seats and the two others have 500 each. The prices vary according to the location of the seat from 35 kopecks for the cheapest to 1.50 rubles for loge seats. In ordinary times this is the equivalent in United States currency of 18 cents for the cheapest and a little more than 75 cents for the most expensive seats. At present, on account of the depreciation of the ruble, it means from 2 to 10 cents gold.

Most of the films shown at present are either Russian dramas, acted by companies in Moscow or Petrograd, or war pictures and scenes from distant lands. Ninety-five per cent. of the spectators are Russian, who read only their own language, and who understand the emotions depicted by Russian players. The pictures are popular, and there is hardly any other form of evening amusement.

All these theaters are owned by one firm, Alexieff & Co., of Moscow and Irkutsk, who have established such houses throughout eastern Siberia, especially at the cities of Irkutsk, Krasnoyarsk, Chita, Blagavestschensk, Habarovsk, Nikolaevsk, Vladivostok, and Harbin. Films are examined, seen and purchased by the firm's agents at Moscow and Irkutsk, and no films are ever bought until they have been exhibited to the purchasers. They are in the market for foreign films, those of Pathe Freres being the most popular, though several American companies are represented on the screens from time to time.

Some sets of American film have been purchased for 10 cents gold per foot, and others were sold for about 50 cents gold per metre. Many of the pictures exhibited are not purchased, but rented. Four and five act dramas of the highly emotional and sentimental kind are most popular. Cowboy activities, murders, and burglaries do not appeal to these audiences. Rough comedy is wasted even on the cheapest Russian audience. They do not understand it.

American pictures, as a rule, do not appeal to the Russian taste. They want a drama woven usually around the "eternal triangle"; the men must be ardent lovers, and the women weak but noble. A weeping mother or the deathbed of a beloved father is always very impressive. There must be a death in the drama, preferably the suicide of hero or heroine, with the other one going into the cloister at the end. The ideal picture play for Russian popular audiences must not, under any circumstances, have a happy ending.

The Russians use a great deal of descriptive and explanatory material on the films in showing their own dramas. They depend upon it largely for the "action." They do not care nearly so much for action in the picture as for postures indicating emotion. Amatory and deathbed scenes should always be photographed to the last detail, but nearly everything else may be written and read. American firms which desire to find a Russian or Siberian or Manchurian market must have the script translated into the Russian language.

As Moscow is the city to which all theaters and motion picture companies send their agents to select plays, American companies should send their representatives there to exhibit their products.

Cutting Film to Suit Local Needs

Has a Manager the Right to Re-edit Pictures?—What Exhibitors and Exchangemen Say.

AN important topic that we have been hearing discussed frequently of late is whether or not an exhibitor has the right either legally or morally to make cut-outs in films that he simply rents from an exchange. Some exhibitors contend that they have the right and that they make certain cut-outs only to make the picture more suitable to their particular neighborhood.

On the other hand, here is the viewpoint of an exchange manager: "It used to be that only once in a while did an exhibitor make a cut-out, and then it was usually the leading exhibitor in the territory, whom the exchange naturally would grant some concession in consideration for the first-run big money he was getting. But in the past year, there has been a big change in this matter of cut-outs, and now nearly every exhibitor wants the privilege of making cut-outs.

"Either he argues that it is necessary to make the picture suit his locality or his patrons, or that the picture is too long and that it must be cut to fit his running time. This is all very well for the exhibitor, but where would the exchange be if every exhibitor in the territory took it upon himself to make whatever cut-outs he saw fit—it would do great injury to the film itself. Then, again, it makes endless trouble for other exhibitors and the exchange because the exhibitor forgets to put back the cut-out, while in some cases he puts it back in the wrong place, and then the exhibitor who gets the picture next wonders why the story is so inconsistent. I believe this—that when a feature is passed by the National Board of Censors, it is pretty near to 100 per cent. up to the standard and no exhibitor after that has the right or should have the right to make a single cut-out without first consulting the exchange manager and doing it only with his consent.

Thinks Sunday Closing a Good Thing

The Rev. Mr. Beard of Washington State Denies, However, He Has Ever Led Such a Campaign.

Hoquiam, Washington, March 4, 1918.

To the Editor of the Moving Picture World:

Picking up a Moving Picture World for February 23, on page 1080 I saw an article by S. J. Anderson telling of the work of Jack Kauffman in the Liberty theater of Hoquiam, Washington. In a section of that article, under the heading "How a Sunday-Closer Was Converted," I was surprised to see my own name and that in connection with statements that were (to say the least) badly twisted. Some one must have got their wires crossed.

I have been in Hoquiam for six years, and in that time, so far as I know, there has never been a fight for closing of the moving picture houses on Sunday, much less one led by me, though my own personal conviction in the matter is that Sunday closing would be a good thing and in the long run good for the picture business itself.

I for many years have enjoyed a good clean picture show and intend to enjoy them as long as I live and as long as there are good pictures to be seen. So make your pictures good and wholesome, and as far as this section of the church is concerned you will have no opposition; in fact you will be boosted.

I remember the picture, also the vaudeville show, which I commended. Both were very good, with plenty of clean fun. But a short time after that I was in that same theater and was wholly disgusted with the low, vulgar class of vaudeville show hashed up to the none too enthusiastic public. I wonder if the two kinds of amusements go well together?

Let us have all the good clean fun and healthy amusement that we can get. Let us make the picture business an educational and an uplifting influence in the community—this it is fast coming to be—and we will be having a better world to live in and less cause for friction between the forces that should be and are working for the uplift of the human race.

Sincerely yours,
JOHN W. BEARD,
Pastor of the First Presbyterian Church.

Among the Picture Theaters

Rialto Theater, Elyria, Ohio

Elyria Theaters Company Opens Another Big House—Now Operating Five in That City.

OUT of the charred remains of what was once the Elyria, Ohio, Opera House, there has arisen a beautiful new theater—one of the finest in the state of Ohio. This new house has been named the Rialto, and is the first in this vicinity to bear that name. The old Opera House, for over a score of years, was the home in Elyria of traveling shows and vaudeville. Occasionally a picture would be shown. Now the Rialto has changed this order of things, and photoplays is the rule, with a road show occasionally.

Melton Phelos.

The Rialto is a big theater, having more than 1,500 seats. There is a balcony and a gallery. The gallery is not always open, but it is there for emergency purposes, and is used whenever a big picture attraction is shown. The house has indirect lighting, is decorated in light shades and there is a beautiful stage setting. Besides the elegantness of the interior there are many little side issues, such as rest rooms for men and women where the latest sanitary fittings are installed, and there is also a room containing ten little beds, where mothers may leave their children while attending the matinees. The nursery has made quite a big hit with the people of Elyria. The theater management has provided a matron, and when the babies are brought into the nursery, they are carefully checked and given the best of attention.

The Rialto has all the improved types of equipment. The booth has two motor-driven Simplex machines, with Type-S lamphouse, Hertner transverter, 50-amperes double arc and a stereopticon and spotlight. The screen opening is 13 by 18 feet and a Gold King screen is used. The box-office not only has a triple Automatic Ticket Selling Machine, but it also contains a Lightning Change Maker.

The Rialto is operated by the Elyria Theaters Company, a corporation which operates all five of the city's houses, which include also the Strand, American, Bannon and Dreamland. It is under the personal direction of Melton Phelos, a young man of several years' experience in the picture business, whose hobby is the constant introduction of new ideas in the theaters with which he is connected. A ten-piece orchestra supplies the music.

As an example of the way Mr. Phelos does things, the opening night, recently, is cited. The program was William S. Hart in "The Silent Man" and Fatty Arbuckle in "A Country Hero." The mayor and other city officials were present and though it rained, the house was packed and jammed by 7.30, and hundreds were on the outside awaiting a chance to get in. Following the evening performances Mr. Phelos gave a banquet to the city officials and visiting film exchange and theater men.

Stratford Theater, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

One of the Most Modern in the Country—Has Many Distinctive Features and Cost $100,000—Under Direction of T. W. Williams, an Experienced Theatrical Man.

AN EVENT of considerable importance in moving picture circles in the city of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., was the opening of the Stratford theater, which took place on January 21. The Stratford is conceded to be one of the most modernly equipped photoplay houses in the country, and its dedication was the occasion for much rejoicing on the part of Poughkeepsieites. The new theater embraces many distinctive features, and was built at an expenditure of $100,000. It was designed by W. H. McElfatrick of New York City, one of the most capable of theater architects, who is responsible in a large measure for the artistic excellence as well as for the practical efficiency of the house. The Stratford is one of the largest of photoplay houses around this part of New York State, and has a total seating capacity of 1,500. There is only one balcony (and that is a large one) and can seat comfortably 500, while the orchestra floor has accommodation for 1,000.

T. W. Williams.

The location of the theater is at Cannon and Liberty streets, one of the busiest quarters in the city. Every provision has been made for the safety and comfort of patrons, the structure being built of fireproof material and every modern device having been installed. There are twelve emergency exits. The parking space for automobiles, which can conveniently accommodate fifty machines, is owned by the management of the Stratford, and it is not an uncommon sight to see this allotment filled with autos. Every day the entire auditorium is cleaned by the sanitary vacuum cleaning system.

Stratford Theater, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

The interior decorations follow closely those of the Rialto in New York City with general color effects of Roman gold and antique ivory. Mural paintings and draperies that harmonize with the color scheme add to the beauty of the interior. The vexatious problem of ventilating the Stratford has been solved in a noteworthy manner by the installation of a large number of exhaust fans. By this process the air is subject to constant change. In the cold season, fresh air, warmed in a plenum chamber enters the auditorium through mushrooms under the seats and ventilators in the walls, and the impure air is drawn out by the exhaust fans. In the summer time the same system is used for forcing fresh, cool air into the house. The lighting system is technically known as the X-ray indirect self-diffusing light by which there may be produced any desired effect—moonlight, sunlight, twilight or dawn—as the nature of the picture may make appropriate.

Special emphasis is given the musical feature of the Stratford by the engagement of Frank L. Scofield as director. For thirty years Mr. Scofield has been leader of the Twenty-first Regiment Band, and Scofield's Orchestra has played on numerous occasions at Vassar College, and whenever, in fact, the best in music was demanded.

Three shows are given daily at the Stratford—a matinee from 2 to 4.30 p. m.; evenings from 7 to 9 and from 9 to 11. The house is under the personal direction of T. W. Williams, who has had fifteen years' theatrical experience. His reputation as a forceful and capable executive assures to the theater a progressive and resourceful management. The names of the officers forming the Poughkeepsie Theater Corporation which built the Stratford are Ely Elting, Herbert R. Gurney, John Lurie, W. DeGarmo Smith, D. W. Wilbur, Dr. H. L. Salsbury, Albert E. Schwartz, John J. Doherty, Edward E. Perkins and C. W. H. Arnold.

New Cosmos Theater, Winner, S. D.

J. C. Lakin Conducting Successful Picture House—Uses Simplex and Motiograph Projectors.

IN the New Cosmos Theater, Winner, S. D., that city has a pretty little motion picture house. The exterior, although plain in its architecture, nevertheless presents an inviting appearance, and is in keeping with the design of other buildings in Winner.

The theater was opened in May, 1917, and has been operated on a profitable basis since that time. Its direction is under the able management of J. C. Lakin, a man who, judging from the present high position of the theater, knows how to dispense the right kind of entertainment. There are 448 seats in the New Cosmos, with plenty of room between each row.

New Cosmos Theater, Winner, S. D.

The building occupies a plot of ground 33 by 130 feet, and is constructed of brick and concrete. The lobby is 12 feet wide by 20 feet deep, and here frames have been placed containing posters and photographs of players and scenes of productions on the current and coming programs. Electric lights outline the design of the front.

In the up-to-date and large operating room are Simplex and Motiograph projectors. A Minusa Gold Fibre screen is used, and the throw is 90 feet. Among the brands of pictures forming the program are Triangle, Select, Mutual, Pathe and Universal.

French Profiteer Contributed to Pictures

Godsol, Now Enmeshed in International Complications, Brought Emmy Wehlen to American Stage and Dabbled in "Shadow" Pictures.

THE daily papers have published but half of Frank J. Godsol's activities in the United States, according to one of the best known motion picture publicists in New York. Godsol is lodged in jail at Washington, accused by the French government of accepting millions in commissions from automobile manufacturers on war orders he placed in this country.

Daily papers have referred to his connection with the Alliance Motors Corporation, through which he is alleged to have transacted his business with American motor manufacturers, and have alleged his connection with "Tecla pearls" as marketed in this country. But nothing has previously been printed in reference to his connection with the moving picture business over here.

The World representative, agreeing not to disclose the source of information, obtained a decidedly interesting sidelight upon the activities of Godsol—a story that displays the genius and enterprise of the publicist and at once reflects his uncommercial instincts. For, be it said, if the publicist had properly "sold" himself he might not now be mimeographing.

"Six or seven years ago I operated a press bureau," said the World's informant. "I had previously handled ship news, and was well acquainted with the marine reporters. I got most of my best 'leads' for clients from the ship news boys, catching the travelers at their hotels shortly after they landed in New York. One day I picked up the tip that Frank J. Godsol (he spelled his name with two 'l's' in those days) had just arrived from Europe with a plan to build a mammoth ice palace for amusement purposes.

"Hurrying to the St. Regis I approached Mr. Godsol within a few moments after he had been assigned to his room. I told him my business was to provide publicity in newspapers for worthy enterprises and that I knew of no better plan for obtaining publicity than to base it upon his proposal to build an ice palace. Godsol was astonished to know how I had so suddenly come into possession of his address and purposes, but I left him to find out for himself those details.

"He said he had heard a lot about American speed, but he finally let his amazement give way to an expression of opinion that I could not get publicity for an enterprise that had only arrived that day—in his hand baggage. I assured him it was easier to get publicity for something that was to be than for something that had really happened, and he dared me to get a three-inch article about his proposed ice palace into any newspaper in America. For every article measuring as much as three inches he said he would pay me fifty dollars, and no questions asked as to the standing, circulation or condition of servitude.

"His generosity looked like stealing money (I was younger then than I am now), and I finally compromised by hiring out to him as his publicist at fifty dollars per week, and I never missed the 'per' one single time. He was right on hand with the cash for a matter of three months. Then he returned to Europe and left me a letter, stopping my services and instructing me to call at the 'Tecla pearl' headquarters and get a final fifty. He had frequently paid me in the 'Tecla' place, and when I called for my terminating salary the money was there for me.

"Godsol was a busy man during his stay in New York at that time. He was a stock owner in a chain of ice palaces, starting with the Admiralplatz in Berlin, and taking in Paris and other large centers of population on the continent. One thing he always insisted upon was that I should put two 'l's' in his name seven years ago, but I see the papers give him 'l' in the singular number. He has somewhat recently had, by process of law, one 'l' knocked out of his name.

"He came mighty close to 'putting across' his ice palace idea in New York. He persuaded a representative of one of the richest families in town (they are national railroaders) to stand ready to back him, and a man whose family is well known in New York's retail clothing circle was going to have a great area of space for a select skating and hockey club. Truth to tell Godsol was here in New York with the indoor, artificial ice skating idea several years before it finally 'broke' as a society fad and eventually enthused all classes throughout America.

"It was Godsol who was directly responsible for Emmy Wehlen coming to the United States as a star in musical comedy, and as Miss Wehlen is now a Metro star he then contributed directly to motion picture advancement in this country. Incidentally, he was interested in promoting a system of motion picture projection, new to the craft, and, so far as I know, never yet developed. Godsol called them 'shadow pictures,' depth being obtained by projection, through some process, against a beam of light, the figures passing each other in action, casting shadows and appearing (through his scientific illusion) to be persons walking on the stage rather than passing across a screen.

"The Shuberts concerned themselves in Godsol's 'shadow pictures,' and there was at least one showing of the novelty at Mendelssohn Hall. But in the long run neither the ice palace nor the 'shadow pictures' materialized, and Godsol returned to Europe. To me he so much resembled a German that I was astonished to read of his exploits as a French soldier, released on furlough because of his wounds, who had come to America and made from three to seven millions on war contracts.

"Right now there's only one action in all of my life that I regret—my rash act in turning down a proffered price of fifty dollars for three-inch clippings. I never measured the 'stuff' that was printed about Godsol, but I also would be a millionaire today had I only 'sold' my services to the ice palace man at fifty dollars for every three inches of space I stole from the newspapers."

Universal Organizes "Secret Service" Corps

Duty of New Organization Will Be to Keep a Finger on Public Pulse and Discover What's Popular.

A "SECRET SERVICE" corps of field men whose sole duty will consist in reporting the reception accorded its various productions is being organized by Universal. This innovation is the result of recommendations made to Carl Laemmle by Joe Brandt, the assistant treasurer of that organization.

The "secret service" men represent Universal's desire to produce only such pictures as will present the strongest appeal to the photoplay patrons. It represents that company's effort to produce pictures by other than rule-of-thumb methods.

According to Mr. Laemmle, the assistant treasurer of his company conducted an investigation along these lines, while on a recent tour of the Middle West. One of the complaints made by exhibitors generally was to the effect that producers seem to lack knowledge of the kind of pictures best calculated to attract business.

Frequently the public's demand for pictures changes overnight. Today it may consist of a desire to see war pictures. Tomorrow society dramas may be in demand, while on the following day western dramas are wanted.

With an organization of "secret service" men constantly in the field to keep their fingers on the public's pulse it is Mr. Laemmle's belief that his company will be able to cater to the demand within no greater a period of time than is required to turn out the subjects desired.

The men will be called "secret service" men because they will not make themselves known to the exhibitors. Instead, they will enter the theaters as ordinary patrons and observe the effect upon the audiences of the Universal and Bluebird productions that are presented.

Rothapfel Resigns One Job

Passes Up Presidency of First National, But Will Continue Showing Its Productions.

OWING to the pressure of other work, S. L. Rothapfel, of the Rivoli and the Rialto, has been compelled to resign his position as president of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

His recent appointment as chairman of the motion picture and film industry division of the Liberty Loan publicity campaign in New York, together with the task of presenting new programs at two theaters each week, made it imperative for him to give up some of his responsibilities. His resignation as president of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit will make no difference in his obtaining First National attractions for either of the theaters under his direction.

LINDSEY THEATER, INDUSTRY, ILL.

November 2, 1917, marked the opening of the Lindsey Theater, Industry, Ill. The house, which cost $5,000 to erect, has been built of brick with tapestry brick used in the front. It has a seating capacity of 350. An Edison machine projects the pictures, and the regular prices of admission are five and ten cents. When a special program is put on the prices are advanced to ten and fifteen cents. World, Paramount, Triangle, Pathe, George Kleine System Perfection Pictures and other brands go to make up the bill. The theater is owned and operated by Edward Lindsey.

U. S. Exhibitors Buy "Just a Woman"

Purchase Outright This Production Made by Julius Steger—Based on Eugene Walter's Play.

FRANK HALL, president of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, has purchased outright the six-part special production, "Just A Woman," produced by Julius Steger and featuring Charlotte Walker, which will be distributed through this concern.

The deal, by which Mr. Hall acquired the negative of the picture, which was adapted from the play of the same title written by Eugene Walter and produced on the stage with great success a few years ago, was consummated on March 8. The play is now being presented by stock companies in various parts of the country and, according to estimates made by Mr. Walter gauged by the royalties he has received, it has been seen by more than 5,000,000 persons in this country and in England. Miss Walker, who is starred in the picture version, also appeared in the same role on the stage and achieved one of the greatest successes of her career.

According to an announcement made by the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, Mr. Hall selected "Just A Woman" after an exhaustive search of the independent field during which he found there were few productions that conformed with his ideas of photoplay construction. A committee of selection, of which Mr. Hall was chairman, inspected many productions in its quest for an attraction to release as the fourth special subject of the corporation.

"Just A Woman," which is said to contain an unusually high degree that quality called heart interest, will be released in the near future and under the distribution system put into effect by Mr. Hall and his associates will be available to exhibitors in all parts of the world simultaneously.

This production which, as a play, ran for many weeks at the Forty-eighth Street theater in New York, shows the struggle of a lowly-placed but spiritually developed woman to raise her husband to a commanding position in the world and her fight to retain his love for herself and their son when drinking and other evil influences make him forget his better self.

The husband is a worker in a Pittsburgh steel mill. The wife stints and saves through giving day board to other laborers. One of the young men invents a device of great value to the steel industry. With her savings it is perfected and on selling it to a corporation she insists that her husband be made a director. When he stands for the workmen's rights they search for his weakness and find it is liquor and to liquor they add the charm of a siren.

The big scene is a divorce court where the husband has permitted his wife to be brought on a perjured charge of infidelity. She makes no defence until she learns that her son will be taken from her. Then her mother instinct dominates all and she says the charges are true and that her husband is not the father of the boy and therefore has no right to him.

Upon hearing this the manhood of the husband is reawakened. In a frenzy of grief he tells the court the truth—that she is his true wife and the boy is his. All concerned in the conspiracy are imprisoned. In an epilogue occurring ten years later the husband is liberated just as the son is going to France with the American artillery. The father, now regenerated, goes to work in a munition factory to make shells which his boy will use in battle.

Werner Talks of Pyramid Comedies.

In announcing sale of the world rights, exclusive of United States and Canada, for Pyramid comedies, in which Ray Hughes is featured, full details of which will be carried in Foreign Trade News department of our issue of March 31, President Arthur M. Werner advised that the method of distribution for United States and Canada was not yet definitely settled, but that these pictures would probably be disposed of on a basis of territorial franchises.

Mr. Werner further stated: "We have leased a studio in Yonkers where the fifth picture, entitled 'The Masked Ball,' is now being made. The titles of the first four subjects are 'Beach Birds,' 'Beauties and Bombs,' 'In and Out' and 'Love and Lunch.' In all of the subjects Ray Hughes is featured in eccentric comedy, under the direction of Wm. A. Seiter, who will continue in charge of the production work. Despite the rapid action and the eccentric type of Mr. Hughes' work each story carries a sustained plot throughout. All subjects are in two reels.

"We have the scenarios all ready for production for the next ten pictures, and are in the market for stories to follow. They must be clean and devoid of suggestiveness."

New York Life in Keeney Picture.

"An all-New-York picture" is the description given by Frank A. Keeney of "A Romance of the Underworld," starring Catherine Calvert, the first release of the Frank A. Keeney Pictures Corporation. "New York life is so vast and varied that a thousand pictures of fascinating interest could be filmed here and still leave the field practically unexhausted," says Mr. Keeney. "In 'A Romance of the Underworld' we obtain intimate glimpses of unfamiliar nooks and corners of the great metropolis and we see the vivid flashes of dramatic incident against the sombre background of underworld vice and crime.

"The average New Yorker knows little or nothing about his own city. He says to himself, 'Oh, I've got all the time there is to see the sights of New York!', and so he never sees them. Persons who are here for only a few days usually busy themselves with sightseeing and take in a whole lot of things the residents know nothing about except in the way of hearsay knowledge." Paul Armstrong, author of the drama from which the screen version is taken, knew New York like a book, and to bring the whole thing up to date new features have been introduced. No expense or effort has been spared to make the episodes realistic. For instance, in the revel in the East Side dance hall the services of such pugilistic notables as Kid Broad and Kid Lewis were enlisted. In the "dope den" in Chinatown real Chinese gamblers and opium smokers were marshalled before the camera. In the scenes showing "the Bowery after dark" and sensational doings in the environment of the Tombs, the Criminal Courts Building and the Bridge of Sighs there are placed in evidence real types of the underworld. It is predicted that one of the most striking episodes of the photoplay will be the big courtroom scene, in which the heroine's trial for murder comes to a sensational and unexpected denouement.

Fine Sales Record of W. H. Productions

Entire Territory for Seventeen Two-Reel and Three Feature Hart Productions Disposed of in Two Months—Also Ninety Per Cent. of United States for Twenty-eight Mack Sennett Keystones.

ALTHOUGH the W. H. Productions Company have only been in business for about two months, during that time they have disposed of the entire territory of the United States for seventeen two-reel Hart pictures and three Hart features, "The Two-Gun Man" in "The Bargain," "The Bandit and the Preacher" and "The Hell Hound of Alaska." They now announce that in addition to this excellent showing ninety per cent. of the territory on twenty-eight selected two-reel Mack Sennett-Keystone Comedies have also been disposed of.

Reports received from various exchanges indicate that many exhibitors are signing up for the entire series of comedies, some of the houses desiring to run two each week instead of one. The following are the titles of the first ten: "The Small Town Bully," "Friendly Enemies," "His Diving Beauty," "A Polished Villain," "His Bitter Half," "The Dynamiter," "A Desperate Scoundrel," "Soaked and Scorched," "A Farm Yard Romeo," and "The Hula-Hula Dance," featuring Charles Chaplin. The remaining eighteen will be announced later.

In addition to the transactions which have been reported in previous issues, under heading "Sales of the Week," the following territory has been disposed of: Feature Film Corporation, Boston, Mass., for the New England States; Electric Theater Supply Co., Philadelphia, for Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey; Weiland Film Corporation, Pittsburgh, for West Virginia and Western Pennsylvania; Phil Goldstone, 1504 Harney street, Omaha, Neb., for Northern Michigan; Standard Film Service, Cleveland, for Southern Michigan; Standard Film Corporation, at Chicago, for Indiana, Illinois and Wisconsin, at Minneapolis for North and South Dakota and Minnesota, at Kansas City for Missouri and Kansas, and at Omaha for Iowa and Nebraska; Lewis Film Exchange, Oklahoma City, for Oklahoma; Greater Features Company, Seattle, Wash., for Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana, and Peerless Film Service, San Francisco, for California, Nevada and Arizona.

Sale of the three W. S. Hart features mentioned above was also made during the past week to Nathan Gordon of the Globe Feature Film Company, Boston, for the New England States.

Agnes Martin

ONE of the featured players in "The Crucible of Life," the six-part picture distributed by Sawyer and Lubin, is Agnes Martin.

Miss Martin was born in Brooklyn and made her first stage appearance with the Corse Payton Stock Company. She has appeared in leading roles in such well-known melodramas as "Rio Grande," "Come Back to Erin," etc. Because of a winsome personality she has also portrayed the famous character of Peg in

Agnes Martin.

"Peg of My Heart," and also occupied a prominent place in the cast of "Daddy Long Legs" during the past season.

Prior to her work in "The Crucible of Life" this young lady played in many of the screen successes of the old Biograph days.

It is Miss Martin's intention to return to the stage during the forthcoming season as the result of an offer she has received for a part suited to her personality.

Sunshine Film Moves Offices.

The Sunshine Film, Inc., producers of Moon comedies for the state rights market, are one of the latest producers to move from the old film district to the new.

They were formerly located at 122 East Twenty-third street and are now at 126 West Forty-sixth street, the Leavitt Building.

"Mickey" to Be Tinted and Toned.

Western Import Company, who control the rights to Mabel Normand in "Mickey," are developing an advertising campaign that will be world-wide in its scope, so as to surround this production with complete accessories. Dye stuffs and solutions have been experimented with in the film laboratory to obtain the proper hues and shades for each particular scene, and when "Mickey" is flashed on the screen it is promised that there will be a wonderful harmony of tints and tones that will be surprisingly pleasing to the eye. Important announcements will be made very shortly as to the method of distribution, which will be of considerable interest to the trade.

Rifkin Speaks on Trade Conditions.

The New England rights of the two Pathe pictures, "Today," featuring Florence Reed, and "The Mad Lover," in which Robert Warwick and Elaine Hammerstein are starred, have been bought by Herman Rifkin of the Eastern Feature Film Company of Boston. The deal was made through the Arrow Film Corporation.

Before leaving this city for Boston Herman Rifkin spoke as follows: "For many months I have been talking with exhibitors throughout New England and studying conditions at first hand. The New England exhibitor wants the best there is, and to supply this need I am always on the hunt for the highest grade pictures I can find.

"We in New England want all the help we can get from the producer. We want good stories—wholesome stories with a punch to them. We want these stories well produced. If the producer will turn out good stuff and not ask too large a share of the profits that is all we can ask of him. When the producer boosts his prices sky high it hurts business right down the line. If everyone will play fair there is enough for all. Inflated prices too often act as a boomerang.

"The independent field throughout the New England states was never better than it is at the present time, and the future is most encouraging."

Ralph Ince

RALPH INCE, who is directing the Petrova Picture Company's fourth production, "The Great Star," and who will also direct Madame Petrova's next picture, "Patience Sparhawk," is one of a trio of Ince brothers, all well known in the motion picture field; the other two being Thomas H. and John Ince.

Born in Boston in 1887, he received the usual preparatory school training. He soon gave vent to a natural inclination towards things theatrical and joined the supporting cast of Richard Mansfield's company. Later he joined the Vitagraph company, appearing with Maurice Costello, John Bunny, Harry Morey, Florence Turner, and others, in a number of productions, and won commendation for his fine delineation of Abraham Lincoln, being probably the first to portray him on the screen.

Rapidly working into the directorial field, Ralph produced the first three and five-reel features ever released by Vitagraph, and together with a number of their special features. He was responsible for the rise of Anita Stewart to stardom, having directed all of her earlier pictures. During the latter part of 1916 he left the Vitagraph and has since produced several state rights pictures, including "Today," starring Florence Reed; "The Co-Respondent" and "The Woman Eternal."

Hoffman Writes from Canada.

From Canada, where he is visiting the Foursquare Picture Exchanges, M. H. Hoffman writes: "American trend toward simplicity of story and perfection of casts and production is being shared by the Canadian people. Business is beginning to show the most encouraging signs. The spring season, which will shortly be in full swing, has every prospect of being one of profit to the exhibitor and of reasonable satisfaction to the patron of the motion picture. Canada is eager to see the Wharton serial, "The Eagle Eye," and other Foursquare pictures, such as "The Bar Sinister" and "The Cast-Off," have been well received.

"King-Bees" Make Fine Showing.

Nat. H. Spitzer, sales manager of the King-Bee Billy West comedies, announces that on Sunday a total of seventy-eight prints of the fourteen different King-Bee comedies were played in Greater New York.

Over forty per cent. of the exhibitors in Greater New York are playing this brand of comedies, is the claim of Julius Singer, manager of the Bee-Hive exchange, which releases King-Bees in Greater New York.

Anna Luther Co-Stars with Mason.

Anne Luther will be co-starred with John Mason in "Moral Suicide," Ivan Abramson's latest production, which will be released by Graphic Film Corporation. This young lady's rise since the time a few years ago when she began her screen career under the direction of D. W. Griffith has been fast, and she has a number of successful portrayals to her credit.

In "Moral Suicide" she is seen as a girl who, through her unswerving loyalty and tireless efforts, brings her father back from the lowest depths of degradation, to which he has sunk through the loss of his moral sense. In the accomplishment of this task she runs the gamut from affluence to poverty, from happiness to abject misery, and her portrayal of the different phases is said to be the best work she has ever done.

Augustus Thomas Story for Raver.

Harry Raver announces the completion of the first of a series of photodramas which Augustus Thomas, the dean of American playwrights, is under contract to write for him. "The Silver Lining" is the title to be used. Work on the story was started by Mr. Thomas several months ago, but the acceptance of his new play, "The Copperhead," which has proved to be one of this season's most successful plays, necessitated laying the "Silver Lining" aside.

The theme of "The Silver Lining" declares that Democracy can make equality only in material things and that individual superiority is a matter of the beauty of conduct and of our respective ideals and dreams. It deals with the happiness that comes from doing productive work.

Work on the production of "The Silver Lining" will be started at the Raver studios as early as possible. The Thomas story calls for a very large cast, and it is estimated that ten weeks will be required to stage the picture.

Nilde Babette's Contract Extended.

Nilde Babette, the French comedienne, who recently arrived in this country from Paris, and who was signed up by the Jester Comedy Company for one year, has proven her capabilities to such an extent that her contract has been rewritten to read "for two years."

House Organ for "The Eagle's Eye."

As a part of the special campaign which has been prepared as an aid to the exhibitor who has booked "The Eagle's Eye," a house organ to be devoted entirely to this serial, will make its appearance within a short time. Exhibitors are using many unique ways of calling the attention of the public to the fact that Chief Flynn's expose of the activities of the German Government may be seen in their houses and the managers of the branches of the Foursquare exchanges, realizing that other exhibitors would appreciate the experience of their fellow exhibitors, write Mr. Hoffman, and decision to establish a house organ, followed as a result of Mr. Hoffman's conference with The Whartons.

Marjorie Daw in State Right Picture.

Marjorie Daw, late of Lasky, Fox, and recently leading lady for Douglas Fairbanks, is to star in a new potoplay now being prepared for release, to be known as "The Sunset Princess." The picture will be offered on the state rights plan late in March. It is an adaptation of Wallace Coburn's story, "Yellowstone Pete's Only Daughter," as published in his "Rhymes of a Round-up Camp."

The picture was produced in its entirety in the West and is being edited and titled by Tom Bret. The world rights were recently purchased by the Big Productions Film Corporation, 220 West Forty-second street, New York City.

S. R. D. Feature in Two Broadway Houses

"Carmen of the Klondike," Featuring Clara Williams, Shown Simultaneously at Strand and Loew's New York Theater—Only a Few Blocks Apart.

STATE Right Distributors, Inc., handling the Selexart production, "Carmen of the Klondike," starring Clara Williams, claim a record with this picture, as it is being shown in two of the leading theaters in the heart of Broadway simultaneously. The Strand is featuring this production for the entire week of March 3, while it was also shown at Loew's New York theater on March 7. These two houses are neighbors, being only about three short blocks apart, with no other moving picture theaters intervening.

"Carmen of the Klondike" is an Alaskan story, as its name implies, and was written by Monte M. Katterjohn, who also wrote "The Flame of the Yukon," a story of the same locale, in which Dorothy Dalton was starred. The plots of the two are said to be entirely different.

The story of "Carmen of the Klondike" deals with the early days of the gold rush, and is replete with dramatic situations. Clara Williams portrays the part of "Dorothy Harlan," a vaudeville artist who goes to join her fiance. She is supported by an excellent cast, including Hershall Mayall as Silk McDonald, a dance-hall owner, who is the "heavy," and Ed Coxen as Dorothy's lover, a young lawyer fighting against overwhelming odds in a lawless mining settlement.

Whartons to Make Conservation Film.

Arrangements have been made by which The Whartons will produce a special picture for the New York State Conservation Committee, in which all of "The Eagle's Eye" company, including King Baggot and Marguerite Snow, will appear. In addition, King Baggot, Jr., will also be seen in this production.

No scenario was prepared by the Conservation Committee, who left this matter in the hands of the producers, stating they wanted anything that would show the public, especially the farmers of upper New York state, the necessity for saving coal or other fuel in compact form.

According to present plans, about one thousand feet of film will be used. Special attention has been given to scenes showing essential industries which have been closed down on account of lack of coal during the last shortage. Scenes of ships and locomotives receiving their supply of coal will be used to emphasize the great demand the war has made for fuel.

Several unusual scenes showing the pleasure and enjoyment that can be gotten out of log fires, will have prominent places in the picture. A romantic story has been prepared by the principals of "The Eagle's Eye" company to make the Conservation picture interesting as well as instructive.

Steiner Tells Why He Started Jesters.

When William Steiner decided to go in for the manufacture of comedies, the question arose, "what kind of comedies do the public want?" There are many comedies of different kinds on the market today, and to create a brand that would be different was a baffling problem. For a time he practically abandoned the idea, after having read a great number of stories. They were all along the usual lines and presented nothing that had not been shown on the screen before. He believed that in Twede-Dan he had a comedian that could be moulded along any line that might be desired.

As a last resort, Mr. Steiner decided to leave it to the exhibitors, and he made an extensive mail canvass from coast to coast, asking their opinion on what they would most desire in the way of comedies. When all the answers were in and summed up, it was found that the exhibitors' demands were based on 75 per cent. comedy with touches of consistent, well-dressed slap-stick and 25 per cent. dramatic with semi-light vein touches, and, above all, a real story. Some of the exhibitors went so far as to make canvass of their patrons before sending in their opinion. With this as a basis, Mr. Steiner formed the Jester Comedy Company, called in several writers of the lighter vein, explained his needs and had them submit scripts.

Out of the large number submitted only six were found that coincided with the demands. The first to be screened was "The Recruit," which is said to contain all the elements of fast comedy with a touch of slap-stick, and, in addition, has many dramatic touches. "His Golden Romance," the second offering, released this month, is entirely different from the "Recruit." It presents Twede-Dan in many complicated situations and is full of fun, yet has a complete story.

Mr. Steiner states in all his future productions, whether they be comedy or large features, he will never make a move until he has consulted with the exhibitors, and also will continue his adopted policy of showing his goods before selling.

New State Right Firm on Coast.

A new firm, The Sunset Film Corporation, has been added to the list of state rights distributors on the Pacific Coast. Julius L. Lazerus, whose activities in the motion picture business have previously been confined to the East, is president of this organization, and its initial purchase consists of the Hart, Fairbanks, Keenan and Talmadge reissues which the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, Inc., are marketing through Hiller & Wilk, Inc. The territory bought for these pictures embraces California, Arizona and Nevada. In addition the Sunset company has secured California rights for "Redemption," the Julius Steger picture featuring Evelyn Nesbit.

"The Life Mask" Ready for Release.

The final stages of cutting, assembling and laboratory work have now been reached in the production of Madame Petrova's third special feature, "The Life Mask," and it will receive its New York premiere at either the Rialto or the Rivoli, following which it will be presented throughout the country.

"The Life Mask" is six reels in length, and will be distributed through the First National Exhibitors' Circuit early in March. Frank Crane directed the production. The laboratory work has been accomplished under the personal supervision of Waterson Rothaker, of the Rothaker plant in Chicago, and many novel effects are promised in the way of tinting and toning.

Second Sennett Released by W. H.

W. H. Productions Company announces that they are now preparing for release the second of the series of twenty-eight Mack Sennett Keystone Comedies, which is entitled "Friendly Enemies," featuring Sydney Chaplin and Chester Conklin.

The story briefly is:

Chester's engagement to her daughter is announced by the mother at a lawn fete. Syd, a society parasite, inspects the engagement ring and swallows it. He also discovers that mother wears a wig and agrees not to expose the fact to her wealthy suitor. In consideration she promises him her daughter's hand.

Chester creeps up behind Syd as he is seated in the park with the girl and drops a burr between his clothing and back. Syd flees to remove his clothing and is discovered by ladies passing. His clothes disappear and his attempt to take Chester's results in a fight.

Bacon-Backer to Produce Big Features

Initial Production Nearing Completion—Will Also Make Industrial Pictures and Film Social Events.

THE Bacon-Backer Film Corporation, which recently opened a new studio at 230 West Thirty-eighth street, New York, announces its intention to produce only super-features. The first offering, now nearing completion, will be the picturization of a recent play by H. S. Sheldon, author of "The Havoc." This production, which as yet is untitled, is being directed by Perry Vekroff, and the construction and appointment of the sets is under the personal supervision of George Backer, who is an expert builder, having erected several well known hotels, office buildings and apartment houses in this city, and he promises a further surprise along this line.

There is every evidence that Mr. Backer, despite his large real estate interests, will remain in the motion picture industry, both as distributor and producer, as, in addition to being president of the Bacon-Backer Film Corporation, he is also a vital factor in Foursquare Pictures.

In the distribution of pictures Mr. Backer insists upon the furthering of methods which invite continued patronage and enlist the confidence of exhibitors. To him a film is a piece of marketable merchandise, providing it has the elements which will rightly entertain the public and enable the exhibitor to earn a profit through showing. He admires accomplishment which is constructive, which leaves open the way for continuance of agreeable business relations.

A department has been created by the Bacon-Backer Film Corporation which will make a specialty of filming social events and happenings in private families, such as weddings, anniversaries, reunions and the different stages in the lives of children. Special attention will be paid to picturizing the manufacturing activities of large concerns for permanent record.

Medal Aids "Eagle's Eye" Publicity.

Wharton Releasing Corporation reports that an unusually large amount of publicity has been secured for "The Eagle's Eye" by means of an article sent out to thousands of newspapers, featuring the medal struck off by the German Government to celebrate the sinking of the Lusitania, bearing a date two days prior to the actual destruction of this vessel.

This article consisted of a cut showing both sides of the medal, together with about a half column of text, and, although it was sent out about two months ago, the Whartons are receiving a number of copies daily showing that it is being published in newspapers in all parts of the country. The text identifies the medal with the first episode of the serial, and is said to have been already published in 1,800 newspapers in the United States and Canada.

Daily Trade Showings for Jesters.

Pursuant with the "Show You" policy of the Jester Comedy Company, special screenings are being given practically daily at the offices in the Candler Building of the Photo Drama Co., which controls the rights to these pictures for the State of New York and northern New Jersey. At the first exhibitors' screening, showing "The Recruit" and "His Golden Romance," contracts were signed for them to be shown at the Loew theaters.

Sterling Secures "The Hypocrites."

George Loane Tucker's production, "The Hypocrites," which is to be released by the Sterling Film Corporation under the "Sterling System" about April 1, was shown to the National Board at a private review last Thursday. The following statement from them is self-explanatory. "Entertainment value—excellent." "Educational value—good." "Photography—excellent." "Coherence of narrative—clear." "Acting—good." "Technical detail—excellent." "Atmospheric quality—excellent." "Moral effect—excellent."

Intelligent, artistic direction, good acting and a splendid story are said to be combined in this screen drama, which was written by one of the world's greatest playwrights, Sir Henry Arthur Jones, and was orginally produced by Charles Frohman at the Lyceum theater, New York, where it ran a whole season, and was also shown in the principal cities in America. George Loane Tucker adapted the scenario from the play and produced it under his personal direction.

Miss Elizabeth Risdon, appearing in the current Broadway drama, "Seven Days' Leave," playing at the Park theater, is the featured member of "The Hypocrites." A trade showing of this picture will be held next week at the Miles projection room. The exact date and time will be announced later.

Trade Showing for "Moral Suicide."

On Tuesday, March 12, at 2.30, a private showing of "Moral Suicide," a Graphic Film Corporation production, written and directed by Ivan Abramson, will be given on New York theater roof. This picture is said to deal with a phase of life different from the usual theme selected for film dramatization, and to abound in tremendous situations and smashing climaxes. The thrills are not the result of spectacular effects, but rather the outcome of the actions of the characters. In "Moral Suicide" an atmosphere of refinement and culture is intermittently contrasted with scenes depicting direst proverty and the extravagant gayety of the half world, and it is claimed that this play not only offers entertainment from the standpoint of an interesting story, but it points a moral, showing an existing evil of life and indicating the manner of arming against and overcoming it.

Flynn Serial to Appear in Magazine.

The Flynn serial, "The Eagle's Eye," exposing the plotting of the German government against this country, has been novelized by Courtney Ryley Cooper and arrangements have been made by the Wharton Releasing Corporation by which the complete story will be published in the Photoplay Magazine. It is announced that four episodes will be published in each issue, and these have been so timed that they will appear concurrently with the showing of the different chapters. Further, complete equipment for window and stand displays, providing space for insertion of name of the local theater showing this serial, will be furnished newsdealers, including different copy for each weekly episode. The first four will appear in the May number.

Garson Claims Record with "Parentage."

Harry I. Garson, who recently secured rights to "Parentage" for the states of Michigan, Indiana and Ohio, reports great success in placing this picture among exhibitors in that territory, and claims a record by securing $5,000 worth of bookings in two days, including two-weeks' run at Washington theater, Detroit; one week each at the Majestic theater, Columbus; Standard theater, Cleveland; and Temple theater, Toledo; also bookings from the Lippson houses in Louisville and Cincinnati, and prominent theaters in Akron, Youngstown, Warren and Springfield.

Arvid E. Gillstrom

ARVID E. GILLSTROM, director of "King Bee" comedies, featuring Billy West, is a native of Gotenburg, Sweden, but has been in this country since he was two years of age.

"Gilly," as he is known by his associates, is one of the youngest among successful motion picture directors. He was formerly employed by the Keystone company, and has produced altogether about eighty comedies. He is a hard worker, has a fine sense of humor, knows the dramatic values of his stories, casts with great care, and directs so that everyone knows exactly what he wants of them.

One of Mr. Gillstrom's ambitions is to specialize in big productions which will combine both drama and comedy, as he claims the humorous side of great features is neglected, and comedy relief in the spectacular offerings has not been given proper attention.

Mr. Gillstrom is married to Ethel Burton, leading lady for "King Bees," and they will soon celebrate their first wedding anniversary. He was formerly a mining engineer and prospector, and made his debut in motion pictures as an acrobat and high-diver.

To State Right Physical Culture Films.

A new series of Bernarr MacFadden's Screen Magazine, dealing with outdoor sports and athletic events, is being prepared under Sy Seidman's energetic direction, and future issues will be distributed exclusively on a state right basis by Physical Culture Photo Plays. Mr. Seidman has recently secured some fine hunting, fishing and camping scenes made in the South which will be incorporated in forthcoming releases, together with calisthenics for women, pictures showing how to "Hooverize" in the kitchen, how an infant can be developed through proper exercise into a young Samson, and several scenes showing "our boys" engaged in boxing and bayonet exercise.

J. J. Sameth, sales representative, has returned from a short tour of the middle west and south, and advises that offers from a number of buyers for territory for "Zongar" and the screen magazine are under consideration.

Murray Beier Joins Magnet Exchange.

Murray Beier, has been added to the sales force of the Magnet Film Exchange, which is handling the productions of W. H. Productions Co., in New York territory.

Lamberger Finishes Publicity Trip.

Dr. O. I. Lamberger returned this week from the Ivan publicity trip throughout this country, which was undertaken for the purpose of cementing the relationship of the producing company with the distributors and to study the distribution market in the several territories. The psychological difference of people residing in the different sections of the country demands a specific appeal, and it was the purpose of the Doctor to so get into the spirit of the general audience as to imbibe their viewpoints.

Doctor Lamberger desires at this time to again express his gratitude to the managers of the different exchanges he has visited for the courtesies extended to him and to again urge them all to co-operate with him in the manner outlined so as to get real up-to-date publicity for each section.

Friedman Secures Forty-five Re-Issues.

Hiller & Wilk announce that they have just consummated a deal by which the Friedman Film Corporation, located in Film Exchange Building, Minneapolis, Minn., secured the rights for Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Wisconsin for the forty-five Hart, Fairbanks, Keenan and Talmadge re-issues being handled by S. A. Lynch Enterprises. A full list of titles of the productions included in this sale was carried in our issue of February 16, on page 982. The amount involved in this transaction is said to run into six figures.

The Friedman Film Corporation is one of the largest independent buyers in the middle Northwest, and they also are handling a number of features in that territory, including "The Whip," "The Bar Sinister" and the de luxe edition of "The Spoilers."

Raver Announces a New Vampire.

"The Soul of a Vampire" is the title of Harry Raver's first American presentation of Pina Menichelli, the famous Italian heart-breaker extraordinary, who, it is said, will out-vamp all other vampires. She is young and pretty and an accomplished actress, hence the coming of Vampire Pina will be awaited with interest, especially as her first production portrays a human tigress with her soul laid bare. Mr. Raver explains, however, that Miss Menichelli is not the "Eve" type of vampire, in spite of her beautiful figure. To be explicit, he says:

"Miss Menichelli received her training, as a child, in companies composed of such celebrities as Elenora Duse, the great Salvini and Zacconi. She started with a splendid asset, a beauty which developed into magnetic quality. In 'The Soul of a Vampire' she plays a part which fits her like a glove. The story represents her temperament to a nicety and I believe she will prove a sensation in America."

Gardner "Cleopatra" Ready for Release.

Delay in the preparation of the Helen Gardner "Cleopatra" has necessitated a postponement of the release of this picture. However, it is announced that it is now ready for release, and will be sold on a state right basis. New England rights has been purchased by the Boston Photoplay Company.

It is the intention to book this picture for an indefinite run in Chicago, and a prominent theater is now being negotiated for.

E. J. Connelly in "Devil's Pawn."

In the first Bessie Barriscale feature released by W. H. Productions Company, "Satan's Pawn," the character of Satan as portrayed by Edward J. Connelly is two-fold in its nature, changing intermittently from the wicked and evil human flesh to a scheming and tempting spirit constantly hovering around Harry Lang, the artist, and Isabella, his former sweetheart, now the wife of another. Supported by Bessie Barriscale as the woman and Arthur Maude as the man, Satan moves in and out of the situations at will. Clara Williams and Rhea Mitchell, well known to moving picture audiences for their work in a number of features, also have prominent parts in the production.

Supreme Feature Film Secures Raffles.

Hiller & Wilk announce that the Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Wisconsin rights to the L. Lawrence Weber Photo Drama's production, "Raffles, the Amateur Cracksman," have been sold to the Supreme Feature Film Company of Minneapolis, despite the announcement of a booking organization in the Northwest that they were exploiting this picture.

"Raffles" has just closed a successful week's showing at the Strand theater, New York, and Hiller & Wilk are in receipt of enthusiastic reports regarding the excellent business being done with this picture throughout the country.

What the Pictures Are Doing

Reports from Theaters and Exchanges Regarding State Right Features.

GEORGE STOCKTON of the Ohio Ivan Film Distributors reports big business on "Babbling Tongues," "Raffles, the Amateur Cracksman," and "The Modern Lorelei."

Strand Entertainment Company, Cleveland, O., state that the gross receipts from "The Lust of the Ages" was more than for any picture in the last eight months.

Gertrude Atherton Novel for Petrova.

Screen rights to Gertrude Atherton's well-known novel, "Patience Sparhawk and Her Times," has been secured by the Petrova Picture Company for Madame Olga Petrova. This is said to be, with one exception, the only story from the pen of this gifted American novelist which has been used for screen presentation; and it is claimed that a record price was paid for the use of this story.

The production is being adapted to picture purposes by Mary Murillo, who is responsible for a number of recent screen successes, and will be directed by Ralph Ince, who is now working on another Petrova picture, "The Great Star." It is expected that work on "Patience Sparhawk" will be started within the next two weeks.

Sawyer and Lubin on Tour.

Following the consummation of several sales of state rights features which they are handling, Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin left New York on March 4 for a week's vacation in Atlantic City. From there they will make a tour of various territories handling "Mother" and "The Warrior" in order to get first-hand information of conditions in the state rights field, and to assist various buyers in the exploitation of these features. For this purpose they are carrying along several recently devised advertising aids of a novel nature.

Burstein Returns to Hollywood.

Lou Burstein, president of the King-Bee Film Corps., left Wednesday on the "Twentieth Century," bound for Hollywood, California, to visit the King-Bee studio there.

During his four days on the train Mr. Burstein expects to write two scenarios for Billy West, production of which he will start immediately upon his arrival in Hollywood.

On March 23, Mr. Burstein will leave Hollywood for New York, and will bring back with him the two King-Bee comedies just completed, entitled "The Scholar" and "The Messenger," and upon his arrival a trade showing will be given.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

Genuine All-Star Cast in Brady's "Stolen Orders"

IN William A. Brady's big photoplay, "Stolen Orders," based on the famous Drury Lane melodrama, "Sealed Orders," is a real all star cast. Six names which have long proved potent in box-office power are to be found in the cast interpreting this spectacular and thrilling story. For with the idea of doing full justice to a story rich in dramatic action, in suspense, and having unusual pictorial values, Mr. Brady enlisted the services of Kitty Gordon, Montagu Love, June Elvidge, Carlyle Blackwell, Madge Evans and George McQuarrie to head a cast which contains many other well-known players.

"Stolen Orders," which will be the first of the feature productions sponsored by Mr. Brady and made under his personal supervision, is said to abound in scenes and situations that fill the eye and quicken the pulse. In point of magnitude it is said to rival the biggest productions so far seen on the screen, and to possess a universal appeal through a succession of dramatic episodes interspersed by scenes as unusual as they are spectacular.

Scene from "Stolen Orders" (Brady-Made).

The story is laid in London, Paris and America—America at the outbreak of the war. Kitty Gordon, as the wife of an admiral of the American navy, has a role in which she is said to add another to her long list of remarkably successful screen personations. Playing opposite her as a sinister figure whose every action is directed and dominated by Wilhelmstrasse is Montagu Love, and his is a character which promises such for those interested in seeing the devious ways in which the German secret agents in this country accomplish their ends. June Elvidge appears as the daughter of this arch spy, as does little Madge Evans. Carlyle Blackwell, as a young American naval officer, has a romantic role, in which his thousands of admirers will like him best, and George McQuarrie is admirably cast as the American admiral.

"Stolen Orders" is being directed by Harley Knoles and William A. Brady.

William Russell Back at Work.

William Russell is hard at work on "Adrian Gascoyne," written by William Hamilton Osborne. His new pictures will be made at the American Film Company studios at Santa Barbara, and all of the technical work will be done at the Chicago laboratories of the American Film Company. Stephen Fox will write exclusively for the American Film Company and for the William Russell productions.

Essanay Names Snakeville Reissues.

Beginning March 23, Essanay will release through General Film Company a new edition of one-reel subjects known as Snakeville comedies. The first subjects are to be "The Snakeville Fire Brigade" and "Snakeville's Sleuth," but there are eight others to be announced as comprising the intial series of ten weekly releases. The Snakeville pictures made a hit when first released, and the revised edition is expected to receive a welcome.

Randolph in Mary Garden Support.

The cast chosen by Goldwyn to support Mary Garden in "The Splendid Sinner," by Kate Jordan, is one of especial excellence. Again Hamilton Revelle, remembered for his admirable work in "Thais," plays opposite the star. Anders Randolph, noted for his excellent "heavy" work on the screen, plays Mary Garden's evil genius in "The Splendid Sinner," a role which demands finesse and power. He is favorably known to every follower of motion pictures.

Others in the cast are Roberta Bellinger, Hassan Mussalli and Henry Pettibone, all contributing much to maintain the high standard of acting in "The Splendid Sinner," released throughout the country March 24.

Willoughby to Support Miss Storey.

An English actor, Lewis Willoughby, will make his debut on the screen in the United States in support of Edith Storey in her next Metro picture, "Treasure," which is now under production at Metro's Western studios. Mr. Willoughby is widely known throughout England and the British dominions, having appeared in London in the companies of Forbes-Robertson, H. B. Irving, the late Sir Herbert Tree and Granville Barker. Mr. Willoughby came direct to this country from Australia, where he had completed an engagement with J. C. Williamson, the well-known theatrical manager.

Tapped Car Line's Current

That Was How Director Powell Got Illumination for Night Scenes.

REX BEACH and the men associated with him in the business of making motion pictures are not averse to encouraging chambers of commerce and boards of trade in various sections of the country in a wholly laudable ambition to attract cinema people to picturesque territory, but they wish these boosters would take into account the fact that picture plays cannot well be made in places endowed only with the facilities nature provided and which have since been little improved upon.

Southwestern Texas is a case in point. In filming the principal scenes of "Heart of the Sunset," the newest picturization of a Beach novel, for Goldwyn distribution, Director Frank Powell had his hands full devising means of circumventing shortcomings in equipment easily purchasable anywhere near the larger centers of the East or of California.

In the first place he lacked a studio. Faced with the necessity of photographing interior scenes colorfully true to locale and conditions of life, he was obliged to remove the roof and side walls from a small ranch house he had been using in exteriors and to make his interiors in the natural light provided by the inpour of sunshine. This, quite naturally, cost money—the price set on the house by an owner who earnestly declared it never could be repaired.

The incident occurred after there had been built at great expense a larger and more pretentious ranch house in the neighborhood of Eagle Pass. This was of concrete, for which it was necessary to haul the rock and cement over many miles of sandy trails.

Another little inconvenience was encountered in the photographing of night scenes, which Mr. Powell desired to have actually made at night, not tinted. The location he selected—the only one exactly suited to his needs—was miles from the nearest habitation. The problem of lighting it was vexing until Mr. Powell thought of appealing to the interurban car company to allow him to tap their wires for current.

Tom Puts on Madge Kennedy Week.

The American Northwest adores Madge Kennedy. No star of the screen has ever won her way into the hearts of picture lovers in Minnesota, Wisconsin and the Dakotas in so short a time as has the charming Goldwyn star, according to reports from Northwestern exhibitors on her work in "Baby Mine," "Nearly Married" and "Our Little Wife."

Not only is Miss Kennedy in high favor with theatergoers of the territory, but she numbers among her legion of admirers exhibitors of repute. So emphatic is Thomas Furniss, owner of the Rex theater, Duluth, Minn, in the belief that Miss Kennedy is without a peer in her line that he has arranged for a "Madge Kennedy Week" in the near future. He will repeat on "Baby Mine" and "Nearly Married" during the week that he plays Miss Kennedy in "Our Little Wife."

Coming Essanay Reissues.

Bookings on Essanay's Broncho Billy reissues prove George K. Spoor's belief that exhibitors have not forgotten the popularity of these pictures. The first of this series, "Broncho Billy's Leap," was released on March 1, and in succession, under the one-a-week schedule, the others to date are as follows: March 8, "Broncho Billy and the Rattler;" March 15, "Broncho Billy's Close Call," and March 22, "Broncho Billy and the Settler's Daughter."

"Snakeville's Fire Brigade," the first reissue of Essanay's familiar "Snakeville Comedies," is to be released on March 23, and will be distributed, one a week, through General Film. It will be remembered that these one-reel comedies feature the inimitable "Slippery Slim" and Sophie Clutts.

Five Productions Completed at Fox Eastern Studios

FIVE photoplays have been completed at the William Fox studios in the East, and a sixth is rapidly nearing the end. The pictures finished are R. A. Walsh's drama, "Woman and the Law," which began an engagement at the Lyric theater on March 3; William Farnum's de luxe production, "Rough and Ready"; "The Debt of Honor," in which Peggy Hyland makes her debut as a William Fox star; "A Camouflage Kiss," June Caprice's comedy, and "A Daughter of France," a stirring drama in which Virginia Pearson has stellar honors.

A film which will soon be ready for the cutting room is one in which Jane and Katherine Lee are starred. The company under the direction of Kenean Buel has returned from a three weeks' stay in Georgia, where Mr. Buel was busy "shooting" exterior scenes.

Peggy Hyland's initial production as a Fox star, "The Debt of Honor," is released as a Special Feature for March 10. O. A. C. Lund, who directed Miss Hyland in this film, will have charge of her second subject, and expects to begin it this week. Irving Cummings, leading man in several Fox pictures, plays opposite Miss Hyland. Others prominent in the cast are Frank Goldsmith, Hazel Adams, and Eric Mayne.

"Rough and Ready" is the Standard Picture for March 24. Richard Stanton, who made "The Spy" and "Cheating the Public," staged this drama of the East and West. Included in the large company are Violet Palmer, Alphonze Ethier, David Higgins, Mabel Bardine, Jessie Arnold, Frank Newton, and Franklyn McGlynn.

Meatless days, next to Miss Caprice, herself, have the chief part in "A Camouflage Kiss," a rollicking comedy of the lighter side of wartime. Bernard Thornton, Pell Trenton, George Bunny, and Lola May help Miss Caprice in its interpretation. Harry Millarde directed the picture.

Of an entirely different character is "A Daughter of France," a vigorous drama whose action is laid chiefly in an old French chateau. Miss Pearson appears as the young woman who serves the tricolor. Hugh Thompson, Herbert Evans, Ethel Kaufman, Maud Hill, George Moss, and Naida Gary are in the company. Edmund Lawrence screened the play—his first for William Fox.

George Walsh has begun a new production. The athletic Fox star has been convalescing for several weeks after returning home from Polyclinic Hospital, where it was necessary to take him for treatment of broken ribs.

There is much activity at the Fox West Coast studios. Jewel Carmen, after finishing "The Bride of Fear," has started work on a production under the direction of Edward J. Le Saint. Tom Mix has finished a play which has to do with a cowboy in a dress suit, and is said to afford him opportunity for one of his best characterizations.

Coming Standard Releases.

Following the release of "Woman and the Law" as a Standard production, with its premier at the Lyric theater in New York City, four other Standard productions shortly will be released by William Fox.

Scheduled for release on March 24 is the William Farnum de luxe production, "Rough and Ready." "The Blindness of Divorce" is the Standard production set for release April 7. This has been termed a propaganda picture, and one that will be a strong preachment on the evils of the present divorce system.

"The Soul of Buddha," a Theda Bara super-production, is scheduled for release April 21.

The tentative release for "Queen of the Sea," with Annette Kellermann, has been set for May 5. In magnificence of settings, beautiful photographic effects, and dramatic interest, "Queen of the Sea" is said to excel "A Daughter of the Gods."

O. Henrys Reach Half Century.

A romance of stage life, with a surprising climax cleverly concealed until the last flash, makes "The Song and the Sergeant," the current General Film O. Henry release, a most tempting short length program feature. Alice Terry, Bernard Siegel, Stanley Dunn, Templer Saxe, and other well known screen actors appear in this release. The half century mark in O. Henry releases is reached with this subject.

Jaxon Starts Its Seventh Series.

"The Unofficial Maneuver," the first subject of the seventh series of Jaxon comedies to be released by General Film Company, sets a fast pace for those to follow. New funmaking stunts and situations have been introduced, with the result that the Jaxons are livelier than ever. The second release in the series will be "What Occurred On the Beach." As in former series there will be six subjects in the current series.

World Announces Its Releases for the Month of April

WORLD PICTURES announces an unusual list of photoplays for the month of April in which stars of the screen appear in fast-moving, entertaining photoplays. Montagu Love comes first on the list with the big World production of "The Cross Bearer," in which Mr. Love impersonates the famous Cardinal Mercier, of Belgium, the outstanding churchman of the great conflict. "The Cross Bearer's" release date was advanced two weeks to bring it to Easter Monday. Interest has been aroused in this feature because of the strength of the story, the timeliness of the subject, the massive staging, and the reports which have been made by those who have seen snatches of the picture.

Scene from "The Cross Bearer" (World).

Ethel Clayton, Alice Brady, and Kitty Gordon follow in delightful plays, and on April 29 comes the final release for the month, Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley in "The Leap to Fame," an absorbingly interesting production with a fascinating mystery.

The list of releases for the month is as follows:

April 1, Montagu Love in "The Cross Bearer."

April 8, Ethel Clayton in "The Witch Woman." Willard Mack, whose works are adapted from the A. H. Woods stage successes, wrote this photoplay. The role of Marie Beaupre gives Miss Clayton one of the best roles of her career. Travers Vale directed the production, and Max Schneider was the cameraman.

April 15, Alice Brady in "The Trap." The story of a fanatical fisherman's daughter who is cast from her home for supposed wrongdoing. This interesting production has been staged on a wild seashore in a primitive fishing hamlet. The story was written by Robert F. Hill. It was directed by George Archainbaud.

April 22, Kitty Gordon in "Devil's Dice." This production was largely taken in the dead of winter in the Adirondack Mountains. The snow scenes are superb. George Kelson directed "Devil's Dice."

April 29, "The Leap to Fame." It is the story of a young man who made a leap to fame and happiness through an astonishing series of circumstances. Raymond Schrock wrote the story. Carlyle Blackwell, himself, directed.

Thus, it would seem, exhibitors who depend upon World-Pictures will serve.

"Shame" Attracts Attention

Sympathetic Topic Causes Many Inquiries from Interested Exhibitors.

ANNOUNCEMENT by General Film last week that it had undertaken national distribution of the John W. Noble feature production of "Shame" for the Duplex Films, Inc., has been followed by a keen display of interest on the part of exhibitors in all sections of the country.

One of the important assets of the production, aside from the fact that it presents two popular and capable stars, Zena Keefe and Niles Welch, is the sympathetic nature of the story. Exhibitors have been quick to appreciate the advertising value of a feature presenting at this time such an important topic as the unjust condemnation of innocent children for the indiscretions of their parents.

The argument which "Shame" presents for greater tolerance by society toward unfortunate children, General Film emphasizes, is handled in a discreet and dignified manner, although with great dramatic force, and has much commendation from exhibitors. War time social conditions are also delicately brought in by means of a prologue without, however, touching upon any battle atmosphere. The rest of the story deals with strictly heart interest complications, and rises to melodramatic climaxes.

Coming Pathe Short Subjects.

According to the advance notices, Pathe offers for the weeks of March 17, 24, 31, and April 7 a number of short subjects of particular value. All of them are in the famous Pathecolor. On March 17 will be issued the one-reel subject, "The Cauterets" (Picturesque France series) and "Children's Dances." The first mentioned shows lovely scenery in a portion of France little visited by Americans. The second half is noteworthy, as it is one of Pathe's famous "analysis of motion" series taken with the ultra-rapid camera, and beautifully colored.

On March 24 will be issued "Pests of Our Fruit Trees" and another Picturesque France scenic, "Arcachon," together, one reel, and each colored.

On March 31 comes "The Valley of the Dordogne" (France) and "The Horse in Action," one reel, in Pathecolor. The second half of this film has a value entirely out of proportion to its length. It is one of the very finest of the analysis series, and shows magnificent horses running, jumping, and trotting.

On April 7 will be released "Timber Transportation" (Sweden) and "St. Flour and Aurilla" (France), one reel, in Pathecolor. Each of these subjects contains many beautiful scenes of sections rarely visited by the camera.

"The Devil's Wheel" (Fox).

Gladys Brockwell in "The Devil's Wheel" is the current special feature release of William Fox. The title is based on the game of roulette, which plays a prominent part in the story. Miss Brockwell is the daughter of a French marquis who has lost his fortune and has retired to his chateau to work out a system whereby he can win at roulette. She is interested in the mathematical problem.

The scenes that show the interior of an old chateau are described as marvels of correctness and dignified beauty, and as representing one of the places since destroyed by German shells in the advance to the Marne.

Supporting Gladys Brockwell are Lucille Young, William Scott, Bertram Grassby, T. D. Crittendon, Pietro Buzzi, and Andrew Robson. The scenario was written by Charles Kenyon, and the direction was by Edward Le Saint.

Essanay's Doll Pictures a "Go."

Essanay contributed a creditable bit to the Stage Woman's War Relief "county fair," held in Chicago March 1 and 2. Besides the contribution of the time of the various members of its stock company Essanay loaned three of the series of "Doll comedies" as a novelty feature of the two-day session.

These doll pictures, coming from the genius of Howard S. Moss, producer of the Essanay Perfection Picture, "The Dream Doll," have not been released as yet. They were greeted at the "county fair" with cheers and hearty laughter. The pictures show the frolics of two little animated dolls.

Essanay actresses who contributed their time to the good cause were generaled under Frankie Raymond, Virginia Valli, Jane Thomas, Frances Conrad and Betty Harris.

Triangle Makes Change in Schedule.

The Triangle picture, "Another Foolish Virgin," which was announced as the second release for the week of March 31, has been taken off the schedule for the present, and "The Vortex" has been substituted in its place. Mary Warren, who recently appeared in "The Sea Panther" with William Desmond, has the leading role in "The Vortex," and is supported by Joe King, Eugene Burr, George Hernandez, Myrtle Rishell. Wilbur Higbee and R. P. Thompson are included in the supporting cast. "The Vortex," which George Elwood Jenks adapted from the story by Norman Sherbrook, is described as a society drama with jealousy as its theme. Gilbert P. Hamilton directed.

Finley Completes Three Pictures.

Weighing fifteen pounds less than when he started South six weeks ago, Ned Finley, now at the head of his own producing company, has returned to New York tired but happy over the completion of his first three releases. These are two-part dramas of the outdooors and fighting type like those in which, during his Vitagraph days, Mr. Finley won an admiring circle of followers. The subjects are "The Return of O'Garry," in which Mr. Finley plays again his noted Northwest mounted police role; "The Raiders of Sunset Gap," a mountain thriller, and "Mountain Law," a moonshiner story. After a short rest in New York, Mr. Finley and his company expect to return to Bat Cave, N. C., to make additional pictures for release by General Film Company.

"Hearts or Diamonds" (Russell).

THE title of the first picture produced by William Russell Productions starring William Russell is "Hearts and Diamonds." It will be directed by Henry King. Charlotte Burton has been selected as leading woman for Mr. Russell in the picture. Mr. Russell's pictures will be distributed through Mutual. The picture is an adaptation of the novel, "Adrienne Gascoyne," by William Hamilton Osborne. The story was selected during Mr. Russell's recent visit to New York, and arrangements for its picturization were completed between the author and the star.

Other members of the cast will include Paul Davies, Carl Stockdale, John Gough, and Robert Klein, all well known actors who have appeared with Mr. Russell in previous productions, and all of whom were selected by the star himself for parts in the first of his own plays.

Start General War Chest Fund.

Tonawanda, N. Y., exhibitors will contribute their share to "a war chest fund" of $100,000 being raised in that city to cover patriotic work during the war. A committee of business men will take charge of the fund and decide the amounts which will be taken from it and given to patriotic enterprises. The exhibitors, their employes, and other citizens who subscribe to the war chest fund will be promised relief from solicitation for other patriotic enterprises, excepting the Liberty Loan and the war savings stamps, participation in which are good investments. The purpose of the war chest fund is to prevent duplication of effort in the collection of funds for various patriotic purposes and to prevent the constant drives for funds which have been experienced since the beginning of the war. The exhibitors have always played a prominent part by opening their theaters and contributing generously in these campaigns. It is said they regard the new system with favor.

Pathe Busy on West Coast.

Reports from Pathe's West Coast plant disclose important deevlopments at the Paralta studio, where scenes for Fannie Ward's production of Sir William Young's "A Japanese Nightingale" are progressing rapidly under direction of George Fitzmaurice; Bryant Washburn is already well under way on a Pathe Play; Frank Keenan is working in Sir Henry Irving's great success, "The Bells"; Robert Thornby is directing Bessie Love in "A Little Sister of Everybody," by William Addison Lathrop.

In "Twenty-One," Bryant Washburn has a dual role characterization. Mr. Washburn plays the parts of a small town prizefighter and the "sweet boy" of a sheltered home who has ambitions to get away from the firmly tied apron strings of a domineering aunt. The story is filled with comedy situations.

"The One Woman" (Mastercraft).

Thomas Dixon, Jr., has just finished reading the screen version of his novel, "The One Woman," and is greatly pleased with the prospects it offers for feature film production. "The One Woman" will be the first picture to be offered to the public by the new Mastercraft Photoplay Corporation, and it is now in the course of production at the Paralta studios in Los Angeles, California.

The scenario was written by Harry Chandlee, and was the third on "The One Woman" to be submitted to Mr. Dixon for his approval. Great care has been exercised in its preparation.

Mastercraft is planning to film practically every novel which Mr. Dixon has written that contains dramatic possibilities for the screen. It will also, in the course of time, make feature productions from the best works of other authors, and its plan is to subordinate the stars and place the emphasis of production upon the story.

Scene from "Faith Endurin'" (Triangle).

Triangle's "Faith Endurin'" Has Western Atmosphere

SHOULD a man be convicted on circumstantial evidence? "Faith Endurin'," Triangle's March 17 release, strengthens the arguments raised against adjudging a man guilty on account of damaging circumstances. Roy Stewart has a luckier fate than many to whom the finger of suspicion has pointed. His life hinges upon the discovery of a certain scar on his left arm, and suspense is maintained to the dramatic climax, when the sheriff shoots away the evidence. "Faith Endurin'" is adapted from the magazine story by Kenneth B. Clarke, author of "The Sea Panther," recent Triangle release, and is a tale of the bitter hatred that springs up between cattle barons and copper kings. Roy Stewart is the cattleman who becomes a fugitive from justice for the sake of the girl he loves, Walter Perkins is Sol Durkee, the "Rocking Chair" Sheriff, W. A. Jeffries, Fritzie Ridgeway, Joe Bennett, Edward Brady, Graham Pette, and Walter Perry are included in the supporting cast. Cliff Smith is said to have secured some exceptional Western "atmosphere" for this picture. A rodeo, for which rope-spinners and trick riders were especially engaged, is a feature of the production.

Socialism, a doctrine which today is challenging the attention of the world, is the theme of "The Answer," new seven-part special picture on the Triangle program for the week of the 17th. This play, written by E. Magnus Ingleton, author of "Her American Husband," tells how a girl of the east side pretends to share the ideals of a socialist whom she marries, but turns out to be a social butterfly when she comes into the possessions of millions which he inherits. "The Answer" shows socialism from various angles. Joe King is cast as John Warfield, rabid socialist, whose inherited doctrine of hate for more fortunate humans is changed into a desire to aid suffering humanity. Alma Rubens is a daughter of the rich who dedicates her life to social service. Claire Anderson makes her first appearance in a Triangle feature production as Goldie Shepard. Charles Dorian, Francis McDonald, and Jean Hersholt complete the cast.

"Mud," the latest Keystone comedy, is a tale of two penniless, nerve-laden promoters who step out from their palatial box car to stir up a money sprouting village. Ray Griffith is the optimistic promoter who sees a silver lining to every cloud. Max Asher is his languid, pessimistic partner who "Gloomy Gusses" through life with a long face and a short pocketbook. Bewitching Peggy Pearce upsets their plans while cavorting in overalls. And the path of the get-rich quick parties is strewn with pitchforks and other pointed arguments.

"Bud" Has Three of 'Em Finished.

Reports to General Film Company from the National Film Corporation studios at Denver announce the completion of the third Clover Comedy, with Bud Duncan and Dot Farley featured. Release of this series of one-reel comedies, which will present Duncan in the style of work made famous by him in "Ham and Bud," is expected to begin at once. The subjects for which negatives have been made and printing has been started are "From Caterpillar to Butterfly," "Rip Roaring Rivals," and "The Wooing of Coffee Cake Kate." In these comedies "Bud" specializes as a midget cowboy of many misadventures, and Dot Farley burlesques the Western dance hall vampire. These comedies are said to be done in the two stars' best vein.

Busch Gardens Filmed by Triangle.

The Busch Gardens, famous show place of Pasadena, owner by the late Adolphus Busch, St. Louis brewer, were used for many of the scenes in the new Triangle picture, "The Vortex," in which Mary Warren and Joe King are featured.

"The Church Window Angel" (American)

"The Church Window Angel" is the title of the Minter subject on which Mary Miles Minter is now at work. Jeanne Judson wrote the story, and Karl Coolidge arranged it for the screen. Edward Sloman will direct it.

Miss Minter plays the role of Florence Hope, raised in ignorance of the fact that she is an heiress. Alan Forrest as Jack Andrews, the devil-may-care son of a New York lawyer, and George Periolat, famous as a character makeup, will have important roles in the picture.

Pearl White's Mail Increasing.

Following the announcement of the interest in the trade stimulated by the unusual publicity campaign on Pathe's new serial, "The House of Hate," starring Pearl White and Antonio Moreno, the great public is demonstrating a like interest.

Miss White receives many letters every day. Since the announcement of "The House of Hate" the number has increased, and practically every one of them inquire about the coming serial.

Scene from "The Girl and the Judge" (Mutual).

Olive Tell in "The Girl and the Judge" Leads Mutual

OLIVE Tell, who is appearing in the Empire All-Star productions of Frohman stage successes, is announced in a photodrama titled "The Girl and the Judge," to be released by Mutual March 18. The picture was made under the direction of John B. O'Brien. It is the third of a series in which Miss Tell has appeared for Mutual-Empire. The action of the picture is intense in character, and Miss Tell is given ample opportunity for emotional acting of a high order. Physically and temperamentally the role is a grateful one for her.

Supporting Miss Tell is a notable cast headed by David Powell, who has had a varied and decided success with the companies of Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson, Miss Ellen Terry, and other eminent actors; Charlotte Granville, Eric Mayne, Marie Reichart, Paul Stanton, Marie Burke, and Thomas Curran.

The Screen Telegram, the news-serial inaugurated by Mutual, in its second week of issue, will be released March 10 and 13. The initial bookings of the Telegram indicate that it is a winner. The contents of the first week's issue of the Telegram augurs well for future releases.

Billie Rhodes, in a Strand comedy, "His Quaker Girl," released March 19, completes the Mutual schedule for the week. Billie is playing the part of a Quakeress in a motion picture production, and is wooed and won by Jack, who thinks she is a real Quaker. Jack gets mixed up with another girl the night before the wedding, and when she turns up at the bridal festivities believes he's in for a hot time, but it's Billie, who has won him in both guises, and he promises to be faithful to both.

"Humdrum Brown" (Paralta).

Can a small town man whose mind, whose personality, whose education have been confined until the age of thirty to the advantages or rather disadvantages of a little backwoods community keep up with the rush of humanity and reach the goal of success that he is suddenly thrown into in the swirl and rush of the great city?

This problem comprises the theme of the second Paralta Walthall Play, "Humdrum Brown," which is soon to be released through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. "Humdrum Brown" is a production of a type which stands out as being entirely different from the kind in which Mr. Walthall has previously appeared. While it is a tense drama there are no over melodramatic scenes.

The story in this play, while filled with suspense, is relieved at frequent intervals by touches of excellent comedy.

Triangle One-Reel Completed.

Harry Edwards has completed the production of the first of the series of one and two-reel comedies which Triangle recently planned to give well-known dramatic performers an opportunity to display their skill as funmakers. Working under Edwards' direction in a one-reeler, "Many Happy Returns," were Jack Livingston, Jack Richardson, May Walters, Lillian West and Ruth Langston.

Heavy Call For "Tarzan"

First National Reports That Eighty Prints Will Be Necessary.

THERE is no depression in the film industry. Take the word of the directors of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit and the National Film Corporation for that. When good product is offered there is no dearth of first run opportunities, and the remarkable response of exhibitors throughout the country is the best demonstration of the fact that the pessimistic feeling prevalent in some quarters is attributable to inconsistent product rather than poor business conditions.

The release date of the picture, "Tarzan of the Apes," although announced but two weeks ago, has brought into the various First National exchanges proffers of the best houses in America.

To take care of the first four weeks' bookings as they now stand, J. D. Williams, of the First National, stated that at least eighty prints would be required, and so fast are the bookings coming in that William Parsons, of the National, has decided to allow the distributors carte blance in the matter of prints.

The picture as it will reach the film theaters will run about 7,500 feet, although the length at the Broadway theater exceeded 9,000.

Viola Dana in Seacoast Tale.

Viola Dana portrays a girl from childhood to womanhood in "Breakers Ahead," a seacoast tale which Metro releases on March 25. Charles J. Brabin, who directed the production, wrote the story in collaboration with H. P. Keeler.

Miss Dana is supported by Clifford Bruce, Russel Simpson, T. H. Gibson-Gowland, Mabel Van Buren, Eugene Pallette, Sydney Deane, and Lorena Foster.

California Troops in the First Glaum Paralta Play

THREE hundred members of the California National Guard, headed by the Coast Artillery Band from Fort MacArthur, were mustered at the Paralta studios in California recently to aid in creating a patriotic atmosphere in some of the war scenes in Louise Glaum's picture, "An Alien Enemy," in which this star will make her debut in Paralta Plays.

These scenes gave the companies their first opportunity to train with complete uniforms, guns and helmets, and they depicted the entry of a contingent of American troops into a French town behind the lines. They were staged under the direction of Wallace Worsley.

For the battle scenes in the film they were uniformed and equipped by the wardrobe room and the "props" department of the Paralta studios. Regular army officers from Camp Kearney were present at the manoeuvers to inspect the troops, which will soon be mustered into active service.

While "An Alien Enemy" is not a spectacle of war the action of the story, which contains the intense dramatic situation of a German Kultur-reared girl entangled in the international political movements of America and Germany, is carried on with a background of war.

Miss Glaum will appear in the role of a girl who is an American orphan, but who believes she is a German by birth, and whom the Central Powers seek to make a German by influence, discipline and education, and who is sent to America as a member of the German Intelligence Department to wreck what is really her native country.

"De Luxe Annie" For Screen

Successful Drama Secured for Presentation by Norma Talmadge.

ONE of the prizes of the present dramatic season has been secured by Norma Talmadge for a Select production. This is "De Luxe Annie," the highly successful drama which was presented by Arther Hammerstein early in the present dramatic season at the Booth theater in New York. The play made a big hit, not only from the artistic but also from the financial standpoint, and is at present doing exceptionally well on tour of the larger cities only.

"De Luxe Annie" was written by Scammon Lockwood, and first appeared as a two-part serial magazine story. This story was later dramatized by Edward Clark.

"De Luxe Annie" appears during the development of its first scenes to be an ordinary crook story, deftly written, and with many sympathetic touches. However, this conception of the play quickly changes under the development of a number of surprising incidents, and before the spectator realizes it he finds his interest captured and held by an unusual psychlogical study which is told through the medium of a swiftly moving drama elaborated with much incident.

Lytell Some Athlete Himself.

A new athletic star will be introduced to the screen when Bert Lytell's first Metro picture, "The Trail to Yesterday," is released. Mr. Lytell gave a hint of his ability in this line in "The Lone Wolf," but in the Metro screen romance adapted from Charles Alden Seltzer's thrilling novel he will have an opportunity to give those motion picture "fans" who like daring deeds in addition to good acting something to talk about.

Desperate riding, a miraculous rescue by means of lariat throwing, and an escape from the top of a skyscraper are a few of the exciting incidents promised in "The Trail to Yesterday," which will be staged partly in the Grand Canyon of Colorado, and partly on a cattle ranch near Tucson, Arizona. The picture will be completed at Los Angeles, Cal. Edwin Carewe, who is directing "The Trail to Yesterday," is especially able in the handling of this sort of photodrama, for his own youth was spent on the plains.

Italian Front in Hearst-Pathe.

Hearst-Pathe News No. 19 showed several events of more than ordinary interest. They were the several scenes of the work being done by one of the naval aviation schools, those of the British tank "Britannia" giving an exhibition at the City Hall, New York City, and the striking views of the French front in Italy.

The view from the French front in Italy include some of the hordes of German and Austrian prisoners taken in the recent offensive. They are full of interest, and particularly timely.

Fun in a Sore Toe Is the Theme in Judge Brown Story

A JUDGE BROWN story with a rich vein of boy humor is 'The Accusing Toe," the current release in this popular General Film series. Favorite players in other Judge Brown stories make their reappearance. Dale Faith plays the part of the boy with the injured toe, Wharton Jones is the superstitious miller, and Sadie Clayton plays the part of the boy's mother.

The miller's attempts to win the hand of Steve's mother despite the latter's unvoiced objections form the basis of the story. The miller becomes aware that he is not wanted in the family circle, as Steve conducts a cunning campaign to separate the two. He manages to leave the impression of his injured toe in every spot likely to be visited by the couple as a constant reminder of his objections. The accusing toe even haunts the mill, until the miller becomes desperate and baffled.

Following "The Accusing Toe" will come "Thief or Angel," a powerful heart interest story in which Ruth Hampton is featured together with a capable boy cast.

Here's Real War Time Economy.

The American Film Company, Inc., whose studios are the show places of Santa Barbara, found it necessary recently to build another greenhouse to take care of the accumulation of rare plants that are among its many attractions.

Owing to war conditions glass plates are hard to get, and it would mean a long wait before they could be shipped. Then the technical director had a bright idea. He remembered that there were hundreds of 8x10 still plates packed away that had been used for successful stars and their pictures. The plates were retrieved, cleaned, and proudly used in the making of the greenhouse, which took 5,200 of them.

There's economy for you.

"The Phantom Feud" (Select).

On March 1, Alice Brady began production of "The Phantom Feud," her fifth Select Picture. In this latest picture, for which "The Phantom Feud" is a tentative title, Miss Brady's leading man will be Craufurd Kent. Miss Brady's leading woman is Ormi Hawley. Mr. Kent and Miss Hawley are a veritable pair of trumps for Miss Brady. The direction is in the hands of Emile Chautard.

Strong Cast for "The Yellow Ticket."

A strong cast surrounds Fannie Ward in the Pathe Play, "The Yellow Ticket," adapted from the A. H. Woods stage success. In addition to Miss Ward are Milton Sills, Warner Oland, Armand Kalisz, J. H. Gilmour, Leon, Bary, Helene Chadwick, Anna Lehr, Nicholas Dunaew, Edward Elkus, Charlie Jackson, and Richard Thornton. Nearly all of these plays have been starred in previous motion pictures. Their assembly in one cast indicates the importance which Pathe assigns to the picture. William Parke directed it, and Astra produced it. The release date will be announced shortly.

As a stage play, "The Yellow Ticket" had a run of over a year at the Eltinge theater in New York, and six months at the Powers theater, Chicago. It also played in every city of the United States.

Story of Shipping is Pathe's Leading Drama March 24

PATHE'S program for the week of March 24 is rich in box office value, containing one of the Pathe Plays starring Irene Castle, as well as Pearl White and Antonio Moreno, in a strong serial episode and an unusually good comedy.

Irene Castle is starred in "The Hillcrest Mystery," an original photoplay directed by George Fitzmaurice and produced by Astra, with a cast including J. H. Gilmour, Ralph Kellard, and Wyndham Standing. The story teems with action, suspense, and intrigue, with a touch of color from the great war. The picture deals with shipping. The nature of this picture gives it strong popular appeal at the present time.

Pearl White appears in the third episode of "The House of Hate" serial under the title of "A Woman's Perfidy," with Antonio Moreno. This chapter is said to contain more mystery and action than the two preceding ones put together. In it Pearl White is thrown from a window of a building to the roof of a porch many feet below. The well known players who figure in this episode include Paul Clerget and Peggy Shaynor.

"Let's Go" is a one-reel Rolin-Lloyd comedy in which Harry Pollard and Bebe Daniels are seen in amusing roles.

A Pathe colored educational and travel split-reel is made up of "The Pest of Our Fruit Trees" and Picturesque France (Arcachon).

Hearst-Pathe News No. 26 and No. 27 round up this program.

Alice Howell in Scrappy Comedy.

Alice Howell, one of the screen's foremost exponents of the rough-and-ready in comedy work, makes her debut as an aspirant for Jess Willard's crown in "What's the Matter with Father," the newest Century Comedy offering. The production was directed by J. G. Blystone.

"What's the Matter with Father," unlike its predecessors, is not limited to a cast of three or four people. Instead, a round dozen of girls possessing somewhat more than their share of good looks, appear in support of Miss Howell. The principals in the cast include Eva Novak, Eddie Barry, Neal Burns and Harry Griffith.

Messrs. Abe and Julius Stern, executive heads of the Century organization, have set April 1 as the date on which "What's the Matter with Father" is to be released.

General Reports Big Business with Chaplin Reissues

THE new editions of Essanay-Chaplin comedies, being distributed by General Film Company, have established a new popularity record. General Film reports these monthly releases have had an enormous demand from all sections of The United States and Canada. Some exhibitors are said to declare they are drawing more money into their box offices than when they were first issued.

One exhibitor informed General Film recently that he had shown the new edition of "In the Park" to capacity crowds despite the fact that it had already been shown three times previously. In numerous instances prominent exhibitors have booked these Essanay-Chaplins for two, three and six-day runs, and have given them the place of prominence in their programs.

Eight Essanay-Chaplins have been released to date, "His New Job," a Chaplin masterpiece dealing with motion picture studio mishaps, being the latest. Other releases in the series are "The Champion," "A Jitney Elopement," "By the Sea," "In the Park," "Work," "A Woman," and "The Tramp."

Triangle Puncher Has Serious Fall.

Abe Farra, Triangle puncher, for many years the champion rider of Oklahoma, had a serious fall while working in the closing scenes of Roy Stewart's latest Triangle western thriller, "Boss of the Lazy Y," the screen adaptation of Charles Alden Seltzer's novel by the same name. Farra was riding a big sorrel outlaw for some "rodeo shots" when the crazed beast fell in a little arroya, throwing Farra over his head. Abe declares he would have stuck to his horse, even to the bottom of the canyon, had one of his stirrups not broken.

"Mrs. Slacker" (Pathe).

In "Mrs. Slacker," the Pathe feature release for the week of March 31, Gladys Hulette and Creighton Hale are to be seen in a picture with a timely title, up-to-the-minute story, and first class direction. Miss Hulette has been climbing fast, and "Mrs. Slacker" shows her in a sympathetic role which presents her at her best. Creighton Hale, the well known Pathe star, who has scored by his work in two serials, is co-starred with Miss Hulette. Hobart Henley directed it, and shares credit for its many artistic qualities. Paul Clerget, the famous French pantomime artist, is another prominent member of the cast. Agnes Johnston wrote the story.

"An Alien Enemy" Is Glaum Title.

Since the announcement that Louise Glaum's first Paralta Play would be known as "The Iron Beast" instead of "Intelligence" the executives of the Paralta organization have again changed the title.

It is now definitely decided that this production will be released as "An Alien Enemy."

Coming Fairbanks Play Is Different.

The next Douglas Fairbanks picture will present a marked contrast to his past performances in many ways. While Fairbanks pictures have been taken chiefly in the open this film is being staged practically in its entirety in interior scenes, depicting the home of a fashionable New York family.

Wilfred Buckland is supervising the furnishings for the interiors. The rugs used here alone are estimated to represent $30,000; the paintings, draperies, etc., having been borrowed from the home of an oil man in California who values his belongings at $100,000.

Cohan's Third Artcraft Is "Hit the Trail Holliday"

AT the New York headquarters of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation last week it was officially anounced that George M. Cohan will shortly again commence activities before the camera. Mr. Cohan's next motion picture vehicle will be an adaptation from his own tremendously successful play, "Hit the Trail Holliday," to be released under the Artcraft trade mark. This will be George M's third Artcraft picture, his former releases being "Broadway Jones" and "Seven Keys to Baldpate."

"Hit the Trail Holliday" is a farce in which George Cohan has dramatized Billy Sunday, the noted evangelist, and called him Holliday. It was produced in September, 1915, at the Astor theater, and created a furore. The novelty of the offering was refreshing, and the play was an instantaneous hit. It remained at the Astor enjoying turnaway business until March of the following year, when it was transferred to the Cohan & Harris theater, continuing this record-breaking run until July, after which it went on tour. It was intended to reopen for another New York showing this fall, but this plan has been abandoned owing to the decision to produce the play in picture form. During the entire New York engagement Fred Niblo played the title role.

The importance of this subject, and the fact that Mr. Cohan will himself interpret the part of Holliday has led the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation into unusual preparations for the production, and its best producing genius has been assigned to the task. The photoplay will be made in the Eastern studios from a scenario which is being written by Anita Loos and John Emerson, whose ability to picturize comedy is well known.

Marshall Neilan, who has had charge of the production of Mary Pickford's recent pictures, and whose last picture, "Stella Maris," has been universally acclaimed a masterpiece of artistry, will journey to New York to undertake the direction of "Hit the Trail Holliday."

Magazine and Novel Material in Triangle Spring Drive

FORCES at the Triangle Culver City studio are forging ahead on their spring drive under the leadership of General Manager H. O. Davis. The forthcoming program includes magazine and novel material which Mr. Davis purchased on his recent Eastern trip, as well as stories by Triangle staff writers to be put into production. During the week just past two new subjects have been commenced, and a society drama, "The Veil," has been completed under the direction of Thomas N. Heffron. J. Barney Sherry, Mary Mersch, Dora Rodgers, Frank Bonn, Edward Brady, and Walter Perry were included in the cast. Six other subjects are in various stages of production.

A third story by John A. Moroso, author of "The Shoes That Danced" and "In the Spring," has been started with Thomas N. Heffron as director. "The Lonely Woman" is the working title of the production, which features Belle Bennett, supported by Anna Dodge, Alberta Lee, Nellie Anderson, Lee Hill, Percy Challenger, and John Lince.

Mrs. Kate Corbaley, author of the thousand-dollar prize story in the recent Triangle Photoplay contest, has written a two-reel comedy which is being produced under the direction of William Beaudine. "Mr. Briggs Closes the House" deals with the comedies and errors of domestic life, and includes in the supporting cast Edwin Brady, Myrtle Rishell, Anna Dodge, Fred Mack, and Frank Caffrey.

Director Cliff Smith is now well under way on a Triangle Western subject featuring the cowboy star, Roy Stewart. Josie Sedgwick again will be seen as Stewart's leading woman.

"The Siren in the House," in which Jack Dillon is directing Olive Thomas and a cast including Wallace MacDonald, Claire McDowell, Ray Griffith, Lee Phelps, and William V. Mong, is well under way.

A fashion show will be one of the features of the Triangle release, with William Desmond in the title role, the working title of which is "The Honorable Billy." Frank Borzage is directing this drama, which features Gloria Swanson as leading woman.

One of the largest courtroom sets ever constructed at the Culver City studios was used by Director Raymond Wells in the filming of "In the Spring," a detective story by John A. Moroso dealing with the underworld of New York. Margery Wilson and Joe King have the leading roles.

Miss Frederick in "Fedora"

What Other Famous Players Stars Are Doing in East.

AT the Fifty-Sixth street studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation Pauline Frederick has begun the production of a screen version of "Fedora," another Bernhardt role, to follow "The Resurrection." "Fedora" is one of the best known plays in the history of the drama, being written by Victorien Sardou, and made immortal by the interpretations given by the "Divine Sarah" and Fanny Davenport.

Marguerite Clark is working on interiors for "Rich Man, Poor Man," from the George Broadhurst play which was adapted from the novel by Maximilian Foster. It is a human play, as Broadhurst productions usually are, and Director J. Searle Dawley is making the photoplay a dramatic offering, though there are many natural situations that will call forth smiles. The humble boarding house, with its ever changing human derelicts on the sea of life, the scenes of which are being taken this week, will no doubt arouse pathos as well as laughter.

Billie Burke has finished "Let's Get a Divorce," under the direction of Charles Giblyn, from the story by Anita Loos and John Emerson. Aside from the personality of Miss Burke and the fact that in this picture she has a unique comedy drama the general ensemble of "Let's Get a Divorce" is expected to arouse admiration by reason of the exquisite Florida exteriors, the beautiful interiors, and the artistic appointments, as well as the handsome costumes.

The atmosphere of the Famous Players-Lasky studio at Fort Lee, N. J., where the new Elsie Ferguson production for Artcraft release, "A Doll's House," is being produced by Maurice Tourneur, is surcharged with temperament. Tula Belle, aged eight, staggering under the laurels won in "The Blue Bird," the big Maeterlinck spectacle about to be released, appears in "A Doll's House," but the homage she would otherwise command is being shared by Ivy Ward, whose three and one-half years rest lightly upon her curly head.

Changes in Universal's Press Department.

Goodbye, "Camouflage." So long, "Greatest Hit on Earth." Farewell, "Hit of the Season." Having outlived your usefulness, your public career is threatened. But you are not to be Oslerized alone. With you are doomed to go such hardworked old friends as "Intensive," "Psychology," "Efficiency Expert," "Somewhere in France" and "Cinematographer."

The first shot in the campaign to put you permanently into "blighty" has been fired from Universal's battery of mimeographs. Believing that the time had come when you deserved to be put on the retired list and pensioned, the order to all the studios and to the advertising and publicity departments of the organization has been issued.

Beginning immediately you will please discontinue the use of the following words or expressions in the titles, subtitles or advertising of any and all Universal moving pictures:

Camouflage.—Because it has been worked so hard by moving pictures, newspapers and magazines that it has begun to be a source of irritation to persons who have more than a one-track mind.

Intensive.—Same reason as above.

Psychology.—Because it is used by so many persons who seek to appear learned (when their knowledge is purely superficial) that it has lost its effectiveness. Nine times out of ten it is fake or bluff or, if you will, camouflage.

Efficiency Expert.—Because there is no such animal.

Somewhere in France. — Because it proves lack of originality.

Cinematographer.—Because it is a terrible thing to load onto a good cameraman.

Greatest on Earth.—Because no picture we ever made or anybody else ever made is actually the greatest on earth.

Hit of the Season.—Because this is the expression that practically every theatrical manager and picture producer employs in describing everything he produces.

Some Metro Notes.

Finis Fox, author of several Metro pictures, is assisting his brother, Edwin Carewe, in the direction of Bert Lytell's initial Metro picture.

George D. Baker, who was recently appointed manager of productions at Metro's West Coast studios, at Hollywood, Cal., has left the East to take up his new duties.

Edward J. Connelly, who plays Howard Belmont in support of Nazimova in her second Metro picture, has been engaged to play Ekdal in Nazimova's stage production of Ibsen's "The Wild Duck."

Leighton Osmun, well known as a scenario and short story writer, has joined the scenario staff at Metro's West Coast studio, Hollywood, Cal.

Change in L-Ko Policy

Beauty Choruses to Be Featured in Coming Comedies.

JULIUS STERN, president of the L-KO Komedy Kompany, has just returned to New York after a stay of six months at the West Coast studios of that organization. Mr. Stern's return has brought to light a radical change in the policy of his company, insofar as the type of comedies which are to be released in the future are concerned. The new L-KO releases will feature girls—lots of them—rather than just one or two players.

The results of a questionnaire recently sent out to representative exhibitors located in various sections of the country are said to be responsible for the change in the style of the L-KO output. The answers sent in by these exhibitors state that the effect of the revival in popularity of the "girl" shows now being presented to the public is being reflected in the growing demand for screen comedies in which feminine beauty figures importantly. Mr. Stern brought with him upon his return to New York three productions. The first of these comedies to be released will be "Cooks and Crooks," which has for its central characters Gale Henry, Eva Novak, Hughie Mack and Dave Morris. The titles of the other two L-KO comedies will be announced later. James Davis directed "Cooks and Crooks," the action of which takes place in Mexico.

When Stage Money Went.

During the filming of the new Triangle picture, "The Veil," a "Coast Defender" who has never been east of the Rockies, slipped up on a matter of detail that failed to escape the eagle eye of Director Thomas N. Heffron. A New York cafe scene was being taken and the actor, who was a bit shy on Eastern customs, prepared to pay his bill with silver dollars. The scene was saved by substituting "stage money."

Trilma Godfrey Winters in California.

Trilma Godfrey, who has just finished a road tour, is spending the remainder of the winter in California with her sister, Rae Godfrey, of the Triangle-Keystone beauty brigade. The Godfrey sisters are well-known in the professional world, having been troupers for years. Before Rae Godfrey left the road to take up her picture career the family had a vaudeville act, billed as "The Great Godfreys."

Bushman and Bayne Producing "Breaking Into Eden"

FRANCIS X. BUSHMAN and Beverly Bayne have begun the production of "Breaking Into Eden," a Metro All-Star Series picture under the direction of Will S. Davis, who guided the stars in "Under Suspicion," a recent release, and "The Brass Check," just completed.

"Breaking Into Eden" is a screen version of "With Neatness and Dispatch," a story by Kenneth L. Roberts. June Mathis and Luther Reed prepared the continuity from Roberts' original story.

Francis X. Bushman plays Paul Donaldson, nephew of Police Commissioner Burgess, a virile American who is mistaken by a girl for "Slim" Keegan, a crook. Beverly Bayne has the role of Geraldine Ames, the girl who mistakes Paul for the crook.

This new vehicle for Bushman and Bayne is a stirring romance replete with mystery, surprise and adventure.

In the support are Frank Currier, Hugh Jeffrey, Ricca Allen and Sylvia Arnold. James J. Dunne has returned to Director Davis' staff as his assistant.

Florence K. Billings to Play in "The Reason Why"

A NOTABLE addition to the cast of "The Reason Why," the Select Picture which Clara Kimball Young and her own company are making in the New Rochelle studios, has been made in the person of Florence K. Billings.

Miss Billings is one of the best known actresses on the screen, and her interpretation of the roles she plays is invariably marked by fine characterization and an unerring sense of emotional values. Some of her most recent work has been with Jane Cowl in "The Spreading Dawn," as Frank Keenan's leading woman in "Loaded Dice," and in Norma Talmadge's forthcoming Select release, "By Right of Purchase."

The inclusion of Miss Billings practically completes the cast of "The Reason Why." Miss Young's leading man will be Milton B. Sills, who plays Lord Tancred to her Zara. Other well known players will be Frank Losee as Markrute, the banker, and Kate Lester as the Duchess of Glastonbury. Little Eldean Stewart will play the part of Mimo. The production is under the direction of Robert G. Vignola, and the photography is being handled by Lewis J. Physioc.

"The Reason Why" is a film version of Elinor Glyn's famous novel of the same name, and has been prepared for the screen by Mary Murillo.

Soggy Fist in a "Dry" Fight.

Mr. Average-Citizen-of-Toronto was somewhat amused when he learned that the Dominion Alliance had shocked itself by the sight of moving pictures at its prohibition mass meeting in Massey Hall. The Dominion Alliance is the crowd of self-appointed uplifters which has been pulling a series of "bones" in connection with its campaign for bone-dry conditions throughout the Dominion, including the inviting of William Jennings Bryan to address a Toronto audience.

Somebody figured that it would be very much up-to-date to have moving pictures at the first evening session, but to the horror of the Alliance members the first views presented were those of Canadian soldiers enjoying a boxing bout somewhere overseas. In a moment the crowded auditorium was in an uproar.

"Stop it," "Disgraceful," "Shameful," "Very Uplifting" were some of the expressions of disapproval which were shrieked above the noise. One woman coaxed a handy faint and had to be carried out. The picture was suddenly shut off in the middle of the reel and the nice little diversion came to an abrupt end.

Live Wire Branch Man.

Publicity and advertising co-operation of a sort calculated to be of great value to the home office has been devised by Richard Robertson, Goldwyn Pictures' branch manager at Kansas City. He has issued from his exchange a four-page printed release sheet setting forth the selling virtues of all the Goldwyn Pictures since the first release, "Polly of the Circus," starring Mae Marsh, up to and including the new Madge Kennedy picture, "The Danger Game," to be released April 7.

In his release sheet Mr. Robertson has summarized the salient box office features of each production. The title, the star, the author, director and the number of reels in each are specified. As a whole the pamphlet makes a handbook for exhibitors which should prove of much use.

Rare Interest in Pictograph 110.

A timely and interesting subject in the 110th release of the Paramount-Bray Pictograph, "the magazine on the screen," is entitled "War and the Motorcycle," which is released with the permission of the Government, and shows the importance of the motorcycle in modern warfare.

"The Torpedo" is an animated diagrammatic drawing by means of which E. D. Parmelee, of the Bray Studio, Inc., makes clear the operation and destructive power of the torpedo, the hornet of the sea.

"Kilauea, the House of Everlasting Fire" is the first of a series on Hawaii, and shows the most accessible volcano in the world, with the mighty mountain in a state of extraordinary turbulence.

Rupert Julian Brings His "Kaiser" to the Broadway

RUPERT JULIAN, long identified with Bluebird and Universal productions, made his bow as an independent feature producer at the Broadway theater, Saturday evening, March 9, where his seven-reel production, "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," opened for an indefinite run. The production, the scenario of which was prepared by E. J. Clawson, is remarkable in its treatment of present day world history. At the same time it is not to be regarded as a war romance. While the rape of Belgium and the sinking of the Lusitania are dwelt upon and furnish material for a part—a small part—of the action they are merely unimportant incidents which furnish the background upon which is etched out in the detail an amazing characterization of the Kaiser.

According to Mr. Julian, he conceived the idea of turning out "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," over a year ago. It is his intention either to sell the picture outright or state right it. With this idea in mind several endings have been prepared for it. As the picture now concludes it shows the fall of Berlin and the surrender of the Kaiser to the Council of Allies.

That Julian is prepared for any eventuality is evident from the fact that he brought with him on his trip to New York a set of costumes which will enable him to film any kind of scene that future history may call for.

Julian, himself, enacts the title role of "The Kaiser." With features that lend themselves readily to a facial resemblance to the German war lord his screen appearance is uncanny in its fidelity to the published portraits of the Prussian ruler.

Not content with merely physically resembling the central character of his production the player-director closely studied the various memoirs that have been written by people formerly of the Imperial Court. These furnished insights to the mannerisms and habits for which the Kaiser is peculiar, and so enabled the producer to lend an additional air of realism to the production.

Practically every important character in the German Court is represented in "The Kaiser." Bethman-Hollweg, Admiral Von Tirpitz, Von Hindenburg, Admiral Von Pliscott, General Falkenhayn, General Von Besseler, General Von Der Goltz, and oterhs. Famous characters embraced under the Allied battle flags who are seen include President Wilson, Ambassador Gerard, General Pershing, General Haig, General Joffre, General Diaz, and King Albert of Belgium.

A notable cast enacts the important roles. Among the more prominent players who appear are Allen Sears, Nigel De Brullier, Lon Chaney, Mark Fenton, Harry Carter, W. H. Bainbridge, Harry Von Meter, Walter Belasco, Wadsworth Harris, Winter Hall, Elmo Lincoln, Robert Gordon, Joseph Girard, Alfred Allen, Harry Holden, George Huff, Ruth Clifford, Betty Carpenter, Ruby Lafayette, Gretchen Lederer, and Zoe Rae.

That Is What Is Said About Chaplin by Those Competent to Know.

SPECIAL press material and exhibitors' aids are being prepared by the publicity and supply departments of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit for the exploitation of the first of the new series of Charlie Chaplin comedies, which will probably be ready for release soon after Easter.

In making a compilation of the facts and fictions regarding Chaplin's career for use in putting over his forthcoming production it has been discovered that the million-dollar slapstick genius ranks third among those personalities that have received mention in the public press during the past two years. The Kaiser and President Wilson both lead him in actual amount of space, according to the estimation of the manager of a well-known clipping bureau, but the film star's face is undoubtedly known to more people in various parts of the globe. And his name occurs so frequently in all forms of reading matter that it has practically taken on the color of an adjective. The history of screen comedy, written without reference to Chaplin, would be a rather melancholy affair.

It is also a noteworthy fact that Charlie Chaplin's unique art has received attention from many of the most intellectual critics both here and abroad. Some time ago The New Republic, America's leading "highbrow" weekly, published a lengthy essay from the pen of Harvey J. O'Higgins on Chaplin's screen work. Mr. Fiske also contributed a serious article to the Century Magazine on the little comedian. Gilbert K. Chesterton has written about him delightfully in the New Statesman of London. McClure's Magazine ran the story of his life not long ago. Vachel Lindsay, the poet and photoplay commentator, has devoted considerable attention to Chaplin in his books and special articles on the screen. George Jean Nathan, who usually takes delight in hammering theatrical amusements in the most highly sophisticated English at his command, has showered many complimentary paragraphs upon C. Spencer in the columns of the Smart Set and Puck, and Frank Crowinshield, most exclusive of Twenty-five Cent Magazine editors, has been known to hire expensive artists to illustrate a whole page of Charlie's capers for Vanity Fair.

Selections from this wealth of material will be utilized in the new press book on "A Dog's Life" just to convince a few remaining skeptics that Charlie Chaplin is a real celebrity in addition to being the world's most successful buffoon.

Scene from "Pay Day" (Metro).

Rowland and Engel Help the Drews Make "Pay Day"

THE screen novelty starring the Metro comedians, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, "Pay Day," is described as a "sinful entertainment and extraordinary feature production in five parts in which are laid bare the deep and devilish secrets of a demon in evening dress, a meller drayma done with all its devious devisements into a durable delight." Metro will release this unusual attraction as a special production de luxe.

In this Metro "thriller," Mrs. Drew plays Doris Fenton, a "poor working girl," and Mr. Drew appears as Kirke Brentwood, a vitally bad man. This screen version of the stage melodrama written by Lottie M. Meany and Della Bailey, which was seen on Broadway not so long ago, was adapted and directed by Mrs. Drew, proving her right to be called America's most versatile woman star.

Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro Pictures Corporation, appears in this picture in a part which might perhaps best be described as leading juvenile, and Mrs. Drew insists he is the best leading juvenile she has ever directed. Joseph Engel, treasurer of Metro, also is seen in the production.

Three beautiful women appear in the production, Mrs. Drew refusing to follow the policy of some stars in excluding good looking women from her support. Of these, one is a favorite actress, Florence Short, recently seen with Emmy Wehlen in "The Outsider," and two are society women who are personal friends of Mr. and Mrs. Drew. Neither has ever appeared on stage or screen for anyone except the stars of Metro-Drew comedies. Other players in the Drew version of "Pay Day" are Emily Lorraine, who plays Mrs. Fenton, mother of the "poor working girl," and Charles Riegel, who appears in "Her Boy," with Effie Shannon and Niles Welch, plays Dr. Grayson.

Mary Pickford in "Amarilly of Clothes-Line Alley" (Artcraft).

Mount Lowe as "M'liss" Background.

Mount Lowe—"mile high"—was the setting chosen for some of the most beautiful exterior scenes in "M'liss," Mary Pickford's new Artcraft story being directed by Marshall Neilan. It is from Bret Harte's novel, and is written by Frances Marion. The company spent several days—just before the rain—up at the summit of the mountain, and there were shot some exquisite views of sky, hill top, and the country spread below, with the action of the photoplay going on against this wonderful natural background.

"Naughty, Naughty" (Paramount).

"Somewhere in Kansas" is laid the scene of "Naughty, Naughty," Enid Bennett's second Paramount picture from the Thomas H. Ince studio to be released under the Paramount trade mark on March 25. The play is comedy from beginning to end, comedy of the rare and delectable sort, with character and homely humor; a parody on the narrowness of the country town and the people who are sometimes found in rural communities far from the "maddening throng."

The picture was written by C. Gardner Sullivan.

"Naulahka" Titles Causing Comment.

An interesting element that enters into the success of Pathe's "The Naulahka," produced in six reels by Astra, is the tinting and toning of the titles. Each spoken title has also in smaller letters a brief situation title worded after the book, thus carrying out to the letter the spirit of the original.

Rothacker Studies "Tarzan"

Chicago Laboratory Expert Seeking to Bring Out the Best in Big Film.

WATTERSON R. ROTHACKER, president of the Rothacker film laboratories in Chicago, paid a flying visit to New York last week to witness an exhibition of "Tarzan of the Apes" for the purpose of deciding upon appropriate methods for bringing out the striking and exotic scenic features of the big production through effective color printing.

As soon as the executives of the new co-operative circuit had closed the deal for the general distribution of the picturization of Edgar Rice Burroughs' popular novel, Rothacker was asked to come on and see the picture during its Broadway run. As a result, the Chicago laboratory wizard spent the better part of two days taking careful notes on the production, studying its lighting, mass effects, atmospheric conditions aimed at in the story, etc. He also made a careful record of the reactions that different scenes produced upon the big crowds filling the Broadway theater, as he is of the opinion that this is a first-class way to get live hints on solving some of the technical problems of printing. He will utilize those particular tints and duo-tones that will intensify the emotional and esthetic effects aimed at.

During Mr. Rothacker's visit to New York he also looked at the Petrova picture, "The Life Mask," and spent considerable time in consultation with First National executives regarding the printing of the first of the new Chaplin comedies.

FOX'S MUTT AND JEFF COMING ON MARCH 24.

THE title of the first 500-foot Mutt and Jeff animated cartoon which will be released under the new world-wide distributing arrangement recently completed by Bud Fisher with the Fox Film Corporation is "The Decoy." It is the story of a big game hunting expedition in which the cartoon characters alternate as decoy and hunter. The decoy camouflages himself in the skin of a wild animal, and goes forth to lure real wild animals within range of his partner's gun. That, at least, is the plan, but what actually happens is that the wild animals resent the effort to impose upon them, and give the perpetrators of the plot some of the liveliest moments in their sketchy lives.

Three Inces For March

Charles Ray, Dorothy Dalton and Enid Bennett Are Featured Paramounters.

DURING March, Thomas H. Ince will offer three subjects under the Paramount trade mark, presenting Charlie Ray, Dorothy Dalton, and Enid Bennett. C. Gardner Sullivan is responsible for two of these subjects. With these three offerings the producer expects to score a triple hit.

The initial Ince production released on March 11 presents Charles Ray in "The Family Skeleton." The story offers a humorous account of the struggle of a young millionaire against an imaginary inherited craving for drink. Sylvia Breamer, who has just signed to appear in Blackton's "Missing" for Paramount release, plays opposite Ray in this film, others in the cast including Andrew Arbuckle, Billy Elmer, Otto Hoffman, and Jack Dyer. Victor L. Schertzinger directed the film, with Chester Lyons at the camera.

Dorothy Dalton's picture comes on March 18, and is entitled "Love Me." This story by C. Gardner Sullivan presents a society drama of a breezy Western girl who marries into an exclusive wealthy family and is compelled to make great sacrifices in order to gain her actual acceptance as a member thereof. Roy William Neill staged this production, the supporting cast presenting Jack Holt, William Conklin, Robert McKim, Dorcas Mathews, Melbourne MacDowell, and Elinor Hancock.

Enid Bennett winds up the Ince schedule for March with "Naughty, Naughy," another Sullivan story. This is Miss Bennett's second Ince picture released under the Paramount banner, and presents the Australian actress in the part of an up-to-date girl who, after visiting New York, determines to rejuvenate her old-fashioned homestead. In the supporting cast are Earl Rodney, Marjorie Bennett, the star's sister; Gloria Hope, and Andrew Arbuckle. Jerome Storm is the director, and Charles Stumar, the cameraman.

"GOOD NIGHT, PAUL" FOR CONSTANCE TALMADGE.

CONSTANCE TALMADGE has commenced the filming of "Good Night, Paul!" another Select Picture in which she is presented by Lewis J. Selznick. This is her sixth Select Star Series production, and the third which she has made this season at Hollywood. As Matilda Landers, Miss Talmadge has a role in which she can display to their fullest degree her vivacity, buoyant independence and lovableness.

"Good Night, Paul!" was a distinct stage success of the current season in which Ralph Herz, the eminent comedian, was featured with Elizabeth Murray, and which is now on tour in the principal cities. The screen version is being directed by Walter Edwards.

Norman Kerry and Harrison Ford are leading men. John Steppling creates the role of Batiste Boudeaux, the fat, easy-going uncle from the provinces. Mr. Steppling brings to this characterization a rich experience on the speaking stage, as well as before the camera, and the result is sure to be a polished performance. The other members of the cast include Beatrice Van as Rose, and Rosita Marstini as Mme. Julie.

Proof That Cameramen Have a Heart.

World-Pictures has—or, rather, had—a new cameraman. Not wishing to spoil a bright future, let it be said that his name was Mike Moran. Mike claimed to be skillful with the camera and impervious to heat and cold when he applied for a job. After his pedigree had been verified and his references O. K.'d, he was given a position.

Circumstances and a touch of bronchitis sustained by one of the concern's star cameramen made it necessary for Mike to become the crank pilot during the taking of a highly important scene of a big new World production. In the cast was a girl—SOME girl, as Mike fervently remarked to one of the scene-shifters when his roving glance espied her. She was only an extra girl, but oh, those eyes, and oh, that mouth, and oh, that whole layout!

Once Mike saw the girl it was a case of down and out for him—more in truth than poetry. The director shouted, the actors acted, the scene pulsated through its thrills, and Mike ground and ground and feasted his famished eyes on the girl. Finally, the scene was finished and the director had Mike's film rushed through. But, lo and behold, when the director came to look at the film, there were girl portions of the scene visible thereon, but the rest of the film was a blank.

Truth to tell, the scene was retaken, with the beautiful vampire out and a new crank-pilot in.

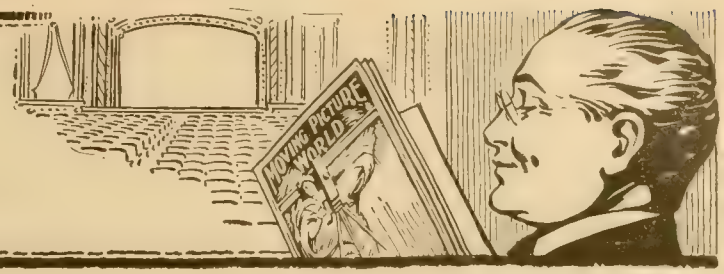
Trade News Brevities



New England Film Trade News of the Week

Manager Soriero, a Real Old-Timer, Celebrates Fifteenth Anniversary—Famous Players Exchange in New Haven—Lynn Bans Sunday Vaudeville.

By Richard Davis Howe, 80 Summer St., Boston, Mass.

BOSTON, MASS.—Thomas D. Soriero, the popular manager of the Park theater in Boston and the Strand theater in Lowell, has just celebrated his 15th year in the theatrical business. He started in the game as an usher at Keith's theater in Providence. At that time his "boss" was William J. Mahoney. Mr. Mahoney showed Mr. Soriero the tricks of the trade so successfully that Mr. Soriero is now general manager of two of New England's most popular and progressive moving picture theaters, and Mr. Mahoney is his assistant manager at the Park theater.

Licensed Operator Absent — Manager Fined.

Chelsea, Mass.—Henry J. Denning, manager of the Chelsea theater, pleaded guilty in the Chelsea court to operating a moving picture machine without a license. This is the first case of the kind in the local court. Denning was fined $50, but the fine was suspended, as it was shown that Denning did not purposely violate the law. The offense occurred on a "heatless Monday," when the licensed operator was absent.

R. W. McCracken Is Chief Cook.

R. W. McCracken, formerly of the Boston exchange of the Triangle Film, has been called into service in the United States Navy. He is assigned to quarters at the Commonwealth Pier in this city. He is rated as a chief cook.

J. L. Reardon Wants to Be Aviator.

J. Lester Reardon, former manager of the Vitagraph New England office, who recently joined the navy, has been assigned as second class storekeeper at Commonwealth Pier receiving ship. Mr. Reardon expects soon to take examinations for the aviation branch of the service.

Business Healthy in Maine.

Business in the moving picture industry is excellent in Maine, according to the report brought here by Russell B. Clark, Boston manager of the Kliene service, who has returned from a tour of the Pine Tree State.

Famous Players Exchange in New Haven

New Haven, Conn.—A new exchange building, two stories high, will be completed within a few weeks for the Famous Players. The new office is equipped with every modern convenience, and the "run-off" room is a handsome miniature theater similar to the one in the Boston office of the company. Simplex machines are to be used in the projection. Manager Henry Sculley has made a fine record building up the Nutmeg State business of the big film concern.

No Vaudeville in Lynn Sundays.

Lynn, Mass.—Vaudeville acts have been discontinued in all the moving picture theaters on Sunday nights by order of Mayor Walter H. Creamer. All Lynn theaters are compelled to confine themselves to a straight moving picture and musical program.

Recently the Protestant ministers of the city complained to the City Council against the line of suggestive jokes which were a common part of Sunday night shows. The matter was taken up by the state police, and the official ban of the mayor followed.

World Pictures to Have Finer Quarters.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—William R. Priest, manager of the local World Film exchange, anounces that they will shortly move into their new quarters, 1315-17 Vine street, a new two-story building, which will give them four times the capacity of their present quarters. The contract calling for the complete equipment of the film exchange will cost $9,000, and is expected to be ready for occupancy about April 1. The front of the building is of Old English, set off with tile work, and was planned by Whitney Construction Company, of Boston.

B. R. Tolmas Now in Charge at U. S. Exhibitors Booking.

B. R. Tolmas, succeeding Allen May, recently in charge of the Philadelphia office of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corp., is well known to all exhibitors in this territory as former manager of the Mutual. Mr. Tolmas states that both the large and small exhibitors are showing a marked preference for film that offers special opportunities for advertising. F. H. Gillman is covering eastern Pennsylvania territory, and reports excellent business.

Trenton Star's Tenth Anniversary.

The Star theater, Trenton, N. J., which has been doing business since February 22, 1908, has enjoyed a most prosperous career under the successful and continuous management of Phillips Papier. The Star, although located in the heart of the business section of the city, enjoys the unique distinction of doing nearly all of its business in the morning and afternoon. The theater started with 286 seats, and, although this number has not been increased since then, an up-to-date program is offered, which includes K-E-S-E, Paramount, Fox features, and Charles Chaplin and "Fatty" Arbuckle comedies. The theater, which was originally built by Phillips and the late Sol Papier, is now being operated by Mrs. Sol Papier and Phillips Papier.

War Vessels Buy Projectors.

Officers of the U. S. S. Kansas and U. S. S. Hancock recently installed Simplex machines. Lewis M. Swaab also sold two Simplex machines to the Grand and Overbrook theaters, and to the Du Pont Club.

Samuel F. Lefko Now with Masterpiece.

Samuel F. Lefko, formerly of the Kline Poster Co., has joined the sales force of the Masterpiece Film Attractions, Philadelphia, and will go on the road next week.

Shows Pictures with Three-Day Change.

Herbert Effinger, manager of the Strand theater in Tioga, Pa., reports excellent business due to the three-day policy of showing pictures. Success in this instance was the outcome of a considerable amount of study and perseverance in the face of difficulties.

Shows "Son of Democracy" to Teachers.

Walter H. Brooks, of the Auditorium theater, Kennett Square, Pa., gave the first public showing of the initial chapter of "The Son of Democracy" on Wednesday, February 27, for the benefit of the Parent Teachers Association, the Century Club and the faculty of the public schools. A lecture on the progress of the silent drama was given by Miss Rose Tapley.

Bald Facts About Screen Comedies.

Bill Parsons, who, in conjunction with his glittering belfry, is to star in Capitol Comedies on the Goldwyn plan, tells why he chose the name and trademark that are to characterize the comedies.

"First of all," said Bill, "the dome of the Capitol, while devoid of fossil, is the most important place in the world today. Again, the fact that I am making capital of my baldness is another reason, and lastly—there is something under that old capitol dome you can't find anywhere else. Proving, as I have said before, 'a brilliant belfry is never brittle'."

Newark News Letter

By Jacob J. Kalter, 25 Branford Place, Newark, N. J.

East Orange Brighton Opens.

EAST ORANGE, N. J.—The Brighton theater, East Orange, was opened the evening of March 2 as a first class moving picture house. Charles L. Robinson and Charles Wuerz, who were formerly in charge of the Strand theater, 120 Market street, Newark, are the men interested in opening up the Brighton.

Adolph Neshbaum Owns Colonial.

Adolph Neshbaum, of 163 Clifton avenue, Newark, N. J., has filed Colonial theater as the trade name of his moving picture house located at 148 Summer avenue.

"Son of Democracy" at City.

Managing Director Leon O. Mumford, of the City theater, Seventh and Orange streets, Newark, N. J., announces the booking of Benjamin Chapin in "The Son of Democracy." The series will commence March 22.

Union Hill Theater Has Anniversary.

The Lincoln theater, Hackensack road, Union Hill, N. J., celebrated its first anniversary under the Marvin management. Manager Fred R. Willard, in honor of the anniversary, arranged a special bill. The Lincoln is practically the largest theater in north Hudson County, having a seating capacity of nearly 3,000 people.

"Eagle's Eye" at Hill.

Johnny Mack, manager of the new Hill theater, Springfield and South Orange avenues, Newark, N. J., announces that his theater will show "The Eagle's Eye" first run in Newark. Mr. Mack has conceived some novel advertising ideas, and his house is now one of the leading picture places in the city.

Canadian Fuel Controllers Discriminate

With Plenty of Coal in the Dominion and the Ban Lifted from Other Enterprises, Picture Theaters Feel Restrictions as Hardship.

By W. M. Gladish, 1263 Gerrard St. East, Toronto, Ont.

TORONTO, ONT.—The exhibitors of Ontario and Quebec have been called upon to observe heatless holidays one day each week long after all coal restrictions had been raised from other industries and after most fuel conservation orders in the U. S. A. had been abolished. The Canadian Government authorities are being charged generally with undue discrimination against the theaters of the two provinces, particularly when restrictions were apparently needless on account of balmy spring weather and a more or less plentiful supply of coal.

Toronto exhibitors have found that what is lost in the way of revenue through the closing of a theater one day cannot be made up on the other days of the week. This is one reason why the Canadian Theaters, Limited, operating a number of houses in two provinces, found it necessary to close temporarily the Theater Francais, Montreal. It is understood that this house may not be reopened until some time in April. This decision was taken by the company in spite of the fact that contracts had been signed for the new Chaplin releases. Recently it had been decided to adopt a two-changes-a-week policy. This theater was being used also every Sunday for the presentation of special moving picture programs. Universal's latest serial, "The Bull's Eye," had just been started too.

When interviewed at Ottawa early in March, Assistant Fuel Controller Peterson declared that the matter of calling off the closing order for theaters had not been considered at all. He admitted, however, that numerous representations had been made to him that the continuance of the rule had become an undue discrimination.

No word has been heard that exhibitors have reduced salaries of employees on account of the dayless weeks, while exchange managers required full payment for film service for the dark Mondays. Expenses were running right along as before—not forgetting rent.

A Week of Wonderful Attractions.

Film attractions at various leading theaters of Toronto during the week of March 4 were of a high order. Incidentally, the New Princess theater, one of the two local high class legitimate houses, turned to moving pictures for the week by presenting "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea." Other pictures were shown as follows: Regent theater, "Daughter of Destiny"; Allen, "The Seven Swans"; Strand, "Daughter of the Gods"; Loew's, "The Warrior"; Hippodrome, "Nan of Music Mountain"; Park, "The Fall of the Romanoffs" first half, and "Dodging a Million" second half; Doric, "The Garden of Allah" first half, and "The Maid of Belgium" second half; Madison, "His Robe of Honor" first half, and "The Burglar" second half, and Rialto, "When a Man Sees Red." The majority of these were first runs.

Toronto Changes in Film Trade.

The announcement is made that H. E. Stonge is no longer associated with the new Oakwood theater, the largest and most beautiful of the purely suburban moving picture theaters of Toronto. Mr. Stonge became the first manager of the theater.

W. E. Greene has resigned from the position of publicity manager of Regal Films, Limited, Toronto headquarters.

A New Exchange Merger Possible.

There are definite rumors in the air that a merger of several Canadian exchange companies will shortly be completed. The news already made public is that probably three distributing companies will amalgamate, but the names are withheld for the present. If the deal goes through there will be three large film renting companies in the Dominion, roughly speaking. These will be the Regal Films, Limited; Famous Players Film Service, Limited, and the new combination. This information comes from a reliable source.

Teachers Ask Prohibition of Comedies.

The school teachers of Hamilton, Ont., grabbed a bit of the limelight at a recent convention in that city by adopting a resolution urging the total elimination of film comedies in local theaters.

One of Schade's Lobby Sits.

SANDUSKY, OHIO.—A most original patriotic lobby display was used for "The Remaking of a Nation," the Camp Sherman pictures, at the Schade theater, Sandusky, Ohio.

Special Lobby for Army Camp Film.

Manager George J. Schade figured out an inexpensive and yet classy display and then went to it, the result appearing in the accompanying illustration.

He bought a batch of Southern pine, then hired two carpenters, and under his personal direction they built around the edges and below the canopy a miniature barracks. Afterwards it was decorated with about fifty small American flags and appropriate signs.

"The whole thing didn't cost me much and it was a great flash," says Schade, who has a reputation for advertising his pictures and putting them on in big city style.

Only One of 'Em Is Left.

There is one trio of Cleveland film men which has been broken up. A picture of the trio accompanies this article. Reading from left to right, they are J. N. Landfield, Morris Safier and Leon D. Netter. The war has taken Landfield, who is now at Camp Sherman, while cupid has taken Safier, who was married recently to Miss Rose Selznick. So the only one left is Mr. Netter, who is the head of the Masterpiece Film Attractions. He is a bachelor still.

J. N. Landfield, Morris Safier and Leon D. Netter.

"The way I look at it, they both have gone to war, because marriage is the same thing," he says.

Gaiety Theater Is Billy Maddox's.

Ripley, Ohio.—Billy Maddox is now sole owner and manager of the Gaiety theater, Ripley, Ohio. He has purchased the interest of his partner, Frank Boyd, and promptly proceeded to sign up contracts for Douglas Fairbanks, Mary Pickford, and a few other well-known stars.

Stanley W. Hand Honored in Cincinnati

Exhibitors, Exchangemen and Many Others Join in Tendering a Farewell Dinner to World Film Manager Who Is Leaving for Boston.

By Kenneth C. Crain, 307 1st Nat. Bk., Cincinnati, O.

CINCINNATI, O.—On the evening of March 4, at Caproni's, a well known Bohemian resort of Cincinnati, a choice gathering of film men, exhibitors, newspapermen, and others connected either directly or indirectly with the film business gathered to bid farewell to Stanley W. Hand, who came to Cincinnati only a few months back to take charge of the World Film office.

Mr. Hand promised to be a fixture, and his abilities became so promptly evident that he was made president of the Associated Film Exchanges of the Chamber of Commerce at the election which took place only a few weeks after his arrival. In fact he had been with the World for three years, and declared his intention of making his home in Cincinnati as long as the World would let him. Unfortunately other interests interposed, making Mr. Hand an offer which he found it impossible to refuse. He goes to Boston for the United Theaters of America, Inc., the Lee Ochs organization which has been formed, and, while he will remain in Cincinnati until his successor for the World takes charge, his Cincinnati friends seized the opportunity to do him honor while he was yet among them.

George Wilson, of the Standard Film, and Tom Reilly, of the Colonial theater, had charge of the dinner, and saw to it that everything was as it should be. The affair was one of the most successful of its sort in film circles in Cincinnati in a long time, and the prospective loss of a valued member of the local film world was not permitted to interfere with the heartiness and cheerfulness of the send-off given to him.

Investigating Carelessness of Expressmen.

The Associated Film Exchange of the Chamber of Commerce, Cincinnati, O., has asked the Traffic Department of the Chamber to investigate the methods used by express companies in transporting moving picture films on account of complaints from exhibitors regarding films reaching them in bad condition. Exchange representatives, on the other hand, declare that they have observed many instances of carelessness in handling films on the part of express company employees, which made danger from fire more than possible, besides causing injury to the film. As the Chamber of Commerce has a well-equipped traffic department in charge of an expert it is believed that remedial action can be obtained through this channel much more readily than would otherwise be possible.

Trying for Sunday Shows in Galesburg.

GALESBURG, ILL.—Galesburg exhibitors who are anxious to add another day's business have suggested that a sort of an advisory vote be taken in connection with the coming election upon the Sunday show question. The time having passed for the circulation of a petition among the voters to have the matter placed officially on the ballots as a question of public policy, it is proposed that the theater managers pay for the printing of the ballots. The ballots are to be left at the polls and the voters can use them just to show how they feel about it.

Illinois Theater Notes.

Galena, Ill.—Dreamland theater is using a lobby feature, a bulletin board of patriotic colored cartoons bearing upon coming events.

Springfield, Ill.—Secretary of state, Lewis Emerson, has issued a certificate of incorporation to the Premier Theater Company, Chicago; capital, $500; incorporators, Yadwiga T. Wrzesinski, Josef Wrzesinski and Anthony Balcerzak.

Rockford, Ill.—Two Rockford lads who were charged with malicious mischief in throwing stink balls into the crowded Royal theater were punished by being ordered to be at home at eight-thirty every night.

Abingdon, Ill.—The Abingdon theater has been redecorated, a new screen put in and new lights installed.

Dixon, Ill.—"The Spy" was shown at the Family theater under the auspices of the ladies of the G. A. R.

East St. Louis, Ill.—The opening of the Fourteenth Street theater, at Fourteenth and State streets, was delayed by the new seats being caught somewhere in the freight congestion. H. L. Curry, who has taken a lease on the house, has practically rebuilt the theater.

Peru, Ill.—Samuel Schlosser, of Cayuga, Indiana, has leased the Nickelette theater.

Petersburg, Ill.—"Jack and the Beanstalk" was shown at the Strand theater for the benefit of the Red Cross.

IN MICHIGAN.

Cadillac Sabbatarians Swear Out Warrant.

Cadillac, Mich.—After the city commission took no action upon a petition signed by many church members, which asked that moving picture theaters be denied the right to operate on Sundays, warrants were sworn out for the manager of the Star and Lyric theaters for operating on the Sabbath.

With Michigan Exhibitors.

St. Joseph, Mich.—The Coldwell theater has been publicly commended by the Civic Improvement Committee of moving picture censorship for the excellent class of films which it is bringing to St. Joseph. In signifying its approval of the Caldwell policy the committee cited that not only were the films clean, but that they pleased the public.

Calumet, Mich.—"The German Curse in Russia" has been booked for two nights at the Calumet theater, where it will be shown under the auspices of Troop A of the Copper Country cavalry.

Cadillac, Mich.—The ordinance forbidding moving picture theaters to operate on Sundays has been declared invalid by the court, which holds that it is an unreasonable exercise of the legislative power of the city.

Manistique, Mich.—The Rex theater has been opened under the management of E. C. Hoyte.

South Range, Mich.—The Crown theater has been sold to Sewnig & Leahy, proprietors of the Crown theater in Calumet.

Charlevoix, Mich.—A fireproof building will be erected for the moving picture theater operated by Stoddard & Wallace.

Trade News of the Week in Detroit Filmdom

Liberty Film Exchange Opens—Censorship Advocates Will Introduce Bill in Michigan Legislature—Theater and Exchange Notes.

By Jacob Smith, 718 Free Press Bldg., Detroit, Mich.

DETROIT, MICH.—R. K. Shallenberger, brother of Dr. Schallenberger, of the Arrow Film, has arrived in Detroit and opened offices at 201 Film building, where he will operate as the Liberty Film exchange. He already has a number of feature attractions to offer Michigan exhibitors, and is negotiating for others.

Censorship Advocates Will Introduce Bill.

The subject of censorship was brought to the attention of exhibitors last week when Mrs. A. H. Finn, of Detroit, chairman of the state civic department of the Federation of Women's Clubs, of Michigan, said that efforts would be made at the next session of the state legislature to have enacted a censorship bill.

Called to the National Army.

Two of the young World Film exchange men in Detroit have been placed in the first class of the draft—A. J. Fecke, city salesman, and William Ruden, booker. Both are ready to go when their country needs them, and they have already allotted themselves a certain number of Germans to capture.

High Rent for 600-Seat House.

Talk about your high rents—A. J. Gilligham, of the Empire theater, Detroit, seating 600 people, pays $55,000 per year starting the first of May. This includes the whole building, part of which he sub-leases.

Detroit Fox Office Busy.

Field Carmichael, manager of the Fox exchange, is notifying exhibitors in this territory that he will start releasing Bud Fisher's Mutt and Jeff Cartoons about the 24th of March.

In this connection we might add that the Detroit office of Fox has shown marvelous gains since Mr. Carmichael took hold. He has built up every department of the company's business. During March he boasts of five full week runs right downtown in Detroit. He also is proud of the fact that Fox regular program pictures start their year's contract at the Miles theater the week of March 18.

While Mr. Carmichael is in full charge he is assisted in the sales department by Joe Kaliska, J. O. Brooks, and C. H. Powell.

Changes at Detroit Universal.

W. D. Ward, manager of the Detroit Universal, announces several important changes—the appointment of Ray J. Branch as office manager and Ira H. Cohen as special representative handling only the big specials released by Universal. Mr. Branch was formerly an operator, a theater manager, and in the supply business. Mr. Cohen has been with the Universal for nearly two years, during which time he has shown excellent results from a selling standpoint.

Charles Simpson Leases Northwestern Theater.

Charlie Simpson, who operates the Simpson Cartage Co., has leased the Northwestern theater, at 1269 Grand River avenue, Detroit, and will open it later in the month following much needed alterations and improvements. Mr. Simpson, by the way, has also taken over the M. S. Bailey Co., and will hereafter be Michigan distributor for the Motiograph projector. He will remain temporarily at 23 East Elizabeth street, and later will locate in the film building.

Detroit Pick-Up Notes.

Sam Morris, district manager for Select Pictures, and A. Carlos, of the Fox Film Corporation, were both in the city recently.

H. A. Ross, Detroit manager for Famous Players-Lasky, attended a sales meeting at Pittsburgh on February 4 and 5. Mr. Ross is making a real record for himself in the manner in which he is conducting the Detroit office, both as to efficiency and sales.

E. S. Brewer, of the Strand theater, Owosso, has taken over the Majestic in that city, which he will operate only part of the time.

L. J. Gardiner, Detroit manager for the United Theater Equipment Corp., and also manufacturer of the Velvet Gold Fibre Screen, shipped two screens recently to Camp Upton, Long Island.

Harry Goldberg, former manager of the Casino Feature Film Co. in Detroit, writes the World that he is enjoying his training at Camp Upton, and "that I enjoy reading the Michigan News items in the Moving Picture World."

G. Genestra has sold his theater at Ithaca, Mich., to Mrs. Struble, who has already changed the name to the Struble theater. He has also disposed of his theater at Alma to A. H. Ashley, who will change the name to the Liberty theater.

Arthur Hoganson, formerly manager for John H. Kunsky theaters, will take charge of the Stratford theater, Detroit, sometime later in March. Of late, Mr. Hoganson has been city salesman for the Dawn Masterplay Co.

O. F. Spanr, vice-president of the Enterprise Optical Mfg. Co., of Chicago, was a recent visitor in Detroit closing negotiations for the Michigan selling rights on the Motiograph projection machine to Charles A. Simpson.

George Balsdon "Over There."

Nothing to the contrary having been communicated, it is safe to assume that George Balsdon, who lately retired as manager of Vitagraph's New York exchange, has arrived in France and taken up his duties. He goes on six months' leave as assistant to Mr. Foster, of the Community Film organization, operating through the Y. M. C. A. in furnishing motion pictures to Uncle Sam's soldiers "over there." The portrait herewith shows Mr. Balsdon in the official Y. M. C. A. uniform, and was photographed on the eve of his departure for France.

Spread of Smallpox Menaces Texas Shows

Drought Seems Broken and There Is Plenty of Money, Yet Many Picture Houses Are Closed on Account of the Plague.

By Douglas Hawley, Times-Herald, Dallas, Texas.

DALLAS, TEX.—There've been some more rains in Texas, and people, therefore feel better. Rains mean prosperity in an agricultural commonwealth, and rains have been mighty few and far between here lately. But from the looks of things the drought is about to be broken, and everything's going to be all right.

Smallpox, however, is growing worse. It has begun to assume serious proportions. Starting in the Westion section of the state it seems to have spread. A theater at Cooper was closed in the middle of a performance during the week ending March 3. Cooper is a town of, perhaps, 2,000 people, and twenty-seven cases were reported there.

And the thing has spread into Arkansas, too. At Helena people may not attend a picture theater until they have shown their vaccination certificates. Orders have been issued by the Federal Government, it is reported, in various towns in Arkansas, Louisiana, and Mississippi that unless the local situation, as regards the disease, is controlled the Government will step in and take charge. The severe winter is said to be responsible for the prevalence of the disease. None of the larger towns have been affected, but it is being felt in the moving picture business, and felt mighty hard.

Film Story of Texas Impeachment Ready.

The film story of the impeachment proceedings which ousted James E. Ferguson as governor of Texas last fall will soon be shown in Dallas. The film was made by the Southern Feature Film Company, and is being booked through Chas. E. Pressley, representative. It will be shown at the Hippodrome theater.

C. W. McKinney Tells of New Theaters.

C. W. McKinney, Arkansas traveler for Vitagraph out of Dallas, says conditions in that territory are excellent, save for the smallpox scare in some towns.

C. H. McCrackey has recently opened the Alex theater at Dermott, Ark.

At Lone Oak and Clarendon, fires which destroyed theaters haven't dampened the optimism of their owners. J. W. McIntosh, at Lone Oak, is rebuilding the Majestic, and A. K. Perry is coming back at Clarendon with the house which was destroyed there recently.

Joe Partridge With Vitagraph in New York.

Texas friends of Joseph Partridge, who knew him down here as a special representative for the McClure syndicate, the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, and Vitagraph, are glad to note that he has gone back as New York branch manager for Vitagraph.

J. Orgain Ready to Open Theater.

Marfa, Tex. J. Orgain, ranchman, capitalist and philanthropist, is opening a theater at this place—date, May 14. Mr. Orgain has become convinced that the town and the territory demand a first class house, and has recently returned from a Dallas trip on which he made initial bookings.

Apollo Film Opens Waco Studio.

Waco, Tex.—C. Christopher, president of the Apollo Film Company, announces that his concern has established a studio at Waco, and is preparing to stage a six-reel Roman drama, utilizing locations to be found about this city. George Rigas, who has played leading roles with some well known women stars, is the leading man for the Apollo company.

No Sunday Shows in Wichita Falls.

Wichita Falls, Tex.—Picture shows in Wichita Falls close on Sunday after March 1. An agreement between exhibitors and representatives of the county attorney's office has been reached to this effect following a controversy which has continued for some weeks.

H. MacDowell Will Conduct the Isis.

Houston, Tex.—H. MacDowell has been installed as manager for the Isis theater here by "Billy" Guerringer, assistant general manager of the Saenger Amusement Company, conducting houses here, at Shreveport, and other points. Henry Sterns, former manager, has resigned the Houston post.

Kentucky News Letter.

By Ohio Valley News Service, 1404 Starks Bldg., Louisville, Ky.

Louisville Business Encouraging.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—The ideal weather conditions of the past three of four weeks have been excellent for the moving picture people of Louisville. More patrons are coming downtown than since the first part of December. All motion picture houses are having large crowds during the day, which, during the cold weather, was rather unusual, but all things being considered there has been no room to complain.

Fixed Nights for Features at Advance Price.

Three of Louisville's suburban exhibitors, Sylvester Groves, of the Preston; Harbert Nadel, of the Hill Top, and J. M. Wentzell, of the Norman, have recently experimented with the idea of having certain nights for feature productions, and on these nights have raised the prices in some cases from 10 cents to 15 and 20 cents. The idea so far has proved quite a success, and it is their intention to keep it up.

New Theater License Scheme in Lexington.

Lexington.—Commissioner of Finance Darnby, of Lexington, recently drew up an amendment to the city license ordinance, which he will submit to the Board of City Commissioners. It is Mr. Darnbys intention to equalize the license fee paid to the city by the moving picture houses and theaters. Under the new ordinance he would reduce the fee of all houses charging five cents from $200 a year to $100 and increase the fee of those charging 10 cents or over from $200 to $250, while the license of the Lexington opera house and the Ada Meade theater would be increased from $200 to $300.

Films Handled by Big Feature Right Corporation.

The Big Feature Rights Corporation, of Louisville, announces that it has the state rights on the following: For Kentucky, "Joan the Woman," "Whither Thou Goest," "Garden of Allah," "Two Men and a Woman," "The Crisis," "Battle Cry of Peace," "Neptune's Daughter," "Silver Threads Among the Gold," "Where Are My Children?" 14 two-reel Hart pictures, 28 Keystone comedies, and 3 big Hart pictures, "The Bandit and the Preacher," "The Hell Hound of Alaska," and "The Bargain;" for Kentucky and Tennessee, the new million dollar Chaplin comedies, Petrova pictures, "Babbling Tongues," "To-Day," "One Law for Both," "The Mad Lover," "Marvelous Maciste," "The Sign Invisible," "Alimony," "Little Girl Next Door," "The Whip," "The Deemster," "On Trial," "Tarzan of the Apes," and "The Fall of the Romanoffs."

Will Submit New Building Code.

W. E. Glossop, city building inspector, Louisville, has announced that a new fire code ordinance will be drafted shortly, and that this ordinance will be submitted to the building trades, underwriters, etc., before action is taken. Mr. Glossop was an architect before entering the inspector's office, and is a great believer in fireproof materials. Whether the new code will have any effect on houses now in operation is a question. A few changes will probably be made in the present regulations for building moving picture houses. This ordinance is not aimed at the picture theaters, but for general fire protection in all classes of risks.

Kentucky News Notes.

"The Whip" recently played Covington, Ky., to the largest audience ever seen in Covington. It made such a hit that the theater presenting it held it over for an additional day.

Somerset, Ky.—The Gem recently booked with Nathan Schaffner, Kentucky representative of the Big Feature Rights Corporation, of Louisville, twenty big features.

The Strand theater, of Louisville, Ky., has recently installed in its house a new $10,000 Wurlitzer organ, recarpeted the floors, and put up a new electric sign.

Robert Warwick playing in "The Mad Lover" at the Walnut, Louisville, Ky., recently made such a hit with the patrons of this theater that the management side tracked another picture and held this one over for four days.

"Deemster" was recently shown at Murray, Ky., under the auspices of the Red Cross, and proved to be a big hit, and made quite a sum of money.

It has just been learned in Louisville that two managers of local houses were at one time actors of some merit. Sylvester Groves, of the Preston, was for ten years in comic opera and on the vaudeville stage, while Herbert Nadel, of the Hill Top, was in vaudeville in a blackface act. Mr. Groves, when running a feature picture, quite often goes out and sings for his audiences, and always makes quite a hit.

Des Moines News Letter.

By J. L. Shipley, 615 Locust Street, Des Moines, Iowa.

Many Film Men in Des Moines.

DES MOINES, IA.—Representatives of various film concerns have flocked to Des Moines after the manner of Mohammedans to Mecca during the past week. First came Lee Horn, manager of the Supreme Feature Film, Minneapolis. Mr. Horn, with the assistance of T. McCoy, special representative of the Supreme, held trade showings of "The Italian Battle Front." Mr. Horn also arranged a special showing of "The Russian Revolution" film, which his firm controls. J. V. McStea was the next film man to hit town. Having closed after seventy weeks in advance of "Civilization," during which he covered the whole western and southern country, Mr. McStea, on arriving in Chicago, was immediately sent out as Iowa representative of the Allen Film corporation, handling "Mother" and "The Warrior," with headquarters at Des Moines. Sid Baker, Kansas City manager of Foursquare, joined the visitors and, after screening his serial, "The Eagle's Eye," secured a fat first run contract and left for Omaha. Dave Block, of the Omaha Triangle office, spent two days among local exhibitors.

Sign Points to Theater Down Side Street

Creston, Ia.—Louis Rosenfield's Temple-Grand theater, Creston, stands on a side street. At the corner of the main street he has an immense sign in red and white globes with an arrow pointing to his theater a half block distant. The sign is also effective in daylight, as the lights surround letters of heavy white enamel that can be seen for blocks either way.

Mr. Rosenfield has also increased the capacity of his theater to fifteen hundred seats by remodelling the balcony and doing away with the gallery, mezzanine loges replacing the latter.

Worthwhile Exhibitors' Notes.

Marshalltown, Ia.—The Casino here has discontinued the showing of feature pictures entirely, the house going to a policy of vaudeville with two changes weekly. A. Burdette of Chicago has been engaged by owner Leo Muelhaupt as manager.

Adel, Ia.—Under the direction of J. Ruskin the Opera House at Adel, a town of little more than a thousand inhabitants is showing the big features two days at advanced admissions and getting the money. Manager Ruskin uses paper and printers' ink liberally in the surrounding country with good results.

Fort Madison, Ia.—Ludy Bosten, of the A-Muse-U, Muscatine, has purchased the Orpheum at Fort Madison, and after overhauling the theater will open it with big features.

Sioux City, Ia.—Manager Shortley, of the Princess, Sioux City, announces that he will discontinue the vaudeville and adopt a policy of straight pictures, playing the pick of the open market subjects at advanced admission. Manager Shortley has purchased an immense Wurlitzer Unit Organ, which will be used in conjunction with an orchestra in providing the musical settings.

Nashville News Letter.

Thrift Meetings at Princess.

NASHVILLE, TENN.—Manager Harry Studekum has patriotically tendered the use of his theater for holding Sunday thrift and war savings stamp meetings. The Princess is a 1,500 capacity house, and is well suited to mass meetings. Mr. Sudekum has arranged for his orchestra to furnish music for the Sunday gatherings, and quartettes and other kinds of free amusement go a long way toward providing genuine entertainment.

Fire at Tullahoma Theater.

A $700 loss was sustained by the Crystal theater at Tullahoma, Tenn., a few days ago when fire broke out in the operating room, destroying six rolls of film and the projecting machine. The afternoon show had just closed, and no one was injured. It is thought that the operator left a roll of film on the machine, and forgot to turn off the current. The building is owned by W. E. Marshall, and was damaged.

House Manager Enters Service.

Clyde Felts, formerly house manager and chief operator of the Crescent theater, is now doing his bit toward kicking the Kaiser on the shins. Felts recently enlisted in the forestry regiment of the Government, and is now stationed in Vancouver, Wash., where he will be located for some time felling the big trees of the Northwest. He left Nashville on February 25, after having been in the employ of the Crescent Amusement Company for the past eight years.

Mr. Felts began work with the company as a doorboy at the old Dixie theater, long since demolished to make way for one of the up-to-date houses of the company. In the particular section where he has been assigned the Government is gathering timber for the manufacture of aeroplane parts, and for that reason many opportunities are offered for his advancement on account of the pressing need of materials.

Lincoln Film at Loew's Princess.

Memphis, Tenn.—"The Son of Democracy," a serial in ten two-reel subjects, has been booked for Loew's new Princess in this city. One subject will be given each week in connection with the regular picture service.

Kansas City Theater Opens With Free Show

At Its Formal Opening, the Star Theater Entertains All Who Come—Has a Two-Reel Hart Picture—Seats for Four Hundred Persons.

By Kansas City News Service, 115 Railway Exchange, Kansas City, Mo.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—Kansas City was again treated to a free movie show on March 2, when the Star theater, at 308 East Twelfth street, made its formal opening. This little theater, containing about 400 seats, is under the management of A. H. Boussard and D. G. Saba, who manage and own the World in Motion theater here. The admission is five cents, a piano and drum furnish the music. It is needless to say that opening with a William S. Hart two-reeler at an admission price of nothing drew a good-sized crowd.

Roy Sweetland Gets Pathe Territory.

The Kansas City Pathe office has put Roy Sweetland on the Missouri territory of the office to succeed C. W. Potter, who has resigned, and who was formerly an exhibitor at Hiawatha, Kansas.

Kleine Censor Suit Still Pending.

The action of the local courts on the picture, "I, Mary MacLane," is still pending, with both sides claiming an early victory. A member of the local Kleine exchange made the remark that even if the exchange were the loser the publicity gained from the local newspapers' accounts of the court proceedings would be of great value to the picture in other fields owing to its humorous nature.

Columbia Theater Passes.

The Columbia theater, formerly the Tenth Street theater, became dark March 2 after a successful season of feature picture at advanced prices. The building housing this theater will be torn down immediately, and an office building will be built on the site. This is one of the oldest theater buildings in Kansas City. At its start it was one of the five-cent houses, as were all at that time. It was one of the first to go to the ten-cent price, and this summer its owners showed for the never-changing price of 25 cents, to which the war tax was later added. It was managed by W. Collins, who has now taken over the management of the Garden theater succeeding W. H. Quigley.

George H. Bowles Takes New Job.

George H. Bowles, for the last year manager of the Kansas City Bluebird exchange, has become associated with the Ferry Handley Advertising Company, one of the largest advertising concerns in Kansas City. Mr. Bowles took up the new work the week of February 25 in the offices of the company at 1120 Walnut street, when the consolidation of the Universal, Bluebird, and Jewel offices was planned.

L. H. Chandler Recovering.

L. H. Chandler, a salesman for the Kansas City Foursquare office, who for several months has been seriously ill, is reported to be improving rapidly. Mr. Chandler was caught by several serious afflictions, the result of which was that paralysis set in, and for a while it was believed that he would be paralyzed forever from the waiste down. Lately, however, the paralysis has been working out, and he is expected to be out within six weeks. He has been materially helped through the efforts of the Kansas City exchange men, with whom it has always been an iron-clad rule to help a brother in distress, and during his illness many little things have been sent him that have made things more pleasant to him.

Middle West Theater Changes.

Weatherford, Okla.—Geo. Remund has purchased the Bungalow theater, and will continue the business.

Snyder, Okla.—E. L. Dean and R. C. Huffine, of Frederick, have purchased the Gem theater from Mr. J. O. Plow.

Okmulgee, Okla.—E. A. Young has purchased some lots here, and has announced that he will build a new theater.

Caldwell, Kan.—The Caldwell opera house was destroyed by fire February 19, with a loss of $15,000.

Auburn, Neb.—The opera house has been opened by Frank Dillard, who will open a moving picture show.

Sidney, Neb.—H. A. Dubuque has purchased the U. S. A. theater from J. A. Bentley.

Atlanta, Neb.—Mrs. Sarah Abbott has taken over the moving picture theater which has been operated by Crane & Hammon.

Comstock, Neb.—The Gayety theater suffered a film fire which resulted in the destruction of a film and scorching the front of the theater.

Lincoln, Neb.—Manager Garman of the Rialto theater has reduced the admission prices for matinees to fifteen cents for all seats, including war tax.

Lincoln, Neb.—The Orheum and Oliver theaters were the local houses selected to begin the patriotic campaign of the auxiliary moving picture committee of Nebraska State Council of Defense.

San Francisco Exhibitors Feel Prosperity

Several Theaters Have Started During the Past Few Months—What the Leading Houses Are Providing as Shows—Much Good Music.

By T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—Exhibitors in this city and vicinity are enjoying satisfactory business, ideal weather conditions being a prominent factor in keeping attendance at a high level. Practically all of the rain that has fallen during the entire winter has come within a period of ten days, and at no time has there been a slump in business. The war tax is having no appreciable effect on attendance at moving picture shows and almost every exhibitor in this territory is charging the regular prices, with the tax additional. The opening of several new theaters within the past few months has had the effect of causing the managers of first-run houses to exercise greater care than ever in the selection and presentation of programs. The following is a summary of the bills put on during the last week of February, with the additional features of note.

"The Further Adventures of Tom Sawyer" was the attraction at the California theater, a Hearst-Pathe news and a Robert Bruce scenic completing the film offering. The California Symphony orchestra of thirty pieces, led by William McKinney, was an added attraction, the players appearing on the stage, which had an Oriental setting.

The Imperial theater offered for the first time Enid Bennett in "Keys of the Righteous," with the comedy, "It Pays to Exercise," also a Burton Holmes travelogue and a Universal weekly. Early in the week Fatty Arbuckle appeared on the stage in person at several performances, while late in the week Enid Bennett appeared in person.

The attraction at the Strand theater was "In Bad," featuring William Russell, and of special interest was the musical program presented by Organist MacClymont and the Strand orchestra, led by Pietro Marino.

The Rialto bill included "Brown of Harvard," "The German Curse in Russia," a news weekly and "Alaska Wonders in Motion." At the matinees an O. Henry story, "The Fifth Wheel," was added.

The Portola theater did a fine business on "Flare-up Sal," with Dorothy Dalton, a weekly news and a scenic completing the offering. Plans are being made for the remodeling and renovating of this house.

At the Tivoli theater records of many months' standing were broken with "Men Who Have Made Love to Me" and the fourth episode of the "Italian Battlefront" pictures. The installation of a second pipe organ is under way at this house, but the work is not allowed to interfere with the regular routine.

The Alhambra theater, now under the management of Robert Drady, offered "Broadway Love," with Dorothy Phillips, a comedy, a scenic and the Alhambra Topical Review. This house is shortly to be redecorated throughout.

Doings of the News Cameramen.

Ray Duhem was a member of the party of one hundred and fifty persons who went to Eureka, Cal., recently as the guest of Mayor James Rolph, Jr., to witness the launching of a big ship at his yard. The trip was made by special train and many interesting moving pictures were secured for the Universal Weekly.

Harry Birch, formerly with the Selig-Tribune in this territory and well known on the Pacific Coast, is now with the Gaumont Weekly at Chicago.

Sanford E. Greenwald, formerly with the Mutual weekly, and before then with the Universal, is now in the United States Marine Corps and has been assigned to recruiting duty. He has furnished the navy department with many still pictures for publicity work.

The annual winter sports at Truckee, Cal., were late in commencing this year, on account of the lack of early snow and the special events were not held until late in February. Among the cameramen who attended to get material for news weeklies were Otto Stolberg, representing Hearst-Pathe; E. W. Castle, district manager for Gaumont, and Charles Perryman, of the Duham Motion Picture Company, who secured material for the Universal weekly. Several moving picture companies were working there, including one headed by Charles Ray and Gloria Hope.

V. R. Moore Home from Long Trip.

Vernon R. Moore, sales representative of the Progressive company, San Francisco, distributors of Paramount and Artcraft productions, has returned to the home office from a trip through northern California and Nevada. He has been on the road since October, with the exception of five days during the holiday season, and declares that he has signed up an exhibitor in every town in this territory. He will shortly resume his work in the San Joaquin valley.

Famous Screen Star Buys Projector.

Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle, who has been spending several days in San Francisco of late, recently visited the offices of the Atlas Educational Film Company in the Pacific Building to view some pictures and, while there, became interested in the De Vry portable projection machine handled by this cornern, and placed an order for one for his personal use.

Edward Kemp Visits Southwest.

Edward H. Kemp, who handles the Motiograph in the San Francisco territory, and who does much camera work in addition, is away on a trip of several weeks, making moving pictures in the copper mining districts of the Southwest. Several of the De Luxe models of the Motiographs have been sold of late.

Ackerman & Harris Circuit Expanding.

Sam Harris, of the Ackerman & Harris circuit, returned recently from a visit to Los Angeles in connection with plans for enlarging the circuit in the Southwest. Work on a number of new theaters for this concern is now under way and contracts for the construction of others are to be let shortly. Contracts have been awarded for the erection of the theater to be occupied at San Jose, the cost of this to be $110,000, exclusive of furnishings. While in Los Angeles Mr. Harris visited the Chaplin studio and was impressed with the care being taken with the initial release, which will be shown at the Hippodrome or the Casino theater at San Francisco some time in April.

Jewel Theater Closed.

The Jewel theater, San Francisco, was closed this week by an attachment levied by the house that furnished the seating facilities when this theater was opened last fall.

New Firm Opens Offices.

Lazarus & Greathouse, who are handling the Julius Steger production, "Redemption," with Evelyn Nesbit Thaw, have opened offices at 973 Market street, San Francisco. Other productions will be handled in conjunction with this one.

T. & D. Circuit Makes Purchases.

The Turner & Dahnken circuit has purchased the rights in this territory to "The Warrior," "The Public Defender," "The Fall of the Romanoffs," "Tarzan of the Apes" and "Just a Woman." This concern is considering the proposition of eliminating a part of its road force and of carrying on much of its booking and contract business by correspondence.

The Tivoli theater, conducted by the T. & D. circuit, has arranged for a Fashion Show to be featured for two weeks in conjunction with local merchants. A similar event will also be held at the Oakland house.

The T. & D. circuit has contracted for Pathe features to be shown at all its houses, the service to be inaugurated at an early date.

San Francisco Briefs.

The Ideal Film exchange has opened offices at 105 Golden Gate avenue, San Francisco, and is handling films, machines and supplies.

The De Luxe Film-Lasky corporation, which has been out of business for some time, has formally surrendered its corporation papers.

Herman Lubfin, operator at the Orpheum theater, and Fred Butler, another local operator, have opened a moving picture shooting gallery on Market street, San Francisco.

Dorothy Dalton and Hazel Miller, of Los Angeles and New York, respectively, recently spent a few days in San Francisco.

N. S. Kaplan, owner of a Russian moving picture company, arrived in San Francisco recently from the Orient.

E. C. Jensen, district manager for the World Film, has left for the Northwest, and from there will probably go to New York.

Harold Harshman has resigned his position with the Progressive Motion Picture Company, San Francisco, and the booking of short subjects is now being handled by Carl Milton.

B. W. Copeland, formerly of Spokane, Wash., is in San Francisco, following an Eastern trip, and plans to remain in California if a connection can be made with some representative theater.

Northern California Notes.

San Bruno, Cal.—C. A. Roscoe, who recently opened the Novelty theater, has added another projection machine.

Oakland, Cal.—The Heidelberg theater, on San Pablo avenue, is to be reopened.

San Jose, Cal.—A moving picture machine purchased from Walter Preddey, of San Francisco, has been installed at St. Joseph's School.

Arbuckle, Cal.—The Opera House is now conducted by Day & Jones.

Berkeley, Cal.—Contracts have been let for the redecorating and remodeling of the Berkeley theater, which was recently reopened under the management of Harry Gilbert.

Minneapolis News Letter

By J. L. Johnston, 719 Hennepin avenue, Minneapolis, Minn.

Ruben & Finkelstein Acquire the Calhoun.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN. — Ruben & Finkelstein, owners of ten Twin City photoplay houses, are reported to have bought the Calhoun, Minneapolis' prettiest neighborhood theater, on Lake street near Hennepin. According to reports J. S. Woodhouse, connected with the Lagoon theater, a block distant from the Calhoun, is to become manager of the new R. & F. house. Neither Mr. Ruben nor Mr. Woodhouse could be reached to confirm the report at time of writing.

It is also reported that Ruben & Finkelstein are dickering for the lease on the New Garden, a downtown Minneapolis theater now owned by Carl Laemmle and several other gentlemen. According to reports Ruben & Finkelstein have practically closed negotiations for this theater, but that they will not take it under control until next October.

Manager Pearson, of the Minneapolis Universal exchange, has secured Henry Kaufman, formerly with the Omaha Triangle exchange, to cover the South Dakota territory for him. Mr. Kaufman was connected with the Minneapolis Universal in 1917.

Minneapolis Business Jottings.

Manager Benjamin Friedman, of the Friedman Film Corp., reports unexpected demand for bookings on "The Whip" and "The Bar Sinister," two Friedman pictures which enjoyed big business during Twin City first runs recently.

Manager R. C. Fox, of the Goldwyn exchange, has announced that the two-reel Billy Parsons comedies will be released through his exchange shortly, and also that the New Garrick, Minneapolis, has contracted for several future Goldwyn releases.

Manager Roberts, of the local Pathe branch, has completed bookings that will keep "The German Curse in Russia" in the Minnesota Iron Range district for thirty-two consecutive days.

Visitors at Minneapolis Exchange.

Among the visiting exhibitors to Minneapolis exchanges recently were Tom Foster, Star, Stanley, Wis.; E. J. Juni, Armory, New Ulm, Minn.; Henry Nelson, Princess, St. James, Minn.; Wm. Abranhamson, Zelda, Duluth, Minn.; H. L. Hartman, Grand, Mandan, N. D.; Oliver Whaley, Grand and Elk, Bemidji, Minn.; E. C. Lyons, Moveum, Aitkin, Minn.; G. C. Martin, Iowa Film service, Waterloo, Iowa; Manager Zemlick, Dreamland, North LaCrosse, Wis.; M. H. Carey, Majestic, Willmar, Minn.; W. L. Buck, Gem, Waterville, Minn.; A. L. Hess, Metropolitan, Watertown, S. D.; H. J. Updegraft, Princess, Sioux Falls, S. D.; S. J. C. Blackmore, Diamond, Duluth, Minn.; Joe Romans, Rex, Virginia, Minn.; Frank Allegriszo, Grand, Chisholm, Minn.; V. B. Valleau, Barrymore, Marshall, Minn., and Max Koppleberger, Majestic, LaCrosse, Wis.

SEATTLE JOTTINGS.

A. W. Eden, Northwest Fox manager, anounces that the Fox super-feature, "Les Miserables," starring William Farnum, will be handled through the Northwest as a road show.

"The Birth of a Nation" opened at the Clemmer theater, Seattle, on March 2 for its third showing in a downtown theater in this city. The admission prices were raised to 25 cents and 50 cents. It has been drawing big crowds.

Picture Theaters in Oregon Again Brighten

Houses Closed by War Conditions Again in Operation—Indications of Business Stability Throughout State.

By Abraham Nelson, 601 Journal Bldg., Portland, Ore.

PORTLAND, ORE.—Reports by roadmen making the Oregon towns are that in many localities business is coming back, and theaters that were closed by the effects of recruiting and draft upon the younger folks are reopening. H. G. Mapes, booker for the General Film Company, which serves a great many of the smaller towns, says he is looking forward to even more of the closed theaters reopening.

At Athena, where the Peoples theater closed about two months ago, E. D. Knight has taken charge, and this house is now running full blast. The Houlton theater has been reopened by S. S. Long, and there is a new show at Columbia City, Ore. In Portland the Brooklyn theater has been opened again by Carl Schwarzveck.

C. E. Waite Astonished at Business.

C. E. Waite, branch manager for General, has been doing roadman's duty of late, and reports that the class of pictures shown even in the small towns in the territory would put some of the big town exhibitors to shame. He cites as an example the town of Prineville, Ore., twenty miles from a railroad, where Bill Pancake operates the Lyric theater. He shows the Harts, Fairbanks, Paraltas, etc., and Mr. Waite, who was formerly traveler for Pathe, says it is no more difficult to book the big features in towns like Prineville now than it was to book serials there a year ago. In the Eastern Oregon territory, says Mr. Waite, there are few if any theaters which show any pictures that cannot be designated as first class.

Leon Boris, New Road Man.

The Oregon territory is being visited by Leon Boris for the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corp., representing Foursquare exchange, distributing "The Zepplin's Last Raid," "The Belgian," and "Those Who Pay." Mr. Boris is a new man in the territory.

Grants Pass Has Active Censors.

Road men making Grants Pass, Ore., report renewed activity by the censors in that town. There are two theaters, but just the same the board requires a previewing. This is done in the theaters.

Hull Sells One House.

North Bend, Oregon.—Denny Hull, who has controlled the theater situation here, has sold one of his houses and will hereafter confine his efforts to the Joy only. His second house has been closed for some time.

Dean Collins "Interned."

Dean Collins, the popular advertising man for the Universal Film Company in the Pacific Northwest, and the originator of "Reel Stuff," the local Universal house organ, is interned at home with German measles. Just why this hun ravage should settle on Collins is not quite clear.

Mrs. Hartman Controls in Bandon.

Bandon, Ore.—Mrs. E. A. Hartman has purchased the Grand theater from W. C. Selmer, and now controlls the theater situation here. She opened the Orpheum last spring, and is reported to have done very well there. She will close the Orpheum and operate only the one house.

Claude Hall Back.

Claude Hall, formerly shipping clerk with the Film Supply Company, of Oregon, and who has been serving Uncle Sam in uniform in the capacity of a sergeant, is back at his desk with the film exchange again. It seems that his company was sent to New York, where Hall contracted malaria, and had to be re-examined. The physicians found his heart over on the right side of his body, which fact necessitated his honorable discharge and return to Portland.

Change in the American at Condon.

It is reported that J. B. Sparks, who owns the Star theater at Heppner, Ore., has purchased the building housing the American theater in Condon, Ore., and that there is considerable possibility of the American changing management. J. R. Thomas, who operates the American, says he will continue in the show business in Condon under any circumstances.

Seattle News Letter

daily expecting to be called to take their places with their respective units. They are, reading from left to right: E. Erickson, booker at the Universal office; H. W. Landstrom, Mutual booker; Al. Rosenberg, secretary of the D. Luxe Feature Film Company; R. A. Landstrom, booker for Fox, and W. T. Nelson, booker at the K-E-S-E office. Al. Rosenberg and Billy Nelson have joined a hospital unit, while the other three were caught in the draft, and did not claim exemption.

Strand Now in Greater Theaters Chain.

The Strand theater, one of Seattle's big Second avenue houses, has been added to the circuit of the Greater Theaters Company, which already operates three motion picture theaters in Seattle, two in Portland, and one in Butte. The Strand has for the last two years been under the management of W. H. Smythe, who will continue in the picture business as an exploiter of some state rights pictures in which he has an interest.

Triangle Picture at the Liberty.

Jensen and Von Herberg have signed for Triangle service in Seattle and Portland. "An Heiress for a Day" was the opening picture of the service at the Liberty theater, Seattle, on Sunday, March 3. This will be like reuniting old friends, because Triangle pictures have been shown at the Liberty from the first.

Seattle Exchange Notes.

Harry Lustig, special representative for Metro, with headquarters in Seattle, has been calling on exhibitors of Seattle and adjacent cities.

F. V. Fisher, manager of the Exhibitors' Film exchange, is making an extended trip through the larger towns of the state with the Petrova pictures, the new Chaplin comedies, and the other special features belonging to the First National Exhibitors' circuit. S. P. Peck has charge of the Exhibitors' Film exchange during Mr. Fisher's absence.

Maritime Provinces Film News.

By Alice Fairweather, "Standard," St. John, N. B.

Good Business in New Brunswick.

ST. JOHN, N. B.—Motion picture theaters are in full swing and seemingly all well patronized. The exhibitors in this territory do not know just what will come next in the way of a provincial tax or a closing movement by the Dominion government, so they are going on from day to day. The screens are being used for food conservation slides, and practically every theater is showing these.

Prices have been raised in at least one house, the Gaiety, in Fairville, N. B., where ten cents is asked. "Come Through" and "Idle Wives" were shown in this house and a quarter asked for these specials. The Empress theater, West Side, N. B., also showed two specials asking fifteen and twenty-five. It is predicted that other houses will have to raise their prices.

Among the St. John Exchanges.

Talking with M. Bernstein, who has just returned from a tour of the South Shore, Nova Scotia, and the Valley, he tells me that the manager of the Alexandra theater, at Lunenberg, has booked the Paramount, Artcraft and Select programme.

The Orpheum theater, at Bridgewater, C. A. Walfield, will run Paramount and Artcraft.

The Empire theater, Bridgewater, will run the Metro service and specials.

At Kentville, the manager of the Nickelet has booked the Select programme in conjunction with the Paramount and Artcraft, giving practically his full time. They expect to get into their new house on May 1.

Business in Yarmouth, N. S., is picking up wonderfully under the management of Mr. Rodgers of the Royal theater. He runs Paramount and Artcraft pictures.

Paramount and Artcraft are booked in twenty-seven towns in the territory, Select in 12, and contracts for the Mack Sennett comedies are booked in seventeen.

Personals and Trade Notes.

Messrs. Coekery and McAfee, of the Vogue theater, Woodstock, N. B., were in St. John recently, looking over some pictures at the Famous Players.

I. Sosskins, of the Toronto head office, Famous Players, has been in St. John.

N. W. Mason, of New Glasgow, passed through recently on his way to New York.

At the Metro exchange, E. Bizar recently returned from Halifax, bringing contracts for "Bar Sinister" at the Casino, "The Seven Deadly Sins" at the Empire and the Metro service at the Imperial. "The Seven Deadly Sins" and "The Bar Sinister" are also booked at Truro, Moncton, and Sussex. "The Eagle's Eye" serial will be seen at the Casino, Halifax; the Strand, Truro; the Dreamland, Moncton, and the Opera House at Sussex. The Metro service is booked in thirty-two towns in the territory.

Stray Iowa Jottings.

A. G. Stolte, of the Strand, Cedar Rapids, is issuing a most attractive monthly program for his house. It is printed on the best grade of enamel paper, with a page devoted to each of the attractions during the month. Illustrated with cuts of a uniform size, and containing interesting gossip of plays and players and matters pertaining to the theater the program is exceedingly attractive, and of the sort that the patron takes home with him.

Des Moines visitors among the various exchanges during the week included Fife and Yerkes, of the Idle Hour, Tama; Pete Lemen, of the Rialto, Newton; J. A. Price, of the Lyric, Indianola; Fletcher Russell, of the Trilby, Camp Dodge; E. O. Ellsworth, of the Ellsworth, Iowa Falls; Ward & Wright, of the Movie, Russell, Iowa; H. H. Russell, of the Opera House, Humboldt.

Buffalo Exhibitors Making Special Effort

The Past Winter Has Compelled Them to Pocket Large Losses, but They Are Determined to Have the Year's Total Fairly High.

By Joseph A. McGuire, 157 North Elmwood St., Buffalo, N. Y.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—Buffalo exhibitors are trying to counteract the financial losses which they sustained as a result of the severe weather, fuel shortage and other handicaps during the winter months. Therefore they have begun a great spring drive for business, and everything seems conducive to the success of their enterprise. The inferior street car service, which kept many from visiting the downtown theaters in the past three months, has now improved. The coal shortage has ended, thus lessening the worries of the neighborhood exhibitors, as well as of those in the business district. The people are taking advantage of the fine weather, and, with no discomforts, are making their way to the afternoon and evening performances.

Many seem to have recovered from the inroads which the various patriotic funds have made into their ready money, and have ceased murmuring about paying the war tax at the theaters. The exchange managers are constantly emphasizing that they want to co-operate with the exhibitors and give them a chance to make money. This co-operation and the fact that the film lovers are making good money have helped to develop a spirit of confidence in the moving picture business. The spring sunshine seems to have enkindled hope in the hearts of the showmen, and the prophets among them are now predicting that in 1918 the total of the box office receipts may still attain a satisfactory standard.

Boys Arrested for Begging Tickets.

Eighteen boys were recently arrested in Buffalo on a charge of juvenile delinquency for alleged blocking of the entrance of a Buffalo theater. Several days ago a ticket taker in the theater was arrested on a charge of admitting minors. When taken into the children's court he complained that boys hung around the theater lobby Sunday afternoons and begged admission money from patrons. When they succeeded, the ticket taker claimed, he could not distinguish between the child who entered with an adult and the one who begged his way.

"Smokes" Benefit at the Victoria.

Edward L. Hyman, manager of the Victoria moving picture theater, Buffalo, reformed, and while he will remain in Cincently gave two matinee performances for the benefit of the "smokes for soldiers" fund being collected by the Evening News, of this city. Mitchel H. Mark is proprietor of the Victoria. Mary Garden in "Thais" was featured at one matinee, and Pauline Frederick in "Mrs. Dane's Defense" was the main attraction at the second show.

J. H. Michaels Helps W. S. S. Sales.

Jules H. Michaels, manager of the Academy and Regent theaters, Buffalo, recently called at the war savings office in this city and volunteered the services of his theaters during stamp week. As a result Thrift stamps are on sale in his box offices. A patron who buys a Thrift stamp there receives a ticket for the show at half price.

Dayton News Letter

By P. J. G., Dayton Correspondent.

Fox Special Representative Gets Acquainted.

DAYTON, O.—George J. Beihoff, a special representative of William Fox, visited Dayton recently, and spent most of his time making acquaintances, as well as renewing several old friendships. Fox Film Company is surely spending quite a bit of money in Dayton, and exhibitors are responding with enthusiam. At present more Dayton theaters are using the Fox program than ever before. While in Dayton, Mr. Beihoff called on Clay Brehm at the Strand, whom he knew in New York. After this he visited the suburban houses, also the offices of the Miami Valley Exhibitors' League to meet A. F. Kinzeler.

Pick-Up Notes from Dayton.

D. H. Thompson, at the Muse-Us theater, Dayton, claims that business is coming faster every day.

The Ideal, at Dayton, is taking great strides forward, and many new features are promised by John Seifert for the summer season. World pictures are making a hit at this house.

As to local trade papers, we must give recognition to M. A. Malaney, editor of the Cleveland Bulletin. His paper has all the upstate news, and reaches many exhibitors.

The Elite is at last using the Fox Standard pictures as well as Sunshine comedies. The Woods theater, a competition house in the same territory, has booked the Fox specials.

Gus Kinzeler is no longer with Kleine. One rumor has it that Gus is to be with the Fox Film Company, another that he is to return to the Elite theater, of which he was formerly manager, and in which he is the second largest stockholder.

John Lyons will be called for duty within the next few weeks, so he informs me. When asked as to what disposition would be made of the Orpheum theater, which he controls, John stated the theater would be closed with his departure from the business.

The East Majestic had another opening within the past week. One exceptional feature was that, although a suburban house, the East Majestic used newspapers in advertising the opening. John Seifert has nothing to do with the managerial end of the affair; he is at the present devoting all his time to the Ideal.

Sunday afternoon was a poor one for houses—the weather was too good. Many people were on the streets enjoying the third day of March with warm weather. In the evening, however, the picture houses prospered, and all of the downtown houses had long lines waiting for admission at seven o'clock.

I visited the Woods theater Sunday, March 3, and had quite a talk with the genial Mrs. Woods. She says business is picking up somewhat with warmer weather, and that she looks for still better conditions. Mrs. Woods is an interested reader of the Moving Picture World, and is loud in her praises of what she thinks the peer of all trade papers.

Hiram Abrams Visits Detroit.

Detroit.—A very interesting visitor was here recently, Hiram Abrams, of Artcraft-Paramount. Mr. Abrams conferred with large and small exhibitors in the city and in the state, purposely to get their viewpoint of conditions; what pictures were drawing the best; what kind of stories and stars they preferred; what complaint they had against the present method of distribution, if any, and a whole lot of other things. "We are first, last and always for the exhibitor," he said. "We thoroughly appreciate the fact that the success of the exhibitor means our success, and if we strangled the exhibitor we would strangle ourselves in time."

"WOMAN AND THE LAW."

Famous De Saulles Case Picturized by Fox—Is Remarkably Effective.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

NEARLY everybody in the audience at the Lyric theater in New York who saw "The Woman and the Law," picturized by R. A. Walsh for the William Fox Company, had probably read or heard the story of the De Saulles case that it portrays; yet seldom have I had so keen a sense of unity in the attention given to a screen offering as when I saw it there with a well filled house. Let them go their ways who seek out novel, strange and romantic incidents, here is a picture that contains nothing new, and yet how it holds.

The reason is that it is not only a picture of modern life, but a typical picture of modern life. Some may call it merely a picture of a sensational murder case, and condemn it as unfit and morbid; but in cold truth it is a picture of forces that are molding many men and women in America today. The murder in this case is not premeditated, but a sudden breakdown—it is not the chief thing in the story. The story is narrow, it has no breath to speak of, it leaves unnoticed many of the most important things, but it is sincerely pictured, is real, pertinent, and most certainly has been made effective by the dramatist.

Not only is it ably written and directed, but the players convincingly clothe the plot in humanity. Miriam Cooper in the leading role does some of the best work I have seen by her, both in the story's lighter moods and in the times when the tragedy of it gnaws, especially at the close, when, after the acquittal, Jackie, the son, is brought in. Ramsey Wallace plays Jack La Salle, the profligate husband, overaccenting, whether wisely or not, the evil of the character. Peggy Hopkins plays the interloper, George Humbert and Agnes Neilson play the parents of the heroine. John Laffe and Lillian Satherwaite play the father and sister of Jack La Salle, the villain. The sets, photography and general conduct of the picture are remarkably able.

"BRACE UP."

Five-Reel Bluebird Number Features Herbert Rawlinson in Story with Unusual Plot.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

SUSTAINED interest and a strong climax are two features particularly noticeable in this number, which was written and directed by Elmer Clifton. There is a sort of vagueness about the main idea which at first keeps the observer in a state of wonderment as to just what is intended, but it is all cleared up as the story proceeds.

Herbert Rawlinson is first introduced as a young college man named Dick Court. His father is a member of the United States Secret Service. Dick is a strong, athletic fellow, and takes part in a foot-ball game. This game is exceptionally interesting and well staged. In the game it develops that Dick lacks courage at times of crisis, and this weakness is a constant source of irritation to his father. The main theme of the story revolves about this weakness.

Dick is in love with a girl named Clara Brayton, a part portrayed by Claire Du Bray. She is really a member of the Secret Service, and Dick is subsequently put on the same case with her by his father, though neither knows of the other's connection with it. Dick proves his real courage in rounding up a house full of spies and rescuing the girl. The hiding of the radium in the girl's slipper was not a very convincing feature, but will pass. The climax is exciting, and contains an agreeable touch of humor

The story, as a whole, is free from obvious situations, and contains considerable novelty.

"WANTED—A MOTHER."

Madge Evans and George MacQuarrie in World Picture of Pleasant Juvenile Fiction.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

TAKEN from a story by Julia Burnham "Wanted—a Mother," a five-part World picture, is a pleasant piece of juvenile fiction and may be recommended to good children of all ages. Madge Evans has the chief role, and this clever little actress, whose winning personality has put her in the front ranks of juvenile stars, will make new friends by her impersonation of the youthful heroine. George MacQuarrie, who is also featured in the picture, has the part of the heroine's father and gives his usual capable performance. The story tells of a lonely little girl whose mother died when she was a baby and whose father, a prominent physician, is so occupied by his profession that he leaves his little daughter entirely to the care of the servants. The author has built quite a story of adventures for a little girl, and has not neglected to work in an object lesson of the folly the male sex is guilty of when it intimates that women are not more than equal to the men.

Dr. Holmer, having made up his mind to discharge his daughter's governess, writes out an advertisement for a new one; but Eileen exchanges the notice for one reading, "Wanted—a Mother," and it is printed in the paper. Even this does not fully arouse the father to his child's real needs, and when at last he does comprehend he marries a woman physician, after snubbing her all through the picture. The dramatic interest is brought about by a warm-hearted but impulsive Italian laborer, whose little boy is operated on by Dr. Homer too late to save his life. The father is almost crazed with grief and tries to kill the physician. Later on Giuseppe saves Eileen from being drowned while she is walking in her sleep and takes her to his own home, thinking that she has been sent him from heaven to fill his dead child's place.

Eileen is badly hurt in escaping and is removed to the hospital where her father is head physician. After the woman physician—who is both young and attractive—helps to nurse the child back to health, Giuseppe is told that he will be employed by Dr. Homer and can remain near the little girl. Harley Knoles has directed the picture carefully, from the scenario made by Virginia Tyler Hudson. Rene Guissart was the photographer. Gerda Holmes as Thelma Winter and Lionel Belmore as Giuseppe are both excellent. Alec Francis, Tom Evans, Rosina Henley and Harry Bartlett complete the cast.

"AMERICAN BUDS."

Delightful Picture with Jane and Katherine Lee—Shows Spirit of Democracy, and New Patriotism.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

UNCONSTRAINED and sincere democracy in any picture brings a quick response from American audiences. It's a hammer that will always strike a pleasant note on our kind of bell. This newest Fox picture, "American Buds," shows much of the same spirit, though from a different angle, as did that recent and popular Walsh production, "The Pride of New York." It is a picture of America in the time of preparation for the conflict, and while it has a melodramatic plot not quite worthy of the adventures of its little heroine, played by Jane Lee, it leans lightly on the love story and plays up Jane, so it gets over all right.

When the picture opens the overseer of the poor is taking Jane, Katherine and the baby to the orphan asylum. They arrive and meet the other children, including May Lily White with kinky hair, whom Jane can hardly tell from a scuttle of coal. They become the closest of friends. The sub-titles all through the picture, but especially in these orphan asylum scenes, are witty to a degree and help greatly. Humor and pathos, and if I may be permitted to say that the first is Jane then the second is Katherine, are skillfully utilized in this and other parts of the picture.

On the other side of the plot a story has been begun in which a colonel of an army post; his daughter, her fiance, a German spy and the colonel's sister are the characters. The old maid aunt does charity work and has been at the asylum where Jane has made her ridiculous. Jane runs away to see the soldiers and is recognized, and this brings the asylum and the post in more direct contact. Some old letters are found that seem to make it clear that the children belong to the fiance of the colonel's daughter and the love story is broken for a time, adding more humor and adventure, till it is discovered that the spy is the villain and traitor all round, to the children, his children, to the government and to his comrades. He gets his. The best part and the biggest part of the picture belong to Jane and her part is all amply worth while.

"WITHIN THE CUP."

Bessie Barriscale Featured in Seven-Reel Paralta Production, Picturing Gay Artists' Life.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THERE is so much that is rarely brilliant in the opening reels of this subject that it makes certain other features rather disappointing. The gay life of the Latin Quarter in Paris and the life of our own Greenwich Village have perhaps never been displayed with greater charm. The Greenwich Village scenes are exaggerated beyond doubt, as the whole section has nothing in it that even approaches the flashing interiors of "The Devil's Cafe," but this will readily be forgiven by those who see the production. The sheer dramatic effect wrought by the seeress, "Tea-Cup Ann," in reading Thisbe's fortune makes excusable any liberties that have been taken

The plot itself is disappointing in some respects and does not give us Monte M. Katterjohn at his best. He grasps our interest at the first in a powerful way with his story of the girl artist who sinned and then sought to regulate life according to her own laws thereafter. Bessie Barriscale does some splendid work in the part of Thisbe Lorraine.

The interest slackens in the later scenes perceptibly and the story would be brought up with a much stronger effect if at least a reel or more were cut out. We rather liked the idea of the regeneration of both Thisbe and Le Saint Hammond after it seemed that they had wrecked their lives, but the moral was obvious without the too liberal use of biblical and other quotations.

The cast is a proficient one throughout, Edward Coxen appearing as the first artist and George Fisher as the second. Aggie Herring is very effective as "Tea-cup Ann." The direction was in charge of Raymond B. West.

"THE DESIRED WOMAN."

Harry Morey Heads Cast of Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature That Tells Consistent Story.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

FLYING in the face of precedent Will N. Harben, author of "The Desired Woman," a five-part Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, flouts the happy ending and carries out the Bible mandate about reaping the whirlwind. The leading character of the story, a man who has let nothing stand between him and his desires, is not supplied with a false halo, but is consistently drawn, and the heroine is given sufficient insight to see him as he really is and to transfer her affection to one who is worthy of her. This is quite contrary to the rules of romance, but the author seems more concerned about putting real people into his tale than in following the usual path in fiction.

Richard Mostyn, a prosperous New York broker, who has played the game to win no matter who was the loser, goes South for a rest, and meets a country school teacher, a pretty young girl whose one thought is to help others. The two fall in love, but Mostyn returns home and marries a woman in his own set for business reasons. Several years later his wife runs away with another man, and his child dies. Mostyn goes back to where he met the school teacher, having long before realized his mistake in not making her his wife. She receives him kindly, but tells him knowledge of his real character had cured her of her love for him and another occupies his old place in her heart. Mostyn, who has given up everything to repay those who suffered by his shrewdness, becomes an evangelist, an original proceeding for a New York broker, to say the least. This last touch does not ring as true as the other incidents of Mostyn's career.

One situation is particularly effective, Mostyn has an engagement to dine with a former mistress. As he is about to leave the house his little son climbs into his lap and asks to be allowed to sleep in his father's bed until he returns. With the child's arms about his neck his thoughts travel to the reception that awaits him. A "fade in" shows the woman in his arms. The scene reverts to Mostyn and the boy. The child again clings to him, and repeats his request. Mostyn remains at home.

Harry Morey is consistent to the author's well drawn portrait of Richard Mostyn, and Jean Paige is as truthful in her impersonation of the school teacher. Well acted characters are contributed by Florence Deshon, Charles Hutchingson, William Cameron, Eulalie Jensen, Harold Forshay, Aida Horton, Julia Swayne Gordon, and Herbert Potter. Paul Scardon has given the picture able direction.

"SUNSHINE NAN."

Ann Pennington Star in Five-Part Screen Version of "Calvary Alley"—Has Pleasing Role.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

WITH such a title as "Sunshine Alley" the spectator has every right to expect that Ann Pennington's latest starring vehicle shall contain more of smiles than of tears. The picture does not belie its name. Adapted from Alice Hegan Rice's story, "Calvary Alley," scenario by Eva Unsell, and directed by Charles Giblyn, the plot follows the history of a child of the gutter until she reaps the reward that always comes to the good little heroine at the end of the fifth reel.

Nancy Molloy starts out at the age of fifteen with about as heavy a handicap as was ever put on a girl's career. Living with a drunken step-mother and forced to become a drudge of the family, Nance's chief diversion is to help the Alley Rats fight the choir boys of the near by Cathedral. Dan Lewis, an orphan, and her best friend, also generally takes a hand. Their chief enemy is MacPherson Clark, one of the older choir boys, and the son of the owner of a shoe factory that is to be closely connected with the lives of both Nance and Dan.

For interfering in a family quarrel among some drunken neighbors Nan and Dan are arrested and sent to reform school for four years. When they get out they find employment in the Clark factory. Nan becomes a stenographer, and Dan goes into the chemical department. Some time later he invents a dye process that promises to make him rich, but young Clark tries to steal the formula, and almost succeeds. Nan discovers him first, and there is a fight between the two. Then Dan arrives and pitches into the thief. During the struggle some chemicals are overturned and take fire. Nan is rescued by her sweetheart, and young Clark is glad to tell the truth about the whole affair when he finds himself in a hospital. Dan gets the fortune and Nan.

Ann Pennington makes Nan an engaging little guttersnipe who blossoms into a charming young girl after her four years at the reform school. The actress has shown steady progress since she began her screen work, and invests the Alice Hegan Rice heroine with a very human personality. Richard Barthelmess as MacPherson Clark, John Hines as Dan Lewis, Helen Tracy as Mrs. Snawdor, and Charles Eldridge as Mr. Snawdor are all exceedingly well cast. Charles Giblyn's direction is capable.

"The Marriage Bubble" and "Unfaithful" a Pair of Short Comedy-Dramas That Furnish Good Entertainment.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

"The Marriage Bubble."

A COMEDY fire scene is the best incident of "The Marriage Bubble," a three-part Triangle picture written by W. Carey Wonderly, which forms part of a split feature released March 31. William Desmond in a dual role plays a wealthy young chap who is mistaken for an actor and is asked to impersonate another young chap whose mother is anxious to have him marry a girl with a large bank account, but who cannot keep sober long enough to pop the question. The comedy complications are quite amusing and the finish is immense. As Marty Conrad, the real hero of the story, William Desmond rescues the tipsy chap's sister from her burning room. While waiting for the firemen to arrive, Marty proposes and is accepted. As a consequence he refuses to allow anyone but himself to carry his sweetheart down the ladder, the girl not having had time to exchange her pajamas for a street costume.

Anna Luther, Maude George and Florence Dagmar are members of the cast. Walter Edwards directed the picture.

"Unfaithful."

Dorothy Dalton is the leading player in "Unfaithful," a two-reel comedy-drama written by Lambert Hilyer and directed by Charles Miller. The story need not be taken seriously. A novelist, who is so absorbed in completing a tale that he neglects his young wife, finds that he is unable to get any inspiration in writing some chapters relating to infidelity. His wife finds this out and arranges with one of her male friends to make friend husband believe that there is excellent material for him right in his own family. The scheme works too well and the novelist almost succeeds in sending his wife out of the world by the revolver route.

Dorothy Dalton makes her husband's jealousy easy to understand, and Robert McKim, Charles Gunn and Charlotte Vermont support her creditably. The picture was photographed by Clyde DeVinna and supervised by Thomas H. Ince.

"THE SEA PANTHER."

William Desmond in Title Role of Triangle Piratical Romance Makes a Handsome Swashbuckler.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

ROMANCE of the swashbuckler sort is to be found in "The Sea Panther," a five-part Triangle picture written by Kenneth B. Clarke and directed by Thomas N. Heffron. William Desmond has the title role and plays a gentlemanly freebooter with the ease, grace and marvelous nerve that always goes with one of these handsome lawbreakers of the good old days. The atmosphere of the sea and the period in which the story is laid are cleverly counterfeited and the plot is consistently developed.

Paul Le Marsen is the real name of the gentleman whose skill at his profession has gained him the name of "The Sea Panther." His crew are a bloodthirsty looking lot of dogs, but the pirate chief understands how to keep them in subjection without mussing the lace on his coat sleeves. One day they capture a British ship and Le Marsen finds an unexpected prize, a beautiful young girl named Molly Tarpley, who is going to the Carolinas to join her uncle. The pirate falls in love with Molly and takes her and a portion of the ship's crew to the pirate town of Cayo del Muerto. Here he establishes the girl in his own home, but keeps a promise made to her to treat her with every respect. Molly finds herself falling in love with her handsome protector, but will not give him any encouragement, and he agrees to take her to her uncle. He is obliged to fight his entire crew before he carries out his promise, and is himself taken prisoner by the captain of the British ship. Molly helps him to get free and kisses him good-by forever as he goes through the cabin window and escapes in a small boat.

In spite of the character of the story it is a real love romance and has only a moderate amount of melodrama. The action could be quickened occasionally to the play's advantage. The cast has been well chasen. Mary Warren is an agreeable Molly Tarpley and Jack Richardson plays Will Kip, Le Marsen's second-in-command, with force. Arthur Millet as Captain Saunders, Lillian Langdon as Esther and Lee Hill as Brega have the other important roles. Photographed by William Reinhart.

"THOSE ATHLETIC GIRLS."

Paramount-Mack Sennett Comedy Features Louise Fazenda—Wealth of Originality and Pretty Damsels.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THIS number of the Paramount-Mack Sennett comedies — "Those Athletic Girls"—will no doubt be voted by the general public one of the best of its kind. It contains most of the things that comedy fans like from the custard pie to the more original and pleasing members of the cast, including the cat and dog and a number of ferocious looking lions. Louise Fazenda is the featured member and does herself "proud." She is one of those rare finds who combine acrobatic skill with charm of personality and the essentials of the comedienne.

Edward Cline is the director to whom is due the credit of an exceedingly clever piece of work. He has succeeded in presenting without offense a group of twelve to fifteen pretty girls arrayed in brief athletic suits, and has instilled into this particular portion of the picture a delightful smattering comedy which has been extracted largely through facial expression. At one time a couple of the girls entertain the others with a boxing bout, and in another instance an indoor baseball game in which everybody from the cat and the dog up indulges presents excruciatingly funny situations. The good old standby swimming pool is also in evidence.

The picture's biggest laugh occurs when Sennett's Great Dane dog relinquishes his grip on a man he is rescuing from a slippery roof to chase a cat.

"AMARILLY OF CLOTHESLINE ALLEY."

Mary Pickford's Latest Artcraft Picture Is One Long, Loud Laugh.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THERE is no use trying to conceal the truth: Mary Pickford in a two-dollar noisy, plaid skirt, funny lid, and a Hick dialect can make you forget the lovely little girl in the dainty frock and curls who has so long been adored by the faithful screen fan. A touch of character to her makeup, a plentiful supply of homely humor to the situations, and everything else is forgotten. Down to Clothesline Alley you go and watch her as Amarilly scrub and sweep and bring home bundles of washing and proclaim that her greatest ambition is to follow the profession of her mother and her mother's mother before her, and you are delighted with the whole proceedings. Later on you see her all dolled up in the familiar fashion, the inmate of a swell mansion, but you are mightily pleased when she quits all this grandeur and goes back to the alley and marries the barkeep. All of which illustrates the value of a personality.

"Amarilly of Clothesline Alley," a story by Belle K. Maniates, adapted to the screen by Frances Marion, and directed by Marshall Neilan, is one long, loud laugh. Some of its glee starters are the most infectious ever put into a Mary Pickford picture. Most of them arise naturally out of the real humor of the situations; a few are dragged in after the Keystone comedy method. The subtitles help on the fun bravely, and the finish is nothing short of a comic inspiration. To see Amarilly's mother, after attending a function in high society, entertaining her own social set at an afternoon tea and using the baby carriage for a tea wagon is to behold as good a bit of fun as was ever rolled up in a reel case. Mary herself has dozens of such amusing incidents, and never fails to make the most of them.

There is a plot running through "Amarilly of Clothesline Alley," but that merely serves as a frame on which to hang a number of humorous characterizations, chief of which is Amarilly. This daughter of the Widow Jenkins is a scrub-girl at a theater until she sets fire to the place and is fired herself. Engaged as cigarette girl at a downtown cafe she befriends a wealthy young artist who is hurt in a fight, and this leads to her brief appearance in society. The artist thinks he loves Amarilly, but when his aunt invites the girl's mother and her four brothers to a reception and the Widow Jenkins does a jig with the butler the young man is cured of his infatuation, and Amarilly takes her family back to the alley and marries her old "steady."

"Amarilly of Clothesline Alley" is packed full of fun. For which blessing thanks are due the star, the director, the scenario writer, and the excellent cast.

"THE DEBT OF HONOR."

Peggy Hyland Has Heroine's Role in Fox Standard Picture — War-Time Melodrama.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judsom.

THE story of a new Fox picture, "The Debt of Honor," has elements that please screen audiences. The plot is ably put together, the heroine is charming, and the story is greatly helped by a true patriotic appeal. This alone disarms criticism, and it can safely be counted on when considering the picture for audiences.

It tells two stories under one title, and its six reels make one wish that, in the early part, it would hurry along a bit faster. There is little stalling in the last three reels, when it gets down to the actual tale. The worst shortcoming is that at the start. Honor, the heroine, played by Peggy Hyland, tells a long fairy story to her little friends in the poverty-stricken cottage where they live. Honor doesn't know that she is going to be adopted, but we are let into that much of the future. Honor's persons of the drama of the fairy tale are to appear in the later part of the picture, and we know it. This fairy tale doesn't give away the story of Honor's future, except in so much as it gives away the outcome of all plots of this kind. Both had to be built on the same scheme.

The tale kills much of our interest in the story when it begins in the third reel until we begin to see that there is a patriotic appeal in it not suggested by the tale—in fact, until we begin to see that the story is really new and interesting. From that point we take close notice and forget the fairy tale that, novelly staged as it is, is really bare and uninteresting in comparison.

Honor is adopted by a Senator, played by Eric Mayne. His secretary, Irving Cummings, is the hero, and a German spy, servant of Kaiser and devil, played by Frank Goldsmith, is the villain. The Senator's wife, Hazel Adams, is a vain, double-faced, weak creature. She hates Honor and is the dupe of the spy. These two, seen by the Senator against a shade, manage to compromise Honor's honor. She accepts it rather than hurt her foster-father, but when she finds that the Stars and Stripes are in jeopardy she tells all she knows, and brings the final happy scene.

"THE FLOOR BELOW."

Mabel Normand in Goldwyn Picture Written by Elaine Sterne Revives the Comedy-Drama Soubrette of the Popular Price Theater.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE rough-and-ready but honest-hearted heroine of the comedy-drama of the popular-price theater has been revived in "The Floor Below," a five-part Goldwyn picture, written by Elaine Sterne, with Mabel Normand as the engaging young person whose love of mischief and calm assurance under the most trying circumstances has long made the character a favorite with a public looking solely for amusement. Opening in a newspaper office, the story has to do with the life and adventures of Patricia O'Rourke, a "copy girl" whose principal occupation is keeping the editorial force convulsed with laughter. She is about to lose her job when one of the men suggests to his chief that the girl be made to assist him in landing a big story. A young millionaire, who is supporting a settlement house named after himself, is suspected by the police of being duped by some of his guests. A number of crooks are known to frequent the place, and it is thought that in this way they get valuable information about homes belonging to the friends of their host.

There are scenes at the police station, at the settlement house and at the stately residence of Hunter Mason, the millionaire. Patricia gains an entrance to the settlement house by way of the fire-escape and, before she succeeds in landing the millionaire for a husband, wins ten thousand dollars for him on a bet after he takes her home and introduces her to his friends as a young woman he intends to reform. She is given an extensive wardrobe, including the latest style in decorated pajamas, and has an enjoyable time until accused of stealing a sum of money from the master of the house. Everything comes out all right in the end.

The story is a trifle complicated at times and never bothers itself with probability; but that is not a serious drawback to stories of this grade. Mabel Normand brings out all the humor of the situations, but her serious moments are only mildly convincing. Tom Moore as Hunter Mason, Helen Dahl as Louise Vance, Wallace McCutcheon as Monty Latham, Lincoln Plummer as Uncle Amos, Charlotte Granville as Mrs. Mason, A. Romaine Callender as Ziegler, Louis R. Grisel as Stubbs and Willard Dashiell as the Managing Editor support the star effectively. Clarence G. Badger directed the picture, and Oliver T. Marsh was the photographer.

"THE DEVIL'S WHEEL."

Most Unusual Fox Story Combines Realistic Scenes with Romantic Happenings.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE first impression one gets from this picture, "The Devil's Wheel," by the Fox company, is a sense of novelty and strangeness. It uses real life for its background, and is filled with carefully planned scenes that hold like a vise because they seem to be actual, so well acted and so natural are they; yet the story has a nightmare quality and develops inconceivable situations. These are explained and often made plausible by placing them in the twilight of consciousness where the brain works in peculiar and not clearly understood ways. By this means the greater part of what happens in the story is made acceptable and the director has depended on the atmosphere that no doubt he has succeeded in creating to keep the spectator from noticing one or two incidents that he has felt that he had to use to keep his story moving smoothly.

The best scenes in the picture are those showing underworld life in Paris, the apache cafe scenes. I don't think I have ever seen more carefully planned and acceptable pictures of these. The heroine (Gladys Brockwell), daughter of a marquis, has been found by "the Stag" (William Scott) and brought unconscious to the dive. The incidents that had preceded this were weird and dreamlike, and now, when she awakes, she fails to remember who she is. She is a "wildcat"; but is tamed after a time by the Stag. Her father had discovered an infallible system to beat the "devil's wheel" rouette, and this she still remembers. The man who had murdered her father to get this system, and who was the cause of her being unconscious is winning wealth at the game, and the girl and the Stag, on the same path, are drawing close to him. The meeting, her uncontrollable impulse to stab him, her arrest and her cure of the mental pressure that hampers her memory follow quickly. The end of the story, an undeniable anti-climax, brings the girl and the Stag, whom with the passing of the pressure on her brain, she has completely forgotten, together once more.

Harold Lloyd and Toto Appear in Two Lively Comics Full of Laughable Small Business.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

"Let's Go."

THIS is a one-reel number, with Harold Lloyd, Harry Pollard, and Bebe Daniels in the leading roles. Harold Lloyd has an interesting comedy method which is frequently productive of very laughable results. He is a fresh, spontaneous young performer, and will be remembered as the hero of the "Lonesome Luke" numbers. This present subject is not of special importance as regards plot, but some very deft and amusing small business takes place of a characteristic sort. Fastidious critics may profess to find no art in this style of amusement, but it is far in advance of the old style slapstick form, and we think has a great deal of a particular form of art in it. At any rate it guarantees a certain amount of laughter, and that is not without value to the world in these tempestuous days.

"Fare, Please!"

A Toto comic in two reels. Toto appears in this as a street car conductor who goes with his fellow workers to the beach. They meet some girls, and later attend a ball, where some amusing scenes occur. The antics on the street car next day are even funnier, and are perhaps the strongest feature of the subject. Toto brings out ridiculous effects repeatedly, and the number is certain to please an audience.

"BEAUTY IN CHAINS."

Ella Hall and Emory Johnson Appear in Universal Subject with Quaint Spanish Setting.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS five-reel number adapted by E. J. Clawson from a novel by B. Perez Glados and produced by Elsie Jane Wilson is a quiet type of story with a dramatic close. The Spanish town of Orbajosa furnishes an attractive and distinctive setting, and all of the fore part of the narrative runs along with a languorous ease entirely in keeping with the plot.

The story pictures the romance of a young Spanish girl named Rosarito, who has been betrothed to her cousin, Pepe Rey, since early infancy. Neither has seen the other, and as the tale opens, Rosarito is excited because Pepe Rey is coming from his home in Madrid to claim her hand. The young man comes, and his good looks at once capture Rosarito's heart. Ella Hall and Emory Johnson have the lovers' roles, and play them in an entirely acceptable way even though the hero looks more like a young American than a Spanish gentleman. The settings have been so carefully looked after in this that it would seem a little more care might have been put in on the costumes.

The leading character in the story is the girl's grandmother, Dona Perfecta, a part assumed by Ruby Lafayette. She takes a strong dislike to Pepe Rey after he has criticised the town of Orbajosa, even though unthinkingly, and the more dramatic events of the piece come about through her unavailing efforts to prevent the match she has favored heretofore. Mrs. Lafayette does some unusual character work in this part.

Gretchen Lederer, Winter Hall, and George E. McDaniel also appear.

"THE KAISER."

Rupert Julian Appears in Consistently Told Study of Wilhelm's Life—Released by Renown.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

RUPERT JULIAN and E. J. Clawson have welded together a series of dramatic episodes from the life of the Kaiser in an offering of seven reels, which have all the fascination of a narrative. There is no definite plot, except that the events in stricken Belgium center about a blacksmith and his family. The main intent of the producers, and they have adhered to it admirably, was to give the observer a look at the private and public life of this human monster whose vanity and arrogance led him to undertake to dominate the entire world.

The undertaking was a gigantic one, and has been carried out with a surprising degree of success considering how close we at this time are to the actual events drawn upon. Such a picture will not only bring the situation confronting the world home to spectators of the present time, when we are still fighting to put down Hohenzollern pretensions, but will be of value and, we think, increasing interest to future generations.

Mr. Julian's personal delineation of the Kaiser is a splendid bit of acting all told. It reflects the tremendous vanity and arrogance of the monarch, his cruel, bloodless methods, his utter lack of human sentiment, and his ruthless disregard of everything save military prestige. Mr. Julian not only succeeds in looking the part, but he acts it intelligently and with conviction. The study is based on historical facts and incidents, with some recourse to dramatic license, and the authors have been wise in their choice of "high lights" in the career of this despicable ruler. The picture is one that will intensify the hatred of right-minded people for Hohenzollernism.

There are any number of bold and vigorous characterizations in the piece. Most of them will strike only an interesting average of merit, but several of them stand out in the memory. Among the latter are N. De Brullier as Captain Von Neigle, whom the Kaiser decorates for sinking the Lusitania; Lon Chaney as Admiral Von Tirpitz, Harry Carter as General Von Gluck, Harry Von Mater as Captain Von Hancke, Joseph Girard as Ambassador Gerard, H. Barrows as General Pershing, and Harry Holden as General Joffre. Credit must also be extended in full measure to Elmo Lincoln, whose Marcas, the blacksmith, is a gigantic and dominating figure in the scenes following the destruction of Louvain.

The pastoral scenes in Belgium at the beginning are beautiful, and furnish a strong contrast with what is to follow. The scenes at the German court, picturing the Kaiser, surrounded by his men of "blood and iron," have every appearance of actuality. The episode of the young German captain who lost his life for striking and knocking down the Kaiser is dramatically staged.

The picture closes with the advent of America into the war, and shows the Allied forces entering and taking Berlin. The Kaiser, now haunted by his own guilty soul, is pictured as a life prisoner turned over to King Albert of Belgium for safe keeping. In the absence of a real ending for the Kaiser based upon actual fact this close has a satisfactory ironical touch.

The women of the cast all appear in the Belgium scenes, and include Ruth Clifford, Betty Carpenter, Ruby Lafayette, Gretchen Lederer, and Zoe Rae.

"THE SHELL GAME."

Emmy Wehlen Featured in an Entertaining Metro Offering.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

A MAGAZINE story by Kenneth L. Roberts entitled "Good Will and Almond Shells" forms the basis for the Metro five-reel feature released March 4, "The Shell Game." It is a light and entertaining story, although lacking in plausibility. Emmy Wehlen is the featured player. The manner in which the heroine is extricated from her dilemma constitutes a surprise, and in the Claremont theater, New York, where this production was seen by the writer, there was considerable applause after the showing.

It is the theory of "Silk" Wilkins, confidence man, that everyone is sentimental around Christmas, and, in scheming to profit by this fact, he experiments with a wealthy man, Lawrence Gray. In a seeming burst of confidence Gray states he lost his wife and daughter many years before in a flood. Wilkins promptly proceeds to "find" a daughter for him, using for this purpose a girl whom he rescues from attempted suicide. All goes well until Wilkins seeks to blackmail the girl. Gray hears the conversation, the girl confesses she is not his daughter. Gray then informs her he never had a daughter; further, that he shadowed Wilkins, and from the window of a room opposite saw the rescue. Knowing Wilkins' reputation his pity for the girl was aroused, and he determined to carry the game through. In the end Gray thanks Wilkins, and gives him a handsome sum for discovering his future wife. The title is derived from the manner in which Wilkins starts to put the scheme over by placing the daughter's name and address in an almond shell, which Gray, of course, finds before the dinner is over.

Emmy Wehlen is attractive as the girl in the case, and Henry Kolker gives a fine performance of Lawrence Gray. Joseph Kilgour is well cast as "Silk" Wilkins, the confidence man. The remainder of the cast, including Ricca Allen, Hugh Jeffrey, Fanny Cogan, Richard Thornton, Clarence Heritage, and Donald McBride, are satisfactory, but have very little to do. George D. Baker adapted the story and also directed the production; his handling of the subject is pleasing, although not always convincing.

"THE MATINEE GIRL."

Montgomery-Flagg Type Bearing All the Characteristics of Girls We Know Who Adore the Star.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

IT cannot be expected that we will all see the same value of characterization in the Montgomery-Flagg types which are being presented in film by the Edison Company. Certain types will appeal more strongly to some than to others, and "The Matinee Girl" will doubtless find favor with the average audience, although it does not contain the entertainment value of some previously presented types.

In this number we are introduced first to the star actor of a certain play, after which we meet the girl who has seen and secretly adored him. She sends him her photograph with the request that he find her a position on the stage. He is attracted by the photograph, and sends her his in return. She calls at his dressing room at his bidding, and the inevitable lovemaking takes place. Finally the wife of the actor appears on the scene, and the girl awakes from her dream.

Two O. Henry Stories and One Judge Brown Offering.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

"A Madison Square Arabian Night."

ONE of the best of the Broadway Star Features based on the stories by O. Henry is "A Madison Square Arabian Night." Not only is the subject interesting and well handled, but the director has admirably succeeded in retaining the spirit of the original. Chalmers, through the insinuations of another woman, is led to doubt his wife. In his loneliness he invites a tramp to dine with him. This tramp proves to have been at one time a celebrated artist, his downfall being caused by the fact that he had the faculty of bringing out in his pictures hidden characteristics. He has the artist make a pastel sketch from a photograph, and, fearing to look at it, calls in another artist, who tells him the portrait is the work of an artist, and the face that of "one of God's own angels." Duncan McRae gives a fine performance as Chalmers, and he is ably assisted by Patsy Deforrest as his wife, Miriam Miles as the other woman, and Joe Burke as the artist.

"Schools and Schools."

The fine performance of Jean Paige is the outstanding feature of "Schools and Schools," a two-reel Broadway Star Feature based on O. Henry's story of the same title. Her work as Nevada Warren, the poor little girl who can neither read nor write and suddenly finds herself surrounded by luxury, is full of appeal. Nevada's father dies, and she is sent to his wealthy brother in New York. Her cousin, Barbara, soon becomes jealous of the attentions that Gilbert Ross, an artist, is paying her, and when he sends Nevada a note about some flowers, Barbara tells her it is a request for her to come to Gilbert's studio at midnight. Nevada goes, thinking Gilbert is ill. He is surprised to see her, but as he really loves her, and learns of Barbara's deception, proposes an immediate elopement, to which Nevada agrees with alacrity. She confesses to Gilbert that she cannot read or write, but he says that can easily be remedied, and that the note about the flowers proved to be the best letter he ever wrote. The remainder of the cast includes Charles Hutchison as Gilbert Ross, Frances McHenry as Barbara, and Herbert Pattee as John Warren.

"The Preacher's Son."

In "The Preacher's Son," a two-reel Judge Brown feature directed by King W. Vidor, the boy indicated by the title indulges in a window breaking raid with the rest of the gang. In court the next day he confesses that his father has previously whipped him for playing hookey and for fighting. The minister confirms this, and promises the boy another flogging, but the judge suggests that as this method failed on the two previous occasions another should be tried. The boy is sent to visit his aunt, meets other boys, and describes his father to them not as he is, stern and old-fashioned, but as he would have him be, a speeder, golf player, boxer, baseball player, and all-round good sport.

The church decides this is the kind of minister it wants, and sends a call to the minister. The boy is in an awful fix, and writes to his father confessing the lies. His father accepts the call, and the boy meets the train with fear, and trembling. Great is his relief when his father appears dressed like a typical swell, having apparently determined to become the kind of man the boy has described him.

Guy Hayman gives a fine, natural performance as the boy. There are a lot of human touches, and some good comedy, particularly the scene where the boy attempts to imitate his aunt's manner of drinking soup in her precise formal fashion. Wharton Jones gives a good portrayal of the minister. The story is well handled, and interesting, although the complete transformation of the minister is not altogether convincing.

"SPECIAL TODAY."

Metro-Drew Comedy in Which Polly Develops a Bargain Craze.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

A GOOD specimen of refined comedy will be found in that number of the Metro-Drew comedies entitled "Special Today." In it Polly develops a bargain craze, and exasperates Henry Minor, her husband, to the extent that he is forced to find a cure. The last straw is laid on his load when Polly comes home one day with a pair of embroidered slippers for him that were marked down to a fabulously low price at a certain Fifth Avenue store.

The fact that the slippers were not mates made no difference to Polly; she solved the problem by suggesting that Henry buy two bath robes, one to match each slipper, which he could wear when sick, and make believe that they matched the slippers by sticking out the foot that matched the particular robe he was wearing at the time. She had also bought at a bargain a record of "The Star Spangled Banner." It was cracked in the chorus, but that didn't matter, because every one knew the chorus. Neither did they have an instrument; that was a fact easily got over by buying one.

Henry's cure, which worked charmingly in the end, was to buy at a bargain a set of andirons, the usefulness of which depended on the purchase of a new house with a fireplace. Polly, loath to leave her present home, shed tears of sorrow, and finally saw herself as Henry saw her deciding to look without favor on the next "special today."

Sales of "Shorty" Hamilton.

Earnest Shipman announces that franchise for the Shorty Hamilton series of features for Indiana has been secured by C. H. Hodupp, Inc., Indianapolis, and that after a two days' campaign booking for fifteen days showing for the first two subjects were secured in that city. He further states that Mr. Hodupp, after one week's work by his roadmen, wired for and secured rights to this series for the State of Missouri, and is now negotiating for additional territory.

The New England franchise for the Shorty Hamilton Features has been secured by Nathan S. Gordon, of Globe Feature Film Co., Boston.

"Life or Honor" Unlike Other Ivans.

Ivan Film Productions announce the early release of "Life or Honor?" This picture is a departure from the usual Ivan product. It is a novel conception, said to be masterfully executed, and is advertised as a drama of mystery and thrills—in fact, something new in the line of gripping film sensations.

The feature stars Leah Baird, James Morrison and Violet Palmer, supported by a strong cast of players, including such well known actors as Edward Mackay, Mathilda Brundage, Harry Burkhardt and Joseph Burke, and was produced under the direction of Edmund Lawrence.

The Merit Film Corporation has purchased the distribution rights for New York and northern New Jersey. The Eastern Feature Film Company, Herman Rifkin, general manager, are the distributors for the New England territory.

TAD'S SWIMMING HOLE.—A Judge Brown story, interestingly told, of a boy who was not allowed by the gang to go swimming in the old swimming hole. Later, when the gang is arrested for trespassing on this property, the boy, Tad, saves them, by proving to the court that the owner had given him the swimming hole as a reward for saving his daughter's life, and telling the judge he gave the boys permission to use it.

A MADISON SQUARE ARABIAN NIGHT (Broadway Star Feature).—This two-reel picture is one of the best productions founded on the O. Henry stories, the chief charm being in the extent to which the director has succeeded in transferring the spirit of the story to the screen. It is an interesting story, well told, with fine interpretations of the leading roles by Duncan McRae, Patsy DeForest, Miriam Miles and Joe Burke. Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

THE PREACHER'S SON.—A Judge Brown story with little Guy Hayman in the leading role, that of a preacher's son who, when ordinary methods of punishment fail, is sent to the city to visit his aunt. He describes his father, not as he is, strict and cross, but as he would have him be, a good sport, fond of athletics, etc. As a result the city church sends the preacher a call, and great is the surprise of the boy when his father appears, dressed like the character he has painted for him. Reviewed elsewhere in this issue. The story is interestingly told, with many human touches and good comedy bits.

SCHOOLS AND SCHOOLS (Broadway Star Feature).—A touching little story in two reels of a little girl who could neither read nor write. Raised in poverty, she is suddenly placed in an atmosphere of wealth. Through the scheming of her jealous cousin she is placed in a compromising position. Everything ends satisfactorily when the hero, who really loves her instead of her cousin, rises to the occasion, proposes and is accepted. Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

ALL STUCK UP (Essanay).—Don Barclay is featured in this slap-stick comedy number, which shows him as a paper-hanger. He starts out, loaded down with ladders and other paraphernalia. He succeeds in making an awful job, getting more paper and paste on the house owner and butler than on the walls, and when the boss arrives and remonstrates he throws him out of the window. The boss returns, throws Don on the floor and pours a bucket of paste on his head. There are a number of laughs.

SHERMAN WAS RIGHT (Jaxon).—This is an ordinary comedy number, with Dan Mason in the leading role. War, of course, is responsible for the title. Dan is instrumental in forming a home guard. The wives of the members form a league of peace and lock their husbands out, refusing to give them any dinner. Complications are caused by the arrival of a beautiful woman to whom the guard pay considerable attention. However, all is satisfactorily adjusted when the wives learn that the lady is lecturing on national defense.

A WOMAN (Essanay).—In this Chaplin re-issue Charlie shaves his mustache, dons feminine garb and gives a fine impersonation of a fashionable woman. There is plenty of knock-about comedy, with many good situations and several hearty laughs.

THE TRAMP (Essanay).—There are a number of good laughs and many fine comedy bits in this two-reel Chaplin reissue, in which Charlie appears as a Knight of the Road and with the help of a brick rescues beauty in distress, although a few feet of the film are a little off-color, though ludicrous. Chaplin also has the opportunity to do a little bit of straight work near the end of the picture and handles the situation effectively.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

BRACE UP (Bluebird.)—A five-reel subject, written and directed by Elmer Clifton, with Herbert Rawlinson, Claire Du Bray and Alfred Allen in the cast. The story concerns a young man who is strong and bold up to a certain point, but lacks courage at crucial moments. He takes a secret service assignment and overcomes this weakness in an interesting way. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

AMARILLY OF CLOTHESLINE ALLEY (Artcraft), March 11.—Taken from the novel of the same name, this five-part picture furnishes Mary Pickford with the greatest laugh getter of her career. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

SUNSHINE NAN (Famous Players), March 11.—Ann Pennington is the star of this five-part screen version of the novel "Calvary Alley." She gives a pleasing impersonation of a little "guttersnipe" who works her way up in the world. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

TENDER MEMORIES (Paramount-Chapin).—This installment of the Abraham Lincoln series, called "The Son of Democracy," produced by Benjamin Chapin, is a fine one, and contains the incident of the boy Lincoln when he wrote the letter to the minister asking him to come and say prayers over the grave of his mother. The scene at the lonely grave when the services are held are very touching and beautiful. At the finish the monument that now marks the spot where Nancy Hanks Lincoln was buried is shown.

THOSE ATHLETIC GIRLS (Sennett).—One of the best of the Paramount-Mack Sennett comedies, in which Louise Frazenda is featured. The dog, the cat and some ferocious looking lions take part in the comedy. A full review will be found elsewhere.

Fox Film Corporation.

AMERICAN BUDS (Fox Standard Feature), Feb. 24.—A Jane and Katherine Lee picture that is sure to win favor. The plot is not perfect, but the picture will carry all its defects with ease. There is so much good humor, wit, pathos and adventure in it that it will go splendidly. For a longer notice see elsewhere in this issue.

THE DEBT OF HONOR (Fox Standard), March 10.—A six-reel picture telling a fairy tale as a sort of introduction to a longer story of war times in Washington with a patriotic appeal that will make it liked. The construction of the picture is not perfect and it is not quite up to the best of the Fox output. For a longer notice see elsewhere in this issue.

THE DEVIL'S WHEEL (Fox Special Feature), March 17.—A strange and unusual story told in five reels. Many scenes show apache life in Paris so well acted and staged that they seem actual. The end is something of an anticlimax, but there is so much that is good in both story and screening that it will get over no doubt at all. For a longer notice see another page of this issue.

WOMAN AND THE LAW (Fox Standard), March 17.—A six-reel picture giving a close yet remarkably dramatic version of the famous De Saulles murder case. It has been written and directed for the screen by R. A. Walsh and has the quality that keeps an audience bound by the closest attention. The acting and everything else that go to make the picture are able. It is surely a remarkable and unusual picture. A longer notice will be found on another page of this issue.

Goldwin Distributing Corporation.

THE FLOOR BELOW (Goldwin), March 10.—This Mabel Normand picture has plenty of comedy and shows a "copy girl" in a newspaper office who takes a brief flyer in society. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Greater Vitagraph, Inc.

THE DESIRED WOMAN, March 11.—Taken from a novel by Will N. Harben, this five-part picture has a lot of real human nature in it. Harry Morey is well fitted to the leading role. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

W. W. Hodkinson Corp.

WITHIN THE CUP (Paralta Play), March 1.—A seven-reel subject, featuring Bessie Barriscale in a story of artists' life in the Latin Quarter of Paris and Greenwich Village, New York. This is a story of woman's sin and regeneration. The opening scenes are very brilliant, but the story slackens in interest later and could stand considerable cutting. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

George Kleine System.

THE MAN EATER (Edison).—One of the "Girls You Know" series, by James Montgomery Flagg, visualizing the character of the feminine flirt. The subject, which is well illustrated, will be found reviewed elsewhere.

THE MATINEE GIRL (Edison), Feb. 27.—One of the "Girls You Know" series, by James Montgomery Flagg. The type which he proposes to portray is characteristic of the girl who adores the star actor of the play and finds out after she has made a fool of herself that her adored one is already married. A review appears elsewhere.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

THE SHELL GAME (March 4).—An entertaining five-reel picture based on a magazine story by K. L. Roberts entitled "Good Will and Almond Shells." Emily Wehlen gives a pleasant interpretation of the leading role and is ably assisted by Henry Kolker and Joseph Kilgour. The story is out of the ordinary and there is a suprise at the finish.

BEFORE AND AFTER TAKING (Drew), March 4.—An amusing number in which a page of Henry Minor's history immediately previous to his marriage is pictured, in which he tells incredulous friends of the model of perfection his wife is to be. It also includes the aftermath when he awakens to the fact that his wish cannot always be law.

SPECIAL TO-DAY (Drew), March 18.—In this number of the Metro-Drew comedies Polly Minor has developed a bargain craze and insists on buying all sorts of things because they happen to be marked "special to-day." Finally Henry finds a cure which works like a charm. He buys a set of andirons which are useless without the big house and fireplace to accompany them. When he tries to get out of signing the lease for the present home, of which Polly is very fond, and shows an inclination to buy a home to harmonize with the andirons the cure begins to work.

Mutual Film Corporation.

ANN'S FINISH (American), March 11.—A five-part feature starring Marguerita Fischer. The play not always consistent is at the same time entertaining. One of the chief assets of the production is the charming manner in which Miss Fischer plays the role of the petted daughter of a lumber king in a series of escapades in a finishing school. A full review will be found elsewhere.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

SHIFTING SANDS (Pathe), March 10.—This is the eighth number in "The Price of Folly" series. It has a good plot and holds the interest well, despite the fact that much of the action is unconvincing. It concerns a girl who marries a young judge. He neglects her and she obtains a divorce to marry another. Later the second husband abuses her and divorce proceedings are held before the first husband. This situation would perhaps not be permitted in real life, but it is interesting. The first husband punishes the second and wants to remarry the woman, but she again spurns him.

FARE, PLEASE (Rolin-Pathe), March 17.—A two-reel comic featuring Toto, Bud Jamison and Louise Seymour. Toto appears as a street car conductor. He and his friends flirt with some girls on the beach and then go to a ball. The scenes on the ballroom floor are amusing, but the best scenes occur later on the street car. The action is largely of an acrobatic character and is very laughable in places.

HERE COME THE GIRLS (Rolin-Pathe), March 17.—A one-reel comic featuring Harold Lloyd, Harry Pollard and Bebe Daniels. The former appears as an adventurous young man who becomes clerk in a corset shop. Some customers from a girls' seminary appear and he finds the situation interesting. The plot is slight, but several of the scenes are quite amusing.

THE TIGER'S EYE (Pathe), March 17.—Episode No. 2 of "The House of Hate." This serial runs along in a mysterious way, and with more regard for story interest than is sometimes shown. Gresham rescues Pearl in the yard of the Waldon War Works, and she returns home to find her relatives all scheming to control her father's property. The flashlight photograph of the Hooded Terror makes a good feature, and the number closes with Pearl in danger from this individual.

THE BEGGAR WOMAN (Pathe), March 17.—A five-reel subject, produced by the Russian Art Films organization. Two very capable performers, I. I. Mozukin and Mme. Lesienko, appear in the two leading roles. The plot is tragic and concerns a beautiful prima donna who lost both her voice and beauty from smallpox. The subject is unusual in plot and treatment. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

CAUTERETS (Pathe), March 17.—Another beautifully tinted half-reel scenic of the "Picturesque France" series. The town and vicinity pictured lie in a basin in the Haute-Pyrenees mountains, on the line between France and Spain. The number is very attractive.

CHILDREN'S DANCES (Pathe), March 17.—On same reel with above. This illustrates a number of dances, the pictures being taken with a Pathe Ultra-Rapid camera. This gives a slow movement, which enables the observer to make a close study of the various steps. Entertaining and informing.

Triangle Film Corporation.

THE SEA PANTHER (March 10).—A tale of the pirates of ancient days, written by Kenneth B. Clarke, this five-part picture is very well produced. William Desmond and Mary Warren are the leading players.

THE MARRIAGE BUBBLE (March 31).—A two-part comedy-drama with William Desmond and Anna Luther in the leads, this picture has a great finish. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

UNFAITHFUL (March 31).—Dorothy Dalton is featured in this three-part story by Lambert Hilyer. A wife in trying to help her husband find material for a novel he is writing almost turns the affair into a tragedy. Fairly interesting. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

Universal Film Mfg. Company.

BEAUTY IN CHAINS (Universal Special), March 11.—A five-reel feature, with Ella Hall, Emory Johnson and Ruby Lafayette in the leading roles. This has a pleasant Spanish setting and the action centers about Dona Perfecta, a Spanish grand dame, who tries to prevent the marriage of her granddaughter to a young man who has criticised their sleepy little home town. This is slow and leisurely in movement, but novel and enjoyable in plot.

EDDIE GET THE MOP (Joker), March 18.—A comedy number by King Vidas featuring Harry Murdock and Mattie Comant, the latter a very stout girl. The setting is a vaudeville act and the humor is in lifting weights, etc. A pet pig and some flirtations on the part of the strong man are features. This is fairly successful.

COOKS AND CROOKS (L-KO), March 20.—A very funny two-reel number of the comic, knockabout type, featuring Gale Henry, Hughie Mack and Dave Morris. The names of the characters in this are well selected, the subtitles are amusing and the burlesque plot is decidedly good. Gale and Hughie appear as proprietors of a traveling lunch wagon. They are captured by a band of brigands, headed by Dave Morris as Melachrino Mike. The action is unusually pleasing.

RIDING WILD (Universal Special), March 23.—Episode No. 7 of "The Bullseye." This contains numerous novel incidents and is one of the best numbers in this entertaining serial. A stage holdup, North's discovery that McGuire is a secret service man, the fall of the stage over a cliff and the gun fight on a moving train are the principal features. There is some exceptional photography in this number also, picturing rugged mountain scenery.

THE MYSTERY SHIP (Universal Special), March 23.—Episode No. 17. This interesting installment contains many scenes in the Grotto, a subterranean chamber occupied by Russell and his gang. The Man of Mystery penetrates this grotto with his ship and opens fire on the gang, who return the fire but are soon dispersed. Russell is killed and the number closes with an explosion which imperils the Man of Mystery himself. The secret of the latter's identity is still maintained.

World Pictures.

WANTED, A MOTHER, March 18.—Madge Evans is the little girl who is looking for a mother. The story is an excellent medium for the young star. George MacQuarrie is also featured.

"PRUNELLA."

Paramount Presents the Famous Players-Lasky Production, Starring Marguerite Clark, in a Sweet Story of Childhood and Youth. By Granville Barker and Laurence Housman. Scenario by Charles Maigne. Directed by Maurice Tourneur. Released March 18.

Cast.

Prunella.....Marguerite Clark
Pierrot.....Jules Raucourt
Scaramel.....Harry Leoni
The Aunts.....Isabel Berwin, Marcia Harris, Nora Cecil
The Gardeners.....Wm. J. Gross, A. Voorhes Wood, Charles Hartley
The Gardeners' Boy.....Arthur Kennedy

The Story: Prunella is learning her lessons in the garden of her home with her spinster aunts, Prim, Privacy and Prude, watching over her. A troupe of vagabond players has come to town and the aunts fear Prunella may chance to catch a glimpse of the merry tribe.

As the sound of music and revelry approach the aunts take Prunella to the house and close all the shutters. Unfortunately Privacy drops the key to the garden gate and sends Prunella to fetch it. In so doing the child takes one peep over the garden hedge.

The Pierrot swinging along the road at the head of the laughing mummers sees Prunella and gayly leaps the hedge to make love to her. That night he steals her away while the aunts slumber.

The scene shifts back to the old garden three years later. There is only one of the aunts there, and she is leaving, for she has sold the house to a rich gentleman, a stranger, and only awaits his coming to give up the keys. Her surprise when she discovers that it is Pierrot himself, returned saddened and wiser to await Prunella's return to her old home, is as great as that of the audience when Prunella, too, comes back to the old garden, and all ends happily.

Feature Marguerite Clark as Prunella of both the stage and screen. She played in the company at the Famous Little Theater, New York, and on the road.

Advertising and Program Phases:

Prim, Privacy and Prude, three precise aunts, drove Prunella from her pretty garden into fame as a Parisian dancer.

Pierrot was a wandering clown who married and then deserted Prunella, only to find he could not live without her.

Love in a Dutch garden turned Eden into a desert.

All the fame the stage can bring cannot requite lost love.

Real Heart Throbs in Poor Prunella's Love Story.

Stunts: The theme is too dainty and appealing to couple with "stunts" that cannot possibly be worked in becoming appeal. Use pictures of Marguerite Clark, in her Prunella costume. They were the means whereby Miss Clark became a Screen Queen, denoting an enticing appearance that should draw business for "Prunella."

Advertising Aids: Two styles each one, three and six-sheets. Lobby displays, 8x 10, 11x14 and 22x28. Eight by ten photos of star. Ten cuts and mats each for star and production, one to three columns wide. Advertising layout mats. Press book.

"THE FLOOR BELOW."

Goldwyn Pictures Present Mabel Normand in an Absorbing Story, Combining Mystery, Adventure and Thrills in a Six-Part Comedy Drama. Written by Elaine Stearne. Hugo Ballin, Art Director; Oliver T. Marsh, Photographer. Directed by Clarence Badger. Releases March 10.

Cast.

Patricia O'Rourke.....Mabel Normand
Hunter Mason.....Tom Moore
Louise.....Helen Dahl
Monty Latham.....Wallace McCutcheon
Uncle Amos.....Lincoln Plumer
Mrs. Mason.....Charlotte Grenville
Ziegler.....A. Romaine Callender
Stubbs.....Louis R. Grisel
Managing Editor.....Willard Dashiell

The Story: Patricia O'Rourke, a care-free copy girl in the editorial department of a daily newspaper, so annoys the workers that she is about to be dismissed when the managing editor gives her a chance to save her job by assuming the role of a derelict and mingling with crooks in order that she might get a line for the paper on the activities of a bunch of thieves. Hunter Mason's mission is the scene of operation of the crooks that Patricia is to associate with. Mason's mother takes a liking to Patricia, and consents to take her into her home, and attempt to "reform" her. Mason finds that he is falling in love with Patricia, much to the discomfiture of the society belle who had set her cap for him.

One of the gang confesses and the police start for the mission where they find the man who supplies all the plans of the homes they rob. It is the secretary of Hunter Mason. The copy girl is offered back her job, but she prefers to pool her future with the man she loves.

Feature Mabel Normand in Her Latest Success.

Advertising and Program Phrases:

Comedy Drama Mingling Smiles With Heart-Throbs.

Poor Girl Saves Her Job by Ready Wit.

"AN AMERICAN LIVE WIRE."

Vitagraph Presents Earle Williams and Grace Darmond in an Adaptation of O. Henry's Story, The Lotus and the Bottle. Directed by Tom Mills. Released March 18.

Cast.

Willard Geddie.....Earle Williams
Ida Payne.....Grace Darmond
Frank Goodwyn.....Hal Clements
Isabel Guilbert.....Miss Toner
Detective O'Day.....Orral Humphries
Mrs. Payne.....Margaret Bennett
J. Ward Tolliver.....Malcolm Blevins

The Story: One of the liveliest of O. Henry's stories of South American life. Geddie is led to believe that Ida does not care for him. He accepts a minor consulate, where he lives the lotus life. But when an opera singer captures the heart of the president of the tiny republic and arranges to abscond with the treasury, Geddie gets busy, but instead he captures an absconding life insurance president from the states. Ida comes along with the family in a yacht, tosses a monkey wrench into the machinery as an excuse for stopping and goes ashore to look for Geddie. She falls into the hands of the enraged citizens, who mistake her for the President's siren, and Geddie happens along just in time to save her. He resigns the consulate to go home and get married.

Feature These Players: Earle Williams as the consul.

Grace Darmond as his sweetheart.

Programs and Advertising phrases: O. Henry at his vivid best.

You know the two-part O. Henry stories. This is in five acts.

American girl nearly torn to pieces by South American mob.

Stopped a yacht with a monkey wrench to see her sweetheart again.

Stunt Suggestions: Attach a monkey wrench to a card and letter it: "If you want to stop while on a yachting party, and your mother won't let you, throw a monkey wrench into the machinery. It won't hurt the wrench much and it surely will stop the engine. See how Ida did it in An American Live Wire at (house and date). A five-part O. Henry Story." If you can locate The Lotus and the Bottle, display the book open at this tale and back it with a card reading: "You can see this story come to life at the (house and date)."

Advertising Aids: One design each one, three and six-sheets. Window cards. Lobby displays, 11 x 14 and 22 x 28. Heralds. Slides, Plan Book. Press sheet. Released March 18.

"WILD YOUTH."

J. Stuart Blackton, "The Master of Screencraft," Presents a Paramount Picture from the Novel of Sir Gilbert Parker. Released March 18.

Cast.

Louise Mazarine.....Louise Huff
Joel Mazarine.....Theodore Roberts
Orlando Guise.....Jack Mulhall
Li Choo.....James Cruze
Orlando's mother.....Adele Farrington

The Story: This is an adaptation from Sir Gilbert Parker's novel of the same name, and deals with the age-old call of youth to youth and the love of a young girl-wife of a neighbor while her old husband—fully old enough to be her father—grows more and more cruel with his increasing jealousy. Matters seem inextricably tangled when a quick turn of fate leaves Louise a widow. For a while the young lover is accused of the murder of her husband, but Li Choo, a Chinese servant, confesses and the two youngsters are free to work out their happiness together.

Program and Advertising Phrases:

The Wedding of December and May.

Old Husband. Young Wife. The Inevitable Finish.

Wild Youth Has Its Fling When Old Age Submits.

Sir Gilbert Parker's Greatest Story Vizualized.

J. Stuart Blackton, "The Master of Screencraft," Presents His Greatest Handiwork.

Louise Huff, as the Dainty Heroine. Theodore Roberts, as the Crabbed Old Husband.

The Age Old Story of the Call of Youth to Youth.

Old Age Cannot Triumph Over Young Love. The Odds Prohibit.

Stunt Suggestions: Several handsome bird gages, hung in the lobby, and thus carded: "The Gilded Sages Could Not Form Prison Bars for 'Wild Youth.'" For a street stunt a riderless horse might be led around town with this sign attached to both sides of the saddle: "'Wild Youth' at the (name of theater) Will Show What Happened to the Rider Missing From This Horse." Hook up with your book store to display "Wild Youth" and other Sir Gilbert Parker books. Man in Chinese garb to walk the streets, bearing card: "I Am the Liberator of 'Wild Youth' at the (name of theater)."

Advertising Aids: Two designs each one, three and six-sheet posters. One 24-sheet. Rotogravure. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Scene and portrait cuts one to three columns wide. Slides. Advertising layout mats. Press book.

"THE SPURS OF SYBIL."

World Pictures Present a Story of a Society Butterfly Who Made Good Despite Cruel Suspicion. Story by Louise Winter. Directed by Travers Vale. Photographed by Max Schneider. Released March 4.

Dr. Ross Alger.....John Bowers
Paul Berwick.....John Davidson
Mrs. Alva Penfield.....Iseth Munro
Aunt Annabelle.....Justine Cutting
Oleander Berwick.....Eugenie Woodward
Detective.....Herbert Barrington
Doctor's Assistant.....Richard Clarke

The Story: This is a modern, metropolitan tale telling of the adventures of a beautiful young society butterfly, Sybil Drew, when she is told to go out into the world and earn her own living. She has been a "poor relation" dependent upon her wealthy aunt for support and this aunt decides that Sybil's unhappiness and discontent is due entirely to her dependent condition. Therefore the aunt decides on drastic means of bringing happiness to Sybil.

Feature Alice Brady in Brady-Made Picture.

"ANN'S FINISH."

Mutual Film Corp. and American Film Co. Present Margarita Fischer in a Silk Pajama Boarding School Comedy Drama. Directed by Lloyd Ingraham. Released March 11.

Cast.

Ann Anderson.....Margarita Fischer
Robert Chappell.....Jack Mower
Madame D'Arcy.....Adelaide Elliot
Teddy Barnes.....David Howard
The Rat.....John Gough
The Weasel.....Robert Klein
The Fox.....Perry Banks

The Story: The action involves Ann Anderson's adventures in a finishing school, where she has been sent in the hope that she will eliminate a certain tendency to wildness, but Ann is bound to play her string out and she proceeds to make matters interesting for the entire establishment.

A burglar breaks into Ann's room, but he doesn't look like a burglar to her so much as a hero, so she hides him in her clothes press. Then the watchman and the school principal get on the job and Ann has to pretend that she is a war bride, married to the burglar. It develops that the burglar is a masquerading millionaire who falls in love with Ann and wins her after exciting complications.

Program and Advertising Phrases:

You Can't Judge a Girl by Her Pajamas.

Silk Pajamas Lead to Capture of Millionaire Burglar.

How Would You Like To Be a Burglar in a Girls' Finishing School and be Chased by the Pajama Police?

Burglar Bill Captured by Silk Pajama Baby Dolls.

How To Be Happy—Even In Silk Pajamas.

Ann's Finish Was at the Altar.

Pajama Girls in a Finish Fight With Millionaire Burglar.

Stunt Suggestions: Hook up with a window display of silk pajamas.

"See Ann's Finish in Pajamas at (name of theater)" would do for wording of window card.

Let the girls in high school know that this is a boarding school comedy with Margarita Fischer at her best.

Advertising Aids: One design each, one, three and six-sheets. Unmounted banner. Half-column cut. One to three-column cuts and mats. Program cut, 4x4. Lobby displays, 11x14 and 22x28. Slides. Press sheet.

"LOVE ME."

Thomas H. Ince Presents Dorothy Dalton in a Five-Part Paramount Feature, by C. Gardner Sullivan, in Which a Winsome Girl Overcomes Family Opposition. Directed by Roy William Neill. Photography by John Stumar. Released March 18.

Cast.

Maida Madison.....Dorothy Dalton
Gordon Appleby.....Jack Holt
Rupert Fenton.....Wm. Conklin
Eunice.....Dorcas Mathews
Grant Appleby.....Melbourne MacDowell
Mrs. Appleby.....Elinor Hancock
Mortimer Appleby.....Robert McKim

The Story: Owing to the unexpected departure of a fellow engineer in charge of the construction of a bridge in North Dakota, Gordon Appleby is assigned to complete the work. He is greatly surprised to find upon arriving that the work is progressing capably under the direction of Maida Madison, a recent graduate of a school of engineering. A friendship springs up between them, which, by the time the task is finished, has developed into an enduring love, and Gordon brings back with him to his wealthy and exclusive family in the East a bride. Her acceptance by the Applebys was anything but cordial. Gordon's older brother, Mortimer, in particular, seemed bent on convincing Gordon that he had made a sad mistake in the choosing of his wife. He it was who, watching Maida at a party, noticed her eyes fixed on Fenton, a man of the world and admirer of Gordon's married sister whose husband was at that time "somewhere with the fleet."

Mistaking Maida's motives, Mortimer follows her when she leaves the party and as he expects, finds her in Fenton's rooms. The fact that she had come merely to save their sister is brought forcefully home to Gordon and Mortimer, and Maida comes to take her rightful place in her husband's family.

Program and Advertising Phrases:

Filled With Thrills and Sensations.

She Struggled and Won Against Odds.

She Carved Her Name on the Family Tree.

Her Good Qualities Won Respect and Wealth.

She Made the Wealthy Snobs Respect and Love Her.

Dorothy Dalton, Past Mistress of Hair-Raising Suspense.

Feature the Star. Her recent hits include: "Flare-Up Sal," "The Price Mark," "Love Letters," and other Paramounts. "Love Me" is the most thrilling of all her thrillers.

Stunt Suggestions: The manufacturer suggests a post-card campaign, and supplies forms. Also advises hooking up window displays in department stores, contrasting Miss Dalton's khaki hunting costume she uses in lumber camp scene with fine gowns worn by society women in the play. Street stunts are hard to devise. A girl in khaki hunting costume, passing out advertising matter, would attract attention.

Advertising Aids: Two designs each one, three and six-sheets. One 24-sheet. Rotogravure. Photos, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x29. Ten cuts each on star and production. Advertising layout mats. Slides. Press book.

"THE WASP."

World Pictures Present Kitty Gordon in a Story of Speed, Thrills, Mystery and Excitement. Written by Willard Mack. Directed by Lionel Belmore. Photographed by Lewis Ostland. Released March 11.

Cast.

Grace Culver.....Kitty Gordon
John Culver.....Charles Gerry
Mrs. Culver.....Sadee Burbank
Harry Cortland.....Rockcliffe Fellowes
Mr. Cortland.....Willam Calhoun
Jackson Devereaux.....Edward Rosemond
Kate Putnam.....Victor Kennard
Brazsos.....Lionel Belmore
Harry's Roommate at College, Edward Burns
Miller (Grace's Maid)....Hazel Washburn

The Story: Grace Culver is known as "The Wasp" because of the stinging nature of the bitter remarks she makes about her friends and things in general. Efforts are made by a German spy to put out of commission the big war munitions factory operated by Grace's father. The new chauffeur to Grace aids in frustrating the plans of the plotters, and the ending of this exciting production shows how happiness comes to the cynical Grace after she has lost faith in men and life in general. The action throughout the picture is very rapid, and at no time is the interest allowed to wane.

Feature Killy Gordon, Famous English Beauty, Wasp-Waisted and Alluring.

Program and Advertising Phrases:

Look! See! Kitty Gordon's Back!

Wasp-Waisted English Beauty in "The Wasp."

Fast-moving! Thrilling! Exciting! Surprising!

A Speed Production of Great Beauty and Suspense.

World Pictures Create World Pleasures at a Pittance.

England Loans Her Most Famous Beauty to the American Screen.

Stunt Suggestions: With proper ingenuity a wasp's nest may be imitated by using tissue paper. Several of these "nests" hung in the lobby would be a novelty. Kitty Gordon is a beautiful woman and her pictures would greatly ornament the outside "flash." The German spy plot of the piece may be worked up in the newspapers to an advertising advantage.

Advertising Aids: Two styles each one, three and six-sheets. Free advance poster. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Two-color heralds. One and two-column cuts. Slides. Press sheet.

"THIEVES GOLD."

Universal Presents a Harry Carey Feature Telling a Story of Adventure Along the Mexican Border. Based on Frederick Becholdt's Story. Scenario by George Hively. Directed by Jack Ford. Five Reels. Released March 18.

Cast.

"Cheyenne" Harry.....Harry Carey
Curt Simons.....Vesta Pegg
Alice Norris.....Molly Malone
"Uncle" Larkin.....John Cook
Mr. Savage.....L. M. Wells
Mrs. Savage.....Helen Ware
"Col." Betoski.....Harry Tenbrooke
Mrs. Larkin.....Martha Mattox

The Story: Curt Simons, a highwayman, is caught by Mexicans intercepting one of the large shipments of money which is being smuggled into Mexico to aid the revolution, and sentenced to die. He escapes by killing the guards, and in his flight comes upon the cabin of "Cheyenne" Harry, in charge of the herds of the Savage Ranch. "Cheyenne," who had previously dispatched "Uncle" Larkin to the Savages with a note to the effect that he has decided to quit, is persuaded by Curt to join him in his escapades. They arrive at the Mexican town of Agua Prieta, where "Uncle" has been sent by Mr. Savage to meet Alice Norris. "Cheyenne" chances upon Alice and becomes infatuated with her. Betoski, a card sharp, is shot by "Cheyenne" through the trickery of Curt. The men then hold up a stage coach containing a large amount of gold, and "Cheyenne" later saves "Uncle" and Alice from impending death, due to "Uncle's" reckless auto driving. The pursuing posse capture "Cheyenne," and he is imprisoned, but is later pardoned through the influence of Mr. Savage with the governor. The Savages keep secret the fact that "Cheyenne" was incarcerated for murder and plunder, and they give him back his old job on the ranch. But a turn of events reveals "Cheyenne's" past to Alice, and, when questioned by her, he admits that it is true, and leaves her. Alice, much perturbed, writes to George Lilly, another suitor, telling him that she Will accept him. In Agua Prieta "Cheyenne" wins heavily from Curt in a card game, which so angers the latter that he attempts to kill "Cheyenne" the next morning, but is prevented by Alice, who happens by. Alice is made to realize that "Cheyenne" is her man, and she dismisses forever from her mind the name of George Lilly.

Feature Harry Carey: "Cheyenne Harry" of many adventures.

Advertising and Program Phrases: See "Cheyenne Harry's" latest adventure.

Love and liberty among the lawless.

Desperate doings along the Rio Grande.

Where East meets West and is taken into camp.

Dainty Molly Malone, as pretty as her pictures.

Husky men in savage battles win victory for law and order.

Breezy atmosphere of the Wild West carried to the screen.

Lessons of a great story: "Back to the right trail."

Hitting the sand trail in the name of law and justice.

Stunt Suggestions: This Western story will stand for a revival of your best "stunts;" there are cowboys, cattle, horses, wild riding and straight shooting. Offer prizes for empty bags of "Bull Durham"—"the makins'." Hook up with hat stores for displays of sombreros. Have men in "chaps" parading with advertising throwaways.

Advertising Aids: One design each one, three and six-sheets. One sheet of star. Black and white lobby displays. Slide. Player cuts. Heralds. Press book.

"THE DEVIL'S WHEEL."

Fox Presents Gladys Brockwell in a Thrilling Five-Reel Play of the Paris Underground—Directed by Edward Le Saint. Released March 17.

Cast.

Blanche De Montfort...Gladys Brockwell
Hortense.....Lucille Young
The Stag.....William Scott
De Guise.....Bertram Grassby
Father Adrian.....T. D. Crittendon
Marquis Henry De Montfort..Pietro Buzzi
Prefect of Police.....Andrew Robson

The Story: Marquis De Montfort has a system for winning at roulette. De Guise steals it. In the struggle he kills the Marquis and knocks the Marquis's daughter, Blanche, unconscious. "The Stag" holds up the auto in which De Guise is taking Blanche to Paris. "The Stag" throws out De Guise. When Blanche awakens she is in an Apache den and has no recollection of her past life. She is called "The Wild Cat." An operation brings back her memory after she had stabbed De Guise, whom she finds winning at roulette with her father's system. Blanche, however, has no idea she has been an Apache girl. "The Stag" follows her to her chateau, again saves her from De Guise and recalls the love she bore him as an Apache. "The Stag" reforms and Blanche finds happiness with him.

Feature These Players: Gladys Brockwell as the Marquis's daughter.

Bertram Grassby as the villain.

Advertising and Program Phrases: Miss Brockwell again plays a dual role. This time she goes from a chateau to become "The Wildcat" in an Apache den in Paris and then back to the chateau each time, losing all memory of her previous life.

A drama of high social life and of the Apache class in France.

Stirring portrayal of high and low life in France.

Stunt Suggestions: Have a well-dressed girl and a hard-faced Apache girl in the lobby or at the entrance with a sign in front of them reading: "See Gladys Brockwell portray each of these girls in The Devil's Wheel. If you think your patrons will be attracted by a roulette wheel have one in the lobby and have the girls spinning the wheel. Over the lobby display cards have the sign: "This sweet, gentle, well-bred girl lost her memory and became "The Wildcat" in a Paris Apache den. An operation brings back her gentle nature."

Advertising Aids: Two each one, two, three and six-sheets. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14, 22x28. Slides. Mats and press sheet.

"WOMAN AND THE LAW."

William B. Fox Presents in Intensely Dramatic Form a Question of Ethics That Is as Old as the Marriage State Itself. Directed by R. A. Walsh. Released March 17.

Cast.

Mrs. Jack La Salle.....Miriam Cooper
Jack La Salle.....Ramsay Wallace
Josephine Dwyer.....Peggy Hopkins
Don Francisco del Castillo, George Humbert
Senora del Castillo.....Agnes Nielsen
Ramon Alvarez.....Louis Daytch
Col. La Salle.....John Laffe
Ruth La Salle.....Lillian Satherwaite
Jack La Salle, Jr.....Jack Connor

The Story: Jack La Salle marries and brings to New York a South American heiress. For a time their life is happy, but with the coming of little Jack and Bianca's absorption in the baby, he turns again to his old friends of Broadway. Divorce is the inevitable result and little Jack is to spend a part of his time with each parent. At the end of one of his visits to his father, the latter refuses to return the child, and the desperate mother shoots him to regain her child and put an end to his threats that she shall never see the boy again. The law seizes her and the jury is asked to decide if the provocation warrants the deed.

Feature These Players: Miriam Cooper as Bianca La Salle.

Ramsay Wallace as the husband.

Advertising and Program Phrases: Based upon a tragedy that stirred New York society.

The mother-love that dared all things.

A question to which the answer will never be written.

Shall a mother kill to keep her child?

Stunt Suggestions: This production, based upon the Jack De Saulles case of last year, will permit of considerable advance discussion if you can get your newspaper to work in with you. Start the discussion on the custody of the child and introduce the greater question only after interest has been aroused. If you can arrange to borrow a couple of life-like dolls use these for window work, a doll and a copy of the revised statutes flanking a card reading: "Her husband defied the law and took her child, so she took the law into her own hands. Did she do right? May a mother kill for her child? See Woman and the Law at (house and date). Get the facts before you decide." For the lobby arrange a large balance with a child in one pan and the law in the other. Have a pointer so arranged that if the pan with the child sinks it points to life, and to death if the law sinks. Fasten so that it will stay at even balance and use a card, "Which way should the scales go? See Woman and the Law and decide for yourself."

Advertising Aids: Two designs each one, three and six-sheets. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Slides. Mats and press sheet free.

Released March 17.

"THE GIRL AND THE JUDGE."

Mutual Presents An Empire All Star Production, in Five Parts, Starring Olive Tell. Released March 18.

Cast.

Winifred Stanton.....Olive Tell
George Chartris.....David Powell
Mrs. Stanton.....Charlotte Granville
Mr. Stanton.....Eric Mayne
Mrs. Chartris.....Marie Reichert
Walter Stuyvesant.....Paul Stanton
Emily Lorimer.....Marie Burke
Frank Lorimer.....Thomas Curran

The Story: When Winifred Stanton, daughter of Mr. Stanton, wealthy oil operator, returns from abroad she learns that an estrangement exists between her parents, due to her mother being a kleptomaniac. George Chartris, who has recently been elected judge in a small New England city, accompanies his mother to New York on a visit to the Lorimers. While on a shopping tour with his mother and Emily Lorimer, George assists Mrs. Stanton, who has been accused of shoplifting. For his kindness he receives the thanks of Winifred. As a result of the unsavory publicity attendant upon the activities of Mrs. Stanton, Walter Stuyvesant, son of a wealthy New York family, breaks his engagement with Winifred. Stanton neglects his business and loses his fortune. Thinking that he can retrieve his loss by starting anew in a small city, he moves his family to the New England city where George Chartris is judge of the court. Winifred and George meet again and a mutual attachment springs up. Mrs. Chartris calls on Mrs. Stanton and loses a valuable pin. Thinking to save her mother Winifred confesses to having stolen the jewel. She is brought before Judge George Chartis, who is stunned. Believing that Winifred is shielding somebody, he orders the prosecutor to investigate further. It develops that the landlady of the boarding house in which the Stantons are living is the real thief. The new environment cures Mrs. Stanton of her mania and she is reconciled to her husband, who has recouped his fortune. Winifred now sees that George is the man she really loves, and their engagement is announced.

Feature Olive Tell in a story of hereditary crime.

Advertising and Program Phrases: To shield her mother she convicted herself.

Daughter's sacrifice saves mother from prison.

Her love is a jewel in pawn.

Happiness comes through daughter's sacrifice.

Old New England family shelters kleptomaniac.

Judge of the law a judge of nature.

Stunt Suggestions: The story does not lend itself to stunts. Pictorial lobby displays featuring pictures of Olive Tell should be backed by newspaper advertising.

Advertising Aids: One design each one, three and six-sheets. Special process art herald. Lobby displays, 11x14 and 22x28. Slides. Electros and mats. Photos. Triangle Magazine. Press sheet.

"THE BEGGAR WOMAN."

Pathe Presents a Gripping Drama of Russia Before the Revolution. Produced by I. N. Ermoheff. Directed by Cheslar Sabinsky. Released March 17.

Leading Players.

Sergius, the poet.....I. I. Mozukin
Mary Mar, the prima donna,
Mme. N. A. Lesienko

Mary Mar's voice charms all Petrograd. Among the ardent admirers of the singer is Sergius, a poet and literary lion of Russia. He meets her and later is invited to join a select gathering at the prima donna's home. He tells her of his love. But he refuses to be numbered among her mere admirers, and the other suitors are told to stay away. The superficial glitter and tinsel of the opera lose their flavor. Mary Mar announces that she is to become the wife of the poet.

Inspired by the love of Sergius, Mary Mar becomes even more attentive to the needy, the sick and the unfortunate. She visits the sick child of a former member of her chorus. In the poverty-stricken hovel she contracts smallpox. Sergius calls at her home, but is not admitted to see her.

A month passes. The singer is on the road to recovery. The physician orders every mirror removed. He forces her to wear a veil "to shield her eyes." A new operatic star is in the ascendancy. Rumors that Mary Mar will not return to the stage bring hosts of creditors. Her most intimate possessions are sold at auction.

Everything is kept secret from Sergius until the announcement of the auction sale is published. He hurries to the home of his fiancee. Sergius crushes the veiled woman in his arms. Then she lifts the veil. What does Sergius see? What does he do?

Advertising and Program Phrases: Tragic drama of Russian aristocracy.
Petrograd while Czar Nicholas still ruled.
Gay life in the courts and salons of Petrograd.
Tragic love in the land of the Midnight Sun.
The voice that charmed all Petrograd.
Love that endured through tragic struggles.
When love lifted the veil of doubt.
Surging passion amid the glamor of stage gaieties.
Intimate vistas of life in Russian court circles.

Stunt Suggestions: Because of the locale of the story, advertising must be confined to displays of stills, lithographs, and to newspaper announcements. Play up the interest in life in Petrograd under the Czar who fell with the revolution.

Advertising Aids: One one-sheet, two three-sheets, one six-sheet and one 24-sheet. Lobby displays, 11x14, both sepia and in colors, and 22x28. Slide. One-column cuts. Campaign book.

"THE ANSWER."

Triangle Presents E. Magnus Ingleton's Tragic Lesson in Socialism, Starring Alma Rubens. Directed by E. Mason Hopper. Released March 17.

Cast.

John Warfield.....Joe King
Robert Warfield.....Charles Dorian
Guido Garcia.....Francis McDonald
Shepard.....Jean Hersholt
Lorraine Van Allen.....Alma Rubens

The Story: John Warfield, reared by his father whose life has been spent in spreading the gospel of Socialism, receives as his heritage a letter telling him that his mother belonged to the people his father hated and urging him to carry on the work against wealth and luxury. Goldie Shepard, a telephone operator, hears Warfield haranguing a street crowd and becomes interested in him. Her drunken father is run down and killed by an automobile in which the wealthy Lorraine Van Allen is riding.

Goldie becomes a stenographer to Warfield and aids him in his socialistic work. She meets Guido Garcia, who gives his money to help Warfield establish a home for "down and outers." Lorraine Van Allen goes to the hall to comfort Goldie and is repulsed. She sees Warfield and enters into the work he is doing.

Warfield learns that he has fallen heir to his mother's mansion in England. He goes there, claims his fortune, sends for Goldie, and they are married. Into a life of luxury the bride plunges. Her husband begs her to return to America with him to keep up their work for the poor. She refuses. Guido, restless over Warfield's long absence, goes abroad and learns of conditions. In a rage he kills Goldie and himself. Warfield returns to America and finds Miss Van Allen running his uplift mission. He wins her love and together they give their mansion to the world as "The Warfield Children's Home."

Feature Alma Rubens as the girl who sacrifices comfort for the work of ministering to the poor.

Advertising and Program Phrases: Perils of life among the lowly.
Rich girl gives herself to charity work.
Crime and debauchery cannot rule a strong heart.
The gifts of sacrifice bring solace in sorrow.
She was only a settlement worker—but proved a heroine.
Suddenly gained riches wrecks a weak and selfish soul.
Of such is the kingdom of righteousness.

Stunt Suggestions: This is a good feature in which to interest your charitable organizations, settlement workers and Red Cross chapters. Alma Rubens plays the role of a friend to "down and outers," and the play carries a good lesson.

Advertising Aids: One design each one, three and six-sheets. Special process are heralds. Lobby displays, 11x14 and 22x28. Photographs. Slides. Electros and mats. Triangle Magazine. Press sheet.

"FAITH ENDURIN'."

Triangle Presents a Stirring Drama of the Rugged West. Featuring Roy Stewart and Fritzie Ridgway. Directed by Cliff Smith. Released March 17.

Cast.

Jeff Flagg.....Roy Stewart
Jim Lee.....W. A. Jeffries
Helen Dryer.....Fritzie Ridgway
Vic Dryer.....Joe Bennett
Edward Crane.....Edward Brady
Sol Durkee.....Walter Perkins
Old Jerry.....Graham Pette
King.....Walter Perry

The Story: Jeff Flagg is rescued from yeggmen by Jim Lee and they start raising cattle. When the Rex Copper Mining Company begins operations near by, Lee explains to Flagg that the erection of a smelter will spell disaster to their venture, as the copper will poison the water. A feud is begun in which Flagg and Lee are arrayed against Edward Crane, general manager of the mining company, and also against Sol Durkee, sheriff, seeking the miners' votes.

Flagg falls in love with Helen Dryer, stenographer in Crane's office. While the feud is at its height, Crane calls Helen to his office. He is making advances to her when her brother, Vic, the timekeeper, appears and kills him. Vic flees. Suspicion is directed toward Flagg. He leaves town and a search is instituted. A scar on his left arm is expected to reveal his identity. He arrives at a distant town where he comes across Lee, now a sheriff. Neither gives a sign of recognition. Flagg is inveigled into a poker game, and agrees to bare his arm if the cards are against him. He loses. Before he can pay the wager Lee shoots him in the arm, tearing away the tell-tale scar. Flagg is returned to the scene of the murder, but the guilty man is ferreted out, and Flagg wins Helen.

Feature These Players: Roy Stewart as Jeff Flagg.
Fritzie Ridgway as Helen Dryer.

Advertising and Program Phrases: Love and life in the rugged West.
Straight shooting and strong love.
The revolt against cruel oppression.
When love is more precious than life.
When wealth poisoned the streams.
Who draws quickest is best man.
Cold steel and cool nerve triumphant.
Pinning cowardice under the heel of bravery.
Swapping bullets for woman's love.

Advertising Stunts: Almost any "Western" stunt will fit. It's a story of the prairies

"THE CLAIM."

Metro Presents B. A. Rolfe's Production of the Five-Part Screen Version of Charles Kenyon and Frank Dare's Play of the Same Title. Scenario by Leighton Osman. Directed by Frank Reicher. Starring Edith Storey. Released March 18.

Cast.

Belle Jones.....Edith Storey
John MacDonald.....Wheeler Oakman
Kate MacDonald.....Mignon Anderson
Pansy Bryan.....Marion Skinner
Mike Bryan.....Paul Weigel
Ted Jerome.....Fred Malatesta

The Story: Ted Jerome, a gambler, deserts his wife and child and goes to the mining camp of El Dorado, where he falls in love with Kate MacDonald and succeeds in making her his wife. John, Kate's brother, a prospector, learns of Jerome's bigamous marriage and wreaks vengeance upon the evil doer by throwing him off a cliff. Belle, Jerome's first wife, arrives at the camp as Ted's body is being brought in. Belle feels that she cannot give her child the right kind of support and deserts it in the hotel. The child is found by John, who takes it home, and he and his sister adopt it. They give the name of Goldie to the infant.

John strikes it rich. Belle, who has become a singer in a music hall, is told to have her splendid voice cultivated. Not having the money, she decides upon blackmailing John MacDonald, who adopted her child. She meets John, but does not connect him with the John MacDonald from whom she intends to extort money. She communicates with Kate and demands $20,000 under penalty of taking the child away and pushing her claim. John comes in as Kate is making part payment to Belle. A check for the full amount asked is handed to her. The appearance of Goldie awakens the mother-love and Belle, throwing the check upon the floor, takes her child and goes to the city. The pleadings of Goldie prove irresistible, and Belle brings the child back to her "relatives." In the end John and Belle are married, and her claim is made secure.

Feature This Player: Edith Storey in the story of a derelict landed in safe harbor.

Advertising and Program Phrases: Mother-love better than gold.

Heroic deeds under rugged skies.
The call of mother-love prevails.
Cruel villainy meets its just deserts.
The code of the West settles with crime.
A little child leads the way to happiness.
Thrills and sensations blaze the way to vengeance.

Advertising Stunts: The story combines the dance-hall with rugged Western life, and does not submit readily to stunts. Lobby displays, composed of material Metro will furnish, should be coupled with liberal newspaper advertising.

Advertising Aids: Two designs each one, three and six-sheets. Press sheet. Filler sheet. Ten-minute novel for newspaper use. Slide. Herald. Lobby sheet. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Cuts.

Brooms Discarded for Pitchforks.—Texas girls go a-farming, raise chicks, do the chores, pitch hay, milk cows and generally discredit the "hired man."

History Makes Way for Progress.—Holloway Street theater, cradle of "The Star Spangled Banner," razed to make room for Baltimore's new civic center.

Ski Champion Jumps 185 Feet.—World's record on Skis set by Lars Haugen in fifth annual carnival at Steamboat Springs, Colo.

Universal Screen Magazine.

ISSUE NO. 60 (March 1).

Preparedness—A Day with Our Future Admirals.—The splendid efficiency of our navy in the war is largely due to the superb training the "middies" receive at the Naval Academy, Annapolis, Maryland.

Nature Studies—Fish Frolics De Luxe!—Come with us for a few minutes to the great aquarium in Battery Park, New York, and watch the antics of interesting varieties from seven seas.

Industry—Eight Hundred Years of Coal—We should worry! It is estimated that it will take centuries to exhaust the supply in the mines of West Virginia!

Animal Friends War—Burdened London Extends Hand of Mercy to Injured Pets.—Notwithstanding the great drain human misery now makes upon tender sympathies of the big British heart, a generous measure is reserved for suffering animals.

Art—Miracles in Mud, produced by Willie Hopkins, "Nature's Camouflage."

ISSUE NO. 61 (March 8).

Agriculture—"King" Hog is Hoover's Best Bet.—Everywhere farmers are diligently raising hogs to supply the lean larders of our suffering Allies and to augment the frugal fare of our own people.

Industry—Eat Oysters and "Kan the Kaiser."—No oysterless days yet, thank God! Mr. Oyster still remains untouched by food edicts and is being harvested in abundance down in Chesapeake Bay.

Preparedness—Steel—Democracy's Right Arm!—Everywhere in this great country mills are rolling millions of tons of steel for our new ships, armor plates and big guns (Courtesy of the Agriculture and Immigration Department of the State of West Virginia).

Industry—The Horse Drive is On!—Automobiles have almost put the horse out of business, but he is needed now for the farms and war as he never was before. Some splendid types are presented at this horse show (Official film of the United States Department of Agriculture).

Art—Miracles in Mud, produced by Willie Hopkins, "Souls and Soles."

HE'S gone across—
YOU "come across"!
Adopt a SOLDIER and Supply him with "SMOKES" for the Duration of the WAR!
YOU know that our fighting men are begging for tobacco. Tobacco cheers them. They need it. "Send more cigarettes." "We can't get half enough smokes over here." "A cigarette is the first thing a wounded man asks for." Almost every mail brings many thousands of such requests.
$1.00 a Month Keeps a Soldier Supplied—Will YOU Be a "BIG BROTHER" or a "BIG SISTER" to a Lonely Fighting Man?
Every dollar sends four 45c packages of tobacco. Mail the money and coupon right now.

"OUR BOYS IN FRANCE TOBACCO FUND"
19 West 44th Street, New York
GENTLEMEN: I want to do my part to help the American soldiers who are fighting my battle in France. If tobacco will do it, I'm for tobacco. (Check below how you desire to contribute.)
I enclose $1.00. I will adopt a soldier and send you $1.00 a month to supply him with "smokes" for the duration of the war.
I send you herewith ....., my contribution towards the purchase of tobacco for American soldiers. This does not obligate me to contribute more.

Make a Little Waste Space Pay Extra Theatre Profits

Share in This $6,000,000 Butter-Kist Business

Requires No Sugar---No Wheat Preferred By All Patriots

Hundreds and hundreds of film exhibitors delight their patrons and draw extra crowds by having a Butter-Kist Machine in the lobby of their theatres. Requires only 26 x 32 inches of floor space.

These aggressive theatre managers—in big and little cities alike—are earning from $600 to $3,120 per year from this Butter-Kist Pop Corn Machine. Runs itself. Requires no heavy stock investment. Handsomely built. Beautifies any theatre.

BUTTER-KIST

POP CORN MACHINE

War-time conditions are making Pop Corn more popular than candy. And Butter-Kist—the trade-marked Pop Corn that is nationally advertised to millions—will dominate the market.

Wherever a theatre will pay—this machine will pay and pay big!

Get our offer to let you buy from your profits as thousands are doing.

WRITE! at once for our amazing merchandising book, called "America's New Industry." Packed full of signed sales records, proof of profits, photographs and documentary evidence. Write at once. This book is free.

Foreign Buyers

This old and well established concern, wishing to extend facilities to the foreign buyers in their relations with American Film Producers, has recently opened a special department for the purchasing and exporting of Moving Picture Films. Through this special department it will be possible for you, on a very reasonable basis, to purchase your films and other articles in the moving picture line to much better advantage than could be done directly by yourself.

For this very complete service, backed by our thorough knowledge of American conditions, you pay us only a commission.

Saving Owing to the fact that our purchases are very large, we can give to you the benefit of the lowest prices. We are holding out no profit for ourselves on the purchase prices, whatever we save is for our customers.

Satisfaction Our main object is to satisfy our customers in every possible way, not only to be able to save money for him, but to buy the best the market affords; and keep him posted regularly as to what is going on in the film industry as regards new productions.

Shipments In connection with the film department you will also have the advantages of our well operated shipping department, thus you are assured of the careful and proper handling of all goods, which means for you Prompt Delivery.

Confidence You will deal with a concern with unquestionable financial standing.

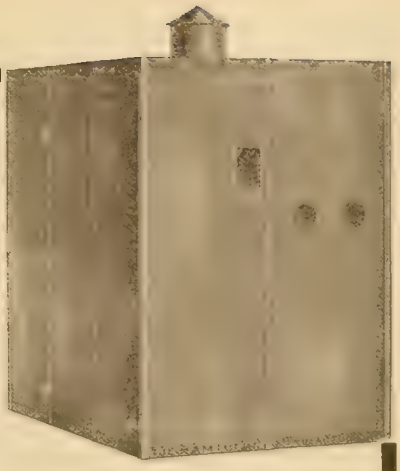
Steel Booths



THESE booths are made entirely of heavy steel with angle frame, and are finished with a pleasing olive green baked enamel.

The door has spring hinges. The openings in front of the booth are provided with safety slides which close automatically in case of fire.

Hamilton booths are now being used in many theatres, as well as colleges, schools, laboratories, and by the United States Government.

They will reduce your insurance rates and give you the protection you need.

SILVERTIP

Illuminate Your Screen With

THE LIGHT WITHOUT A FLICKER

The direct current arc of the National-Silvertip combination gives a pure white light and flickerless illumination. The Silvertip is of small diameter and is heavily plated in order to carry the high currents which are necessary to obtain an intense white light. Its small diameter insures an absolutely steady light.

SILVERTIPS ELIMINATE NEGATIVE GHOSTS

The tendency of the arc to wander and give undesirable shadows is entirely eliminated by the use of Silvertips. The elimination of these disagreeable features and the simple operation of the arc has made this carbon the favorite with the majority of critical operators.

Please note: Silvertips are for direct current only

FOR ALTERNATING CURRENT

White A. C. Specials are giving satisfaction in a great many high-class theaters the country over. The quiet running and steady white light of these carbons reduces the necessary adjustments during operation to a minimum.
A simple change of carbons does the trick. No new apparatus necessary.

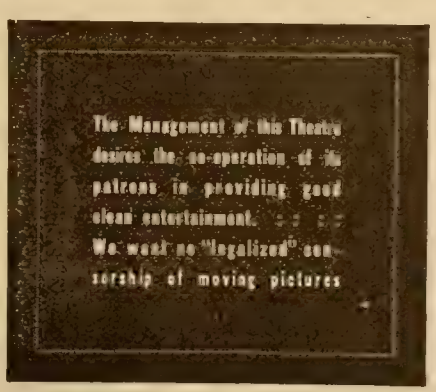
Educate Your Audience to Help Fight Censorship

Introducing a bill providing for the Censorship of Moving Pictures is a favorite indoor pastime in legislative halls throughout the country. Eternal vigilance is the price of the Exhibitor's mere safety if not his success.

Presented in the proper manner, the Censorship of Moving Pictures is just as obnoxious to the Exhibitor's audiences as it is to the Exhibitor. And public opinion aroused in behalf of moving pictures and against their unfair and discriminatory control is the surest weapon to defeat Censorship.



The Management of this Theatre
desires the co-operation of its patrons in providing good
clean entertainment.
We want no "legalized" censorship of moving pictures

We have prepared a series of nine different stereopticon slides which crystallize the argument against Censorship; one of the slides is shown herewith.

These slides shown repeatedly in any theatre cannot fail to influence public opinion in that locality against Censorship. They will line up the general public on the side of the Exhibitor.

You Ought to Be Showing Them Now! Legislatures Everywhere Are Convening

On these two pages, and the following two pages, Jewel Productions, Inc., makes the greatest announcement in the history of its organization.

We have secured the biggest feature of the century—"THE KAISER"—"The Beast of Berlin" the tremendous sensation that made blasé New York stand up and cheer like mad.

No production in the wide world, including any and every big one that the trade has seen in the past ten years, sets red blooded Americans so wild with excitement as does—"THE KAISER"—"The Beast of Berlin." New York went mad over it and when calloused New York goes wild, it will sweep the rest of the country like wild fire.

It is colossal. It will make your audiences boil. It will pack your house.

It will smash your house records to smithereens. Every Jewel Exchange (see list on next page) has the picture. Smashing ads and publicity ready prepared. If you ever acted quickly in your business life, NOW is your hugest opportunity.

"THE BLUE BIRD"

An ARTCRAFT Picture

A mighty spectacle of Happiness ✻ The Photoplay the whole World wants to see

Released on Easter Sunday, March 31st

Maeterlinck's "The Blue Bird"

is backed by nation-wide advertising.

AN ADVERTISING campaign, set so as to create at Eastertide an overwhelming demand for Maeterlinck's "The Blue Bird," will guarantee capacity houses for every exhibitor that shows this Artcraft Picture.

"The Blue Bird" was a mighty success as a play. After a long run in New York City, it toured the country, hailed everywhere as a production setting a new mark in stage artistry.

Its strong appeal to men and women, as well as to children, made it a huge money-maker. The Artcraft production of "The Blue Bird" is immensely finer than the stage version, and will crowd the motion picture theatres every time it is shown, this year and for years to come.

It is worth the longest run you ever gave a picture in your theatre.

An ARTCRAFT Picture

CECIL B. DE MILLE is the directing genius who aided Jesse L. Lasky in establishing the Lasky Productions as motion pictures of supreme merit. He is the man who directed all the Geraldine Farrar productions.

No one knows better than Cecil B. De Mille how to tell a story dramatically in motion pictures.

"The Whispering Chorus", the strangest story ever told is a photoplay of tremendous vitality, the first of Artcraft's four Cecil B. DeMille Star Series Pictures, produced personally by the Director-General of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

"MY sentiments, too! Keep up the good work!" That's the comment a Chicago exhibitor wrote alongside a criticism of Charles Ray that he mailed to us.

The criticism was from "Screen Opinions," and it said—"They make no better pictures. Clean, wholesome entertainers like Ray will eventually save the industry. The theatre that cannot cash in on a picture like this, had better analyze itself—because something is wrong with it."

WHAT the newspapers say about this great picture:

Salt Lake City Tribune—"Jack Pickford is winning new laurels for himself in 'Huck and Tom,' which opened a four-day run at the Paramount Empress to the customary surging crowds." ¶ New York Tribune—"We thought when we saw 'Tom Sawyer' that nothing could ever again be so nice. But in the new picture Jack's portrayal of Tom is quite as entertaining as before and the story itself has far greater possibilities for the screen."

The newspapers give valuable advertising free to theatres that show pictures such as Jack Pickford's Paramount Pictures.

ARTCRAFT PICTURES

A straight-from-the-shoulder letter from William S. Hart

TO YOU, MR. EXHIBITOR

Certain motion pictures advertised as "Wm. S. Hart's Super Features" are being offered to State Right buyers by a company called the "W. H. Productions Co."

It has created the impression upon the minds of some patrons that these pictures are my latest pictures, produced by a company in which I am personally interested.

I am not now nor have I ever been connected with the "W. H. Productions Co.," I am not interested in their output and their pictures are not new pictures.

The fact is that some of these so-called "Wm. S. Hart Super Features" exploited by the "W. H. Productions Co." were made from two to four years ago. The old titles under which they were previously exhibited have been changed and new titles substituted. In short, they are old pictures with new labels. If your patrons, acquainted with my old pictures, are misled by new titles into a belief that these pictures are my latest productions, it will not only injure my reputation but also seriously affect the reputation of your theatre.

I have received letters from many "picture fans" protesting that they had paid admission to their local theatre expecting to see me in a new five-reel subject only to discover that what was advertised and exhibited was an old two-reel picture which had been shown years ago.

You should be fair to your public. Each exhibitor who shows under a new title an old film in which I have appeared, undoubtedly creates the impression upon those who have closely followed and seen my work upon the screen, that it is a new production, when this is not the fact; this is unfair to them and to me. The motion picture industry, of which you are a part, suffers thereby.

These are true words. You know that.

Every one of my new productions bears the "Artcraft" trade mark. All of my best productions bear the "Artcraft" trade mark. They are:

"The Narrow Trail" "Wolves of the Rail"
"The Silent Man" "Blue Blazes Rawden"
"The Tiger Man"

The public's judgment of your theatre's loyalty depends upon the business methods you employ in conducting it—upon the public's judgment depends your success or failure.

Yours sincerely, WILLIAM S. HART

Another Remarkable Success For Mabel Normand In "The Floor Below."

ANOTHER rush for the box-offices of the nation marked the release of Mabel Normand in her second Goldwyn production, "The Floor Below." Exhibitors everywhere are writing and telegraphing their delight over the record-breaking patronage brought into their theatres by this immensely popular star.

The box-office value of Mabel Normand in "The Floor Below" is indicated by these enthusiastic comments:

WID'S: "The Floor Below" is a great yarn with plenty of snappy treatment. Sure to draw heavy patronage.

PICTURE-PLAY MAGAZINE: Mabel Normand is the best comedienne on the screen and "The Floor Below" proves it.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS: Through "The Floor Below" Mabel Normand goes rollicking along in her own irresistible way. . . . It is the usual lavish Goldwyn production.

DRAMATIC MIRROR: "The Floor Below" is a lively and laughable story of love and mystery and of strong popular appeal.

EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW: Mabel Normand is the most vital bit of magnetism that has ever worked before a camera. Here is a picture that "has everything."

MORNING TELEGRAPH: A well-conceived and delightfully constructed crook story combining rapid-fire farce, comedy and drama. . . . A sure-fire entertainment for Goldwyn exhibitors.

Based on the reports from this production and her first Goldwyn triumph, "Dodging a Million," Goldwyn confidently announces to all exhibitors that Mabel Normand has tripled her previous popularity. She is today one of the greatest box-office stars in the screen world. Are YOU playing her pictures in your theatre? Ask the nearest Goldwyn office for prices and a contract.

in The SPLENDID SINNER

by Kate Jordan — Directed by Edwin Carewe.

As we have told you: It is greater than "Thais" which broke box-office records all over the nation. It is heroic, wonderful, thrilling with few parallels for production beauties. It goes to all Goldwyn contract customers at their regular rental—a remarkable special production at no advance in prices. Released everywhere March 24.

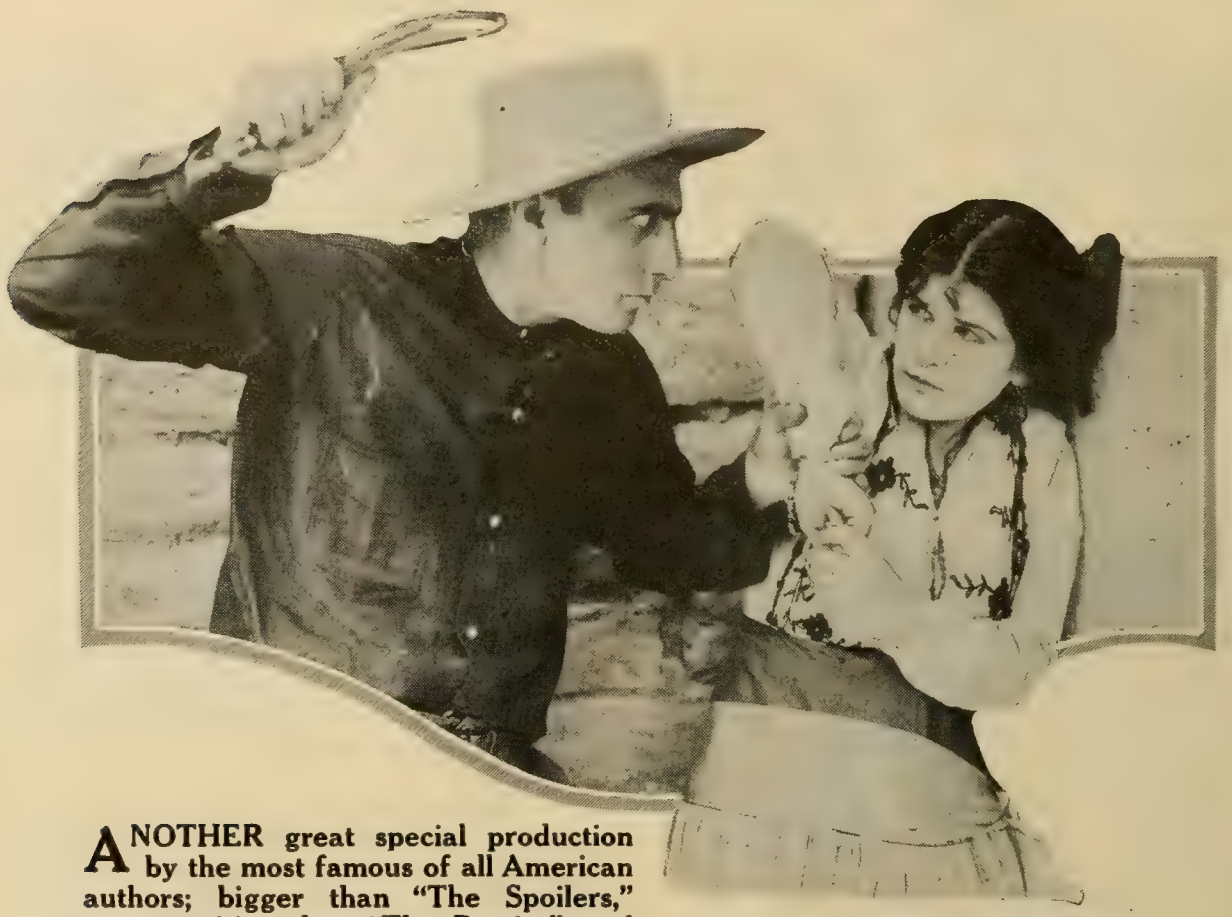
REX BEACH PICTURES



ANOTHER great special production by the most famous of all American authors; bigger than "The Spoilers," more exciting than "The Barrier" and more thrilling than "The Auction Block." Exhibitors are urgently advised to book at once the greatest box-office success of 1918.

HEART OF THE SUNSET

Directed by Frank Powell

Now Ready for Immediate Release

Once or twice each year Rex Beach comes to the assistance of the world's exhibitors with a production that breaks all existing box-office records. This is the most powerful Rex Beach Picture ever made.

"Heart of the Sunset" is released singly as a great seven-reel production and is not linked with any other pictures. It can be booked only through the offices of "The Picture of 1,000 Thrills!"

HAVE you ever seen the notorious Philippine "water cure" in a motion picture? It provides one of the powerful scenes of "Heart of the Sunset."

Have you ever thrilled with patriotic fervor as you read of the daring Texas Rangers sweeping into Mexico? You see this in "Heart of the Sunset."

Do you know the most terrible death in the world? In "Heart of the Sunset" General Longorio threatens to bury a man to his neck in an ant-hill and fill his mouth with honey. You see the terrified Mexican shiver and tremble.

Think of a brave American boy being made to watch throughout the night a band of Mexican savages digging his own grave.

These are but a few more of the unusual and dramatic scenes in "Heart of the Sunset" which the entire world will want to see. Protect yourself against your competitor by booking this production at once by telegraph.

CAPITOL COMEDIES

Goldwyn announces

"SMILING BILL" PARSONS

A new and soon to be nationally-famous comedian of cleanliness and happiness. He will be seen in

CAPITOL COMEDIES

Two joyous reels of healthy laughter to each picture. Twenty-six pictures a year. One every second Monday.

Exhibitors everywhere are begging producers for sane and cheerful comedies. Goldwyn hunted for a year without finding what it knew the public wanted.

Suddenly in "Smiling Bill" Parsons we found a new favorite with the beguiling smile of the serpent in the fable, and the radiant disposition that Nature bestows upon its beloved fat men.

These splendid successes produced for us by The National Film Corporation of America are controlled and released exclusively through the offices of

To Stars wishing control of their own productions:

THE great Studios of Triangle at Culver City and elsewhere have ample capacity for more than fifty companies, so that in addition to Triangle Programme, and special productions constantly in work, they are in position to undertake the making of moving pictures of the highest quality to individual order.

The organization has been so perfected that you may have at your command as much or as little as you need.

You will find continuity and scenario departments, photographic and manufacturing departments, wardrobe and property departments, developed to the last degree of completeness, under the most capable department heads and assistants.

Everyone in the Motion Picture industry recognizes the leading position of the studios themselves, their splendid equipment and the magnificent properties in which they are situated.

Each "Order Picture" will be produced precisely as desired by the owner.

It may be simple and inexpensive, or most elaborate and costly—at his will. He may select his own company, his own author, his own director, if he wishes.

Stars who wish to control their own productions—from scenario to theatre, may do it easily, and without any investment beyond cost of production plus a reasonable fee, under this arrangement.

This means that Triangle does not wish to share in the profits of the picture after its completion.

Our relationship with distributors in this country and Europe enables us to undertake marketing, if desired, on a percentage basis.

Publicity and paper—if desired

Think It Over

Have you heard the latest scheme for the salvation of exhibitors? There seems to be a new plan announced every day.

Various producers are coming forward with some new form of "camouflage" and are endeavoring to show exhibitors that their particular plan is the only one that will save the day and enable exhibitors to make money. But the funny part of it all is that these producers have only recently become wise to a situation which has existed for some time and which was bound to become critical sooner or later.

Triangle decided nearly a year ago that the production and distribution of motion pictures must be made a real business—must be run on business principles, straightforward and clean; that economies must be practised and that exhibitors must be given the utmost consideration.

Here are some of the things that Triangle HAS done for exhibitors—not that it is going to do:

1—It has already materially cut the cost of producing pictures by placing its studios on a scientifically operated basis — no hundred thousand dollar stars — no money wasted or time lost. Business principles are practised by business men. No possible combination of studios would enable Triangle to make quality pictures at lower costs than at present.

2—It has paid the reel tax without transferring it to exhibitors — the only honorable solution of the problem.

3—It has reduced the cost of service to exhibitors for high quality pictures. It is not necessary for Triangle exhibitors to spend money for memberships in any association in order to procure a square deal.

4—It has co-operated with exhibitors by only charging them rental prices which would assure them of profits — reducing the cost of service and in some instances giving free service, where conditions required. Free service is nothing new with Triangle. Justice and not charity is what every exhibitor desires.

5—It has established a Traffic Department and rearranged the territories of exchanges in order to give every exhibitor the best possible service in the delivery of film. Every reel of film is carefully inspected before being sent out. Prompt and courteous service is the watchword at every exchange.

Think it over! Is there any company that has done more for exhibitors in the last year than Triangle? Do you realize that by using Triangle pictures you help to enlarge the cooperative service of an organization which has lead the way in reducing the cost of pictures to exhibitors and in establishing the policy of an absolute fair and square deal every time?

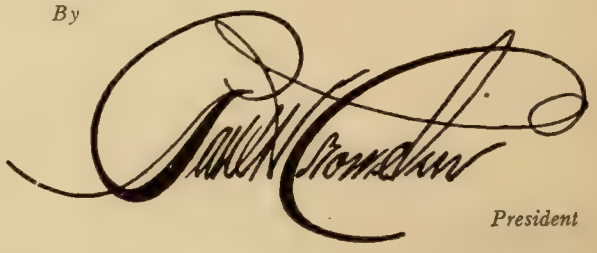
"Little Talks with Foreign Buyers" No. 5

By



President

WORLDTALK

ITS line of World Films gives you a corking idea of how careful Inter-Ocean is in its recommendations to foreign buyers. Reports on my desk show that no brand of American film has made greater profits for showmen in all sections of the world THAN WORLD FILMS. In the last year it has been our pleasure to deliver to our foreign customers such World box-office magnets as Carlyle Blackwell and Madge Evans in "The Burglar;" "Rasputin" with an all-star cast including Montague Love, June Elvidge, Henry Hull, Arthur Ashley and Irving Cummings; Kitty Gordon in "Her Maternal Right," Ethel Clayton in "Stolen Paradise," Madge Evans in "The Bondage of Fear," Robert Warwick in "All Man," Clara Kimball Young in "Dark Silence," and Alice Brady in "Hungry Heart." Incidentally, we delivered these perfectly packed, with sufficient posters and minus all invoice trouble! (Did you read last week's "Little Talk?") We have established World Films so firmly on the foreign market that we seriously doubt if any make of American film has a larger sale. Almost every foreign buyer of World Films in 1917 renewed his contract for 1918! Doesn't it show you that Inter-Ocean believes in the best and offers buyers nothing else?

A Personal Message

The first stalwarts of the coming army have entered the arena. They are Co-believers, like myself, in the principle of equitable, fair business dealings, unhampered by a strangling "producer dominance." I am glad to announce that six men, foremost exhibitors, and tried and true to their clan, have joined my Co-partnership plan. Eugene Roth of San Francisco and Messrs. Moore, Greaves and Ellison of Denver are four. The others I will announce later. Exhibitors the country over will do well to watch the proving of our basic principles upon which rest their hope for a free, profitable and pleasant business future.

UNITED PICTURE THEATRES OF AMERICA INC.

Questions and Answers

Taking up and answering one by one The Moving Picture World's objections to co-operative plans and its doubt as to the organization and personnel of United Picture Theatres of America, Inc.

Question. Is the United Picture Theatres of America working unselfishly for the exhibitors' interest?

Answer. It is, because it is a mutual co-operative organization, legally under the control of its exhibitor membership, designed to reduce film rentals to its members from 30 to 50 per cent., and to improve quality.

Question. Will United Picture Theatres engage in the making and marketing of films?

Answer. It will not. The plan is to buy film, not to manufacture or peddle it.

Question. Is our plan a reversion from open bookings to programme?

Answer. Emphatically NO! We shall book by the "star series" system and such acceptable productions as the market affords.

Question. How do we expect to get the exhibitors to stick?

Answer. By making every member an actual benefiting partner. Twenty-two thousand druggists stick together. Why not a few thousand exhibitors?

Question. How can we please both producers and exhibitors?

UNITED PICTURE THEATRES OF AMERICA

Answer. The producers, by giving them cash and a guaranteed profit besides, for their negatives. The exhibitors, by giving them pictures that their membership prefers and by eliminating film waste of all kinds.

Question. Can the opposition of powerful vested interests be combated?

Answer. Certainly, because the combined power of the exhibitors is greater than that of all the other factors in the industry. Consolidation of offices, cuts in big salaries, elimination of useless service, direct routing, abolition of financier profiteering—these things can be accomplished in the film world by the United Exhibitors just as they are being accomplished in the railroad world to-day by Director McAdoo.

Question. Is United Picture Theatres promising anything it cannot perform?

Answer. No, because the promises are well within the reasonable expectation of what co-operative movements can do. The Moving Picture World cannot discover one extravagant, unwarranted statement in any of the speeches of Mr. Ochs or our published statements. Are other co-operative companies overstating? We do not know, but we feel sure exhibitors are so strong for the co-operative idea that overstatement is not necessary to secure membership.

Question. Finally, are the men behind United strong enough to put it over?

Answer. Messrs. Ochs, Seelye, Blumenthal, Goldsmith and the other executives of United Theatres enjoy exhibitor confidence as do no other group of men in the country. They are known to be honest, conservative, forceful and energetic, and can point with pride to their achievements in the film industry.

THE LAWYERS AND BANKERS OF PROMINENT EXHIBITORS HAVE MINUTELY EXAMINED EVERY DETAIL OF OUR PLAN, AND THEN THESE EXHIBITORS HAVE ENDORSED THE SAME BY BECOMING UNITED MEMBERS

NEW YORK March 18th, 1918.

Gentlemen:

There is a question in the minds of some as to reasons for our overwhelming success in re-issuing three of the first big Thos. H. Ince super-pictures featuring Wm. S. Hart, which were produced by the New York Motion Picture Corporation in 1914-15, viz: "The Two-Gun Man" in "The Bargain", "The Bandit and the Preacher" and "The Hell-Hound of Alaska".

These are the three best pictures in which Wm. S. Hart ever appeared. He was not known to the picture-going public at that time. Desiring to make a reputation, and the work being new and fascinating, he therefore put his heart and soul into it - and these productions, in turn, made him the popular film idol he is today. Furthermore, the picture-going public has doubled within the past two years, so that a great majority of the new film fans never saw these features when they were first released.

W. H. Productions Company saw the possibilities in re-issuing super-features that made stars famous, and such we considered these Hart productions. Within a period of two months we have sold these re-issues to the keenest and most reliable independent exchangemen in the business, and they in turn are now successfully booking these box office features to the leading exhibitors. If further proof of the soundness of our judgement is required it is furnished by the box office results which the exhibitors are now obtaining.

Good judgement, proper exploitation, and fair prices put these excellent pictures over.

We have proven to the trade that these productions were never properly exploited until W. H. Productions Company saw their box office possibilities, and Thos.H.Ince and Wm. S. Hart should feel greatly indebted to us for the intelligent and dignified method in which the pictures that made their reputation have been handled. We do not feel surprised that Mr. Ince and Mr. Hart are chagrined in not being connected in any way, manner, shape or form with W. H. Productions Company, especially as they are not "CUTTING IN" ON THE PROFITS of these productions, and since these re-issues are breaking records for capacity business in the leading theatres throughout the country.

Pursuing this same policy we have purchased five of the finest Bessie Barriscale pictures ever made. All of them have extraordinary publicity and advertising possibilities, so much so, as to guarantee a tremendous success to the independent exchangemen and exhibitors throughout the entire country.

Yours very truly,

W. H. PRODUCTIONS COMPANY.

P.S. We beg to announce that the entire world rights have been sold on all of our present re-issues featuring Wm. S. Hart.

The Fascination of "O. Henry"

No wonder the admirers of "O. Henry" are loyal to this prince of short story writers.

Never at any time in his career did "O. Henry" pen a trite, obvious plot. Each of his tales sparkled with surprise and suspense.

Add to that, they vibrated with the sweet cadence of human appeal.

On the screen his stories are visualized with all these fine qualities.

A Scene from "THE SONG AND THE SERGEANT," with Alice Terry, Stanley Dunn and Templer Saxe—one of those gripping heart interest dramas with a last minute "O. Henry" climax.

What a relief to audiences, what a benediction is an "O. Henry" story, especially when it follows one of those primitive, mechanical, pattern-made photoplays that are five false reels all about nothing.

FIFTY SPLENDID ONES AVAILABLE TO CHOOSE FROM

Seven are 4-reel classics. The others are in two parts each. Reviewers agree with the public that these are the most original picture play subjects ever interpreting a popular author.

Facts and Comments

FROM the reports which are just beginning to come in there promises to be a big effort on the part of the motion picture exhibitors of the country to help put the third Liberty Loan over the top. Preparations are being made by exhibitors everywhere to give special patriotic pictures on at least one night during the drive for the loan. Many will devote several nights and the opportunities for "Four-Minute Men" will be innumerable. It is quite probable that the motion picture theater in this drive will be the most potent force for success that has yet been developed. When you stop to think of it you realize that in no single place can you depend upon finding so many people at a regular and given time as in a picture theater. Picture theater patrons are of a class that is most approachable and will be most responsive to the appeals of the Government for funds to run this war. The average picture theater audience is more largely represented in Uncle Sam's fighting forces than any other assemblage, and there are more picture theater audiences in this country than can be shown by any civic organization, so to reach the people that are most responsive one must go to the picture theater.

In this campaign every opportunity will be given the Government to make its personal appeal to the public. "Four-Minute Men" will be welcomed to explain the necessities of the occasion and selling agents will be permitted to canvass audiences for the sale of bonds and thrift stamps; in fact, the theaters will be wide open to Uncle Sam and his representatives.

* * *

SOMEONE said to us the other day: "The State Right business is shot to pieces." When asked upon what he based his statement he said: "Well, I notice that the trade papers are not carrying much state right advertising." What else he said is immaterial, his main contention being that the volume of advertising was the true indication of the condition of the business. While we do not indorse our friend's analysis in full, there still remains something of truth in his reasoning and it has to do with advertising. Trade papers do not exist as an excuse for advertising; they come into being by reason of the necessity of advertising and the need of a proper medium to carry that advertising. Upon that theory, which we believe to be the true one, we should not be judged expressing a wish that is father to the thought when we say that there is no branch of the film business that is more sensitive to good advertising than the state right method of marketing pictures; no branch of the business that responds more quickly to advertising, or that suffers more for lack of it.

Up to this writing state right advertising has but one purpose: the securing of buyers for the feature advertised—and there it has stopped. The result has been that many inexperienced men have bought state right pictures because they were willing to pay more than other men who knew what the pictures were worth would pay and, consequently, the road to st right success is strewed with the empty wallets of the easy mark. In other words, the state right manufacturer has not built for the future, but has tried to make all he could in the present, regardless. It was a short-sighted policy, and the state right manufacturer is just now suffering the effects.

It ought to be evident to any business man that the state right buyer who is successful in putting over a feature with the exhibitors of his territory will be in the market for more pictures, and each following success makes him stronger; therefore, if there is anything within reason that the manufacturer can do to insure the success of the man who buys his feature that is the thing he should do. This leads us right up to the complaint made to the Moving Picture World by a state right man who dropped in at our office the other day to lay this particular subject before us. This man owns two theaters in a town in Tennessee and does a large state right business, which qualifies him to talk on the subject. He said:

> You will notice that when a state rights feature is finished and placed on the market there are page and half-page advertisements running on each feature probably two or three weeks, until the great majority of territory is sold, and then those advertisements are stopped suddenly and the feature in question drops from sight, as far as the publicity is concerned, and the exhibitors in a short time forget all about them, and we lose many quick bookings that we otherwise might get if a campaign of advertising were kept going.

I suggest that the broker or firm who handles or sells a state rights feature agree to take or pay for one-fifth of a page ad weekly as their share, and let each territorial buyer agree to pay for the rest of the page, or their pro rata share of the page.

I would suggest that these contracts be for a period of three months after the release or selling of each feature. In this way exhibitors would have publicity weekly regarding the big features.

I would also suggest that in each ad the firms buying these features be listed weekly so that exhibitors in their territories may know just where they can wire or write and secure them.

There is a state right man's view of the situation and every state right broker or producer knows that it is correct.

If a dealer in any sort of merchandise wishes to insure the sale of his product he backs it up with a national campaign of advertising, urging the public to buy his product. So general is this practice that there is scarcely a product of even commonest use that is not so advertised. On the same principle a state right feature should be advertised so that the exhibitor will be urged to book it for his house. Failure to do this will result in lack of sales or bookings for state right features just as surely as the sales of a merchantile product will fall off when it is not advertised. If the name of the picture is not kept before the exhibitor he soon forgets its existence.

So greatly is the need of advertising appreciated by the man who buys a feature for a given territory that he is willing to pay his share of the expense, as in the case of the state right man with whom he discussed the subject. There really is no reason why producers and brokers of state right subjects should not establish a stable market for their product so that they would not find their business "all shot to pieces" every so often. It can be done if they will back up the men to whom they sell territory.

THE advocates of commercial efficiency in marketing methods for the picture industry appear to have overlooked a rather important governing factor, the individuality of each and every picture produced. A salesman can go on the road and sell soap, breakfast food or monkey wrenches by sample and the purchaser may rest reasonably secure in the knowledge that each item in a carload lot will be like sample and like each other and, if the products take with the public, repeat orders will require very little time or ability on the salesman's part. A picture on the contrary must sell on its individual merit plus the ability of the salesman, and it is practically just as expensive to sell picture number 200 as to put number one over. It requires something more than an order taker to dispose of each successive picture and the self-selling repeat orders of commercial lines, also their money and time saving possibilities are absent in the picture industry.

NO SUNDAY SHOWS IN MARYLAND.

On Tuesday, March 5, an unfavorable vote was taken on the Norris bill, in the house, at Annapolis, Md., which provided for restricted concerts in Baltimore on Sundays. It was killed by a vote of 60 to 17. Delegate League, who introduced the bill prohibiting children under twelve years to enter moving picture theaters without a guardian, supported this Sunday concert bill. Thus the proposed amendment of the Sunday laws which would permit moving pictures to be shown after 3 p. m. on Sundays is made impossible by this vote.

Plays That Coin Money

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

TOO severe, the rude literary test that a story must stand reading a second time to be worth reading at all. It is entirely too severe for an art so young as that of picturing stories on the screen, though we are constantly confronted with old plots, many of them culled from files of the Moving Picture World and dressed up in brand new store clothes by the hack writer at seventy-five per week. New screen stories are entirely too scarce at this evolutionary stage, almost as scarce as critics who can tell the truth and satisfy everybody at the same time. Even the most accurate and discriminating critic seldom gets beyond predicting the immediate effect of a photodrama. We are in a constant state of change, and he has to be unusually gifted to see very far into the future, to pick plays that coin money.

A three-year-old, still popular, is not unknown.

One five-reel flivver, starless and far from being a work of art in all respects, was released some three years ago amid no particular excitement, at a cost about one-tenth of the late features, but it ran well from the start and is still booming merrily along. It is not safe to reason from premises so limited as to the longevity of other products, but investigation reveals that the secret of its success is vitality of theme. People are still in a receptive mood for it, and they may continue so for some time.

Vitality of subject is one essential to lasting success, but who is to decide what is vital?

There is a very simple and natural answer to that question, but the time is not here when an author may measure the vitality of his own work against the requirements of those who purchase what he does. Nor is the scenario department of any large concern entirely free from embarrassment. Directors have their own ideas, so have the star performers, so has the distributive organization. In order to harmonize these varied interests, the scenario department is bound to be affected in considering what is presented for examination. It is often a question of compromise.

To get at the real causes we must unlock secret doors.

Only those who are permitted to inspect the workings of a big distributive force at close range know all concealed behind those doors, but what is going on can be glimpsed. There are some very fine salesmen on the road, persuasive gentlemen of winning personality, and good fellows at that, but it is in them to feel that they must have something big to brag about. They can present a case with more enthuiasm when they have, at least, a foundation of fact to build upon, very much like the dramatist who constructs a romance on some underground concrete of reality. Hence the salesman quite naturally favors what has past performance back of it.

"Of course," he says, "you have heard of 'Happy-Go-Lucky?' Of course you have. It ran one entire season on Broadway to crowded houses, with a long line at the box office. They refused to sell the movie rights until we planked down a hundred thousand in cold cash, and we engaged Stella, the great Stella Longacre, from the original cast to play the lead. Cost a lot of money, seven thousand a week, a thousand a day for little Stella, besides a lavender limousine with gold trimmings thrown in."

The noble art of lying will never decay as long as we have with us that master of distributive fiction, the traveling salesman.

The really capable salesman takes an honest pride in his ability to sell something which would never sell itself on merit alone. He proves his case most strongly when he markets the unmarketable. Why should he bother his head about "vital themes" and all that sort of stuff? He should worry. The main thing for him to do is to get rid of as much as possible at the best price obtainable, make money for the firm and ask for a raise when he comes in to tell them all about it.

The miserable necessity of telling the truth never bothers him in the least.

While the traveling salesman is defying skepticism with fervent and fiery-colored eloquence, known in his own vernacular as "raw stuff," he formulates an opinion that the exhibitors need what he finds he can sell them to best advantage. It is not of the slightest consequence what the public should have. He comes back home with a report that nothing goes unless there is some other established reputation than that of the firm back of its product. He is the man who sells the goods. He ought to know. He is in "touch with the trade." His verdict goes to the scenario department. How can unprejudiced judgment be expected under such circumstances?

It would be a sad state of affairs for the salesman if exhibitors were invariably given plays which could be depended on to suit the public.

What a lot of illuminating eloquence would be lost to the world, the flesh and the devil if our photodramas were so good that they could find their way to publi approval without all the arts and crafts of salesmanship! Even the publicity man might have a hard time to stagger along, though we should all hate to dispense with his really wonderful presentations of fiction in the guise of alluring facts. Publicity organs today are the work of bright minds. They never bore us by describing anything that has ever really happened. They even point the way for trade papers. They have the wit, light touch and brisk style which make print readable.

They plentifully sugar the bitter pills which exhibitor and public have to swallow.

The idea of giving narcotics to blunt human sensibilities is being abandoned in medical practice—the reaction often proves worse than the pain originally relieved. A producer must necessarily advertise to make his product known. That is his introduction of what he has to sell. Thereafter the intrinsic merit alone counts. Where it is lacking, he gets the reaction of cancellations, often to an extent that he faces a heavy loss, a loss not shared by his publicity agent and salesmen, though he may have acted on their recommendation. To get plays that last, that coin money year after year, he must go deeper than their superficial representation, deeper than those of star and director, until he reaches some definite and unprejudiced policy of selection and production.

The successful producer of tomorrow will be one who has grasped the full meaning of what is known as "the modern drama."

Humanity seems to have fallen in love with exhibitions of its own laughable weaknesses, with frank confessions of its own faults. The opinions, the achievements, of man seem to be of secondary importance to the character behind his conduct. Whether he is a saint or a sinner, he reaches our hearts quickest when he is the incarnation of what we recognize in ourselves. The world seems never weary of watching the unveiling of a troubled soul in its progress from shadow to enlightenment, or from sunrise to shadow, so long as it solves the problem of what is vital to life as we know it, or believe it to be.

Such is the play that charms our lips to silence, our eyes to fascinated watching, the play that coins money.

A Question of Methods

By Edward Weitzel.

BACK in the Dark Ages when the world had heard naught of the silent drama and the shadow stage had not begun its brilliant career as a rival to the art of Shakespeare's Theater, a comedian of good repute, who amassed a fortune by acting in but one play during a round dozen of years, surprised several members of his company by openly rebuking them, one evening, for inattention, while the performance was going on. So adroitly was this accomplished, however, that few of the spectators were aware anything of the kind had taken place.

It was near the end of the season, and long familiarity with the lines and situations had made a number of women of the company slightly indifferent to the business in hand. During the second act it was their duty to follow the comedian about a room, while he searched in the closets and under the table for one of the other characters. The scene should have been played with every indication of nervousness and apprehension on the part of the young women. That night they all entered rather listlessly and omitted to "work up the business," until brought to a startled realization of their neglect by the interpolation of a significant line. Turning upon them suddenly the star delivered the following speech, with an icy sweetness that brought immediate obedience:

"Don't be frightened, ladies! Look frightened! and act frightened! but don't be frightened!"

The introduction of this reminiscence is prompted by the thought that every device born of man's intellect has its reverse side, and although the actors in a photoplay can never alter their work to the slightest degree, once the magic of the camera has been assembled, there must come times when a director, watching a public showing of one of his pictures, greatly regrets he cannot follow the example of his brother of the spoken stage and infuse new life into the scene before him by a few emphatic words to the members of the cast.

The screen actor has no opportunity to round out and mellow a characterization by playing it for an entire season, and must create his effects with a comparatively small number of rehearsals and without the spur of public indorsement and applause. Were it not for the wonderful way the camera intensifies his efforts, it would be impossible for him to achieve the desired result with such limited preparation and lack of incentive. The hush that surrounds the actor on the stage is seldom present in the studio. Hammer and saw, the spluttering of the Cooper Hewitt lights, the shuffling of feet, the tongues of men waging a war of words, these contribute the usual "incidental music" to his scenes, not to mention the voice of the director keeping up an almost continual fire of advice, entreaty and command. Under such conditions, the marvel is not that certain scenes sometimes fall below the mark, but that the desired standard is so frequently reached.

The stories told of the great men and women of the older form of the drama and also of the famous musical artists of the past; of how one should never say he knew them at their best unless he had witnessed, or listened to, the same effort several times, can never be repeated in the case of the mummer of the screen. He or she must stand by what, so far as the public is concerned, is a single attempt to impersonate a character, a fact that restricts the number of actors who make a success on the silent stage, and prevents a failure from being whipped into shape after the picture has once been placed on exhibition.

Anyone who has occupied a position which permitted him to watch an actor of the first rank perform the same part, or round of parts, during a season on the spoken stage, is aware that really great artists are very uneven in their work. They never fall below a certain artistic level and their poorest performances are illuminated by flawless technic and the authority of their past reputations; but there arise occasions when their physical and mental being is in such perfect unison with the character they are portraying that they are touched by the divine light of genius and carry the audience to unexpected heights of enjoyment.

The finest actor this country ever knew, the most spiritual and incomparably the greatest player of tragedy, was extremely susceptible to this rule. He did not always give a true taste of his quality at the beginning of a performance, and frequently let half the play go by without putting his whole soul into his task. Presently, as he approached some big scene, he would seem to take fire, as one of his admirers expressed it, and the audience would be treated to a display of histrionic pyrotechnics that filled everyone with awe and admiration.

Again, when some special event influenced him strongly, he would sound the keynote of what was to rank among his great nights with the first word he uttered and move on to the final curtain with steadily mounting passion and power. Every psychologic aid was given to his performance: the rapt attention of a large body of spectators, the absence of every distracting element, and the long sweep of the acts that permitted him to "warm to his work" and build up to a climatic intensity that repeated practice had taught him to reach by the surest and most compelling method. No restriction of tempos, the laws of perspective, or time limit, as to scenes, prevented him from the fullest expression of his mood at any and all stages of the play. Small wonder his mind was "so nimble and so full of subtle flame" that he held the audence entranced!

The process by which the stars of the screen reach their noblest moments has none of this atmosphere of artistic finality, the ease that comes from playing a part that has had the seal of general approval placed upon it, not once, but many times. Their impersonations are always in a formative state, and absolute assurance that they have accomplished just the effect they aimed at is never theirs until after the time for alteration is past. The paying public is the court of last appeal for the moving picture actor, in common with all other entertainers, and there is never an opportunity to profit by the verdict of the public, so far as a completed picture is concerned.

These conditions indicate something of how exacting and difficult an art screen acting is; also the amount of care and thought that must be given to the production of a photoplay. That the art is mastered, and thoroughly mastered, by the leaders of the silent drama, the screen is continually furnishing eloquent and incontrovertible proof.

Off the Reel

By Sam Spedon.

No Place for Ananias.

NOW that exhibitors have called attention to the waste of the producers and some of the producers have pointed out the waste attributable to the exhibitors, both are due for a noticeable increase in profits and an appreciable decrease in losses. When people get to talking "right out in meetin'" somebody is going to tell the truth. We like that expression of Mr. Laemmle's, "The time for mealy mouthed compliments and pussyfoot praise of all things and all persons connected with the moving picture industry should cease." Don't you love that? When we all believe this doctrine Ananias will have to steer clear of the motion picture industry. We will then have the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth. No more subterfuged publicity, superlative advertising, camouflaged reviews, padded subscription lists and straddling editorials. We are all strong for the truth stuff if we can prove an alibi.

All One and the Same.

Every day we are getting closer to truth and sincerity. Everybody worth while seems to realize that the producers and exhibitors, indeed every branch of the industry, in co-operative and it is only through the united efforts of the whole that desired results can be reached. No one branch is sufficient in itself. It is only by getting together, dealing squarely and fairly with each other that the industry can be brought to that much talked of basis of business principles and the honest establishment of it.

"Efficiency" a Disease.

An old lady whose husband had been taken to a hospital for an operation, called every day to find out how he was getting along. She received the same answer: "A decided improvement." Finally she called and was informed that her husband was dead. A neighbor asked her what he died of and she replied: "improvements."

"Efficiency! what great crimes have been committed in thy name." Efficiency has been the cause of an epidemic in many industrial institutions. It has become a disease in the motion picture industry. Most of the efficiency done by so-called "efficiency experts" is done on paper and not in actual results. It is largely theoretical and not practical. Many an efficient hard working employee has been supplanted by an "efficiency quack," who squandered money to experiment with his own ideas at the expense of the concern which employs him. At one half of the outlay the old employee, with practical knowledge, could have instituted the necessary system and improvements if he were given half a chance and the confidence and trust of his employers.

We believe that fifty per cent. of the present waste could be eliminated from distribution, if there were less correspondence school "sales talks" and more practical salesmanship displayed. The elimination of managers plenipotentiaries, sub-managers, and secretaries, subsecretaries and so on ad-infinitum would help to conserve. By giving the more useful employees an occasional audience, a little monetary recognition with a little more initiative and canning a few of the ornamental "posers" there might be a whole lot more of efficiency developed and accomplished.

Wouldn't Know the Old Place Now.

A friend of ours who has been interested in the industry since its very infancy gave us a surprise the other day, by saying: "I attended the state convention of the Exhibitors' League at the Hotel Astor. Do you know it was a very nice affair? It was well conducted and most business like all the way through." O yes! we said, the exhibitors are doing things in good shape nowadays. "You know," said he, "I haven't attended any of the exhibitors' conventions of late years and I must say this one was attended by a representative body of men. The personnel has greatly changed within the past four or five years."

We were glad to hear this gentleman's opinion. He is only one of a great many who sit at their desks and do not get out among their constituents. When we say a great many, this includes some exhibitors who stand aloof from their fellow exhibitors and encourage themselves in a feeling of false superiority. If these self-satisfied individuals would get out and mix a little with the other half, they would have different ideas and broaden considerably. They would get infused and enthused with the spirit of get together and the co-operative strength of united action, of doing things for the good of the industry and welfare of all.

Gestures—Empty and Otherwise

By Robert C. McElravy.

THE casual attendant at moving picture entertainments is apt to come away with the impression that about all the screen performer has to do is to "pose." It may readily be admitted that in a great number of instances this is only too true.

But the impression of the casual observer is after all not to be trusted on the whole. Moving pictures are like olives—they must be tried out frequently before the actual taste for them is acquired. One may be aware of a certain spicy tang the first time, the mental palate is piqued and the gastric juices of the cerebrum are set in motion. But unless the observer has been fortunate in encountering a first class production he is not apt to be stirred out of his prejudices. He is conscious only of the picture's shortcomings, and the olive is set down as a bitter thing.

False gestures were for a long time the prevailing fault of screen actors. They ran the gamut of overacting in their efforts to thrill and astound. It is only within the last two or three years, generally speaking, that we have come into a better understanding of restraint and repose before the camera, to know, in fact, that there is more power in repression than in wild and meaningless excess motion. Having learned this truth, which probably came about with the "close-up," many producers went to the other extreme. Posing had its day, and still has it too frequently at times. This method, pushed to an extreme, is just as ineffective as the other, although perhaps not so glaringly offensive. A prolonged and inane pose is in itself an unfortunate gesture.

Screen performers are not only ones who have been bothered with the problem of how and when the gesture may be made most effective. It has been the bane of actors from the infancy of the stage. There comes down, in this connection, an interesting story of one of Voltaire's pupils. She was given to violent gesteuring and in order to restrain this tendency on her part Voltaire ordered her hands tied. The actress recited her lines in a quiet, admirable way, until she finally became overwrought at a certain place. She then threw up her hands and broke the binding cords. She was at once repentant, but Voltaire assured her that she had done no harm, telling her that her gesture had been a proper one because it was irrespressible.

This story is cited by George Henry Lewes in his book on "The Art of Acting," and the author makes the following comment: "If actors will study fine models they will learn that gestures, to be effective, must be significant, and to be significant they must be rare. To stand still on the stage (and not appear a guy) is one of of the elementary difficulties of the art—and one which is rarely mastered."

Curiously enough, screen performers are perhaps not so greatly troubled with false gestures as are actors of the vocal stage. They have a director over them to guard against this very thing. Neither are they carried away by spoken words, which have a strange tendency to stimulate unnecessary movements.

It is a fact perhaps worth noting that there is a certain analogy between the best screen acting and the acting of what we now term the "old school' of the legitimate stage. The writer was struck by this similarity not long since in watching the veteran actor, Frederick Warde, in a film subject. His movements were filled with a grace and ease which had come down with him through years of distinguished acting on the legitimate stage. It may be doubted if he had to greatly alter the practice of years in getting screen tempo. He gave every moment of his performance its just proportion of time; extracting full dramatic effect from every situation, making every gesture count, and in one memorable instance bringing out the entire climax of one scene by facial expression alone.

It would seem from this that acting before the camera has much in common with that of the old days when those who are fond of reminiscence tell us "acting was acting." If this is the case, young modern actors on the legitimate stage should not look too contemptuously upon some of the methods now in vogue in moving picture studios.

Sunday Opening and Prejudice

By Sam Spedon.

THE opposition to the Sunday showing of motion pictures by "conscientious objectors" is so deep rooted that it goes far beyond prejudice and almost amounts to bigotry or excessive zeal. Pictures are being used in some churches as an aid to the moral enlightenment and uplift of their congregation, or to impress a lesson in connection with a sermon. And yet if these same pictures are shown in a theater the "conscientious objectors" invoke the law and threaten imprisonment or the revocation of the theater's license to exist.

In North Dakota, according to the Bismark Tribune, "conscientious objectors" refused to serve on a committee or sanction the showing of patriotic pictures on Sunday because there was a state law against Sunday opening. H. Lord of Cando was one of the objectors and Attorney General William S. Langer ordered the sheriff of state to prevent the Sunday showing of these pictures and seize the projecting machines, notwithstanding the showings were to be made under the auspices of the North Dakota Council of Defense. Even Governor Fritzier made a demand on Washington that they be stopped. F. O. Hellstrom, secretary of North Dakota State Council of Defense, is going on with the showings, with the sanction of the authorities of Washington and the support of the people of North Dakota. This is an instance of to what extremes some person's prejudices will carry their objections and we must always be ready to meet them. Every one of them is a boost.

Realizing that the objection to Sunday opening is, in most instances, the objection of a few in opposition to the many, a bill has been introduced in New York State legislature, making Sunday opening a matter of local option and a question to be decided by the majority of the people in each community or municipality instead of a state wide proposition.

Motion pictures are the universal language and they speak from the theater screens to millions every day and to many more on Sunday. They are being used by the Government in propaganda for universal peace and democracy, regardless of creed and nationality. Therefore, at this trying period neither time or place should deter our efforts to win and we believe the better the day the better the deed. If it is so ordered, the theaters are willing to confine themselves to pictures of a patriotic and educational nature. Knowing that the results accomplished and the revenue to the Government will greatly enhance the fund necessary for victory and peace.

Exhibitors Strong for Liberty Loan

Reports from Various Cities Give Assurance of Full Co-operation with Government by Picture Theater Managers—Chicago Producers Write Strong Indorsements—Secretary McAdoo Says "Organized and Thoroughly Systematic Effort Must Be Made."

SO WIDESPREAD, so generous and enthusiastic has been the response during the past week to the MOVING PICTURE WORLD'S plan for boosting the third Liberty Loan that it would seem as though its success was assured. How could it be otherwise? Here is one of the greatest patriotic movements that has ever been put up to the people of the United States—the raising of money to sustain our great army of fighters in France and upon the seas. It is our fight for liberty and justice and the sacred principles of democracy, principles for which our great republic has always stood. Those principles have been assailed by a merciless, remorseless military power which has shown this world that it will stop at nothing which its devilish ingenuity can invent to gain its unholy desires. To prevent such a catastrophe we have called upon the best of our young men to face the enemy in the trenches and to man the guns of our warships, so now it is up to us to back them up with our sympathy and our dollars—especially our dollars.

The purpose of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD'S appeal to the exhibitors is to arouse them to the supreme effort that will be needed to meet this demand. It will require a strong and concerted effort to secure the sum necessary to meet the ever-mounting cost of war. There is no other way of arousing the people that is quite so good as the moving picture way, through the agency of the moving picture theater, and the power the moving picture theater can exert is greatly augmented by concerted action. Much has been done by exhibitors for previous loans, but it was done in a hit and miss way; this time we want to put our united power back of the loan drive.

In addressing the various organizations of the country Secretary McAdoo says:

> To make this Loan the desired success, organized and thoroughly systematized efforts must be made. Therefore, the enlistment of all organized bodies in the coming campaign for the third Liberty Loan is of the utmost importance. I earnestly hope that the Government will receive this co-operation in unstinted measure.
> W. G. McADOO, Secretary of the Treasury.

There is the keynote: "Thoroughly systematized efforts must be made." That is why the MOVING PICTURE WORLD has made its appeal to you. Yet the exhibitors in every city and town get together and lay out their work so that the drive can be made as strong as team work can make it. Begin to make your plans now.

Widespread Approval of World Plan

MUTUAL FILM CORPORATION IS BUSY.

Chicago, March 13, 1918.

Editor, The Moving Picture World,
New York City.

Dear Sir—I desire to express to you my sincere appreciation and that of the Mutual Film Corporation and allied organizations of The Moving Picture World's "Liberty Loan Night" movement, in support of the campaign for the floating of the Third Liberty Loan.

It is characteristic of the enterprise of your institution and an honor to the motion picture industry of which your publishing house is a part.

Incidentally, perhaps, you may be interested to know of the activities of the Mutual Film Corporation in behalf of the new Liberty Loan.

Probably the most effective of our moves in bringing the loan to public attention in the light of patriotic obligation is our campaign for presentation of the matter in the Screen Telegram, our twice-a-week news reel, which is seen by many million persons every week. This constitutes one of the greatest publicity mediums and is always available to the purposes of the Government and the Nation.

A systematically designed series of special propaganda inserts on the Third Liberty Loan will be carried in the Screen Telegram throughout the campaign.

Special instructions have gone forward to the managers of the Mutual Film exchanges in all parts of the United States, directing their attention to the movement as presented in The Moving Picture World and calling upon them to enlist the cooperation of our exhibitor-customers in putting the Third Liberty Loan before the public.

We have issued other instructions concerning subscribing for bonds on the part of various department heads and employees. All of our many branch managers are also under instructions to get in touch with the local Liberty Loan officials in each city and work out cooperative promotional ideas of special application to the local situation.

This patriotic opportunity is also an opportunity for the demonstration of the effectiveness of the motion picture and the picture industry as an arm of the Government.

Yours faithfully,
JOHN R. FIENLER,
President, Mutual Film Corporation.

AMERICAN FILM CO. DOES ITS "BIT."

Chicago, March 13, 1918.

Editor, Moving Picture World.

Dear Sir—Your stirring editorial of March 9, wherein you directed the serious attention of film men to the necessity of a concerted effort to promote the Third Liberty Loan and in which you suggested a specific manner whereby we could bring to the Loan the properly directed and combined power of the entire organization force of the film industry by a special "Liberty Loan Night," has won the undivided approval and the active interest not alone of myself, but of the entire American Film force as well.

To my mind, your idea is of lasting and inestimable value. While the American Film Company, like its confreres, has stood steadily and unflinchingly for our Government in this war crisis, we are ready to do more. I see in this movement a valuable method of arousing a patriotic response in the public that will convince it of the essential need of coming forward generously and promptly for this third loan.

It may interest you to know that while instruction for cooperation was at once sent to our studios at Santa Barbara our screen stars and the general staff there needed no incentive to fulfill this patriotic duty and they are already actively at work to arouse interest in your plan. Mary Miles Minter, who not only purchased large amounts of the first and second issues of the Liberty Bonds, but who was instrumental through her personal efforts in the sale of many thousands of them, has announced that she is ready once more to offer her services and her money in the interests of the Third Loan. Margarita Fisher, another of our screen stars, joins in this determination and has been planning on the production of a special patriotic picture for the purpose. We feel sure that William Russell, of the William Russell Productions Company, will be heart and soul with us in our united efforts to assist in making an unqualified success of the Liberty Loan Night.

The Moving Picture World is to be congratulated on its plan for this movement to liberally and cheerfully support the Government in the coming drive for the Third Liberty Loan. Our men in France who are so courageously facing an enemy fire in France rely upon us. We must not fail them. It is a duty to supply them not only with funds, but with the stimulus that comes to them with the knowledge that we stand behind them as a solid line.

The American Film Company, during the Second Liberty Loan drive, made every effort to encourage the buying of Liberty Bonds among its employees. We perfected a plan by which any employee was enabled to purchase bonds and pay for them, through our office, on a weekly installment basis. We propose to do the same for the Third Loan.

I most heartily endorse your patriotic plan of arousing public interest in the Loan, and with the same spirit we wish to line up with all interests who stand as one united force behind our Government in its determination to preserve for its citizens a constitution and a democracy that has successfully withstood every onslaught on its foundation and its sincerity since its inception.

Yours very truly,
S. S. HUTCHINSON,
President, American Film Company, Inc.

ESSANAY ENTHUSIASTICALLY IN ACCORD.

Chicago, Ill., March 12, 1918.

Editor, Moving Picture World,
New York City, N. Y.

Gentlemen—I am enthusiastically in accord with your plan of a nation-wide drive for a Liberty Loan Night by the exhibitors and film makers in the United States, and will use every possible opportunity, within my province, to contribute everything I can to help bring the tremendous result that the superb effort of the Moving Picture World will bring about. Let no one in the motion picture industry overlook even the smallest endeavor to aid the momentous cause.

Very truly yours,
GEO. K. SPOOR,
President, Essanay.

BRUNET APPROVES THE PLAN.

Paul Brunet, vice president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., when approached by a representative of the Moving Picture World and asked for his opinion as to the plan for a Liberty World Night, said:

Most assuredly I approve of the plan. The good which can be accomplished by having the tremendous power of the screen concentrated upon the Liberty Loan upon that day cannot be calculated. I have thought that could the tangible evidence be placed before the Government officials of what the news weeklies like the Hearst-Pathe News accomplished during the last two Loan campaigns, in the way of creating and moulding public opinion, they would be amazed at its extent and value. I believe that the increased sales of bonds for several days after the Liberty Loan Day will prove to the Government once and for all that the power of the screen is second to none today, and that when the screen speaks for this great and patriotic object its voice will be heard to the uttermost corners of the land.

The World is to be congratulated upon its idea and the way it is developing it. And I, realizing how necessary to victory is the money brought in by these Liberty Loans, assure the World of my hearty approval.

BUFFALO EXHIBITORS ON THE JOB.

"We are in hearty accord with the timely suggestion of The Moving Picture World that the exhibitors celebrate a rousing 'Liberty Loan Night,'" said E. O. Weinberg, manager of the Elmwood moving picture theater, Buffalo. "We are already planning such a night, and while it is rather early to give details, you can rest assured that our drive will be worth while and will arouse the enthusiasm of our patrons to do their bit in this great campaign. We will probably have a tableau on the stage depicting Miss Columbia and other patriotic characters. It will not be difficult to get the loyal young women and children among our patrons to take part in this display. Red-blooded soldiers and sailors stationed in Buffalo or on furlough will probably take part, and it is needless to say that they will add realism to the scene. Nothing will be lacking in the way of special scenery and lighting effects. The Elmwood orchestra is already arranging for a patriotic programme that will give life and enthusiasm to the celebration. Speeches with a punch will be given by the four-minute men and there will be slides urging patrons to buy bonds. We hope to show a picture authorized by the United States Government. Loyalty could not remain dormant very long where this picture is shown. There will be a large patriotic banner across the front of the theater. At the Elmwood there will be a permanent agency where Thrift Stamps will be sold. All our employees bought Liberty bonds in the last campaigns and will be encouraged to subscribe in the coming one."

"We will make a week of it," said Harold B. Franklin, manager of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, when asked how that house would participate in the Liberty Loan campaign. "Our first celebration will be on April 6. We are working on the design and will give details later. Liberty bonds will be sold in a special booth in the front of the house."

A locomotive is depicted on the stage of the Hippodrome this week. The scene is remarkably realistic and the scenic and lighting effects are superb. Uncle Sam is shown at the throttle. The appropriate title is "Uncle Sam Driving to Victory."

LOUISVILLE EXHIBITORS WILL DO THEIR PART.

In connection with plans relative to supporting the next Liberty Loan campaign, through decorating the theaters, arranging for the four-minute men to deliver talks, etc., the Louisville, Ky., exhibitors are willing to do their part, and have announced their intention of aiding the Government in every way possible. This has been done in the past, and a number of the leading houses have gone considerably out of their way and done things to aid National causes that they wouldn't do for anyone else, not even for real money.

For instance, the Alamo theater of Louisville will not run even a short advertising film of any kind at any price. The set policy of the house is to refrain from boring patrons. A few slides are run at each performance, but when the machines begin to shoot film the film is of general interest and is not cut off at the end of thirty or forty feet, with the conclusion of the ad. This house belieevs that its patrons come to the house to be amused, to forget their troubles, not to worry with a lot of advertising, etc. However, film of any sort, slides, talks, and in fact anything bearing on the patriotic movements that may be of aid to the Government is freely and willingly shown.

As to getting in line for the next Liberty Loan campaign, showing special war pictures, selling Thrift Stamps, etc., the local theaters are willing to do their part, no matter what it is. Fred Dolle of the Louisville Exhibitors' League stated that all of the houses of the Broadway Amusement Enterprises would carry out this policy, and he felt sure that every theater in the city would do the same thing. L. J. Dittmar, head of the Majestic Amusement Company, stated that he was willing to aid the Government in any way possible, and that the houses of Louisville had done so, and were willing to go to any extreme. The same thing applies to the Strand and other Keith houses. Mr. Dolle stated that he figured that The World had undertaken a good proposition and he felt certain that exhibitors would be glad to fall in line on this plan.

TEXAS EXHIBITORS STRONG FOR IT.

"Liberty Loan Night," as suggested in The Moving Picture World editorial in the issue of March 9, has met with instant approval by Texas exhibitors. Many of them will accept The Moving Picture World suggestion and carry out "Liberty Loan Nights" throughout the coming campaign for the third loan. A number of Texas exhibitors in Dallas during the past week asked if they had noted the editorial, declared they had and heartily endorsed the suggestion. Manager J. B. Duggar of the Dallas Vitagraph branch has even gone so far as write leters to a number of the live managers on his list, calling attention to the plan. Among those who have endorsed it are L. M. Rideout of the Star theater, Denison; Charles Kimball of the Pope theater, McKinney, and J. C. Chatmas of the Majestic, Marlin. The latter is looking for lively times soon, with the coming to the Texas resort of the New York Nationals, under "Jawn" McGraw, for their annual spring training.

PORTLAND FILM MEN IN LOAN DRIVE.

The film industry in the Rose City (Portland, Ore.) will be represented in the next Liberty Loan Drive. A committee on films and amusements headed by Gus Metzger, as chairman, met March 8 to lay plans for soliciting the industry in Portland. Members of this committee are W. W. Ely, Hippodrome; J. J. Parker, Majestic; E. J. Myrick, Liberty; C. M. Hill, Paramount Exchange; M. J. McGettigan, Orpheum theater; J. A. Johnson, Pantages theater, and J. C. Stille, Peoples' theater.

FIRST NATIONAL EXHIBITORS' CIRCUIT TO THE UTMOST.

New York, March 6, 1918.

Editor, Moving Picture World,
New York.

Dear Sir: Your suggestion that the first anniversary of America's entry into the World War be commemorated by the motion picture exhibitors of this country with a Liberty Loan Night is the kind of suggestion that will create enthusiasm and give the practical results that our Government needs in these tremendous times.

You can take it as a foregone conclusion that every franchise holder in the First National Exhibitors' Circuit will not do "his bit," but his utmost to start the big drive off in a way that befits the fifth industry of the United States.

If individual film stars have in previous Liberty Loan campaigns raised as much as $1,000,000 for the Government, I believe that the exhibitors of the country, pulling together with all the energy and brains at their command, can sweep a golden harvest into the coffers of the big cash box at Washington that will create a jingle audible in the council chambers of Berlin.

The First National was founded to vindicate the principle of cooperation. Here is a chance for exhibitors as a class to show what cooperation in the very fullest sense can accomplish.

More power to the man who first suggested this big, constructive idea!

Yours very truly,
THE FIRST NATIONAL EXHIBITORS' CIRCUIT, Inc.
J. D. Williams, Manager.

BUHLER SAYS SUGGESTION IS "GOOD ONE."

Philadelphia, March 7, 1918.

The Moving Picture World,
New York City, N. Y.

Gentlemen: The editorial in The Moving Picture World calling exhibitors' attention to the advent of another Liberty Loan is a timely patriotic suggestion.

I am sub-chairman of the Motion Picture Committee of the Third Federal Reserve District, covering all territory in Pennsylvania east of Altoona, all New Jersey south of Trenton and the entire State of Delaware.

Your suggestion for a Liberty Loan Night is a good one—would it not be well to make this a simultaneous drive throughout the country?

Will you be kind enough to give me further information regarding same. With kindest personal wishes, I am,

Very truly your,
FRANK W. BUHLER.

EAMES SPEAKS FOR BARRE'S PARK THEATER.

Barre, Vermont, March 8, 1918.

Moving Picture World,
New York City.

Gentlemen: I will gladly assist in every way your idea of a Liberty Loan Night and believe that no quicker way of spreading propaganda can be secured than by the cooperation of all motion picture theaters.

We who are complaining of heavy taxes should more quickly lift this burden from our shoulders by assisting in every way the sale of Liberty bonds, for with our financial support the boys "over there" will soon be "back here" with the Kaiser's goat.

Truly yours,
J. B. EAMES.

CHICAGO LEAGUE IN LINE.

The executive committee of Chicago Local, Illinois Branch, M. P. E. L. of A., met Tuesday, March 12, at headquarters and passed the following resolution regarding the patriotic observance of April 6 as Liberty Loan Night:

"We, the executive committee of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Chicago, endorse having Liberty Loan Night in motion picture theaters as suggested by the Moving Picture World, and we urge all exhibitors to set aside April 6 as such day, thus commemorating the anniversary of the entrance of the U. S. A. into the war for universal liberty."

On the committee are: Alfred Hamburger, George D. Hopkinson, John Frundt, William D. Burford, John Bobeng, Harry C. Miller and Robert R. Levy.

"Dear Sir—The thought of the Moving Picture World on Liberty Loan Night, for April 6, is, in my opinion, a patriotic inspiration, made so by the loftiness of the idea.

"It is both fitting and expedient for the thousands of moving picture theater owners throughout the United States that they should simultaneously give a ringing expression of their devotedness to our country and its righteous cause.

"Personally I have not yet learned of an exhibitor in our Chicago organization who is not with the Government in our fight for world democracy and right; but if there be any such exhibitors the demonstration set for April 6 will discover them. Such men should not only be driven from the business; they should be interned, just the same as alien enemies of the country.

"My services are at your command in this matter.

"JOSEPH HOPP,

"President Chicago Local, Illinois Branch, M. P. E. L. of A."

Mr. Hopp is a member of the National Security League, Chicago division; a member of the executive committee of "Four-Minute Men," Illinois, and his only son enlisted in the U. S. navy, of which he is now a first-class petty officer.

CINCINNATI THEATERS BOOST.

Cincinnati theaters are probably doing as much to help along the war as any in the country, and more than most, judging by a tour of the downtown theaters, in connection with the idea of having a special drive on their part to stimulate interest in the forthcoming Liberty Loan. It developed that every house is giving whatever time is needed at each performance to a "Four-Minute" man, who, as a rule, is a ten-minute man. Not a single manager grudges this time, however, in spite of the fact that it is usually as good as money, and means a loss if people are kept waiting outside. Slides urging co-operation in the various war work, and in the conservation measures desired by the Government, are also run at all of the theaters. Patriotic music is played frequently, and at least one playing of the national anthem at each performance is the rule, the audience standing; while the display of a moving picture of the flag is also usual, never failing to excite cheers and applause. When it is considered that most houses also run news pictures, most of which show military scenes or others of patriotic interest, and that many of the current releases have a direct bearing on the war, it can be seen that the moving picture houses are doing everything in their power, without reference to any particular occasion, to help win the war.

HAROLD LLOYD VISITS NEW YORK.

Harold Lloyd, star of the Pathe Rolin comedies which bear his name, made a flying trip to New York last week, arriving Tuesday and leaving Sunday. He was present on Wednesday night at the dinner given to Paul Brunet, vice president and general manager of Pathe. On Friday a small luncheon was given for him at Keen's Chop House, when a number of representatives of trade papers were present. After lunch the party proceeded to the Pathe projection room and saw "It's a Wild Life," one of Lloyd's newest comedies.

The opinion of the members of the Pathe organization and of those present at the private showing is that "It's a Wild Life" is one of the best pictures that Mr. Lloyd has ever done. The comedy deals with the fast-moving events at a popular cafe, where Harold, the Baron de Muss and the Duke of Appricot, all on the trail of the same girl, furnish the lively action, and numerous complications follow.

Concerning young Lloyd, one of the best critics in the motion picture field wrote the other day: "Lloyd may have peers in his line, but as a consistent comedian he has no superiors."

New York to Fight for Legal Sunday Shows

Motion Picture Men Meet at Albany to Further Local Option Measure Granting 2 O'Clock Opening

Albany, March 14.

THE opening gun in motion picture legislation at the present session is being fired at the State capitol this week, with the introduction of a bill, which, if passed, legalizes motion picture shows on Sundays after 2 o'clock in all cities and villages of New York State except where a governing municipal body has adopted an ordinance which forbids such exhibitions on the Sabbath. In addition, Senator James Walker's bill relating to operators in this State was made a special order of business for March 11. Within the next three weeks the motion picture industry will probably assume considerable importance before both the Senate and the Assembly.

According to prominent legislators, there will be no attempt this year to introduce either a censorship bill or a bill attempting to exact a tax, such as was the case last year, when two similar bills commanded statewide attention before they went down to defeat. The fact that the nation is at war and that this is a gubernatorial year is said to be reasons sufficient for the elimination of both.

With the Legislature slated to adjourn the second week in April, and with a number of bills of almost national import demanding the attention of both houses, it is regarded as being doubtful if any great attempt is to be made to tamper with the motion picture industry in its present condition.

Just how far the move towards legalizing Sunday motion picture shows in this State will get must remain a question for several days. Assemblymen claim today that the bill is one that has been poorly drawn. The bill itself is intended to amend the penal law and reads as follows:

"'Section 1. The penal law is hereby amended by adding at the end of article one hundred and ninety-two a new section to be section twenty-one hundred and fifty-four, and to read as follows:

"2154. Motion picture exhibition on the first day of the week. Notwithstanding the provisions of this article, or any other general or local act, it shall not be unlawful to exhibit motion pictures on the first day of the week after 2 o'clock in the afternoon, in a city or village, if an ordinance shall not have been adopted by the common council or other legislative governing body of the city or village prohibiting such exhibitions on such day and after such hour; and the adoption of such an ordinance is hereby authorized."

It is intended that the act, if passed, shall take effect immediately. Around the legislative corridors there appeared today to be a lack of any definite information as to exactly who was behind the bill, assemblymen referring to the backers as "the crowd from New York." In the bill drafting committee room it was admitted that the bill had been drafted there, but further information was not forthcoming. Assemblyman Clarence Welsh admitted that he had been requested to introduce the bill, but had refused. He did not explain his reason. It was also said that Senator Henry Walters of Syracuse, who was more or less mixed up with the Wheeler bill a year ago, would probably sponsor it once it reached the Senate.

The Walker bill amends the general city law by providing that applications for motion picture operators' licenses must be accompanied by an affidavit of a licensed operator showing that the applicant has served as assistant for not less than six months. Permits must be obtained from the license authority to act as such assistant and the assistant may not himself operate a machine. Anyone who has operated a machine for not less than six months may present his own affidavit. The licensing authority may require corroboration of affidavits.

So far as the legalizing of Sunday pictures in this State is concerned it seems reasonable at the present time to expect that upstate members of the Legislature will be governed much as they were a year ago, when they were flooded with letters and telegrams from constituents in smaller communities who protested long and loud against the establishment of what they termed a "Continental Sunday." While the city of Albany does not permit motion picture houses running on Sunday many Senators and Assemblymen hie themselves each Sabbath to the neighboring city of Troy, where the houses play to a business that taxes their capacity, and to which Albany contributes to a large extent.

Local Option Bill Has Good Chance.

"Any bill having for its purpose the legalizing of Sunday motion picture shows throughout this State after 2 o'clock, or, in fact, after any hour on the Sabbath day, will be buried so deep in committee that it will never see daylight. But if the bill is framed so that the Sunday motion picture proposition is made a matter of local referendum, it will be another thing." Such was the comment in this city today, five minutes after a lengthy meeting of the Allied Motion Picture Committee of the State, held for the purpose of perfecting an organization to back a bill which will be introduced in the Legislature next week, by a State Senator of such prominence that his name has been heard frequently mentioned as a possible successor of Governor Charles S. Whitman. The Senator hails from an upstate community, is a resident of a village, and represents a large following residing both in city and suburban localities. A year ago this same Senator strongly opposed the Sunday movie bill which was introduced in the Senate and which brought forth one of the biggest fights of the year.

A clever method of procedure towards securing the support of the senators and assemblymen of this State in the hopes of passing what will be known as the "Motion Picture Option Bill" was decided on at a meeting at the Hotel Ten Eyck in this city today of forty or more members of the Allied Motion Picture Committee of New York State and others. During the next few days, as the result of today's meeting, every legislator will be personally visited by a motion picture exhibitor who will carefully explain the meaning of the present campaign and what the desired end will mean to the populace, the industry and to the Government, for it is asserted that Sunday motion picture shows in this State will net additional war taxes of a half million dollars or more a year.

New York City and the capitol district were particularly well represented at the meeting. Frederick H. Elliott, secretary of the Allied Committee and executive secretary of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, with Attorney J. Robert Rubin of the Metro Pictures Corporation, arrived in town a day in advance of the meeting and went over the ground carefully. The New York delegation arrived at noon. A luncheon preceded the meeting, both being held on the mezzanine floor of the hotel. John Manheimer, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of New York City, presided at the meeting, which lasted for a full three hours or more.

Exhibitors to Confer With Legislators.

Considerable time was devoted to a discussion as to the best methods of procedure. It was finally decided to perfect an organization which would represent fifty-one units, the number of senatorial districts in this State, with the understanding that a prominent exhibitor in each of those districts would confer with his senate representative in the immediate future. This exhibitor in turn was empowered to select three fellow-exhibitors from his district to meet the assemblymen, the whole line of thought being to reach each legislator as quickly as possible and to explain in an intelligent way exactly what was desired by the organization of motion picture interests.

There was some talk as to the advisability of extreme publicity in the matter, one of those present presenting the opinion that the whole situation should be handled without any great amount of publicity, but this idea was quickly and practically unanimously dispelled by the statement that civic organizations throughout the State stood ready to back the bill, that there were many ministers who would come out openly in favor of the bill so long as motion picture houses were not permitted to open until 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

It was decided not to refer to the bill as the "Sunday Open Movie Bill," but that it would be hereafter known as the "Motion Picture Option Bill." The bill itself will be introduced in the Senate by Alfred J. Gilchrist of Brooklyn and in the Assembly by George Blakely of Yonkers. There will be another meeting of the committee in this city next Tuesday afternoon at 3 o'clock, at which time it is expected that others, who were necessarily absent from today's session, will be able to attend.

Among those present today were William Brandt, Brook-

Springs; John J. Walker, Schenectady; Sidney Cohen, New York; G. E. Manserch, Schenectady; S. Suckno, Albany; Charles O'Reilly, New York; S. J. Berman, Brooklyn; W. A. Zeiser, Schenectady; W. H. Gray, Schenectady; William Fait, Jr., Utica; W. H. Linton, Little Falls; Fred Elliott, Albany; Max Spiegel.

The exhibitor-captains named for the Senatorial districts are: 1, Mrs. Jennie Reitmeyer; 2, William Bigall; 3, Rudolph Sanders; 4, William Brandt; 5, 6, William Hilkemeier; 8, Sam Berman; 9, Louis L. Levine; 10, Samuel Lesselbaum; 11, David Weinstock; 12, Charles Steiner; 13, A. Fanchie; 14, John Manheimer; 15, Max Spiegel; 16, 17, Charles L. O'Reilly; 18, A. J. Wolff; 19, Sydney S. Cohen; 20, Sidney Ascher; 21, John Wittman; 22, Henry Cole; 23, Charles Moses; 24, B. L. Feinblatt; 25, George Cohen, Newburgh; 26, Frederick H. Elliott; 27, Sidney A. Huffman, Saugerties; 28, Samuel Suckno; 29, Frank Barheit; 30, Allan Beckett; 31, W. A. Zeiser and Charles G. McDonald; 32, Ben Young, Ilion; 33, Lou Bittner; 34, A. S. Hardy, Malone; 35, Fred Gilroy, Ogdensburg; 36, W. H. Linton and Charles Fait, Jr.; 38, Emmett Cornell; 39, David Cohen; 40, Edward Morgan, Auburn; 41, William Dillon, Ithaca; 42, 43, 45, 46, W. C. Hubbard, Rochester; 44, Arthur Smith, Hornell; 47, Charles Hayman; 48, 49, 50, H. B. Franklin; 51, Woods and Peterson.

Brooklyn Civic Associations Favor Bill

THE Associated Civic Associations of Brooklyn have placed themselves on record as heartily favoring motion picture exhibitions on Sunday, indorsing and upholding the proposed bill, which is about to be introduced into the State Legislature and which will amend the State's penal laws regarding pictures.

The meeting, one of the most enthusiastic ever held by the organization, took place in the headquarters rooms at 1 Greene avenue, Brooklyn, and was attended by about 300 members. The Sunday motion picture resolution was presented and unanimously carried by a rising vote. The action of the Associated Civic Associations is particularly significant, since it expresses the public opinion of Brooklyn. The organization represents over 100,000 taxpayers.

Louis L. Levine and Dr. Edward J. Megarr were appointed a committee of two to represent the association in furtherance of the resolution.

4,000 Sign Sunday Show Petition

Citizens of Birmingham, Ala., Register Protest Against Blue Laws—Largest List in Local History.

A MAMMOTH petition signed by 4,000 voters to be presented to the Birmingham, Ala., city commission calling for permission to operate moving picture shows on Sunday has been drawn up ready for presentation. Never before in the history of the city has there been such a large number of signatures on any one subject, indicating that there is a great following among the advocates for Sunday pictures.

Upon request of citizens who qualified for voting in the recent registration period the filing of the petition has been deferred for a brief time. If it develops that the newly-made voters have the right to exercise their franchise, the petition will be filed at once. The petitioners for the operation of Sunday pictures have deferred to the large number of new voters who have just registered.

The Pastors' Union, which agitated the Sunday closing question, is anxious to have the voting on the bond project, a local question in finance, and the moving picture question held at the sametime.

TRAVIS WRITING BOOK ON RUSSIA.

Lieutenant Norton C. Travis, who was photographer for the Red Cross Mission to Russia, and who recently returned with 75,000 feet of film, will shortly have his experiences issued in book form. Lieutenant Travis is well and widely known as a motion picture cameraman, and is also a prominent member of the Cinema Camera Club.

Some of his thrilling and gripping story has already appeared in a number of the large American dailies, accompanied by photos taken at the risk of his life, and he is now preparing a new series of articles dealing with the work of women in the war. Offers have been made to Lieutenant Travis to condense some of his most thrilling experiences into lecture form, with accompanying pictures.

Ochs Invites Exhibitors to Invest $250

Idea Seems to Sound Good in Meeting, But Afterward Individuals are Skeptical.

LEE OCHS, head of the United Picture Theaters of America, was in Cleveland March 13, and at a meeting of the Exhibitors' League, which was quite largely attended, undertook to interest the Cleveland theater managers in his new venture.

Mr. Ochs outlined his proposition in detail, stating he wanted exhibitors to invest $250 each in stock in the concern, and if by chance the promoters could not put the idea over, all the money received, less 10 per cent., would be returned. The 10 per cent. was to be retained for expenses and work of the promoters.

The proposition sounded good to the exhibitors during the meeting, but from talks with individual members after the meeting it was seen that the promoters would have to do much missionary work to get a majority of Cleveland exhibitors interested to the extent of buying stock.

"At the present time," said one exhibitor, a former official of the league, "we have another similar proposition on hand—the Exhibitors' and Producers' Affiliated, in which Mr. Pettijohn has interested us. I say one thing at a time. The proposition of holding 10 per cent. in case the idea falls through does not appeal to me very much. There should be some guarantee in the shape of contracts with producers to prevent the idea falling through."

James Calnay Wanted by Police

THIS paper has received from the Louisville police department a notice to the effect that James Calnay, who has also signed his name Kalnay, is wanted in that city on the charge of obtaining money under false pretenses, of which he is charged by indictment in Jefferson County. It asks authorities to arrest and hold him and send a telegram to Ludlow F. Petty, chief of police, so that an officer can be sent with the necessary papers for extradition.

James Calnay.

Calnay is 28 to 30 years of age; 5 feet 5 or 6 inches; 135 to 140 pounds; black hair, brown eyes, dark complexion, smooth face. He is known, but not too happily, by many people connected with the motion picture business, and especially by many of those who would be connected with it. A little over a year ago he was promoting a scheme in Nashville, Tenn., called the Dixie Film Corporation, but abandoned that city unexpectedly and without flourish of trumpets leaving those who had been persuaded to invest in his project to repent at leisure. Before that, one of his specialties had been "schools" for teaching men and women with money how to make $1,000 a week playing in pictures. That some of them were cross-eyed and crippled mattered nothing at all so long as they had the money. He worked this school game in Detroit and in Buffalo. It will greatly advantage the moving picture business to have this man brought to trial.

DIRECTOR WELLS PLANS BENEFIT.

Raymond Wells, director of Triangle feature pictures, is planning to rehearse a big dramatic production for the stage. Many well-known stars of filmdom will be seen in the cast, and Belle Bennett, Triangle player who recently scored a success in Ashton Stevens' play, "Mary's Way Out," will be seen in the leading role. Wells will put on the drama for the benefit of the Submarine Base at San Pedro, of which Miss Bennett is godmother, and the funds thus raised will go to equip the amusement rooms for the sailor boys.

Burial of Stanley V. Mastbaum

Funeral Held From His Home on March 10— Jules E. Mastbaum Succeeds Him In Business Affairs

MANY notables and friends attended the funeral of Stanley V. Mastbaum, who was buried Sunday, March 10, from his home, 417 South Broad street, Philadelphia. Friends and associates who knew the genial character of the man feel that the motion picture world has suffered a severe loss. Especially is this sentiment expressed by his employees. There was a lavish display of flowers.

In appreciation of Mr. Mastbaum's valuable past services rendered to the industry, a voluntary meeting was called for Friday, March 15, at the Vendig Hotel, to discuss a plan for the erection of a permanent mausoleum.

Prominent personages who attended the funeral were Jules E. Mastbaum, M. Greenwalt, George H. Earle, L. O. Beggs, Alexander R. Boyd, Frank W. Buhler, Morris Wolf, George R. Meeker, E. Fleisher, A. Einstein, Lewis J. Selznick, Adolph Zukor, Ben Schulberg, Hiram Abrams, Samuel Goldfish, N. Goldfish, Ricordi Gradwell, W. R. Priest, Felix Feist, William E. Smith, Harry Schwalbe, Bert Tichner, John Simpson, Frank V. Armato, Mrs. Corrine Solomon, O. Bower, O. Morgan, R. Lynch, G. Ames, M. Milder, B. S. Moss, Morris Boney, W. Heenan, Charles Oldt, M. Comerford, L. J. Chamberlain, Elliot Goldman, M. Steifel, Charles Segal, Earl Fort, Allen May, S. Burman and numerous political officials.

Jules E. Mastbaum, a brother of the late Stanley V. Mastbaum, was selected as director of the various enterprises under the control of the Stanley Company, of which he was elected to the position of president and managing director during the early part of the week.

Although it is not generally known, Jules E. Mastbaum was really the pioneer motion picture man of Philadelphia, insofar at least as the management of theaters devoted to this now generally popular style of amusement is concerned. He was a partner of Harry Davis, of Pittsburg, when the latter opened the first picture house in Philadelphia at the corner of Eighth and Market streets. This was devoted largely to short pictures and gave a marvelous number of showings each day at five cents admission. The place was, of course, a small one, but it did a thriving business from the start, and encouraged the managers to select other locations. Their second venture was at the northwest corner of Ninth and Market streets, which also flourished from its very opening.

But the managers wanted to get on the more fashionable Chestnut street, so they acquired a property between Twelfth and Thirteenth and converted the building into what was in those days one of the finest motion picture theaters in the City of Brotherly Love. Then Mr. Mastbaum realized that the enterprise was but in its infancy, and he began securing sites for more pretentious houses. He built the Bijou Dream, Princess, Victoria and, with Stanley Mastbaum and Al Boyd, the Regent. He was interested in the Globe, the Stanley, of which he was the first manager, and the theater at 333 Market street. This latter his friends protested against, declaring that it would be suicidal to open a theatre in that section. But Mr. Mastbaum thought otherwise and opened the house, which has been a veritable gold mine ever since.

Jules Mastbaum built the Stanley Theater in New York City, and is financially interested in numerous theaters other than those mentioned in Philadelphia. He is president of the Central Market Street Amusement Company, president and general manager of the Stanley Company and is interested in the Cross Keys, Ruby and Savoy theaters. He is also one of the owners of the beautiful Garden Pier at Atlantic City, which is one of the show places of the popular resort, and which cost more than a million dollars to erect.

It was his scheme that was responsible for the creation of the Stanley Booking company, an institution that has been responsible for a number of important innovations in the picture field in Philadelphia inuring to the interests of the local managers and the manufacturers as well.

He is a man of strong personality and indomitable energy and was closely identified with his brother in his business affairs; therefore he starts in, as did the late Stanley V. Mastbaum, well equipped to continue the policies that the latter had in force with such brilliant success when he was suddenly claimed by death. Mr. Mastbaum is well known, not only in the picture world, but in the financial and commercial spheres as well, and has many extensive operations in hand. He is genial, affable and always ready to listen to arguments. It is his intention to devote much of his time to furthering the business now so well established, and to inaugurate at propitious times such innovations as will have a tendency to be of benefit to the exhibitor and the producer. He is a man of many ideas and has high ideals. In a word, he is a man of affairs, and it is probable that he will soon be regarded as one of the leading spirits in the motion picture world, not only of Philadelphia, but the United States as well.

C. M. "Mell" Simmons Dies in Dayton

Well Known Picture Distributor Succumbs to Pneumonia After Brief Illness.

C. M. SIMMONS, well known in the motion picture industry particularly in the West, died of pneumonia in Dayton, Ohio, Tuesday, March 12. A short time ago Mr. Simmons left the Artcraft organization to become general manager of the State-Rights Distributors, Inc., and at the time of his death was making a tour of the country exploiting "Carmen of the Klondike," the first production to be presented by that concern.

For a number of years Mr. Simmons had been actively engaged in the motion picture industry. In 1906 he left the commercial field to devote his energies to amusement enterprises, and opened a roof garden in one of the cities of the Middle West. He soon won success, and was looked upon as a capable showman.

C. M. Simmons.

Mr. Simmons later went to Chicago and secured the management of a splendidly equipped theater, doing very little business, he considered as having great possibilities. His judgment proved to be correct. Later he moved to Seattle, and at the forming of the General Film Company he became manager of the Seattle exchange and was later made sales manager, controlling the exchanges of the Pacific Coast.

Since that time "Mell" Simmons, as he was popularly known to thousands of exhibitors, had successfully managed theaters and exchanges from coast to coast, having opened exchanges in the various territories for the Electric, Triangle, Goldwyn and Artcraft Companies. His ability to recognize the merits of a production and his methods of fair play won for him a commanding position in the territories in which he worked.

For more than a week before he left New York he had been suffering from a severe cold and was absent from his office for several days. He recovered sufficiently, however, to start on his trip, but when he reached Dayton he contracted another cold which rapidly developed into pneumonia. His death came as a severe shock to his business associates, as word had been received the day before he died that he had passed the crisis and was expected to recover.

Pathe Executives Dine Paul Brunet

New Vice-President and General Manager of Old Concern Toasted by Twoscore of His Asssociates

MARKING a new era in the annals of Pathe Exchange, Inc., Paul Brunet was welcomed as vice-president and general manager of the big distributing company at a dinner tendered him last Wednesday evening. The keynote of the dinner was optimism and confidence, respect and friendship for the man in whose honor it was given, and especial importance was lent by the presence of the entire board of directors, with the exception of Paul Fuller. Ferdinand Zecca, one of the great production experts in France, who is now on the board of directors, was also a guest of honor.

When coffee and cigars were brought, after an enjoyable meal, for which forty covers were laid, F. C. Quimby, sales manager of Pathe, acting as toastmaster, rose and briefly introduced Mr. Brunet.

"You all know that we are here to welcome as our chief, a man whom we have known and worked with for three years," said Mr. Quimby. "We admire him as a big, broad-gauged business executive. We have every confidence that in his administration Pathe Exchange will make a greater success than ever in the past. Every man here believes in Mr. Brunet as the man for the important post to which he has been elected. May we now hear from our vice-president and general manager, Paul Brunet?"

"It is difficult for me to express," said Mr. Brunet, amid enthusiastic applause, "the deep gratification which I hold as the result of the friendly feeling manifested toward me on this occasion. I want to assure you that such friendly feeling is fully reciprocated, and knowing that I have your cooperation it can but result in lightening my duties.

Pathe Manufacturer for Twenty-three Years.

"Since the house of Pathe began the manufacture of motion pictures more than twenty-three years ago many film concerns have come, flourished for a while and then passed away. Scarcely a week passes but that the birth of some new organization is announced in the trade papers. Have you ever stopped to think how few of them have lasted? Have you ever stopped to think that one and only one house in this business that may truly be said to be a predominant factor today has a history that dates back more than nine or ten years? You know Pathe is the company I refer to, and you also know the reason it endures, prospers and flourishes is because it is founded on a policy of sound business judgment and honesty, and has as its aim the rendering of real service to the exhibitor.

"In collaboration with Mr. Zecca, who was sent here by Mr. Pathe, and who will devote his proven ability to the production part of our business, and yourselves whom I consider each qualified in his particular line, we will, I know, bring about a result that will make for new history in this industry."

Other speakers were Mr. Zecca, Harold Lloyd, E. C. Lynch, Charles B. Samuels, L. Ernest Ouimet, Louis J. Gasnier, W. A. S. Douglas, H. C. Hoagland and George B. Seitz.

Those present besides those named included W. R. Baker, Arthur Rousseau, A. Werkmeister, G. L. Shanier, W. C. Smith, J. Humm, L. E. Franconi, G. Bardet, C. W. Allers, C. J. Fischer, F. R. Clarke, G. A. Smith, Frank Duffy, Tarleton Winchester, Joseph A. Dunn, Harry Lewis, Prince Paleologue, J. W. Kyle, Charles Van Arsdale, William Lord Wright, M. Ramirez, P. A. Parsons, C. Julian, Arthur Miller, A. Adatte, B. Millhauser and C. Cohen.

F. I. L. M. CLUB TO DISCUSS WASTE.

At the monthly dinner of the F. I. L. M. Club of New York, which will be held on Wednesday, March 20 at 7 o'clock, at Healy's, Columbus avenue and 66th street, the topic of the evening will be: "Is the Waste in the Film Industry Due to the Producer, Distributor or Exhibitor?"

P. A. Powers, treasurer of the Universal; William A. Johnston, president and editor of Motion Picture News; Sidney A. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of New York, and Harry A. Reichenbach, specialist of moving picture publicity, are the ones who have consented to give the benefit of their opinions.

At each monthly dinner some important topic of vital interest to the industry will be discussed. Tickets may be procured from any film exchange manager in the metropolitan district.

DE MILLE AIDING IN CAMOUFLAGE WORK.

The artistic development of the scenic field of motion pictures is made apparent by the request of the United States Government that the motion picture men assist the army in camouflage work and the appointment of Cecil B. DeMille as a member of the staff to aid in recruiting technical experts and scenic artists for this important work. Mr. De Mille has been able to devote considerable time to the Government. The vast experience of the motion picture technical men is proving invaluable. A company of 250 is being organized in Los Angeles. Amazing results are being accomplished.

President Brady Talks to Rotarians

Outlines to Business Men Some of the Things the Screen Has Done and Is Doing

ONE of the most enthusiastic meetings ever held in the interest of "Motion Pictures as an Advertising Medium" was the monthly meeting of the Rotary Club of New York, held in the ballroom of the Hotel McAlpin, Thursday evening, March 7, when William A. Brady, president of the National Association of Motion Picture Industry, speaking to over seven hundred members representing the various businesses of the metropolis, said among other things:

"When I came here to-night I asked your chairman to tell me what the Rotary Club was. He said it comprised the representative business men of New York, and after taking a flash at the audience, I realized it was true. I also know that the Rotary Club at Chattanooga, Tenn., was the first club to win the distinction of having built a theater for the soldier boys.

"For the last seven weeks I have been down at Atlantic City superintending a balloon ascension for my first big picture, 'Stolen Orders.' If you have any idea that making motion pictures is play I advise you not to tackle a job like handling one of these air monsters unless you want to get a good drop down to the world of reality and tough propositions. But I simply mentioned this because I suppose you've all looked over here at me, saying to yourself, 'Oh, he's only a showman.'

"So I am—just a plain, ordinary showman, and have been since I was nineteen years of age. I have seen the show business grow, and grow, and grow, from the time when we used to sit and see four shows for the price of one; when, in the old days down on the Bowery the curtain would go up at 8 P. M., and go down, if the show wasn't too rotten, about 2 A. M., on up to Houston street, Union square, Twenty-third street, Thirtieth street, Times Square and on up to the close proximity of Central Park, and still it moves with the steady pushing of the business northward.

"And then the advent of the motion picture—and with the advent of the motion picture the spoken drama gradually dying away and the development of a great power, the screen.

"The first man to recognize the great value of the motion picture in this country was our great and beloved President Woodrow Wilson, God bless him!

"He asked me during his campaign in what way the motion picture could be used, and we planned an arrangement whereby it was possible to have him speaking on every corner in this country at one and the same time.

"The motion picture industry has cooperated with every department of the army and navy; has provided entertainment for the soldiers and the sailors who would otherwise have been without entertainment; has become allied with the advancement of every campaign promulgated by the Federal Government to win this great war, and made possible many of the advances that would otherwise have failed.

"Just as the Government has seen the value of the screen as an advertising medium, as a publicity agent, so the manufacturers throughout the country are beginning to realize and make use of this great factor in the development of the commercial supremacy of the American-made goods.

"About three months ago President Wilson sent to New York a message saying he wanted to see a group of motion picture men at the White House. Four men went. It was about the time Kerensky was pulling off things in Russia. The President said that Russia was in the balance and could only be reached in one way. That was through the motion picture. The Russian soldier, except in a few instances, cannot read. The screen speaks a universal language, and it was through this great medium, this great leveler of conversation, he proposed to reach Russia.

"'We must show the Russian soldiers our cantonments; our soldiers; our sailors; our navy. We can do it in no other way than by the aid of the motion picture. We must show them that America is preparing to win the war. They will not read it, for most of them cannot read, but the screen speaks a universal language.'

"As a result of that interview, within the last two months we have shipped over 6,000,000 feet of film to Russia, to prove that universal language is of great value.

Furthermore, when the history of this great war is written, and the victory won, it will be the motion picture of which will be written.

"It was as mighty as the sword."

Brooklyn to Have Big Theater

Triumvirate of Strand Owners to Build House at Fulton Street and Rockwell Place, Seating 4,500.

MOE MARK, Max Spiegel and Walter Hays, of the Mitchel H. Mark Corporation, owners of the Strand theater, accompanied by Thomas Lamb, an architect, left New York March 11, on a tour of inspection of the latest motion picture theaters built in the principal cities in the United States. The Strand owners are now preparing to build the largest and most luxurious motion picture theater in the country, which is to be situated on the corner of Fulton street and Rockwell place, Brooklyn. This new theater will seat 4,500.

In making this tour it is the hope of the Strand men to benefit from the experience of other prominent theater owners. The Brooklyn theater will be the last word in theater construction, and no expense will be spared for the comfort and safety of its patrons. Work on the new building will be commenced immediately.

Nora Bayes in Pictures

MISS NORA BAYES, the star of the Cohan Revue, and one of the best known comediennes on the stage, has arranged with Ed Rosenbaum, Jr., the publicity director of the King-Bee Films Corporation, to handle her film business in the future. Miss Bayes has received many flattering offers to appear on the screen, but owing to her theatrical contracts she has been forced to decline.

Nora Bayes.

Miss Bayes, besides being one of the best singing comediennes on the stage, is also considered one of the most intellectual actresses and is also the author of many clever songs and stories.

Mr. Rosenbaum is responsible for the statement that Miss Bayes has one of the most original stories ever written, ready to "shoot" as soon as he has closed with a producer. No offers will be considered by Mr. Rosenbaum except those coming from the big producers of the film industry, whose capital, standing and facilities will constitute a guarantee that the Bayes pictures will be screened and marketed under the most favorable conditions.

HARRY MAYO MANNEY IS COLLECTOR'S AID.

Harry Mayo Manney, for many years with Vitagraph at its studio in Brooklyn, is now one of the deputies of Henry P. Keith, internal revenue collector for Long Island. Mr. Manney being an old "pro.," Collector Keith has assigned him to take care of the Brooklyn and Long Island theatrical folk who may have income tax worries. Mr. Manney may be found any day at the collectors office in the postoffice building in Brooklyn, where he will be glad to give any possible assistance to his old friends.

How McGee Put On "The Unbeliever"

What the Manager of Detroit's Majestic Did to Bring Out Crowds to See the Edison War Picture.

By Jacob Smith.

NEW YORK may have its big showmen—Chicago, Philadelphia, Indianapolis and San Francisco and other big cities may have their big showmen—but to the city of automobiles our hats are off to what the motor city population believes to be the biggest and greatest "showman in the show business." In most cities the big managers who achieve reputations are in charge of big downtown, beautiful theaters that are successful to a more or less extent in spite of themselves. In other words, their location and local conditions make for success as long as the theater has just ordinary, everyday business intelligence looking after its affairs.

But in Detroit—think of one of the biggest houses being in the outskirts—nearly two miles from the heart of the city—and attracting people from all quarters of the city and doing as much business if not more than the big houses downtown. Such an institution is the Majestic theater at Woodward avenue, near Willis avenue, seating approximately 1,600, and managed by M. W. McGee, who has been in full charge since it opened three years ago. "Mac," as everybody knows him, has been in all branches of the amusement business, and was one of the pioneers in the film business in New York City.

All this is merely an introductory to the real story to show how big pictures can be put over big if the manager is a big man mentally. What we are really going to talk about in the small space allotted is "The Unbeliever," a Thomas A. Edison picture, produced with the cooperation of the marine corps, and shown at the Majestic theater, Detroit, starting Sunday, March 10.

First of all, Manager McGee is always looking for big pictures that offer possibilities. His theater caters to the very finest amusement lovers of Detroit and he must please them with the best that the photoplay world produces.

Well, about six weeks ago he got wind that the George Kleine System had arranged to release a wonderful war picture—something that was out of the ordinary. He didn't wait for the Kleine organization to peddle it around Detroit, but he took the train to Chicago to look into the proposition. A private screening of the picture was arranged. It so impressed Mr. McGee that a contract for the picture was immediately entered into for a later showing at the Majestic.

Mr. McGee realized when he returned to Detroit that his real work had just commenced. He had affixed his signature to a contract calling for a big war pr duction and now the thing was to get it "over the top."

Nearly every hour of the day found him busy working out stunts, plans, scheming for new ideas that would bring the people to the Majestic by the thousands. All he talked of—all he dreamed of—was "The Unbeliever" and the theater.

The day of reckoning came—Sunday, March 10. The newspapers had been full of publicity stories regarding "The Unbeliever." Big advertisements were run in the newspapers—25,000 special four-page hearlds were distributed—there had even been a private trade showing the previous week for city officials, officers of the army and navy and of the press. When the doors opened at 2 o'clock the first day there was a crowd two blocks long in front of the theater and the same length of line was maintained the entire afternoon and up until the last show that night.

On Monday there was a matinee to a crowded house, and on Monday night Mr. McGee broke the house policy by giving only one performance (instead of the usual two), starting at 8.15. There were present many officials, 350 men of the Michigan State troops and a capacity assemblage of citizens. Among other guests were George Kleine and M. E. Smith, manager of the Kleine exchanges.

The exterior and interior of the theater were elaborately decorated with American flags and bunting. Prices were not changed for the engagement. The orchestra was enlarged to forty pieces for "The Unbeliever" engagement. All through the showing of the feature there was special music by the orchestra and the organ—special stage effects to make each scene more realistic.

"The Unbeliever" has already had its engagement at the Majestic theater extended for a second week and there is every likelihood that it will remain longer.

NEW ONTARIO LAW MAY KEEP OPERATORS ON JOB.

It is intimated that the Ontario Government will shortly adopt a regulation which will require the equipment of all moving picture projection machines with trip mechanisms which will prevent operators from leaving the machines unattended.

Exchangemen Call Meeting—Call It Off

Rumors in St. Louis of "Bicycling"—Theaters Warn Distributors Against Rash Accusations.

SOMETHING of a clash between exhibitors and exchange managers in St. Louis was brought to light recently when it became known that a meeting of the managers of all the film distributing companies had been called for Thursday night, March 7. The meeting was surrounded by the greatest secrecy, but a reporter for an afternoon newspaper got wind of it and printed the announcement.

No sooner had the publication of the meeting time been made than the meeting was called off as hurriedly and as secretly as it had been planned. It became known that the managers of several of the largest houses in the city saw the notice of the meeting and warned film managers not to take any action that would cast suspicion on the theater managers.

It has been claimed that the exchange managers wanted to take concerted action against the alleged "bicycling" of films, and the failure of exhibitors to make deposits under the film companies' regulations. While no definite charges of "bicycling" have been made against any one man, or group of men, the film managers declare that they know the practice is going on and must take organized action to break it up.

The charge is hotly resented by the owners of string theaters. The film managers' meeting was discussed informally by the exhibitors at the regular meeting of the league, Friday, March 8, but the exhibitors decided to let well enough alone and await real action on the part of the exchange managers. The feeling is somewhat tense over this matter.

Cleveland Exchanges Adopt Shipping Label

Move Expected to Make for Quicker Handling of Film Between Distributors and Exhibitors.

ON ACCOUNT of the present congested traffic conditions and the frequent changes in train schedules, the Board of Motion Picture Exchange Managers of the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce has held several meeting with managers of different express companies and the superintendent of mails, with a view of cooperating with them in expediting film shipments.

The managers of the express companies and the superintendent of mails stated that most of the mistakes and delays in the handling of film shipments would be eliminated by the use of a standardized form of shipping label. For the prompt and correct handling of shipments a properly addressed shipping label is the first requisite.

The board, therefore, has adopted a standard form of shipping label and a sample of it has been sent out to every exhibitor in Northern Ohio, with the request that this form be used for all film shipments. Besides this, the board has arranged to furnish without charge labels of this form for returning films to exchanges. At the same time the express companies and film exchanges disclaimed any liability for delays when these labels are not used.

Fuel Ban Raised in Ontario and Quebec

Repeal Comes None Too Soon—Theaters Were Only Industry Still Carrying the Burden.

CANADIAN fuel Controller Magrath of Ottawa raised the heatless ban from the theaters of Ontario and Quebec on Friday, March 8—after the amusement houses had observed three heatless holidays in as many weeks. The repeal of the order did not come any too soon, because a great many exhibitors were becoming discouraged with the weekly receipts, particularly when no other business whatsoever was being required to close down for stated periods to save coal. Most every exhibitor is ready to swear that he did not save an ounce of coal by having a dark house each Monday and many declare that they used more coal than usual because there were no crowds to help keep the theaters warm. The latter, however, is hardly a good argument because if the ventilating system of a theater were perfect the air would be changed so often that heat would always be necessary.

The industries of Ontario and Quebec were not bothered by heatless holidays since February 11. According to the original order, the theaters should have closed one day each week until March 26.

The Original Story

By Archer McMackin.

NEWS that the western scenario departments practically have tabooed the writings of authors other than those whose stories are published in widely circulated journals and periodicals is not encouraging to a movement started a year or so ago for the development of a distinct motion picture literature. Stories of the fabulous prices paid for articles appearing in such weeklies as the Saturday Evening Post is enough to make the "overpaid star" retire from acting and turn to literature. As for the scribe who writes for the screen, and the screen only, it is sadly disconcerting. Must we, then, all rush into print before our work can reach the screen?

As a former literary agent, and one who was in daily touch with all the big New York publishers, I am going to divulge a secret or two, though, of course, I can name you no names. (And this essay is to point out that in the picturizing of books and short stories the motion picture producer is getting by far the small end of the deal.) I once had access to a file of manuscripts in the office of one publisher, who asked me to value them as motion picture material, before they were published. Some of these book scripts had not been paid for, and it was only too apparent that the book's author would be able to pay the rent only in case he had written something which contained picture material.

I have dealt with other publishers who have asked that I list their books and ask only a nominal price, anything that would look half-way respectable. Novels, fresh from the press, poured into the office of our agency daily, sometimes accompanied by well prepared synopses. A well-known author sent me a file of Saturday Evening Posts containing his stories, with the announcement that he would let them go at a small figure because they were shortly to be published in book form. Tempting offers, in some cases outright bribes, were made by authors and publishers to push certain books; for, verily, the price of print paper was going up, and a new Eldorado had been discovered.

Figures are seldom interesting, but it is necessary to use them briefly in this argument concerning who is "holding the bag." It is unnecessary to disclose the name of that weekly, with its w. k. "over two millions a week." Prices paid by this paper range from $150 to $1,500 for a short story, the price depending to some extent on the fame of the author. The price of a novel of 70,000 words paid by the same periodical is seldom over $3,000, and that is putting the figure rather high. Motion picture producers pay from $500 to $2,000 for short stories published in this well-known weekly. For novels, if the figures I have read elsewhere are correct, they are willing to pay from $3,000 to $25,000. After the deal with the picture company the author hastens to a publisher, informs the latter that his S. E. P. short stories or novel has been accepted by a film company, and immediately the printing presses are hot. In this case the author realizes on small royalties only, but if the film is successful he will make from a thousand to three thousand on the book.

These figures are produced to show that there are two ways of looking at "advertising values." There is no doubt that the widely circulated Saturday Evening Post is a good advertising medium. They charge from five to eight thousand dollars, I believe, for the back cover. But what of the advertising value of the picture, which reaches eight or ten million people? The motion picture people are actually giving the author and publisher of a book, if you compare it with the back page of the Saturday Evening Post, with its two million a week, about twenty-five thousand dollars' worth of advertising.

The figures I have given above were obtained after careful investigation and interviews with authors who write for the Post, and whom I know personally. One of these men stated frankly that he refused to write anything that did not offer picture possibilities. A novel in the Saturday Evening Post, which I read recently, was so much like a scenario that a director could have used it as a working script. Some of you editors will recall it: A well-known Paris thief; his experiences aboard a German submarine, and his later adventures with German agents in New York.

I glory in the fact that the down-trodden writer man is at last getting his innings. For a long time the magazine trust had him cornered. It was fashionable to live in a garret, watch for the small thin envelope and stall the landlady. Now the writer folk are moving up to Central Park West or taking country places in Westchester or Long Island.

Nevertheless the statement that motion picture editors refuse to read anything but published stories is a hard blow toward the development of a distinct motion picture literature. Why not reverse the present proposition? Arrange with the publisher to novelize the successful and original film story with its $25,000 worth of advertising. It is also time that the screen author had his innings!

I hear the cry: "Less than 1 per cent. of the unpublished stories submitted are available." True, Mr. or Miss Editor. But less than a thousandth per cent. of the stories submitted to the magazines are available to them. The Munsey periodicals editorial staff maintains some fifty first readers. The output of literature in this land is enormous.

The motion picture has long been voted a distinct and separate art, and for its healthy development a distinct and separate literature is necessary. The rejection of a good, original story "because it has never been published" is an inadequate and idiotic excuse. Healthy progress in any art or science means the development of all its functioning apparatus, and if "the play's the thing" one of the most vital contributing elements to the success of the motion picture industry is being strangled and crushed out.

Arbuckle Renews Pep Among Marines

Visits Mare Island and Spends Strenuous Day—Shows How Good An Athlete He Is.

CARRYING two hundred and eighty-seven pounds of net weight, Roscoe Arbuckle, of avoirdupois and comedy fame, recently convinced Uncle Sam's marines in training at Mare Island, California, that he is what moving pictures show him to be. The occasion of the demonstration of his ability as an all-around athlete and comedian was a visit made to the marine barracks in company with Eugene W. Castle, the San Francisco representative of the Gaumont weekly news service, and Van B. Clement, manager of the Portola Theater.

No sooner did the party arrive at the Island than the comedian was the center of an admiring throng and all sorts of questions were fired at him. Finally a marine yelled out, "How are you as an athlete?" and a huge pushball was rolled on to the field. A royal battle followed, with the big fellow on one side and many husky marines on the other. After holding the navy boys at bay for a time "Fatty" played a game of baseball, took part in a sham battle staged in his honor, "relieved" the bandmaster and led the seventy-five-piece band all over the grounds and wound up his very convincing demonstration of versality by treating the men to a funny talk, followed by a gymnastic exhibition. The marines declared that if he would remain with them for a week they could work him down to a normal weight, and the comedian agreed with them. He left, declaring that he had never had a more enjoyable day, nor a more strenuous one.

Mr. Arbuckle states that this visit to San Francisco is to be one of a regular series. The climate of the southland is declared to be too trying on him and following the completion of each picture he makes he plans to come here to renew his "pep." Other film artists are making the same declaration, which may not be surprising when it is realized that within another month the city of the angels is to become as dry as the proverbial bone.

Titles

Their Field, as Wide as the Industry Itself, Calls for the Best Efforts of Literary Craftsmen.

By Alfred Biggs.

WITH the gratifying general progress of events in the industry toward a higher standard in motion picture art comes the necessity for scrupulous and painstaking care in every detail and department in production and finishing. Methods that were the result of a naive scramble for wealth in an "easy money" market are obsolete; the old timers are now almost relegated to the background. The old order is fast changing, giving place to new methods, systems and men. And in the great struggle for the survival of the fittest too much attention cannot be given to the perfection of every detail, for today this counts for success.

It is gratifying to note that titling, that most important detail in the making of a picture, is receiving more and more attention on the part of producers, who also realize that more effectiveness as well as considerable saving in expensive crowds and settings can be effected by collaboration with a titler who is an expert literary craftsman.

One of the first indications of an awakening consciousness of the value of titles was seen in the mechanical end of their making. A more elaborate style of letter was introduced and later this was elaborated by the introduction of allegorical or silhouette figures prancing in the background. Rarely indeed, were these good; in many instances they were laughable. Nevertheless they were welcome, for they were an indication of a worthy desire to improve. This pseudo-artistic dcorative work had a great run and is still in vogue to a considerable extent today, but it has not the qualities to make it a joy forever; folks tire of it and gradually it must resolve itself into a less pretentious style more in keeping with the exactions of art.

A more important question is: How further to improve the literary value of the writing of the titles? Here is a field as wide as the industry itself. The old-style running commentary on the picture, with its crudities, barn-storming heroics, cheap platitudes and abortive attempts at fine phrasing is doomed. It will not stand up under the ever-increasing pressure of an elevating competition. Those who wrote these titles must either mend their ways or find some other occupation more in keeping with their limitations.

In the picture of certain producers a great advancement in titling already may be noted. These concerns apparently take a wider view of their mission in life than merely to earn dividends. As soon as a producer's aspirations are limited by the boundary line of "profits," the quality and grade of his work suffers. He tries to "get by" with cheap effects —including inferior titling—and immediately the discerning eye can read the writing on the wall: in these days he cannot live; he encumbers the path of progress.

Titles, to stand the test, must set forth the very spirit of the play—they must fill the blank that invariably exists between picturization and drama. The most intelligent audience would fail to get the significance of an author's intention without titling—therefore the success of the picture largely depends upon the titling. That being the case, why not make success doubly sure by insisting upon good titles?

Good titles should be felt rather than seen. That is to say: the subconscious appeal of the words read should make itself felt in the minds of the audience in such a way that the audience actually lives the part with the actors and literally feels the emotions portrayed on the screen. This is worthy work for the word-artist. Further, the phrasing of the titles should be such that they flow easily, there must be no jarring note or discordance; the words must open the door into the mind of the audience with the graceful hand of gentle tact. The style and art of the writing must reach out over the audience saying: "I know you, and I am your friend: come now and let us together understand and enjoy this picture."

Successful modern titling calls for highly specialized ability: it is a profession; and one that by its very nature will never be overcrowded. Many are called, but few are chosen. The process of elimination will become more severe as the public becomes more educated to pronounce the verdict on the merit of a picture and its accessories. Adequately to convey a world of sentiment, pathos or enthusiasm in a few short words calls for skill of a very particular kind. Many who attempt it never rise above the succinct phraseology of the "ad" man—their work is cold, staccato, and bare of human feeling. The able title writer is worthily in a foremost place among those who make movies; for in his hands lies the making or the marring of a picture.

It has been argued that the public is no judge of the literary value of titles, and therefore anything readable will "get by." Nothing could be more inaccurate. The public doesn't think—it feels; and the unerring instinct of an audience invariably pays a tribute to good work, whether titling, or directing, or acting. All of these points must be carefully considered by producers who wish to turn out worth-while work; and they will be well advised to get the best obtainable in the brains market to safeguard their titling.

The profession of writing titles has all the dignity of a literary career—the audience is vast enough to appeal to the ambitions of any writer. The work calls for inherent culture, as well as acquired, and it may be recommended to the young men from our universities as a career. They will find their academic attainments hard put to it to keep pace with the ever increasing requirements of the craft, yet they will have the satisfaction of knowing that their vocation is one that takes its place in constructive work for the advancement of the world.

Canada's Military Hospitals Have Theaters

Federal Government Provides Entertainment for Convalescent Soldiers—Seven Institutions for Injured Now Dispense Amusement.

A CANADIAN development of the Great War is the establishment of moving picture theaters in connection with military hospitals in various parts of the country. All disabled warriors are returned to Canada as quickly as possible and they generally spend their convalescent period in Canadian institutions on this side of the Atlantic. Asylums, summer hotels, schools, factory buildings and other structures have been taken over by the authorities for the accommodation of these soldiers. Many buildings or institutions, naturally, have no facilities for entertainment or amusement and these must be provided.

The Military Hospitals Commission of Canada has erected seven theaters for as many hospitals in different parts of the country. The illustration shows the new theater at Whitby, Ontario, where the big Ontario Asylum for the Insane was converted into a military institution. This building, which seats 1,200 comfortably, was built by the Government so that the returned soldiers could have their diversions. The theater is fully equipped for the presentation of moving pictures and the stage is also fitted for the giving of home-made vaudeville. The building is permanent in every detail. Other military theaters in Canada are similar in construction and style although some are not quite so large. The Federal Government is planning to erect more of these theaters in Canada.

FLARITY RETURNS TO GENERAL.

The Albany office of General Film Company has been placed in charge of F. Flarity, formerly branch manager for the company at Pittsburgh, where he had been in charge of a Jewel Productions exchange. In rejoining General Film for service at Albany, Mr. Flarity finds himself again in the territory in which he formerly worked for Pathe with highly successful results.

How It Is Done at the Strand

A Discussion of Methods Which Have Actually Been Worked Out Successfully.

By Harold Edel, Managing Director.

ONE of the most common faults in the so-called "legitimate" theaters throughout the country, especially and notably the houses where big attractions are drawing crowds, is box office discourtesy. On entering one of the big Broadway playhouses recently I overheard some remarks handed out by a slick but very impertinent youth to a well-dressed man that made my blood boil. Time and again I have seen instances of this in large theaters of the "legitimate" attractions and it has been difficult for me to realize why managers tolerate such unbusinesslike treatment to their patrons just because their theater happens to house an attraction that draws capacity audiences.

This box office discourtesy is appreciated by every one who has ever attended a theater. It is not the exception, but it is the general rule. Many times have I personally received a snappy reply in my endeavor to patronize a theater. In fact, patrons of the big theaters have come to expect discourtesy from the person in the box office. It has become so that people take it as a matter of course.

With such a condition evident there is really an immediate opportunity for the manager of the high-class motion picture theater to draw favorable comment, which bears fruit in the shape of permanent patronage from those whose first introduction to your theater starts at the box office. Let them go into your theater in a pleasant frame of mind. Courtesy at the box office is so uncommon among the "legitimate" theaters that it is immediately noticeable when displayed at the motion picture theater. "Legitimate" theaters have been in the business many years, but it seems they have not even yet learned this one big thing, nor does it seem that they ever will. Let it, therefore, not be said that the motion picture theater is also afflicted with this same disease, for it surely appears to be such, spreading, as it does, even to theaters that are only a week old. I have heard many bitter remarks against this mistreatment. The theater that displays courtesy actually gives the patron a pleasant surprise.

When a person is considered for the position in the box office, make sure that he or she is the right type. Able of course, but also neat looking and pleasant. "Yes, sir," and "No, sir"; "Yes, ma'am," and "No, ma'am," are words they must use, not "Yeh," or "Yop," "Nope," or "Nix." Small matters are these, but, oh, my, how very, very important! Big retail institutions are in many cases favored because they give courtesy commensurate with quality. To my mind it is absolutely as fully important that the girl in the box office is courteous as that she is accurate in making change quickly. I would not employ the most wonderful statistician if he or she could not give courtesy to the patrons of my theater.

The person in the box office is very often placed in the most exasperating position as a result of what may be truly called a stupid man or woman in a long line of waiting patrons. However, it is not up to the employee of the theater to express either by words or by actions what he or she thinks of that patron. Box office courtesy never can be preached too much nor at too great length, judging from the lack of it that is still very much in evidence. Never was the admonition to smile and bear it more applicable as in the case of the person behind the till. If the smile must be a cultivated one and courtesy a matter of acting, then make them cultivate and act, but by all means and most emphatically insist that your patrons receive courtesy at the box office, which, of course, also applies throughout your entire theater.

David Belasco has the right idea about hushing an audience and attracting their attention when he gives them "three bells" just before the rise of the curtain. It is an idea that is widely used in theaters, including the Strand, and one that is particularly effective in the motion picture house. Very often, by way of getting away from the routine opening of a show, the Strand preludes its overture with some special number, generally of a spectacular scenic nature. When the show opens with the overture, however, just immediately before the rise of the first curtain, after the lights have been lowered, we give them three deep chimes in one pitch. Immediately the audience settles itself and the interest is attracted to the stage, whereupon the curtain rises and the overture begins.

Automatic Motion Picture Machine

A Portable Thirty-five Pound Outfit Which May Be Operated with Standard Non-Inflammable Film.

A NEW type of moving picture machine for office, convention, and show window use has just been brought out by the Automatic Motion Picture Machine Corporation, New York. This machine displays pictures which can be readily seen even in broad daylight. Its operation is entirely automatic. After the reel is run through it is quickly rewound and then displayed again, so that after the machine is arranged and started it will continue to operate indefinitely with no further attention.

The outfit consists of two separate parts, the moving picture machine and a miniature theater in which the pictures are displayed. The moving picture machine is operated by a standard Westinghouse universal motor, which will operate on either direct or alternating current. Two horizontal discs carry the film, which passes in one direction for projection and is reversed for rewinding. A 400-watt mazda projection lamp furnishes the light, which is automatically extinguished when the machine stops and during process of rewinding. All parts of the mechanism are made from an aluminum composion and the machine weighs but 35 pounds.

The moving picture machine is placed about a foot away from the theater and so that the light enters an aperture in the base. Here it strikes a mirror set at an angle of 45 degrees and is reflected upwards on to a screen set in what would be the stage. Another 45-degree mirror reflects an image of the screen, making the picture appear to the audience to come from a screen on the theater's rear wall.

Standard non-inflammable films in lengths of from 75 to 500 feet can be exhibited. The outfit is approved by the National Board of Fire Underwriters.

HARLEY KNOLES RENEWS WORLD CONTRACT.

Harley Knoles, who directed Alice Brady in "Bought and Paid For," Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley in "The Burglar," and Madge Evans in all of her recent successes, has renewed his contract with World Pictures for a long term of years. The renewal of Mr. Knoles' contract means that he will continue in the direction of Madge Evans.

"Physical Culture Terpsichore" (Paramount-Bray).

A NEW form of calisthenics is demonstrated in the 111th release of the Pictograph. It is an interesting and graceful method of developing the muscles of the limbs and of imbuing the movements of the body with lightness and bouyancy. This form of physical culture is taught by Marion Morgan, formerly director of physical culture at the University of California. Miss Morgan demonstrates that classic dancing is something more than an artistic expression, and that the dances of the ancients were in reality physical culture exercises. These exercises include the long graceful leaps that are usually exploited on the modern stage by the male dancer. In this picture a group of athletic young women aid Miss Morgan in her demonstration.

"Making Democracy's Mouthpiece" (Universal).

In the 63d release of the Screen Magazine will be found an excellent illustration of how the great plants of our country are turning out big guns and small ones. First we see ingots of iron handled by a giant crane and placed in a crucible from which they are taken later a molten fluid. From this the various parts of the guns are moulded. The machine shop where the important details such as turning the barrel of a gun or putting the finishing touches to a mortar are attended to. The close-ups of the working out of the different details make the picture easy to understand

"The Making of a Newspaper" (Universal).

In the second installment of "The Making of a Newspaper," which will be found in the 63d release of the Screen Magazine, the mysteries of the editorial department are explained. It shows how the daily news items are received at the busy newspaper office via telephone and telegram. Then there is the making of duplicate copies of the big news story on electric typewriting machines, and the making of illustrations. There is also shown as the "great nerve center of the organization" the city desk, where the news is sorted, rearranged, rewritten and headed. The ad department is also shown and the editorial dumping ground, which is the foreman's desk.

"Making a Mint of Money" (Paramount-Bray).

In the 111th release of the Pictograph will be found an unusually good illustration of the turning out of coins at Uncle Sam's money mill in Philadelphia. The picture shows the processes by which the bars of metal, as they come from the smelters, are made into finished coins, and how carefully this great plant is guarded so that no particle of the precious metal can be lost or stolen. One of the interesting points of the picture is a close-up showing just how the individual coin is made with its "pie-crust" edge. The method by which a thousand coins can be counted at once is also shown as well as the skillful sorting of coins.

"Pests of Our Fruit Trees" (Pathe).

A tinted half-reel showing the bambyx, cholonide and other members of the caterpillar tribe, feasting upon the leaves of fruit trees. The film has an instructive side and anyone watching it will feel a personal interest in helping rid fruit trees of these destructive pests. It ought to do good missionary work in this respect.

"Making of the Plotless Picture" (Educational-Bruce).

In this number Robert Bruce tells in an interesting and amusing fashion how to make a plotless picture. He starts out with a pack train and some mountain scenery, after which he mixes in a few moving clouds. He proves that behind the "wild waving waters" there must be wind, and gives as good an illustration of an abstract quantity as could be given. A man and his pup bucking the wind bring in a little human interest; and finally after he has filled in with some more cloud stuff he brings on the pack train again, "as long as he started with it," and before the audience gets bored he just runs the train in the opposite direction by way of variety. He doesn't close with "the end of a perfect day"—that's a bromide—but makes it a sunset instead. The picture encompasses a series of delightful scenes.

"Arachon" (Pathe)

A half-reel scenic in exquisite tints, which is one of that interesting series entitled "Picturesque France." Arachon is a beautiful French summer resort the charms of which the picture exploits. Various important edifices about the town are shown, and also fashionable women at the bathing beach.

Innovation in Screen Magazine

Universal to Present Animated Interviews with Well-Known Personages.

ONE of the newest things in screen magazine material is the animated interview which will soon become a weekly occurrence in the Universal Screen Magazine. These interviews will outline in story form outstanding ideas or subjects on which certain well-known writers, artists, etc., have expounded.

Some of the personages to be interviewed are Marion Harland, Dorothy Dix, Ida Tarbell and Charles Dana Gibson. The first of this new series will appear shortly.

South American Series

South American Series of Films Secured by Lincoln & Parker Company Released Through George Kleine System.

AN interesting and instructive series of views photographed in South America through the efforts of the Lincoln & Parker Company are being released through the exchanges of the George Kleine system. These pictures cover a variety of subjects, including the industries, mines, peoples and customs, scenic and zoological.

This series should be of wide interest in the schools and colleges as well as for entertainment purposes and theater programs.

Educational Conventions and Moving Pictures

SURELY the time has more than arrived when no educational convention should be held without special provision being made for the exhibition of educational moving pictures. It is a sad reflection upon the teaching staff of our great public schools that enterprise is so lacking in the more general acknowledgment of the teaching value of the actual living picture. Still life and still pictures are in common use in the schools. How much more valuable must be the active and living pictures—if the one is any percentage of benefit, the latter must be a thousand per cent. more so.

There is possibly some excuse for the thousands of schools which are not yet equipped for moving picture work, but with the number of schools that are profitably using the pictures it is a lamentable failure that none of these successful principals have been given a place upon the program of any county, state or national convention. Even if the experience of any user of the pictures had not been sufficient to draw him to the front, arrangements could easily be made with some competent authority to arrange for the presentation of the school possibilities of the greatest aid to education of the times—i. e., the educational moving picture.

At the recent great convention of the National Educational Association in Atlantic City the only enterprising person at all approaching equal to the occasion was a local moving picture theater man, who gave a special matinee for the delegates, offering them "Alice in Wonderland" as at least some little token of his desire to please; less than 1 per cent. of the delegates accepted the offer.

For the purpose of "taking time by the forelock" the writer now proposes that in future conventions there be established a continuous exhibition of purely educational moving pictures, so that a positive and practical experience may be gained by the great number of teachers who are positively ignorant of the powers of the pictures in the schools. The writer has been surprised recently in making a personal canvass of school superintendents and principals to find that not 5 per cent. are even acquainted with the fact that there are at the present time published lists of upward of ten thousand pictures classed as educationals. If the knowledge of the existence of this list were only more widespread there would surely be many inquiries for copies which would ultimately lead to their being put into general use.

Example Better Than Precept.

That there are spotted over the country a few wideawake and enterprising pedagogues it is pleasant to record. Their activities relieve the depression felt from the otherwise more general lack. From one of these it is a pleasure to give exactly some of his experiences as he relates them, not only for the satisfaction to advocates of the use of the educational pictures, but, we hope, for the encouragement for many other teachers who may chance, fortunately, to see this report.

Principal Aughinbaugh of Mingo Ohio writes: "Such pictures as 'Romeo and Juliet,' 'Tale of Two Cities,' 'The Crisis,' 'Man Without a Country,' 'Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea,' etc., have been used. The purely educational reels such as Burton Holmes, Paramount Pictographs and Mutual Travel Science reels are all well received here. In the school, for example, after studying 'infusoria' in biology we book a Paramount Pictograph which touches on this subject, or one of the famous Ditmars pictures. After reading 'The Lady of the Lake' or 'Oliver Twist' in literature we book these pictures. We have found films to touch on nearly every important subject in physics, biology, agriculture, geography (physical and political), literature and history."

After having for some time advocated such a use of the pictures it is a pleasure to record the above practical result from one out of the at present too small number of principals who are in the front with the aid of the pictures. Is it too much to hope that the example of this positive and profitable experience may lead many others to desire and accomplish similar results. We trust every reader of this article will remember that the Moving Picture Educator is making special efforts to further encourage and assist all who desire to take advantage of the great helpfulness of teaching by the living pictures, and all requests for aid will be promptly answered. W. H. J.

Items of Interest.

During the week of March 3 the Rialto theater presented in its magazine section scenes of interest from the Screen Telegram, Mutual's new screen magazine, including the preparation of steel for ship building, eastern society belles receiving physical training and instruction in classic dancing at Denishawn, and the rodeo at San Francisco, staged for charitable purposes, with Douglas Fairbanks doing stunts. There were also a couple of interesting subjects from the Universal Screen Magazine, including performing dogs. The basic idea of the program for this particular week was Italian and included an overture ("Capriccio Italien," by Tschaikowsky), and two Italian song solos (Prologue and Bird Song from "I Pagliacci"), and a chorus number by the Italian composer Luigi Denza. The feature, "One More American," pictured the plight of an Italian immigrant bucking the "system" in New York. The scenes from "Yellowstone National Park," the second installment of this series of beautiful views, while not Italian, fitted the exquisite setting given the program perfectly.

The Motion Picture Committee of the Parents' League of Baltimore, which has just affiliated with the Affiliated Committees for Better Films, is establishing young people's matinees in the different sections of the city. Four were started the last week of February. One of its matinees was established four years ago. It has been run every Saturday morning since with most satisfactory co-operation from the managers of the theater in which it is held. This manager is now providing another theater in a different neighborhood for the same purpose. The playground story teller of the schools of Baltimore tells the story of the pictures on exhibition to the young people in the neighborhoods where they are exhibited so that they will have some idea of what they are about to see.

The following are longer dramatic pictures for the family and for young people, which have been used successfully for special programs in theaters:

Artcraft—"Stella Maris," "Wolves of the Rail"; Edison—"Uneasy Money"; Goldwyn—"Fields of Honor," "Dodging a Million"; Fox—"Cupid's Round-Up"; Metro—"The Avenging Trail," "Under Suspicion"; Mutual—"The Impostor," "In Bad"; Paralta—"His Robe of Honor"; Paramount—"Jules of the Strong Heart," "Rimrock Jones," "The World for Sale," "A Petticoat Pilot," "Flare-Up Sal"; Petrova—"A Daughter of Destiny;" Select—"The Honeymoon;" Selznick—"Ghosts of Yesterday"; Triangle—"The Gown of Destiny," "I Love You"; Universal—"The High Sign," "The Fighting Grin"; Vitagraph—"The Blind Adventure," "The Menace," "The Wild Strain"; World—"Gates of Gladness," "The Beautiful Mrs. Reynolds."

CHANDLEE HEADS PARALTA SCENARIO DEPARTMENT.

Harry Chandlee, who for a number of months has been in charge of the eastern scenario department of Paralta Plays, Inc., has been promoted to the head of the scenario department at the Paralta Studios in Los Angeles. This promotion will place Mr. Chandlee in active charge of both the eastern and western divisions of this department. He has left New York for the coast to take up his new duties.

Mr. Chandlee first entered the literary field in 1899, when he became writer of special articles for the Evening Times in his native city, Washington. Subsequent to that time he contributed articles and stories to a number of newspaper syndicates and magazines under his own name. In 1902 he began writing popular fiction stories under the pseudonym of Vernon Crumm.

In 1913 Chandlee began writing screen stories, feeling that the greatest future lay in that branch of literary work. In 1914 Chandlee became a resident member of the Lubin staff in Philadelphia. Later he wrote for Equitable and Metro.

CLARA BERANGER WITH WORLD PICTURES.

Clara S. Beranger, continuity writer and author of many successful original screen stories, has joined the World Pictures scenario department and her first work in this connection has been the preparation of an original story for Kitty Gordon. This story bears the title of "Her Great Moment," and is now being filmed under the direction of Oscar C. Apfel. Miss Beranger is now at work on the continuity for "The Golden Wall" for World Pictures.

MOVE TO CLOSE SUNDAY SHOWS IN QUEBEC.

A league of citizens in Quebec City has taken legal action against moving picture exhibitors of that city in an attempt to force the closing of all places of amusement on Sundays. The uplifters declare that there is a Federal law which can be enforced, regardless of the decision of the Appeals Court of Quebec which classed a local Sunday Observance act as beyond its jurisdiction.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Using Little Lobbies.

RECENTLY we asked an exhibitor what he did in the way of lobby display and he replied that he could do nothing, as the lobby was but eighteen feet wide and the house was not on a transit street. It seems to us, though, that these are conditions that call for especial effort to make the lobby work. We think that if we had such a house we would make special efforts to attract attention to the lobby display through novelty. We would take one of the frames of the set for a display, providing it with a soft pine backing. We would also have a box made to fit behind this frame, a box about ten inches deep and wired for light sockets in two or more series and provided with a flasher for each series. We would also get a sheet of ground glass of a size to fit the frame snugly in addition to the plain glass cover. With this equipment, some sheets of colored tissue, some water color paints, a pair of small sharp scissors and a box of opaque, we could do a lot. Perhaps a one-sheet could be illuminated by cutting out portions of the designs and replacing with colored paper. As A. C. Raleigh has pointed out every bill will take a touch of light somewhere, and a flashing light will get more than twice the attention of a fixed illumination. By globes of two colors and flashing them alternately, the design will apparently change. The ground glass may be laid upon a one-sheet and the essential portions copied and colored, the glass being placed with the smooth surface against the bill. When the colors have dried other portions may be painted upon the smooth side to show only when the light flashes on. A little thought and practice will give some wonderfully effective results. Or the bill may be cut and a silk flag or silk draperies substituted for the painted parts, these being blown out by a toy sized electric fan in the recess. At a pinch a bill may be merely sunk into the bottom of the box and lighted by the globes, which should be shielded from the eye of the spectator. The possible variations of this sort of thing are limitless and by calling attention to the stunts through screen and program and getting the daily paper to write up the unusual displays people will presently go out of the way to see what the novelty is. They will look for it and talk about it and it can be made to do the House greater good than a dozen brass frames with formal displays of still pictures. Take for example one of the familiar pictures of Bill Hart pointing two guns at the spectator. Cut out William and the guns and mount on the smooth side of the ground glass with good library paste. On the underside paint flashes from each gun. Opaque the rest of the glass. Put a light behind each gun and place a septum between them so that each globe lights but one flash. Now time your flashers and you'll have the two-gun man shooting into the street all day long. When you are through you soak off the lithograph and wash the water color off with soap and water and you are ready for the next stunt. It all sounds too simple to be good, but it is both simple and good and you'll like the idea so well that you'll probably take window space on the main street to repeat. Movement attracts the crowd. Oddity makes an impression. Produce an oddity and give it movement and you can get along even with a seventeen-foot lobby.

We Like This.

C. D. Buss, of the Third Street, Easton, Pa., sends in a paster 2½ by 4 inches, with gummed back. The house name and number are done in red and the outside rule is also red. It will be noted that the local paper is listed. This is because the Free Press ran this list in its columns for some time with the Third Street theater number; a reciprocal advertisement that cost nothing to speak of and was worth a lot. Mr. Buss credits the New York Evening Telegram with the idea, but we think it might be taken further back than this. But the point is that you can get free newspaper advertising by giving the newspaper advertising. We also reproduce Mr. Buss' advertisement for Petrova. There is nothing flashy about this advertisement, but it is soundly good. The double box does not, as might be supposed, cut off one announcement from the other. It merely gives to both parts added distinction. You get the house name and immediately below the star and days, time table and prices. All that follows builds up the argument, but the main points have first been driven home. This is three sixes. Study it and you'll realize how good it is, but you have to study it. A half page could do little more.

Not New, But Good.

Charles W. Drenshaw sends in a newspaper page and this letter:

> I am enclosing copy of advertisement run in the Birmingham Age Herald. We run an ad like this every Sunday and find it the most successful policy we have yet attempted.
> I made arrangements with the Age Herald to pay for 100 inches every Sunday and get the balance of the page free. The press notices and criticisms I write myself.
> This information will possibly be of some benefit to other exhibitors. If you think it worth while you may use this information in any way you see fit.

The page carries nearly 60 inches in two display advertisements. The rest is regular make-up. The bonus space runs about 40 inches. The scheme is a good one, but it is by no means new. It was first done by R. B. Wilby when he was running the Academy of Music at Selma, Ala., but was discontinued because it was found rather costly. His successor is now using the idea, and it has been used in other cities. The value of the scheme lies in the fact that the average man will accept as fact what the paper says where he might question the authority of an advertisement. But under the present Federal laws all this material must be followed by an "Advertisement," and the failure to comply with this law may get the offending papers into trouble. It is better to contract for the entire page as at reduced rates and to announce frankly that it is the advertisement of the house, retaining the news make-up.

Bond Programs.

For its opening program the Victoria, Shamokin, Pa., one of the houses of the Chamberlain Amusement Enterprises, used a good quality bond paper. It cost more, but just the feel of the sheet must have spoken to the readers; even to those who do not know the difference between good paper and bad. They can sense what they do not know. And the cuts were of the proper sort to print on bond paper, and not 50-screen, and that means brilliant cuts instead of blotches. Intelligent handling made the program look a lot more than it cost, and it was not a cheap job to begin with. The opening newspaper announcement was rather too full of type. The features of the house were all cared for in a news story of more than two columns. The advertising space should have been used to boom the house and the attraction without all of the minute details of ventilation and lighting. This would have given much more space to Miss Pickford, and would have been better business. The story was also fully told in the program. It would have been better to have spoken briefly of the house, more fully of the star and to have left some oases of white space upon which the tired eye could rest.

Really Good.

Hal Hodes, of the Universal Publicity, sends in a singularly intelligent advertisement for The Price of a Good Time. It was gotten up by the American, of Butte, Mont. Intelligent may seem a somewhat odd adjective to use for an advertisement, but it is the proper word to employ in this instance. The Price of a Good Time is not a white slave play and does not deal with the same theme. This has been made plain enough to the Exhibitors, yet some of them have sought to suggest that it verges close upon the censorship limits. The American plays up the real drawing power of the story—its human appeal—and presents this angle without sensation, without insinuation. It is offered as a story of unusual merit because it deals with the world-old desire for pleasure. Moreover, it is not smeared all over 220 inches of space. There is comparatively little type display. Most of it goes to the picture and white space, and the white space is what counts more than type in the larger spaces. When a man can take five twenties and not use a barrel of ink on it, he is getting to be a real advertiser. The only place where ink is needed is to better outline the house name. A hair line would have improved the looks of the letter greatly. And before you stop looking, note that the added attractions are not permitted to intrude. They are where you can see them, but they are not allowed to get out into the open to fight the real attraction.

Mr. Hodes also sends in a display for The Man Without a Country, but it is too much of a paraphrase on Monte Cristo to be regarded as original.

Thinks So, Too.

Harold B. Franklin, manager of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, writes to thank us for the suggestion in the issue for January 19 that the house name was shouldered out of the ornamental frame. He says:

Your suggestion of putting the house name in closer proximity to the ad. itself is indeed a good one. It is really something that might never have occurred to me had you not pointed out. You will note from the enclosure that we do not propose to leave this point open for speculation again.

The matter was a small one, but the house name was detached from the frame, as you may note from the issue mentioned, and it seemed that it would be better to draw it closer to the film announcement. If you will compare that advertisement with the one shown here you will note how the name is now made an integral part of the display. It is part and parcel of the design, and therefore better than the two-part design. The artist, of course, is interested only in the design itself. Mr. Franklin saw the advertisement as a whole. It required an outsider to see that they might be brought into closer relationship, and that is one of the reasons for this department. It gives you a fresh point of view on your own work. Mr. Franklin could see the same mistake in another display, but this was close to home. And by the running on his screen some hours before the Buffalo papers came out with the tidings that the public would have some place to go on its Garfield days. He writes that to judge from the applause greeting the announcement, the change was decidedly popular.

This Is Main Street.

You can see from the tall buildings that this is not "the Swamp" down back of the railroad yards. It's the best advertised street in North America as it has looked for a couple of years and is liable to look for a couple of years more. On the right, as the rubberneck roadsters remark, is the Broadway theatre and the banner for Tarzan of the Apes is the second non-political banner to be floated across that sea of muck. In both instances it was Harry Reichenbach who pulled the stunt. He is handling Tarzan like a circus and getting circus returns at the box office.

Even Better.

The Parkway, Baltimore, has been getting out a very neatly done mailing card, but it has an even better scheme. It is using a card 2½ by 3¾, the reverse side edged with green and printed neatly.

PLEASE BE INFORMED THAT

will appear at the Parkway Theatre week beginning Monday, February 4th, in "STELLA MARIS" "The Star of the Sea." You should not miss this opportunity to see the two Mary Pickford's, the old and the new in a picturization of William J. Locke's famous novel.

The Parkway Management

No woman is going to receive one of those cards and overlook it. It is small, dainty, and elegant. It commands respect and will be tucked into the purse where a larger card might be put aside at once. It is about the best thing that Mr. Shellman has done yet.

With a Calendar.

Reigh's Auditorium, Meyersdale, Pa., sends in what seems to be a ready-print program with a calendar on the back page. Issued the first week of the month, it is possible that many will hold on to the program for the sake of the calendar, but we think the job could have been as cheaply done there in town if the printer has or will purchase a set of calendar logotypes. The calendar would go even better with a monthly program, but the house name should appear on the calendar page even though the house might be the only place of amusement in town.

In Line.

The Elmwood, Buffalo, is in line with coupon books. Then 17c. tickets are sold for $1.70, and ten 11c. tickets for $1.10. The announcement is rather badly made and merely states that "for the convenience of our patrons and to avoid delays at the box office," the books have been prepared. It would stand a little more talk than that.

Wants to Know About Them.

J. Fred Lovett, of the Royal, Providence, R. I., sends in some proofs of advertisements and asks how they compare with others and what we think of them. Mr. Lovett sticks out his tongue, but he does not permit us to feel his pulse. He does not send in copies of the papers that we may see what opposition he has and how he fights it, nor does he give any details from which we can work. Taking the ads as they stand, we think that he is trying to do too much in the space he has at command. These are all Sunday displays a little better than three fives. In this space he seeks to use a cut and advertise his entire week's display. In the first example shown, for instance, the cut display is given to The Mystery Ship, which is played with Magda on Monday and Tuesday. If you will notice closely you will find a "Mon & Tues" in the water off the starboard bow. Nothing is said about this in the card in the mortise. From this it appears that the added attractions are the Universal Weekly and a Nestor comedy. You have to pick up that half-hidden date and add it to the other titles. More definite is the showing for The Honor System. Here you can see that the cut relates to a definite film shown on a known date. Doubtless "everybody" knows that The Mystery Ship is shown Mondays, but that is not the idea. The advertisement is supposed to be reaching out for the man who does not know. In a second pair of examples the cut on the left shows Santa Claus with his pack. It provides the best display of the lot, but Mr. Lovett's reply to his own question is shown in the added space he takes for Chaplin. He knows that Chaplin would be lost in the mortise, so he makes it a three sixes and lets his patrons know that Chaplin is there. That is the answer to the entire question. He is either not taking sufficient space or he is overworking the space he takes. It is not possible to run a cut and get ample display for three changes of bill in fifteen column-inches. It cannot be done. It would be better to drop the cuts, pull in to two columns wide and get a display for his titles in all type. It would be better still to boom the first offering and merely mention the later titles, booming the Wednesday show on Tuesday and the Friday change on Thursday. The best display of the four is that for Christmas week. If he took that, as it stands, but without the cut, added the house name in some definite and attractive type and took most of his extra two and a half inches drop for white space in which to gain legibility by opening up the lines, he would be getting something for his money. A cut attractor is not worth a whoop unless it helps to sell film and these drawings are too weak to do that either through interest excited in the subject or attention drawn to the display. It merely cuts the display lines down to a jumbled mass of type without giving anything in return. Plain type, set with space between the lines, gives much more for the money. Answering Mr. Lovett's question, he compares favorably with the average film advertiser, but that is not saying that the work is not weak and ineffective. We imagine that he is using cuts because all the others do, just as some towns run to reverse cuts and others to 12 and 24 point borders, but, if he is, that is just the reason for doing something else. If we could have but fifteen column-inches in a page where every other exhibitor was using cuts and perhaps larger cuts than we could afford, we would cut down to a two column running story with a 48 point house name, set inside the three column space, and become the most conspicuous advertiser on the page—just because we were different. Don't try to fight fire with fire. Use water until the others turn to water and then go get a mop and be different still.

Ingenious.

The Royal theater, Port Hope, Ontario, sends in a clever idea for booming Baby Mine. The star was not known to the patrons and they go much by stars, so especial interest had to be excited in the play to introduce the star. A week or so before the showing this advertisement appeared in the local paper:

When this had aroused all the curiosity that could be gained without losing interest, it was announced that the odd offer was made by the window displays hooked up with the showing of the picture, and everyone in town came to know of the play and the star. Port Hope is not a very large place and the first Baby advertisement drew as much attention in a little better than two threes than a page advertisement of the ordinary sort would have done. Judgment.

HERE'S the problem that lately confronted a correspondent. He sat his people down to table. He wanted to show that the girl pointedly ignored the hero. He had nothing else to tell until the dinner was over, and very naturally he did not want to film the entire dinner. He wanted to know whether he should use a fact leader, a cut-in, or fade down and fade up on a table changed from soup to dessert.

We pointed out that it was poor practice to use the fade for a lapse of time since it was the generally accepted symbol of a vision. In this particular instance no one could possibly regard what followed the fade as a vision, but even at that it was bad practice. A time leader would cover the ground, but do it awkwardly. There did not seem to be a relevant cut-in leader that would also account for the lapse of time. We suggested either the invention of some break-in business; possibly moving some other part of the narrative to come in, or else cutting around the table in a series of close-ups if the business warranted the use of that footage.

But the author was not content. There must be some set rule by which he could work, and he wanted the rule. There is not, and cannot be, any rule save that of common sense. If the action warrants its use, use action. If not then cut in with something else. If there is nothing else and nothing can be invented then use a time leader to break with, but first of all use judgment, and judgment comes only with practice.

It is for this reason that we recommend that the student, particularly at the start, write many plays rather than write one many times. It is only through usage that judgment comes, and the single play, vamped and revamped, will not give a sufficiently wide practice. In time the author comes to value his work instinctively and to know when to break with leader and when to use some other device. By that time he will not find himself unable to use related action. He'll either take action from some other part of the story or invent something new. He cannot do it with his first script still to master. He can do it, and without thinking, on his hundred and first. Sometimes this action, brought in merely to break with, will develop into an important and essential part of the plot.

The Old Guard.

"What has become of what you call the Old Guard?" asks a chatty correspondent. "From the little I am able to find out, only the ones who got studio jobs made good. The others were ruined when the market changed."

We wouldn't put it precisely that way. The best of the old guard went into the studios when the market changed. The market changed from free lancing to the staff system and the staffs were formed of the best men from among the free lances. The others were not ruined. If they failed to get ahead, it was because they lacked the intelligence or the energy to do something else. The money had come so easily when it did come in that they did not have the spirit to go out and look for jobs. They hung on to the fringe of things and drifted. In the natural order of things these would have been passed by in the long run, for they had no stamina, at best. The change to the staff system merely hastened their descent. You'll find the real old guard either in the studios or making money in some other way. It was only the "easy comes" who were ruined.

Take It Easy.

Two or three authors have written in lately to ask about the use of their stories without payment. In each case they have been advised to query the company as to the oversight, and so far as we know the checks have been forthcoming. It is a much better way than writing a belligerent letter with a threat of lawsuit, and it brings results more quickly and leaves the author in an advantageous position with the studio. Some of the most reliable companies have poor business systems and are apt to overlook the sending of release slips. They are honest and they try to keep their affairs straight, but slip-ups will occur now and then through no intention, and it is always better to presume that the oversight has been unintentional until intent to defraud has been proven. Take it easy and you will make more friends and have a better market.

Coming Back.

"I stopped writing for a time and now I can't come back," writes an old-timer. That is plain nonsense. He can come back if he realizes that stories have gone ahead while he has been marking time. Lately we have cured a couple of sick authors, and we know it can be done, but it won't work out so long as the patient takes up the work just where he dropped it. The best stories of today are coming more and more to take their punch from the mental side of the story instead of trusting to clutching hands and mysterious pistol shots. Those are all necessary enough in serials to carry the interest on, but the best five-part stories now gain their strength from the idea rather than from the situations. Don't go by the average of the present production but be guided by the best of the current plays and you will strike the new level.

Travesty.

One of the old timers wants to know why it is that we see no more pictures of the type of "Stuff Dreams are Made Of" and "Why Girls Leave Home." There is no good reason why we don't. There are several good reasons why we should, but the main trouble seems to be that there are few directors who can put on travesty. They are apt to make it over into the Keystone style, in which extravagance replaces exaggeration. There is a very fine line between high tragedy, travesty and burlesque, and most directors seem to achieve burlesque when they aim at travesty. The trouble with travesty is that it must be really clever. Burlesque may be merely funny.

Punch Plus.

Punch alone will not sell a story. You must have something to make the punch worth while. Try mixing it with a good plot. Too many stories are all punch and no plot.

It All Depends.

The other day we met two men. One said the market was dead. The other had a check for a thousand dollars for a five-reel story. Both were correct.

Folding.

Fold very brief synopses as you would letters. Do not make the usual two folds and then wad it up. But it is better to use large envelopes even for short synopses.

Keep It Going.

If someone else beats you to the story you've been thinking of, don't forget the plot, keep on thinking about it until it looks different.

Help Hoover.

Whole wheat bread is a better brain food. Perhaps it will help your stories.

Triangles.

Any boob can write about two men and a woman, but it takes a real author to get a fresh thought.

Keep Busy.

Because you want to be an author is no reason why you should be a loafer. Keep on plugging, even if the market is bad.

Market Note.

You can get from $500 to $1,000 for a five-reel synopsis, but it has to be the right sort of story and not merely one your friends like.

Technique of the Photoplay

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second sets of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Very Fine Work.

Recently the editor received an invitation to visit the Academy of Music, Fourteenth street, New York City, operated by the Fox Film Corporation as a motion picture theater de luxe, and constructively criticise the projection therein, my criticism to include all those things going to make up the finished screen result.

To begin with the Academy was, in days past and gone, one of Gotham's leading playhouses. Its interior is more than ordinarily spacious; also it is very pleasing to the eye. The stage setting, when the lights are on, compares favorably with anything I have seen to date. When the lights are off, however, and the picture is on, the semi-circle of columns at either side of the screen, and the railing in front and below look white, and this causes a certain amount of distraction to the eye when looking at the picture. This is only true when the orchestra lights are on. The orchestra is a large and most excellent one; also its music lights are the best screened I have seen to date. Although the entire orchestra played throughout the photoplay, the screen was very little affected. The music lies in a sort of box. In other words the music racks have sides and back several inches deep and the musicians sit sidewise to the audience and the screen, very little light reaches either the eyes of the audience (except possibly at the sides of the auditorium) or the screen. I can heartily commend the Academy arrangement to all theater managers who use an orchestra. The screen is bordered with black, which is both technically and practically correct. Some large theaters in this city commit error by too great reduction of the black border. At least one of the films used was perfect as to its perforations and I thus had proof of the splendid condition of the machines. While that film was on, the picture was literally as steady as a stereopticon picture. The definition was excellent and the speed of projection correct; also the picture had good perspective—more than ordinary "depth," and an excursion to the stage and one of the boxes proved that there was no fade-away, or at least not enough to be discerned. Eighty amperes d. c. are used. The distance of projection is 138 feet and the picture 19 feet 7 inches wide. Taken altogether I was very much pleased with what I saw at the Academy of Music. The work was excellent, the screen very much above the average, the projectors in splendid condition, the speed approximately right and the whole performance pleasing. I noticed one peculiar effect. Two or three slides were projected advertising future bills. They were lettered in lines of different colors and I noticed that some lines would seem to stand out seven or eight feet further toward one than would others. It was a most odd effect and it seems to me indicates that the Academy screen would give a wonderful effect with colored pictures.

Projection in the Academy of Music and all the Fox New York City theaters is under the supervision of C. W. Johnson, and we must "hand it to" that gentleman as being past master of his profession. I know of no one man in whose hands I would rather place a knotty problem in projection than those of friend Johnson. He is an example of the right man in the right place.

Sorry, but Can't Do It.

Fred K. Zametkin, Instructor of Classes, Murray Hill High School, New York City, has the following to say concerning a motion picture operators' class now being conducted in that school:

> Your efforts to make of operating a science and projection an art are too well known among the profession to need my praise; the mere mention is sufficient. Will you not add still further to your valuable service in this respect by giving proper publicity to the class in motion picture operating which the Board of Education has opened for the benefit of those in the exhibiting industry? Such a proceeding on your part will have extreme value. It is evident the Board of Education is not interested in the glutting of the market with half-baked tyros, but in the development and training of efficient operators, to whom projection will be an art and a science. This course is being given at the Murray Hill High School and no fee is required.

Friend Zametkin, I do not in the least doubt your sincerity, but I do most emphatically dissent from the action of the Board of Education. I would welcome an action which would compel present New York City operators to study the technical side of their profession, and study it good and hard, too. And it is very likely that very thing will happen in the near future, because I have been told, on what seems good authority, that there will be a general re-examination of all New York City operators before the next cards are issued. Zowie! If that happens (and I hope it does) there is going to be a wildly agitated cloud of dust hovering over a large percentage of the men as they scratch the educational gravel, or there will be one fine, large bunch of them minus that little license card. But to get back to my text. I cannot approve of the school, for the very simple reason that theory without practice is almost as bad as practice without theory. Would you care to ride behind a locomotive engineer, friend Zametkin, who had learned locomotive running in a school? Wouldn't feel quite safe, would you? You want the engineer you ride behind to have served his time as a fireman and know from actual experience how the old thing works, don't you? Echo answers, "You bet I do!" Well, the moving picture machine operator can no more learn the projection of pictures in a school than a man can learn the trade of locomotive engineer in a school! It requires practical theatrical projection experience and study to make a really competent operator. The Board of Education can turn out men drilled in theory, which is necessary, excellent and all very well, but they will be entirely devoid of any actual, bona fide experience. In other words, they will not have served any apprenticeship at all, whereas no operator can become a really competent projectionist without at least one year of actual apprenticeship, supplemented by hard study, and two years would be much more like it. For these reasons I cannot recommend the school, except to practical operators. They would benefit, provided the instruction is (and I have no reason to doubt that it is) bona fide. I notice the printed advertisement says: "Motion Picture Operatong, Frederick Zametkin. Motion Picture Machine Operating and electricity incidental thereto; preparing for license examination." Aha! The proverbial feline hath leaped from the mythical bag. "Preparing for license examination" doth not sound overly good to your Uncle William! Looks suspicious, brother Zametkin! "Preparing for high-class projection" would have sounded very much more convincing, I assure you.

Ten Per Cent. in U. S. Service.

I have it upon the authority of Business Agent W. G. Woods, Moving Picture Machine Operators' L. U. 162, San Francisco, that just ten per cent. of its membership is now serving under Old Glory, the latest to go being Frank Whitfield, who was handed a commission as First Lieutenant in the Signal Corps department of Cinematography, and ordered to Columbia University at New York as instructor in this new branch of the service.

Whitfield was accounted a rare find by the recruiting officer as, aside from being an expert laboratory man in the making of motion pictures, he has had much experience in photography from aeroplanes and balloons; also he is the inventor of several devices connected with motion picture making and projecting, notably a non-infringing, taking camera, which worked without loops, and which would have made his fortune had not this particular main-stay of the Patents Company been declared invalid by the courts.

Local 162 is to be complimented. Ten per cent. is indeed a goodly showing. But the San Francisco union contains an unusual number of high class men, and from such an organization it is just what we might expect.

Rectifier on Polyphase Current.

W. B. Allen, Edmont, Alberta, wants to know, (A) Does the G. E. or the Westinghouse make a rectifier for polyphase? (B) When my 30 amp rectifier is connected across a three-wire (neutral grounded) 220-110 volt system voltmeter shows 48 across lamp terminals when arc is burning, and 110 when it is and carbons separated. When connected to one side (110 volts) it is the same. Why does it not show 220 across lamp when arc is not burning and 220 supply is connected?

(A) You can use any mercury arc rectifier on polyphase by connecting to one leg of the line only. But you should first consult the power company. Maybe they will object. (B) Because when you change from 110 to 220 you also change an internal connection of the rectifier, which causes the reactance to reduce the line voltage to 110 before it reaches the lamp side of things. You cannot get 220 volts at the tube. It would go bluey if you did.

Oscar Sheck Universal Adapter for Mazda Lamps.

Some time since this department made mention of the Sheck Adapter and appliances, marketed by the Argus Lamp and Appliance Company. The Sheck adapter seems, as well as it is possible to judge from the photographs I have seen, to be very well made, and well adapted to the service it is expected to perform. The first illustration shows the Sheck lamphouse and condenser holder, the combination being known as the "Sheck Adapter." This device is a complete lamphouse in itself. The descriptive pamphlet says: "Fits on the front of any existing make of carbon-arc machine, so that any type of Mazda Projector Lamp may be properly focused in it for successfully projecting motion pictures in place of the carbon arc, within the limitations of the different types of Mazda Projector Lamps."

As I understand the matter the adapter fits on the front of any existing make of lamphouse. The adapter is, at present, made in three models, viz.: "A," for use where 20 ampere, 30 volt, 600 watt lamp is used; "B," for use where 30 ampere, 25 volt, 750 watt lamp is used, and "D," for use where 30 ampere, 40 volt, 1,200 watt lamp is used.

In conjunction with the adapter the Argus Company puts out what is known as the Argus Curent Regulator, which is shown at A in second illustration for a. c. and at B for d. c. The a. c device is a transformer, for which an efficiency of 88 per cent. is claimed by the manufacturer. This department has made no test. As I understand the matter the transformer does not regulate the voltage automatically, but depends on the operator for action to compensate for line voltage fluctuation. The d. c. regulator is, I presume, a small motor generator set, but as to its efficiency or mechanical construction I am not advised. Presumably both are good.

An Act of Fine Courtesy.

Among other things the Ball Committee of Local Union 306 gave to the editor, who was a member of the committee, the duty of inviting sister locals to the Grand Ball at Palm Garden, February 14. I wrote Local Union 110, suggesting the advisability of the two leading cities in these United States getting into closer touch, suggesting, as a means to that end, that 110 send a representative to the ball. I pointed out to 110 that money thus expended would not be wasted, because the good feeling thus engendered would be worth the outlay.

An immediate reply came that my suggestion had been adopted, and there appeared at the ball not one but two representatives from the great organization of the Windy City by the Lakes, Messrs. Malloy and Brown, its two business agents.

It was an act of fine courtesy, and one which I venture to say the New York men will long remember. Chicago now has a splendid organization, headed by a splendid man, Joseph Armstrong, and the union is forging rapidly ahead in the right direction. Local 110 is now an organization of which the I. A. may well be proud.

Tommy Malloy is an efficient business agent and a fine fellow from any point of view. Brother Brown I do not know so well, but that he is one of Armstrong's right hand men is sufficient. If he wasn't all right he would not be close to Joe, I'll bet my hat on that. Also Malloy says Brown is "the goods," and that clinches the matter.

We compliment Local 110 on its advanced action. It will, or should, cement a bond of friendship between the two organizations, because it was an act of pure courtesy, in which was mixed no element but friendliness and kindly feeling.

A Warning to Exhibitors and Operators.

At least one company is making the claim that the Mazda lamp will produce as much illumination on the screen as the average carbon-arc consuming "from 35 amperes of direct current to 60 and, in some cases, 80 amperes of alternating current."

I do not wish to go into this matter at this time, except to warn operators and exhibitors that the Mazda, even in the largest unit yet used for projection, will do nothing of the sort. The Mazda lamp has its field, and will fill it well, but such extravagant claims as this will not make for it any large number of friends. To undertake to duplicate the foot candle light intensity of a 35 ampere arc on a screen with a Mazda is, at this time at least, attempting the impossible, unless the arc is miserably handled indeed. A properly handled 80 ampere a. c. arc is equal in foot candle screen illumination 40 ampere d. c. arc, and a 60 ampere a. c. arc is equal to a 30 ampere d. c. arc, or very nearly so.

The best the Mazda can possibly hope to do at this stage of its development is to duplicate the average screen result (mark you well I do not say light intensity) of 25 ampere d. c. arcs, or of 50 ampere a. c. arcs operating on 60 cycle current. On 25 cycle curent the Mazda could improve average results from most any amperage.

Speer Alterno Carbons Favorably Received by Operators.

The new Speer Alterno carbon is favorably reported on by operators who have been using it. L. C. LaGrow makes a typical report. He says:

> Reporting on Speer "Alterno" carbons. Have been testing three-quarter diameter on 48 to 60 amperes (my current fluctuates more than any I have heretofore used) a. c. and find them to give excellent (italics are LaGrows.—Ed.) results. These carbons seem to be very evenly and well baked. The light from them is peculiarly restful. It is a bluish white. They do not break or flame on slight changes; the crater is large and uniformly round. There is only one criticism I can offer, viz.: the 12-inch carbons are pointed on both ends, and both upper and lower—that is to say, the 12 and 10-inch—are very indifferently pointed. This is a "point" the Speer folks will do well to improve upon; also one point would be better than two.

Brother LaGrow is a high-class operator and his opinion is of real value. He made the test for this department. His criticism is respectfully referred to the Speer Company for their undivided attention. It is merely a mechanical fault, and should be easy to remedy. In addition to LaGrow, the following operators have made favorable reports directly to the Speer Carbon Company, and by them the reports were transmitted to us: B. A. Reed, secretary M. P. M. O. Local Union 245, Salem, Mass., who says they give even, steady light of remarkable quality, without former worries of noisy, wandering, troublesome arc; A. L. Fuller, manager Opera House, Carthage, N. Y., who reorders and says they find them unexcelled fo a. c.; Wm. F. Haitz, proprietor and manager Dillinger theater, Batavia, N. Y., who says his operator uses them for his spot lamps on stage and finds them free from noise, and that they give steady light. W. Trout, projection engineer, Oklahoma City, Okla. (Hello, Friend Trout! Why did you not make a report to this department direct. Just wait until I see you again, Mr. Man, that's all!—Ed.), who, from his typewritten conversation, certainly does like the new carbon all right. Says they are the "best ever," and other good things; R. R. Laurier, chief operator New Orpheum theater, Rondout, N. Y., says the samples sent for trial did wonderful work. He orders 100 uppers and 100 lowers; S. B. Leland, Leland Theater Supply House, Montpelier, Vt., orders 1,000 and says, "The people who have used Alterno are very enthusiastic over them"; C. S. Musser, manager Opera House, Shepherdstown, West Virginia says the Alterno is noiseless in operation, has increased their screen illumination and made the arc easier to handle.

Mind you these letters, except LaGrow's, are not from operators who have made a test for this department. But they nevertheless have legitimate value, and the evidence at hand establishes in our mind the propostion that the Speer Alterno carbon is very much in advance of the old style carbon for a. c.; also that it is a well made and excellent carbon. It is, of course, designed for use on alternating current only.

Operators' Bible.

Kenneth S. Ingalls, Danville, Quebec, asks questions and pays compliments thusly:

> Every letter from me contains a lot of questions. This one is no exception. My only excuse is that I know of no one other than yourself who can always put me right, or who could if he would. You, yourself and your handbooks, first, second and third editions, have certainly saved me a lot of trouble and worry. The handbook surely is rightly named the "Operators' Bible." And now to my present troubles.
> On page 211 of present handbook you advise against a projection distance of less than 50 feet. Is there any serious objection, from the projection standpoint, of a 42-foot throw? My screen is a plaster wall, the theatre is 22 x 60 feet, and one machine is 3 and the other 6 feet to right side of the center of the screen. Otherwise I can locate and equip the operating room exactly as you advise, pages 211 to 213 of the Handbook. This location of the operating room is made practically necessary by the construction of the building. The main floor, to be used for seating, extends back from the screen but 45 feet. The balcony begins at this line and extends back to end of building, 60 feet. Seating capacity about 200. Thus, the nearest seats on the main floor are 30 feet from the screen and the balcony seats run from 45 to 60. Considering above would you advise a ten-foot picture? I can make a fifteen-foot picture glisten with the a. c. we have here. Want your say-so with regard to Mazda vs. arc, and we are all waiting for it. The incandescent will surely help us a. c. users a lot if it will do half the good things that the jobbers claim for it.
> I am about half-way through your question booklets. Hope to be able to answer them all in time. It means a lot of study, but is worth more than the time it takes. Can you advise me as to what I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O. union I am in the jurisdiction of? Before closing, I want to thank you for all you have done for me personally, as an operator, for your personal advice, for the projection department and for the question booklets, to say nothing of the handbooks. I can never hope to repay for all the actual value received, and the same old service is keeping up day by day, fully abreast of and I think a little ahead of the times.

It is the occasional letter like this which heartens one for the grind. For you may take it from me there are times when one gets thoroughly and completely discouraged and disgusted with the continual bickerings and quarrels and the effort to maintain a just balance without reaping a constant harvest of bricks from manufacturers who can see but one thing good on earth and that is their particular product, from narrow-minded union men who thinks the union is not only the first, but also the middle, the last, and the only thing on earth, from exchange managers who object, with a mighty objection, to my compelling them to keep their films in at least runable condition, from exhibitors who simply cannot understand that anything which obliges them to expend another dollar can have anything good in it, and from the pin-head who has not even a fancied grievance, but just raises hell on general principles. And, believe me, between them all my bed for the past eight years has not been one of roses. But, praise be, slowly but surely the solid-ivory tops become less as the days go by. They are still with us, but in not such numbers. I thank you, cordially, brother Ingalls. Any debt of gratitude you felt you owed me you have amply repaid by your kind letter.

As to the Mazda, this department will advise when it deems its installation to be expedient. One thing we wait for is a voltage regulator which may be depended upon to automatically regulate the voltage so that amperage will never vary more than one ampere. This seems absolutely essential to efficiency of the lamp. Lamps cost $7, and a rise of two amperes for any length of time is very apt to burn out the filament. If your operator can guarantee to hold the amperage without more than one ampere variation, and do it all the time, or if the manufacturer will guarantee to replace lamps which burn out in less than the 100-hour life expectancy, then I will agree right now that the Mazda will give as good or better general results than the average 25-ampere arc or the average 50-ampre a. c. arc. True, the arc will give brighter light, but the Mazda will give a steadier, evener one. Then, too, let me warn you that when handling a Mazda with a reflector, it is absolutely essential that the filament image fall between the filament coils, else the coils will be overheated and burn out. This will be made the subject of a separate article in the department very soon.

As to your distance of projection: Under the conditions named I certainly would not advise a larger picture than ten feet. Even so, your distortion with the machine six feet off center will be pretty bad and you may need to stop down your projection lens considerably in order to get definition all over the screen. What I would suggest, unless conditions forbid, would be the placing of the screen itself off center with the house. By so doing you could stop down your lens pretty well and project a reasonably good ten or maybe even a twelve-foot picture at 42 feet. The trouble lies in using such a short focal length lens. But with a straight throw you can get away with it fairly well. You might even try a fourteen-footer, though I would advise not more than twelve. But with your machine off center six feet and a 42-foot throw I would not attempt more than a ten-footer, and even that will be none the best. Your picture will be a little longer than it should be and correspondingly higher on one end than on the other. The wider the picture the greater this effect. You could, of course, correct the queer outline that this would give the picture by filling in the projector aperture, as per page 156 of the handbook. The distortion would remain, however, and would be very noticeable on a fifteen-foot picture, especially on titles and reading matter. To sum up: Place screen out of center and central with machines if practical, then use twelve-foot picture, stopping down projection lens to get definition, if necessary. If screen cannot be placed out of center, do not try greater size than ten feet, and don't expect very good results at that. Correct outline distortion by filling in aperture. I think you are within the jurisdiction of Local Union No. 56, oMntreal. Address George Dillon, secretary, Box 1333, Montreal.

A High Indorsement.

W. A. Oswald, Assistant Censor and Inspector, Vancouver, B. C., orders a handbook and Hallberg's Motion Picture Electricity. In connection with the order he says:

> These books will be for the use of the operators in the office for reference in case of trouble. Study of these books helped most of the boys to "get across" at our last examination. The use of these books, combined with good, plain common sense will without doubt help any operator to improve in his work.

Friend Oswald is somewhat retiring in disposition, and will probably take me to task for publishing his remarks. But I am taking that risk because his opinion may influence some operators to get a handbook, and I am firmly of the opinion that such action will be hugely to their benefit, provided, always, that after they have invested they study the book. I am willing to do almost any right thing in order to get the handbook into the hands of the men—every one of them, because, by so doing, I am helping them and the motion picture industry.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by GEORGE W. BEYNON.

Notice.

QUESTIONS regarding music, addressed to this department, will receive a carbon copy of the department's reply by mail, when 4 cents are enclosed. Special replies by mail on matter which cannot be answered in this column $1.00.

The Musical Library at the New York Strand.

"'Twas a dark and stormy night" when we called informally upon the genal conductor of the Strand Symphony Orchestra and asked him to tell us something new. Carl Edouarde, the gentleman in question, has a little Irish strain somewhere within him and he will not take a dare. Piloting us up two flights of winding stair he ushered us, grandiloquently, into his "sanctum sanctorum," where a librarian sorts, files and cares for the large library used in the setting of pictures.

On four sides lined against the wall and reaching almost to the ceiling are galvanized iron lockers, painted green (another evidence of strong Irish tastes). These were not filled with clothes, as one might expect, but contained music. Within each locker, from top to bottom, are shelves set in to leave a space of about two feet. These compartments hold a specific kind of music, the classification being labelled on the inside of the door directly facing them. Each locker is numbered on the outside, and the classification begins alphabetically with Locker No. 1. For example, commencing at the top compartment of No. 1, we noted "Agitatos," then "Anthems," "Battle Scenes" and "Berceuses," and so on through the entire shelving. In the last few were found "Songs," "Symphonies" and "Suites." These lockers are fire and dust-proof, easy of access, conserve space, and the finest thing of the kind we have seen. It was a big expense to install this system, but the saving of time, labor, wear and tear of the music has made it all worth-while.

"I do not use the tempo classification," said Mr. Edouarde, "because it is misleading. Besides," he continued, "many numbers have changes of tempi in them and frequently we can get better effects from an Andante found in a Suite than by the use of a piece that is Andante in itself.

"After I have seen the picture to be presented, noted the cues, and made a memorandum of the possibilities in the way of music, my librarian takes the data and brings me the music requested. Many of the numbers cannot be used for various reasons. Each is stamped with the date last played, and we make it a practice never to repeat more than once within three months. And I can assure you Manager Edel is just as strong for this ruling as I am. We adhere to it strictly.

"After the music is selected, my librarian puts it in its proper rotation, cue sheets are typed and placed on each music stand with the setting. This is only a small part of the presentation of the picture. The little artistic touches, lighting effects, dramatic effects, and surprises, are worked out in conference with Mr. Edel, our electrician, and sometimes our concert master."

We asked Mr. Edouarde his opinion regarding the use of more than one theme in a setting. We have continually maintained in this column that it is neither practical nor feasible with a small orchestra, but it is possible with a large combination; yet with an orchestra of fifty men Mr. Edouarde says, "I believe one theme is enough for any picture with but few exceptions. Once in a while a feature requires two for the purpose of contrast, but never more. Even in 'Stella Maris' we used only one, and ignored the dual character, leaving it to the intelligence of the audience to distinguish between the two roles. People do not want the music to make the picture too obvious but like a little mental exercise with their enjoyment of it.

"For that reason I believe in portraying the emotion of a scene and allowing the atmospheric effects, such as rain, waves, storm and wind, to be done 'Back scenes.' In 'The Beloved Traitor' we had a deathbed scene of deepest sorrow, while outside raged a storm of rain and wind. The usual method of fitting this situation would be the use of a 'tempest' number or a 'hurry.' We used the 'Lamento,' by Gabriel Marie, for the orchestra, and off-stage the wind machines worked overtime. It was a long scene and had we played a 'hurry' it would have become monotonous in the extreme.

"In this connection I might say that I do not believe in fitting each little flash. We try to get the general feeling of the picture and work up to its climax, using long numbers if possible. If the prevailing emotion of a scene remains on the screen for an unusually long period I take that opportunity of resting my orchestra and allow the organ to fit it. This gives change of musical color to the setting and is only one of the many means by which I obtain variety of tonal effects.

"No picture is properly presented unless it has variety of coloring. If the setting comprises selections that are of the same order, orchestrated much in the same manner and similarly melodious, it becomes tedious to the audience. No artist ever painted a masterpiece in one color, and no great symphony has been written for strings alone. I try to introduce numbers containing oboe, flute, French horn, or cello solos. To get change of color we use a harp and frequently put in a selection of chamber music, if a special color be desired.

"It requires strong mental poise to refrain from using the brass too much. Every conductor loves the ff. passages and his inclination leans strongly that way continually, yet the art lies in reserving the brass section of the orchestra for coloring. Frequently we purposely keep it silent even when a part is written for them. The composer might not like it, but then he did not fit the picture, nor did he write for pictures. Thus we are forced to edit his works to get the best results in the coloring of our musical settings."

Carl Edouarde is one of the few pioneer moving picture conductors and still keenly enthusiastic over his work. His years of band and orchestral experience proved of untold value when he entered this new field. He is conscientious in his efforts and continually strives to better his performances. He has been a big help to many young musicians and always stands ready to assist them with his sound advice and good counsel.

Music at the Rivoli.

During the week commencing March 10 the Rivoli presented almost an entire Spanish performance. The Rothapfel idea of keeping everything in the atmosphere of the feature is a good one, and should be emulated by every exhibitor desiring increased box office receipts. "Roxy's" foot slipped a bit when he introduced a Japanese dancer, who, though very artistic in her number, completely upset the Spanish ensemble effect.

The overture, "Espana," by Chabrier, was well played by the orchestra, and carried all the necessary "pep" to get it over. Emo Rapee was not altogether happy in his conducting thereof, but the number succeeded in spite of him.

Following the overture a scenic called "Glimpses of Hawaii" received a magnificent musical setting, and was further enhanced by the appropriate selection "Aloho Oe," rendered by Helen Morrill and the Rivoli Chorus. They were programed as two numbers, but dove-tailed so well that we felt that they belonged to each other. The singing was remarkably good, the costumes true to type, and the lighting effects a la Rothapfel—superb.

The music for the pictorial was a procession of marches, which to the layman in the audience meant a choppy presentation. If it required so many we failed to see it, and feel sure that it had a nervous effect upon the patrons. However, what was played was well played, which is praise in these days when orchestras turn a march into a one-step.

Miguel Vidal sang "Lolita," by Buzzi-Peccia. The best part of this number was the fact that the song and the singer were both Spanish, in keeping with the general tone of the performance. Our old friend Doug. Fairbanks followed in "Headin' South," and the music selected could not be bettered. Fairbanks' pictures are hard to fit adequately, but the Rivoli never seems to find obstacles that are insurmountable. One thing that pleased us immensely was the lack of organ in the feature. The orchestra played it through without the usual rest period. The organ has no place in a comedy, and but few exhibitors realize how their audience feels on this subject. Mr. Rothapfel is more than "abreast of the times" in these matters; he leads the times.

The Japanese Dance, before mentioned, came seventh on the program, followed by a Drew comedy, and the usual excellent organ solo closed the bill. All that was needed to make this show absolutely wonderful was a Spanish dancer in number seven spot. It is remarkable what a hit can be made by living up to one idea throughout the entire performance and making everything conform thereto. Speaking to exhibitors, we suggest that you try it. It is worth publicity in quantities, and should bring good business.

"Moral Suicide" Music.

Last Tuesday at the New York Roof Ivan Abramson presented, for the trade showing, his masterly depiction of life's problem, "Moral Suicide." George Beynon is found guilty of perpetrating the music, which was admirably handled by the Loew orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Lutz.

This score is unique in its varied themes, and made a decided hit with the large audience. Leah Baird, acting the "vamp" role, drew "My Heart At Thy Sweet Voice" from the opera "Samson et Delilah," while Ann Luther, was given that beautiful Waltz from "Lucia Di Lammermoor." John Mason found expression in the Ballet Music from "La Traviata" and the son was given that characteristic number "Le Coucon" by Arensky. "Don Jose's Aria" from "Carmen" fitted the hero to perfection, especially during his love scenes. All these themes are woven together in such a manner that if the eye should stray from the picture the ear would tell who was performing thereon.

The balance of the score is made up from such dramatic operas as "Fedora," "Queen of Sheba," "Tristan and Isolde," "Mephistofele," and gems from the old masters—namely, "Reproche"—Karganoff; "La Coquette"—Onivas; "Nocturne"—Chopin; "Canzonetta"—Heimendahl; Norwegian Folk Song—Borch; Excerpts from Erminie, and a couple of two-steps.

The picture does not depend upon battle scenes or patriotism to "get over," but deals in the big problems of life as one sees them all about him. A slovenly setting would ruin the presentation of it, and it is strongly advisable that the exhibitor booking this feature should procure the score that fits every foot of film.

Music for "My Four Years in Germany."

Last week there crept into another column of our paper an error, which we are pleased to correct. It was stated that the music, specially written for the picture now playing at the Knickerbocker theater—"My Four Years in Germany"—was arranged by Hugo Reisenfeld. The facts in the matter are different. Meyer Brothers took entire charge of the musical setting, and have given the picture a well arranged score, which materially adds to the feature.

Musical Suggestion Synopsis.

BEGGAR WOMAN, THE (Russian Art—Five Reels)—Theme for the Heroine—Andante and Russian. Suggest "Song of the Boatmen of the Volga"—Cady, or "Visions"—Tschaikowsky.

Pathetic stuff is needed most for this picture. The atmosphere is entirely Russian, and the following list may benefit small libraries, which are weak in Russian music: "Gondoliera"—Moszkowski; "Reve Angelique"—Rubinstein; "Russian Romance"—Friml. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Pathe Exchange.

EVE'S DAUGHTER (Paramount—Five Reels)—Theme for the Heroine—Allegretto. Suggest "In the Shadows"—Finck; "Nodding Tulip" Trinkhaus, or "Serenade"—Frommel.

Light music will fit the picture, a few semi-pathetics, a couple of agitatos and many waltz intermezzos. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Paramount Exchange.

FAITH ENDURIN' (Triangle—5 Reels)—Theme for the Heroine—Allegretto. Suggest "Canzonetta"—Godard; "Serenade"—Drdla, or "Songs Without Words"—Tschaikowsky.

This picture is peculiar in its opening. You will need misterioso stuff and dramatic agitatos. The atmosphere becomes rustic and needs music like "Barchetta"—Nevin; "In Lovers' Lane"—Pryor, or "Violetta"—Tobani. Note the fire scene in the third reel. Cue sheets can be obtained from Triangle Exchange.

GIRL IN THE DARK, THE (Bluebird—Five Reels)—Theme for the Heroine—Moderato. Suggest "Intermezzo"—Huerter; "Serenade"—Karganoff, or "Melodie in F"—Rubinstein.

The story contains many dramatic situations. Melodramatic music is needed, such as agitatos, hurrys and misteriosos. There is considerable Chinese music needed to fit the "Tong Society" attempts to abduct the heroine. Suggest "Hop-Sing"—Katzenstein, or "Chinese Wedding Procession"—Hosmer. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Universal Exchange.

GIRL AND THE JUDGE, THE (Mutual—5 Reels)—Theme for the Heroine—Andante. Suggest "Dreams of Love"—Liszt; "Souvenir"—German, or "Romance"—Le Cocq.

The picture opens brightly, with a reception scene and a Hallowe'en partly in the first reel. The latter requires a Virginia Reel and a popular two-step. Much dramatic stuff is needed and a few pathetics. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Mutual Exchange.

HARD ROCK BREED, THE (Triangle—Five Reels)—Theme for the Heroine—Andante. Suggest "On Wings of Song"—Mendelsohn; "Serenade"—Cesek, or "Herd Girl's Dream"—Labitsky.

Western atmosphere. Melodious music will fit the first two reels. Note explosion effect in third and big fights in the fourth and fifth reels. A lot of dramatic agitatos are also necessary. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Triangle Exchange.

HOUSE OF GLASS, THE (Select—Five Reels)—Theme for the Heroine—Valse Lento. Suggest "Heartstrings"—Vecsey; "Chanson Triste"—Tschaikowsky, or "Destiny"—Bayones.

This is a melodrama requiring many misteriosos, agitatos and dramatic pieces. Note the change from eastern to western atmosphere and symbolize it in your music. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Select Exchange.

MORAL SUICIDE (Graphic—Seven Reels)—Theme for John Mason—Ballet Music—Moderato. Suggest "La Traviata Ballet," "Faust Ballet, Part 1, or "Canzonetta"—Nicode.

The picture is dramatic depiction of life. Many dramatic numbers, a couple of waltzes and two hurrys are needed; otherwise light music fits the first three reels. No cue sheets available, but a score can be obtained from the Graphic Film Company.

NOBODY'S WIFE (Universal—Five Reels)—Theme for the Heroine—Moderato. Suggest "Cavatina"—Bohm; "At Sunset"—Brewer, or "Dainty Daffodils"—Miles.

This picture needs mountain music. Suggest the "Mountain Suite"—Borch; "Peer Gynt Suite"—Grieg, and some of Nevin's pastorales. Light music will fit throughout. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Universal Exchange.

SIGN INVISIBLE, THE (National Exhibitors—Five Reels)—Theme for Lone Deer—Indian Music. Suggest "Dagger Dance" from "Natuna"—Herbert; "Indian Love Song"—Lake, or "Scalp Dance"—Lake.

You will need pastorale music a-plenty for this picture, and Canadian, if possible, such as "On the Banks of the Saskatewan." There is little dramatic music needed, many pathetics and a couple of hurrys. Cue sheets not available.

TRIUMPH OF VENUS, THE (Victor—Six Reels)—No theme necessary.

The music for this must be light, fantastic stuff, pastorale in the extreme, as it deals with the mythological gods and goddesses. Nothing dramatic is required, and it is strongly advisable to refrain from a too frequent use of waltzes. Scores can be obtained from the Victor Film Manufacturing Company.

WATCH YOUR NEIGHBOR (Paramount-Sennett—2 Reels).—Theme—none.

This is a comedy of slap-stick variety. Lots of rough and tumble scenes. Use the usual one-steps, two-steps, fox trots and light stuff. No cue sheets available.

WHIMS OF SOCIETY (World—5 Reels).—Theme for the heroine—Andantino.

Suggest "Remembrance," Telma; "Melodie," Lederer, or "Astarte," Mildenberg.

Most light stuff will suit this picture, with a couple of dramatic tensions and a few waltzes. Cue sheets can be obtained from the World exchanges.

Leaders' Service Bureau.

Questions Answered—Suggestions Offered.

Q. Is it true that the mother of Richard Strauss, the composer, was a daughter of a brewer?

A. Musical History by Gunn is the authority for this statement. "The mother of Richard Strauss was born and brought up in Munich and was the daughter of a well known brewer."

Q. There is a French horn player in our town who wants to play in my orchestra. I only use piano, violin, cello and drums. Would a French horn fit in this combination?

A. A French horn would be decidedly out of place in such a small combination. One French horn is never effective under any circumstances, because two or more are needed to give the required filling.

Q. Is the "Lest We Forget" score available?

A. There is, and a good one. Write Mr. W. E. Atkinson, the business manager of the Metro, and he will attend to your wants.

Q. I heard a crackerjack march, "Pershing's March," played in New York recently, but am unable to find out where it is published. Can you help me?

A. We are informed that this good march will be out and ready for sale about the 15th instant. It will be published by The Astoria Pub. Co., 505 Fifth avenue, New York.

Q. Does the Fox company put out cue sheets with the time noted thereon, and suggestions for themes and movements?

A. Fox Film Co. issue cue sheets on all their releases which can be procured from their exchanges. They do not give the time duration of each number nor specific suggestions, the tempo being given instead. We are sure that they would put you on their mailing list if you wrote them direct.

Q. I find the cue sheets supplied by ..... often repeat numbers, and my house manager has been complaining to me about playing certain pieces too frequently. He says his patrons tell him that I play the same old things over and over. Is there not some way to get action from the producing company furnishing these cue sheets? I have written their music editor several times, but he pays no attention to my letters.

A. Instead of writing the musical editor we would advise writing your exchange manager. He will get action where you have failed. See our article, "GET THE BEST IN CUE SHEETS."

Q. Why is it that so few of the big scores coming to my theater are arranged without any regard to synchrony whatever? Surely the arrangers preparing these scores must know that unless the music has been properly timed with the picture somebody is going to get balled up. I won't mention names, but there is not one arranger in ten who gives the slightest attention to synchronizing his score.

A. Have patience, brother; this child is just beginning to grow and little perfection can be expected yet. However, there are many scores that are synchronized in the beginning, but fail to come out right, because the film has been cut. This grievance should only obtain in a few scenes if the score has been properly put together in the first place.

Q. Where can I get an album containing all the latest New York fox-trots and one-steps?

A. We know of no such album procurable. Fox-trots and one-steps have short lives and no publisher desires to go to additional expense that has no outlook for future returns. Every music house will take your address and be pleased to send you each new edition as it comes off the press, charging you as you get it from time to time.

What Bringing Together the Big Three Means

Famous Players-Lasky Executive Outlines Importance of Co-operation Between Producer, Distributor and Exhibitor

NOTE.—In the following article, written exclusively for the Moving Picture World by Hiram Abrams, managing director of the administrative bureau of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, he discusses the bureau's relation to the problems of distribution. It is interesting to note that in pointing out the fact that the exhibitor should really be a salesman Mr. Abrams is speaking from personal experience. He entered the industry as an exhibitor in New England, and he immediately realized that if he could sell the pictures to other exhibitors, as well as to the public, he would benefit tremendously, for if there were more persons buying the product its price for him would go down proportionately . His success as a salesman while an exhibitor was so great that the distributing company with which he dealt finally insisted on his becoming affiliated with and interested in it. He became as good a salesman when an exchangeman as he was when an exhibitor, with the result that he has since become one of the great distribution executives. As managing director of the administrative bureau he is going to help other exhibitors make the most of the pictures they show. Here is Mr. Abram's exposition of the work to be accomplished by the bureau which he heads:

By Hiram Abrams.

NOT so many months ago the advertising manager of a great metropolitan newspaper presented to the executive head of a large film distributing corporation a comprehensive plan for the advertising and general exploitation of the particular brand of pictures that the film magnate controlled. The plan was quite attractive and carefully plotted out in blue print form, and the advertising man had high hopes of putting it over and landing a big contract.

The film man looked it over casually, and then remarked briefly that he was not interested in newspaper advertising. The other man had red hair, and the interview did not end at that point, rather to the disgust of the other.

"Look here," said the newspaper man. "Let me understand your point of view. You sell your pictures to the general public, don't you?"

"No!" replied the film man. "That's where you're wrong. The general public is what we don't sell our pictures to. We sell our pictures to about ten thousand exhibitors. Why should I spend money to buy space to attempt to sell pictures to people who are not possible customers? The general public doesn't own the theaters, and I don't care what happens to the pictures as long as my customers, the exhibitors, buy them. All the advertising I am going to do will be concentrated in the trade papers, where I get 100 per cent. value, where only the exhibitor, whom I wish to reach, will get my message."

"But in the final analysis, who is your customer?" asked the other. "Doesn't the success of your pictures depend on how the public takes to them? It is the public that pays to see the pictures, isn't it?"

"Well," said the film magnate shortly, "that's the exhibitors' problem, not ours. It's up to him to fill his house. We can't run his theater for him, can we? We have our own troubles."

Whereat the newspaper man threw up his hands in despair and left the office. It was plain to him that to argue with the film man would be useless. He was set in his idea.

And he wasn't alone in thinking as he did. His is still the prevalent attitude in certain companies. That this is not the attitude held by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is evidenced by the national advertising campaign now being made direct to the general public.

"We have worries of our own. We can't run the exhibitor's theaters for him. We've got to sell him the pictures, and then it's up to him. To sell the customers is his job, not ours."

That is not an attitude which is productive of success. It is necessary to realize that the producer, distributor and exhibitor are all working toward one thing—to sell the public.

The administrative bureau of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, where it deals with distribution problems, is the highest development of that idea. Organized, as has been explained, to develop a co-operation between the three sides of the triangle, producer, distributor and exhibitors, its main work in correlating the latter two sides will be in helping the exhibitor sell his pictures to other exhibitors and to the public.

The public is the final customer. A film company may be able to sell its pictures to every exhibitor in the country, on their sheer merit. But once that is done, the transaction is only half completed. The pictures are still unproductive. They have brought in no actual returns. It is only when the public pays its money to see them that they begin to bring in any part of what they cost to make, distribute and show. Then the exhibitor, the distributor and the producer get their profits. The public gets its money's worth, and a sound business transaction has been completed.

The film producer or distributor whose sole desire is to sell his exhibitor only is going to lose in the end. His transaction isn't sound economically. Suppose the exhibitor does rent his films. Suppose he does succeed in getting the public to look at them. All of them may make money. But they cannot make as much, nor can they make it so surely and certainly, as they could if they were all working together, in close co-operation.

If several million men wandered over to France and started fighting, each on his own hook, we might beat Germany. Strange things happen. But how would you bet on the outcome of such a fight? And if we did win, how many more lives would be lost, and how much longer would it take, and how much more money would it cost, than if we were organized, all fighting together for the same end?

The war has a great many lessons for all of us, but perhaps the biggest and most valuable one is the lesson of cooperation.

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has pictures to sell. It can sell them to the only market for pictures, the public. To aid in the sales there are salesmen. But while our sales forces comprise hundreds of skilled sales experts, we have fewer salesmen than we should have. In other words, we want six thousand salesmen for Paramount and Artcraft pictures. To make a salesman out of every exhibitor, and to increase our sales force by this six thousand and more, is one of the aims of the bureau.

Many exhibitors do not realize that they should be salesmen. The bureau will hammer at them until they realize that they belong to the family, that they are one branch of the sales force.

Suppose we have six thousand salesmen, each in a different district with a large clientele, all pounding away at the same article, selling the public night and day. Isn't the demand for that article going to go flying sky-high? And when it does, every one of the six thousand will reap benefits more than commensurate with the efforts he expended.

And, remember, the individual sales efforts of every exhibitor showing the pictures are unified and backed by the national organization, which advertises direct to the customers, the public. The entire organization is turned into one gigantic army, all working for the good of the whole in order that the greater good of each individual may be secured. That's the principle on which states are built. It's the principle on which industries are built.

There is another reason why the exhibitor of Paramount and Artcraft pictures must be a salesman of those pictures. This is a financial reason, and therefore will have a more direct appeal to the exhibitors.

A Paramount or Artcraft picture costs so much to make. The cost of production plus a reasonable profit on the investment is the price it must bring in in the long run.

In the long run! Which means, as indicated above, that the money must come from the public. It follows, then, that the more people who see the picture, the smaller will be the burden on each exhibitor instrumental in showing it. And this benefit will work all the way up. The more exhibitors there are showing a picture the less it will cost each exhibitor.

Thus it is the exhibitor's direct interest to sell the pictures to other exhibitors, not only because he must bring in returns for himself on the sales, but also because the prices for his rentals will be smaller in proportion to the total circulation reached. If ten exhibitors show a picture that costs a hundred dollars, it will cost them ten dollars apiece. If there are twenty of them, it will cost them only five. It's up to those ten, then, to get busy and sell ten more. Then their expenses will be cut in half through their own efforts.

Co-operation, then, means the all around benefit of every side of the triangle. The administrative bureau will effect the cooperation by helping exhibitors to sell their pictures to the public and to other exhibitors. The national organization will do its part by advertising the pictures nationally, to the general public.

There must also be a cooperation between exchanges and the exhibitors. The bureau will act in one of its functions as an arbiter and adjuster between those two factors.

In the past there has occasionally been friction between these two sides of the triangle, due in large measure to the prevailing attitude that the exhibitor and exchangeman were opposing forces, an attitude which sometimes resulted in misunderstandings. This attitude cannot exist in company with the idea of pulling together, and it is to be hoped that there will be little of it in the future. But when there are differences, as there are bound to be; the bureau will review the facts in the case, acting in a manner as a court of equity, and will arbitrate to the satisfaction of both.

Thus in both the problems of production and in the problems of distribution the administrative bureau will work for closer union between all factors, with the aim of correlating the entire industry into a solid, firmly-based and evenly-directed whole, which will advance for the good of all concerned.

Lottie Briscoe Returns to Screen

Long Time Lubin Favorite Will Be Seen in Metro's "The House of Mirth."

LOTTIE BRISCOE will be welcomed back to the screen when "The House of Mirth," Metro's picture version of Edith Wharton's great novel, is presented, under the direction of Albert Capellani. Miss Briscoe will have the important role of Gertie Farrish, the girl, in that society drama of lavish living. Gertie performs the unusual feat of living within her means.

At the Metro studio Miss Briscoe will be once more working under the same roof with Francis X. Bushman, whose first experience in motion pictures was in the same company with her at the old Essanay studio. This favorite player has been away from the screen world recently, as the result of an operation, and her thousands of admirers everywhere, who have watched her career, both on the stage and in motion pictures, will hail her return with delight. During a four-year experience with the Lubin company, when she appeared opposite Arthur Johnson, and earlier, in stock and dramatic productions, she was a marked favorite.

Lottie Briscoe.

Lottie Briscoe went on the stage at the early age of four, in her home town of St. Louis. For forty-two weeks she played the child Essie with Richard Mansfield in "The Devil's Disciple." After appearing as Editha in "The Burglar" she joined Mr. and Mrs. Russ Whytal in "For Fair Virginia."

With Mansfield, in addition to "The Devil's Disciple," she played the small Prince of Wales in "Richard III." and the boy in "The First Violin."

About the time she began to do up her hair, little Miss Briscoe went into stock work, to attain greater versatility. She played stock engagements in Pawtucket, with the Albee stock company, in Philadelphia, at the Chestnut Theater and the Park Theater, at the Fifth Avenue Theater, New York; in Milwaukee, Providence, Portland and Columbus. Fully equipped in this field, she next decided to invade motion pictures. In 1910 she became ingenue lead for Essanay. Going abroad, she was engaged on her return by the Majestic, having the distinction of being the first actress to be engaged by wireless. With the Imp company she played opposite King Baggot. It was with Lubin that she attained her greatest screen popularity. In the serial, "The Beloved Adventurer," and in such productions as "The District Attorney's Conscience," "The Power of the Cross," "Kiss Me Goodnight,' "The Parasite" and "Who Violates the Law," she became a national favorite. Screen patrons all over the country will welcome Lottie Briscoe back to the medium of her best-known talents.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of March 17 at New York's Principal Motion Picture Houses.

THE Strand—Mabel Normand in "The Floor Below," a Goldwyn picture in which she is supported by Tom Moore and a competent cast, was the attraction at the Strand for the week commencing March 17. The second episode of "Depths of the Sea," James Montgomery Flagg's latest satire, "The Stenog," and the Topical Review were also shown. Rosa Lind, Charles Semrof and Edith Sinclair were the soloists.

The Rialto—Enid Bennett in "Naughty, Naughty," was the leading screen feature at the Rialto. The story was written by C. Gardner Sullivan. Views of picturesque France, a comedy and the Animated Magazine were included in the program. Joseph Martell and Gladys Rice were the soloists.

The Rivoli—"Wild Youth," with Louise Huff and Theodore Roberts was the picture feature at the Rivoli. It is a J. Stuart Blackton production made from Sir Gilbert Parker's novel, and has a strong story. Italian war pictures and the Animated Pictorial completed the screen features. The Rialto Male Quartette and Frances Orr were the musical artists.

Eighty-First Street Theater—Douglas Fairbanks in "Headin' South" for the entire week. Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, "The Eagle's Eye" as an added feature. "My Father," a Benjamin Chapin "The Son of Democracy" number, the latter half.

Broadway—"The Kaiser."

Knickerbocker—"My Four Years in Germany."

Clay M. Greene Stricken Blind

Author of Many Plays and Scenarios and Former Lubin Director Victim of Vitreous Hemorrhage.

CLAY M. GREENE, former shepherd of the Lambs, of New York, and author of fifty plays and opera librettos and countless scenarios, was stricken blind in Los Angeles on March 16. At the time Mr. Greene was playing a game of solitaire at the Jonathan Club. Earlier in the same week Mr. Greene had experienced a sudden dimming of the left eye, and when he found he was completely blind in that eye he went to a specialist. An examination revealed a severe case of vitreous hemorrhage. Included in Mr. Greene's work for the stage are "M'liss," "Struck Oil," "Blue Beard," "The Little Trooper" and "The Golden Giant."

Clay M. Greene.

At the Lubin studio between 1913 and 1916 Mr. Greene put in a lot of work on scenarios and in directing. He was one of the stand-bys of the institution, and the connection was severed only because of the letting down of the work at the big Philadelphia shop owing to war encroachments.

As shepherd of the famous Lambs, Mr. Greene did much to bring that organization from the doldrums to its present position of power and importance in the theatrical field.

The playwright is a native of California and wrote a Passion Play for the ceremonies attending its fiftieth anniversary in 1901. This has been reproduced every third year since that time and is now an affair of wide interest on the Pacific Coast. He is sixty-eight years old. Eight years ago he married Mrs. Laura H. Robinson, author of many plays and sketches and collaborator with him in several of his works.

Exhibitors Should Pay for Own Negligence

Fred Dolle, Kentucky Showman, Thus Answers Carl Laemmle, Adding That Careful Men Should Not Be Penalized

EXHIBITORS of Louisville recently read with much interest a statement given out by President Laemmle, of the Universal, in which comments were made relative to the high cost of films and the fact that film manufacturers and distributors were forced to charge prices sufficient to cover the excessive costs of doing business due to the carelessness of exhibitors in not taking proper care of films while in their possession. Attention was called to the fact that machine operators do not properly rewind films, that they place them in boxes in such a way that the films are scratched and damaged in transit, failing properly to mend torn films, breaks, etc., so that much additional inspection is necessary. Attention is also called to the fact that much time is lost and films do not work to the best advantage on account of failure of exhibitors to return films promptly.

In this connection Fred Dolle, secretary of the Kentucky state organization, and president of the Broadway Amusement Enterprise, controlling ten theaters in Louisville, including several downtown houses, believes that the principle of making a general charge to cover such losses is all wrong. Mr. Dolle points out that it is an unfair and unjust idea to make the careful exhibitor pay for the carelessness of the bush league houses.

Mr. Dolle favors the principle of forcing the country exhibitor, the small exhibitors and careless exhibitors in general, to take care of all films and equipment sent to them. "If such exhibitors persist in sending back films, paper, etc., in bad condition, force them to pay the costs, or refuse to furnish them with service," said Mr. Dolle, who continued: "No insurance concern will continue underwriting the property of a man who is continually having fires and who makes no attempt to safeguard his premises and who is a bad risk. No merchant will ship merchandise to a man who opens the packages and returns them in bad condition. He is automatically cut off the list until he decides that he must treat the shipper's property with care.

"Business is business, but there is no business to the man who fails to treat property of the exchanges with care, and he hasn't any consideration due him. There is some wear effected on films, no matter how well they are handled. This is natural, and is no fault of the operator or the exhibitor. However, there is no excuse for failing to rewind films, properly splicing and mending torn films without cutting out important parts where unnecessary, and there is no excuse for failure to return loaned paper. The small town theaters in many cases haven't the proper facilities for handling paper, which is exposed to the weather, and necessarily damaged. I believe that all paper should be charged out to the exhibitor, and only credited back where it is returned in first-class condition. It would probably be just as well to make a flat charge for all paper as is now done by some of the film concerns.

Managers Ought to Be Responsible.

"Part of the trouble lies in the fact that many exhibitors are even more careless than their operators and employes. For instance, when a letter comes in complaining about the way property has been mistreated some exhibitors will throw the letter into the waste basket, and let it go at that. You won't find that happening in any of our big chain of houses. All complaints received by the Broadway Amusement Enterprises are checked up. The complaint is turned over to the manager of the house who was responsible for the last use of the film. He is responsible if he has not reported any film turned over to him by another chain house, or exchange, which is in bad shape. The manager in turn places the responsibility, and climbs the collar of the machine operator or assistant who was responsible for allowing the film or other exchange property going out late, or leaving in bad condition. Two warnings are sufficient, and if another complaint is filed against the same man, that man is too careless for our service, and is automatically dropped from the pay roll.

"We are very particular about little things like bands on films, although bands do not last very long. We are also particular to see that films are turned over to the railroads or express offices just as soon as possible after the last run is made at the house. We take care of all paper, and have the best poster frames, etc., for the displaying of such paper. In fact, we endeavor in every way to do our part, and treat the exchanges as we expect to be treated by them. We expect to receive our material ready to run, but never run it without first inspecting it, as even the exchanges slip up.

"Therefore, is it fair or just to hold concerns operating as we do responsible for the neglect and carelessness of houses which neglect taking care of the property of the exchanges? Decidedly not, and I believe that every fair-minded exhibitor feels the same way about it as I do. The square exhibitor should not be made to carry the burden of the crooked one, any more than a general consumer should be forced to pay a higher price for merchandise for which he pays cash, because the house selling the merchandise loses heavily on poor credits each year. The good accounts should not be forced to carry the overhead burden of the entire business, and if the exchange cares to risk good material with careless exhibitors it should pocket its own losses.

"The minute the exchanges begin forcing exhibitors to take care of their property, or refuse to ship 'em, that very minute the exhibitors will have to start taking care of property, or begin using junk material. The exhibitor when it is forced upon him will naturally get busy and turn over a new leaf. I believe that this should be done for the general betterment of the business in every way, as it would mean less time lost in repairing films in the exchanges, and facilitate service generally."

Mrs. Rinehart Visits Lasky Studio

Famous Writer Looks Over Big Plant and Is Guest at Studio Luncheon.

Mary Roberts Rinehart, author of the "Sub-Deb" stories recently filmed for Paramount, who is noted for her many novels, who has visited the battle front and written graphic pictures of the Titanic struggle, was recently an interested visitor at the Lasky Hollywood studio, where Paramount and Artcraft pictures are made.

Mrs. Rinehart was the guest of Cecil B. DeMille, director general of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. A luncheon wa sserved at the studio for the guest and Jeanie

Douglas Fairbanks, Mary Roberts Rinehart and C. B. DeMille.

Macpherson was hostess. Then the visitors were escorted by Mr. DeMille over the big plant. They visited all the sets, and saw the companies at work, the workshops, costume departments, etc.

Mrs. Rinehart declared that she was deeply impressed by the dignity of the work as exemplified by the manner in which it is carried on at the Lasky studio, and as it was her first visit to a motion picture plant she found new interest and wonder at every step.

Mark Gates Talks of New Dayton

Ohio City to Have Theater Equal to the Best and Seating Twenty-five Hundred.

AFTER several telephone conversations the writer made arrangements to interview Mark M. Gates, who is directing the building of Dayton's newest and grandest theater, the Dayton. After introducing myself and talking to this man for a few moments I realized that he was of a different make-up from the usual film magnate. Mr. Gates told me of his most intimate plans—how he hoped to (and would) present only the best in pictures—to gain the confidence of Daytonians who are hard to please and make them understand that no matter what the attraction booked for the new Dayton it would first be reviewed by him or one of his assistants.

He also told me of the musical treats in store for patrons of this house; that he had the day before arranged for the exclusive services of Hewitt H. Thomas, one of the best-known orchestra conductors in the middle west, who will conduct a symphony orchestra of twenty pieces, offering the best in music at all times. After explaining the policies of the nearly completed house Mr. Gates was asked the why and how of his rise to fame as a builder of theaters.

Mr. Gates smiled modestly and explained that he had only been in the game for thirteen years (he is still in the draft age, being only thirty years old), but finally gave the story of his life from the time he had acted as an usher at the Grand Opera House at Syracuse, N. Y.

This story is one of hard work; it is also interesting and will be carried in the World as a special story at a later date. Two years ago when Mr. Gates was in Indianapolis—he worked for the Shuberts as secretary and treasurer of the Shubert Murat theater there, and after being in Indianapolis for a short while he realized that unlimited possibilities awaited him in the picture field—he conceived the Circle theater there, which forged to the front rapidly and which is now known as the leading theater of the middle west.

Following his success with the Circle Mark Gates became associated with Marcus Loew. Upon a visit to Dayton Mr. Gates saw that the Gem City was to be the scene of another success. After having interested others in the venture, Dayton as well as outside capital, Mr. Gates was appointed by the theater building company to supervise and direct the building of a picture palace which would be equal to any in the United States, with a seating capacity of twenty-five hundred. Results came fast, and the Dayton is to be opened in sixty days and is to be managed by Mark Gates, founder and director of many successful enterprises.

Mr. Gates confided that he also had other plans in mind for the building of several more beautiful theaters which would be announced upon the opening of the Dayton. As a final remark Mr. Gates invited the writer to see him any time of the day or night and also promised hearty co-operation in every way possible. With this sort of a man at the head of affairs I cannot help predicting prosperity for this institution.

The directors of the Dayton Theater Company, their intimate friends, the press and several others were invited to a special showing of Maeterlinck's "The Bluebird," released by Artcraft, and which is to be the initial attraction at the new Dayton theater. P. J. G.

Oakland Theater Men File Protest

Speculators Plan to Use City's Great Auditorium for Amusement Enterprise Under Cloak of a Land Show.

THE owners and managers of a number of leading moving picture and vaudeville theaters have filed a formal protest against the leasing of the Municipal Auditorium at Oakland, Calif., and thirty-two acres of surrounding land to the directors of the Pacific Coast Land and Industrial Exhibition, who plan to hold a so-called "land show" next fall. The protest sets forth that this proposed show is to be in reality a privately conducted combination of circus, amusement park and theater which will compete with the permanent establishments of the city.

The theater men state that stock in the enterprise is being sold, and that business men are virtually being compelled to invest in it.

The land show in the past has always been held at San Francisco, and has been such a success, it is alleged, that speculators in the surburban city have seized upon the opportunity to turn it into a private money-making event. The protest was made to Mayor John L. Davie and will be considered by the city council. It was signed by Arthur Wenzel of the T. and D. Theater, Emil Kehrlein of the Kinema Theater, Rex W. Midgley of the American Theater, N. A. Krueger of the Franklin Theater, Harry E. Cornell of the Orpheum Theater, J. W. Jackson of the Bishop Playhouse, Guy A. Smith of the Macdonough Theater, Charles H. Niemeyer of the Pantages Theater, John J. MacArthur of the Hippodrome Theater and B. L. York of the Idora Park Company.

Since filing this protest the Oakland Theatrical Managers' Association has filed a letter demanding the removal of George B. Keefe, superintendent of the Auditorium, because of his connection with the Land Show. The Municipal Auditorium has long been a thorn in the side of the theater men, both on account of the means followed to secure its erection and the manner in which it has been run. A bond issue of $500,000 was voted originally to build and equip the building. This sum had practically been expended when the steel work was completed, and another election was held to furnish a similar amount. This was voted down, and a third one was called, at which another half million dollars was authorized. It has since been used in direct competition with private amusement enterprises, and has been conducted at a cost of about $80,000 a year to the city. A survey has recently been started into the affairs of the institution in an effort to cut down expenses.

Famous Players to Install Warehouses

Al Lichtman, General Manager of Distribution, Goes on Tour to Introduce New Scheme of Exhibitor Aid.

AL LICHTMAN, general manager of the distribution department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has left New York to continue his tour of the exchanges, commenced several weeks ago, in behalf of better service to exhibitors. Railroad and other conditions evidenced during the past few months have brought about new situations for the film distributor to meet and overcome, necessitating the introduction of new ideas in order to give proper service to exhibitors.

In connection with his present tour and the plans to improve distribution in face of the various current handicaps, Mr. Lichtman, just before he left New York, said: "Railroad conditions brought about by the war have demanded special attention at the hands of the film distributor, if he would maintain a high-class service. It is not the intention of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to merely maintain such a service, but rather to improve upon it constantly, despite any and all situations that might arise. In order to do this we must primarily enhance the service of the New York headquarters to its branch offices throughout the country, and that is the purpose of my present tour.

"From the data which I have already received and the problems placed before me, it is evident that we will have to introduce radical ideas to overcome present conditions. Along these lines we have already commenced work on plans that will result in establishing warehouses in central districts, which will insure a service heretofore unknown to the film industry. As a result of these plans exhibitors will always be able to obtain on short notice prints that are in first-class condition, paper and accessories of exploitation. We will also have film hospitals, the activities of which will be supervised by experts. The matter of delayed prints and accessories so common throughout the entire industry will be absolutely overcome.

"Every member of our organization must be thoroughly imbued with the service idea. They must love motion pictures for their own sake, for their value in lightening the burdens of everyday life through their entertaining value and the actual good they do in the service they render mankind.

"With the installation of our warehouses exchange offices will no longer carry on hand a large quantity of old material, taking up floor space that should be occupied by matter for current productions arranged in a systematic and easily accessible manner. The bulk of material which they are now forced to keep on hand for occasional bookings on old film will be removed to a place where they can get it quickly, allowing ample room to facilitate the handling of new paper, accessories, etc."

PAULINE WELCH WITH METRO.

Pauline Welch, formerly the wife of "Bud" Fisher, the cartoonist, and well known as a headliner in vaudeville, will make her screen debut in the Metro All-Star Series production, "Social Hypocrites," starring May Allison. Miss Welch plays the Duchess of St. Keverne as a girl, later portrayed by Marie Wainwright. Albert Capellani, director of this picture version of Alicia Ramsey's stage play, "Bridge," is delighted with Miss Welch's work.

Cantonments Now Have Regular Film Service

P. A. Powers, in Co-operation with Commission on Training Camp Activities, Has Marshaled Enthusiastic Backing from the Industry.

SOLDIERS in training camps throughout the country will have the same opportunity as their folks at home to see the very latest films distributed by every releasing firm in the industry; the Liberty Theaters will be thrown open to motion pictures, and established exchanges, in cities nearest the cantonments, will supply entertainment for the soldiers without conflicting with the regular exhibitor. After numerous conferences with the big releasing corporations P. A. Powers, treasurer of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, has finally worked out a plan that has met the approval of the War Department Commission and, starting Monday, March 18, Liberty Theaters were the center of entertainment for soldiers in training—the true fount of amusement they were originally intended to be.

"Every man in the industry has put his shoulder to the wheel," said Mr. Powers to a representative of the World who had called upon the treasurer of the Universal for authoritative information. "When Raymond B. Fosdick appointed me chairman of a special committee on the moving picture branch of entertainment for our boys in camp the first manufacturer I called upon expressed enthusiastic willingness to 'put the thing over,' and every man I spoke to thereafter showed the same spirit.

"'Never mind the petty rivalries in the general run of business' seems to have been the motto of every man concerned in helping this great work along. The industry, through its foremost operatives, has done itself credit in the way it has sacrificed possible profits and submitted to inconveniences that Uncle Sam's boys may be amused by their favorite entertainment—the moving picture—while in training.

"It has been this spirit of unselfish and whole-hearted cooperation that has made the work of the Government committee easier to accomplish and now brought to successful culmination. Somebody in the industry had to be 'it'—and when Mr. Fosdick 'tagged' me there was nothing to be done but go out and help the industry 'make good' on what the Government and patriotism demanded. More than ever am I convinced, through my association with the big men of the industry in this work, that moving picture manufacturers give place in patriotism to no other set of business men."

At the time Chairman Fosdick, of the Commission on Training Camp Activities, appointed Mr. Powers as marshal of the moving picture industry, he designated Malcolm L. McBride, a regular member of the commission, as the man who should speak and act for the commission in dealing with Mr. Powers and other men who were active in training camp entertainments. The Liberty Theaters, built with the initial purpose of furnishing a place for dramatic, musical and vaudeville entertainment, have been turned over to the use of moving pictures on nights when there are no regular stage entertainments.

Owing to travel conditions, the expense of moving dramatic and vaudeville companies and other drawbacks to solid bookings of stage shows, these open nights have been many and promise to be more. Very sensibly the authorities in charge of Liberty Theaters decided that the houses should be kept open by the substantial and old-reliable method of showing motion pictures. Here was where Mr. Powers and every other leader in the picture industry "fitted in"—and to provide the proper and expedient distribution of the best pictures obtainable was the work which has been successfully accomplished. Liberty Theaters will always be open to the purpose they were built for—to entertain soldiers, every day and every evening.

Managers of Liberty Theaters have been provided with the schedule of release dates and rental prices. Schedules are based on three classes of releases: First run to thirty days, thirty to ninety days, and ninety days to six months. The theater manager goes to the exchange in the town nearest the Liberty Theatre he is handling. He pays cash for his film, making his own selection and acting in accord with his own judgment, as a showman, in all things that relate to picture entertainment in his theater.

If there is a theater using "first runs" of any specific brand, the Liberty Theater manager will not be allowed to exhibit "first runs" of that brand until the regular exhibitor has been supplied and has finished with the picture. If there are brands that have no "first runs" in the towns nearest the specified cantonment the Liberty Theater manager is perfectly at liberty to show that brand on "first runs" in his theater. The exhibitor, in short, is to be protected against any direct opposition from the training camp theater as far as possible. But, at the same time, it is proposed that the soldiers shall have films as new and desirable as possible—with the manager of the Liberty Theater the judge of what they shall see upon the cantonment screen.

Mutual, General Film, Pathe, Paramount-Artcraft, Paralta, Universal, World, Triangle, Metro, Goldwyn, Kleine, Fox and Vitagraph exchanges throughout the country have begun serving managers of Liberty Theaters as their regular customers. The schedule and scale of rental prices, together with the plan of distribution, has been worked out without the slightest friction within the industry—facts that contribute not alone to the energy and diplomacy of P. A. Powers, but in equal measure bring credit to the patriotism and sacrifice of profits by every controlling element in the moving picture industry.

George C. Dobbs Leaves Triangle

Laboratory Superintendent Is the Inventor of Many Devices That Have Made for Economy and Efficiency.

UPON the expiration of his contract next week, George C. Dobbs will sever his connection with the Triangle Film Corporation as superintendent of the big laboratory in Fort Lee, N. J. Dobbs probably holds the record for length of service with one firm, having been continuously in the service of the same corporation for eight years of the ten he has been engaged in motion picture work.

Dobbs began his photographic experience with still pictures and then went with the Lubin company. In 1910 he entered the employ of the New York Motion Picture Company, working in the laboratory at Coney Island, in Nineteenth street, New York, and at Fort Lee. During that time he handled the developing and printing on Bison, 101 Bison, Kay-Bee, Broncho, Keystone, Domino, all Mutual Masterpieces, all Triangle releases, including the Fairbanks productions, and all special features including "Wrath of the Gods," "Battle of Gettysburg," "War's Women," etc.

George C. Dobbs.

Dobbs is the originator of many important devices which he has installed in the Fort Lee factory in the way of printing machines and tinting and toning appliances. He has specialized in double tones and double tints, which have attracted much favorable comment in the trade. For the past year he has averaged a million feet of film per week, with a minimum force of employes.

At this time, when there is so much talk of economy in the trade, it is of interest to note some of the money-saving devices Dobbs has originated. The water bill was cut to a fraction by the installation of a tank to which was returned all the water used, which was then purified and run through a filter and used over and over again.

The printing machines were arranged in multiples, run on one shaft by a fractional horse power motor, giving the same speed to every printer and absolutely the same exposure of light to all the film, and saving much in electric current.

In saving the water, Dobbs also saved the chemicals, which have greatly increased in cost since the war. It is said that the waste from all causes ran only an average of 1½ per cent., which is a remarkable record, considering the film that is used for testing lights, and the ends which are clipped off, etc.

Dobbs has not decided upon his future affiliation, but is considering several business propositions which have been made to him.

Rambles 'Round Filmtown

With WALTER K. HILL.

COMES it out that this business of reviewing photoplays, as practiced for the past several years is all wrong, Peter. Happens it in the pages of an esteemed and enterprising contemporary of the Well Known World's that a whole lot of good time and much salary and kindred recompense has been shot into the air by owners of moving picture trade papers. Lo, out of the West and Northwest, comes the Real Thing.

If such be so, Ben Grimm volunteered in the nick of time. If this be the true, Peter Milne, Ed. Weitzel, Wid and Old George Pardy have spent useless years, consumed columns of space and looked their eyes almost out of their heads to a purpose worse than purposeless. But can it be? Best we not reason together a bit?

Heart to heart, as exhibitor to exhibitor, why should an exchangeman be less human and frail of opinion than—for instance—Dickson Watts; more patient under suffering than Joseph Limerick Kelley, or more sincere in purpose than Robert C. McElravy? What is there about an exhibitor from Puget's Sound that makes his pulse-finger any more keen to sense the requirements of an audience of picture-lovers than may our own (meaning the World's) Margaret I. Macdonald?

And Ye Publicists! Think of the scrapbook! When the boss comes snooping around, after you've gone to the Polo Grounds, this summer, and turns over the Record of Your Deeds—will one man be able to keep the pages as sweet-looking as fifty? That question answers itself.

Is one Exchangeman and Exhibitor from the Pacific Coast and Walla Walla going to give as good service to the scrap books as Pete Milne—multiplied by fifty? Just think of the number of blank spaces that will blanche where the opinions of Joseph Patrick Reddy, under happier and better conditions, should appear!

As one who, in his day, has tricked several dollars and fifty cents out of bosses, under the subterfuge of press-agenting, The Rambler sounds a note of warning to Publicists that this One Man Reviewing will never fill scrap books. It'll take more than one Walla-Wallist to make up for all the easy-writing lads and lassies who have, for so many years, kicked in with something to spread paste on and slap in the archives.

Arthur James, at his next meeting, should do something.

For if he doesn't, Old Real Thing will get him.

Bangor, that city of the Pine Tree State referred to by its residents as "Queen City of the East," has just had a grand reorganization of its Chamber of Commerce. This is of little interest to the average reader, perhaps, except for the fact that two prominent Maine exchange men, Earle B. Tinker, manager of the General Film Company, and L. W. Carroll, his assistant, were two of the prime movers in the cause of boosting Bangor. While these two gentlemen are no doubt greatly interested in the welfare of their home city, we feel that the publicity resulting from their efforts which the Bangor dailies published will be of much value in increasing the weekly "gross" at the Bangor G. F. headquarters.

The Great What-Is-It.

By R. H. Cochrane.

Overhead, my boy, is one of the great puzzles of the business world. It means as much to use this word in discussing business as it does to use the word psychological in discussing anything. It carries with it a suggestion of knowing what one is talking about even when one does not know; even when two, three or four do not know.

Overhead is the great whatthehellisit. It's something no business can get along without. Without it you have no business, and with it you have less.

Overhead is what knocked the pro out of profit and left nothing but the fit.

Overhead is the great undiminishable. It is called overhead because it is always going up over one's head. Thus: If you make but one unit per week the overhead is overhead. But if you make forty per week the overhead is forty times overhead. If you then reduce back to one per week from the forty the overhead is still forty times overhead, because it has got sot and can't be unsot. That is, if you don't know your business.

Overhead is nothing new. It started back in the days of Old Kink Solomon. Thinking to reduce his domestic overhead he grabbed off about a thousand wives instead of limiting himself to one. The whole world knows the result. The poor old nut soon found he was over his head. That's where the expression originated. When you hear a modern man speak of overhead he means over his head. Solomon was the fellow who started all the dirty work, and all he got out of it was a poor write-up in the Bible.

Overhead is that vague, mysterious something which comes out of the nothingness into the whither. It contains more alibis than a native of California discussing the California weather.

Overhead is the thing a man discusses learnedly when he is striking for a job, and then cusses more learnedly after he gets it.

Overhead is another name for terrific waste and extravagance in moving picture studios and on moving picture payrolls.

Every overpaid star that YOU are supporting by paying ruinous rental prices comes under the head of overhead. Whether the overpaid star works or loafs, the ruinous salary goes on and the overhead keeps going over and over your head.

Long, long ago the Universal producing organization got a stranglehold on the overhead problem and choked it to death, eliminating waste and extravagance from all pictures made by the Universal outfit.

I don't doubt that some of the productions now being advertised as costing anywhere from fifty to two hundred thousand dollars really did cost that much. But the Universal producing plant can make the same identical pictures for so much less that the difference is appalling. That is one reason why we invited all other producers to close their studios and make all their pictures at Universal City.

All this reckless waste and extravagance is given the high sounding name of "overhead" and YOU are footing the bill.

One way to beat the overhead game is to cut off the over and USE THE HEAD. Quit booking overpaid stars who have lost so much of their box office drawing power and give your patrons the real genuine stuff.

You are paying for the overhead, but you can't show it to your patrons. What's the use of paying for something you don't get? Why not get down to brass tacks and use the brains God gave you?

Overhead is the big nut that has driven many a business man nutty. Don't let it get YOU.

"A Romance of the Underworld," the initial Frank Keeney production, may in no manner be conceived as involving the conductorettes on the lately opened Broadway subway.

Harken, Now, to Charles W. Barrell.

Of the million subjects that can inspire better copy than The Rambler is able to write a good old fashioned controversy (several of 'em, in fact) would seem to be just what the physician prescribed. Therefore, with joy we hail the skillful publicists for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, as he deftly banks his shot at Marguerite Snow, whose publicist so skillfully started this thing in last issue. Resisting the temptation to remark that Snow-Barrell controversy is coming on as spring approaches, we pause to remark that we hope it doesn't melt and introduce, in quotes, what the party of the second part has, so interestingly, to say:

"Among your esteemed ramblings bearing the date of March 16, I note that you give space to an alleged statement of Marguerite Snow in which the heroine of 'The Eagle's Eye' is made to say that " 'Stage stars have not brought anything to pictures. They left ordinary salaries on the stage to claim a false superiority of ability in pictures, etc., etc. Picture fans want to see picture stars and not stage stars on the screen——' and so on, for a good half-column.

"I am forced to believe that you have been the victim of pressagentitis on this occasion, paralyzing your good blue pencil wielder long enough to let this full-grown specimen of balderdash creep into print.

"The screen owes nothing to the stage, forsooth!

"In rebuttal, let us place, over against the list of one hundred per cent. celluloid luminosities pointed out by Miss Snow as the biggest 'money-making stars of today . . . essentially players developed within the industry and . . . better drawing cards than the average stage recruit,' a few of the stars who have come to the screen with established stage reputations. Then decide for yourself which handful of jewels you would rather have if you were turned loose to make the best moving pictures in the world with a goodly slice of John D. Rockefeller's money at your command:

Pauline Frederick	Bessie Barriscale
Olga Petrova	George Beban
Marguerite Clark	Billie Burke

"As a matter of fact, does not Miss Snow herself attribute much of her own versatility before the camera to the thorough training she received as a member of a certain famous stock company of Denver? At least she did in the last biographical sketch I had the honor to prepare for her.

"And there is Charlie Chaplin—do you imagine for an instant that he would have jumped into immediate favor as the world's premier laugh-promoter, the only $1,000,000 a year comedian in captivity, if he had not had behind him nearly twenty years' experience as character actor and vaudeville pantomimist in England and America?"

Are Eagles Afraid of Rain?

It took a rainy day to make it occur to the P. A. that there is some talisman of more than unusual power connected with "The Eagle's Eye." Starting with the natural advantages of having the most discussed subject in the United States for its story, written by Chief Flynn, from the wealth of startling facts at his command the progress has been from advantage to advantage, and from convenience to convenience.

For instance, when the Whartons were looking for an office to house the executive staff for the expose of the Imperial German Government's spies and plots in America a suite just the size needed, high above Times Square, became vacant. The talisman worked overtime on that job, for the title of the picture might just as well have been "Frustrating the Alien Enemy in His Conspiracies"—but it wasn't—so the opportunity was there for more nifty advertising novelties.

And, while mentioning titles, there is no reason why the noted chief of the United States Sercret Service should bear the easily spelled and more easily pronounced name of William J. Flynn.

Then, as to this same office, which seemed built for exploiting "The Eagle's Eye"—here is where the rainy day reminder occurs—you walk right into the building from the subway. Dry going direct to your office after you have reached any subway station. That isn't the only convenience. No chance of finding yourself at home, after a hard night at the office, without smokes. You can't get out of the building without passing a cigar store. In the same hall a cafe beckons for the bracer needed after tedious office hours, and, if by chance the company is too many or too congenial, a candy shop and theater ticket stand act as reminders of peace offerings for friend wife.

But it is hard to enthuse of such things as mimeographing when one's shoes are soggy from the dash to the office, and one is denied the comfort of a cigar (for those in the pocket are too damp), and it is raining too hard for a trip to the cigar stand across the street. Never were truer words spoken than those of Walt Mason when he wrote "The Heathen Chinee"—"Those that have, gits more, and those that have not, git only what they have."

Helping Out on Metro Publicity.

Nazimova will appear on the speaking stage in a series of Ibsen plays, alternating stage appearances with her picture work for Metro. "The Wild Duck," her first play of the stage series, will be shot for the screen.

Beverly Bayne is the recipient of scores of letters from soldiers who have received sweaters, helmets, socks and other knitted articles through her kindness. Nevertheless, when a Metro screen play, in which Miss Bayne appears, is shown near the camp, the soldiers wear more than the outfit that has Bayne thus provided.

Harry Northrup, Metro's unpopular villain, returns to the firm's forces as Jack Duncan in "The Trail to Yesterday." In this screen version of Charles Alden Seltzer's novel, Mr. Northrup will be seen in the type of role in which he has become infamous.

Shifting Paramount's Publicity Squad.

Bernard P. Fineman, who has been editor-in-chief of Progress-Advance, is now at Muscle Shoals, Ala., working for the Government. He is publicizing a new and high explosive which a munition firm at Muscle Shoals is manufacturing under Government control. His leave of absence from the Progress-Advance is for the duration of the war, and his bankroll will be corpulently increased in the interim. There's no place to spend money at Muscle Shoals, and playing cards is not allowed on Government-controlled property. The Rambler congratulates the man who picked "Berney" for the job. He's a wonderful space stealer.

Patrick Kearney, who has been the Associate Editor, moves into the chief's chair in Progress-Advance sanctum sanctorum. This fine young journalist has only been with the Paramount house organ for a few weeks, and was indefatigable in the successful effort to boost "Berney" Fineman into his Government situation. Maurice Riskin, in the advance and progress of Mr. Kearney, flops himself into the chair of assistant editor. Of Mr. Riskin it is said that he has gained an enviable reputation throughout St. Lawrence County, where the New York Tribune largely circulates, as a brilliant contributor to F. P. A.'s department. When Mr. Riskin has five minutes to himself The Rambler would welcome several paragraphs to help make this department valuable.

Mr. Charles K. has employment that will serve as well for occupation as any job that was ever invented by the bosses.

Raymond Cavanaugh contributes: "As one of the 'among those present' in your illuminating story of the Universal Secret Service, may I help fill your allotted space by supplying two of the 'missing?'

"A worthy ex-newspaper man, Dan F Miller, now selling 'a little home of your own in the country' to tired business men, at one time furthered the interests of the Universal New York Exchange. I understand that he left because it was too cold up there to wear a Palm Beach suit.

"The other omission has not, I am sure, escaped the eyes of many of your local readers, but I am interested in seeing it made a matter of record. It is, as Nick Carter would have said, 'none other than' Bert Adler.'"

Nat Rothstein's Bright Ideas.

For the purpose of lobby "decoration," at the Broadway, Carl Laemmle had a painting "executed" of "The Beast of Berlin," done in oil at considerable expense. When the work was completed and was about to be placed on public view, Nat Rothstein, one of Universal's "Idea Men," insisted that it be insured for $250.

"Somebody may come over from the opposition 'German' picture and throw monkey-wrenches at it," said Nat. "Our star is so much better looking than Gerard, that they may get jealous at the Knickerbocker."

It was Mr. Rothstein's idea that sent "The Kaiser" in chains and handcuffs down Broadway, a prisoner in charge of "soldiers" dressed to impersonate Uncle Sam's warriors. When questioned as to the likelihood of the whole bunch being grabbed by an enlisting squad, Mr. Rothstein said: "They are all Shubert chorus men."

Where Is YOUR Birth Certificate?

George S. Trimble expects to leave in about ten days with an American company going to England to play "Going Up," the Harris production. George was born in Brooklyn, and his need of a passport compels him to admit it. He was born way back in '76, and it seems that the authorities in the neighborhood city, on some moving day between then and now, lost its diary and month book of that year. There is no official record of his birth in Borough Hall. When he looked about for the church where he was baptized that, too, was missing. George had one more card to play—the doctor. So he discarded church and state and had a prescription filled for his passport.

Tom Bret Is Always Eating.

Tom Bret, the scenario editor, told this one at a dinner in Wallick's Hotel last week:

"Do any of you know," he asked, "that $500 was once paid to this hotel for motion picture locations?"

Nobody knew.

"Well," said Bret, "it happened this way. A convincing talker went to a well-known producer with a proposition to make a scenic feature.

"'I know every beautiful spot in the South,' he said. 'Pay my expenses down there and I'll make all arrangements in advance and bring you back photographs of the locations.'

"The producer gave him $500 and took him over to the Penn Station just before train time. Two weeks later he received a telephone call from Wallick's manager.

"'So and so,' said the manager, 'has just sobered up and paid a bar and restaurant bill of $500. We're holding him in hock for his room rent. Will you bail him out?'

"'No,' said the producer, 'but I'll do this for him. I'll send a man over from Seventh avenue to buy his clothes so he can pay the bill. It should be nice and warm down South now.'"

Bret took a look around the table and attacked his plate again.

"Well," asked one of the group, "what was the production that paid Wallick's $500 for locations?"

"Uncle Tom's Cabin," said Bret, spearing a piece of steak.

THE RAMBLER.

Grinding the Crank

With Thornton Fisher

An Interview with Stigma O. Ashbarrel, the Hercules of the Movies.

FEW indeed have lived to witness their names inscribed on the scroll of immortal fame without blotting it, which we take it is a good way to begin one of the most momentous interviews ever extracted from Stigma O. Ashbarrel, president and founder of the Colossal Corporation of Animated Picturization, Inc.

It was the day after he was acclaimed the producing wizard of the Movies by the public, who the night before had stood on their chairs and hurled hand grenades in the air as the closing scene of his latest and most spectacular picture faded from view.

Mr. Ashbarrel's latest twenty-five-reel offering in pictures, entitled "The Banana Peel's Revenge, or Who Put the Germ in the Milk?" will stand as an everlasting monument to this genius of the films.

Only after the most protracted insistence by the editor did Mr. Ashbarrel consent to break his heretofore unalterable rule of silence concerning himself and his achievements.

Promptly at the hour of ten we were ushered into the presence of the man whose name is familiar to all the batter cake tossers. At sight of the interviewer Mr. Ashbarrel's countenance flushed with a school girl's modesty, but by the aid of suggestion rather than by pointed questions the interesting side lights of his remarkable career were uncovered. When one realizes that Mr. Ashbarrel lost three thousand dollars and fifty cents' worth of time which he explained would have been his income for the hour granted the interview, one can appreciate the altruism and beneficence of this kindly producer of people's popular pictures. Once started on the subject of pictures Mr. Ashbarrel talked freely of the industry—its past and future.

"I am heartily opposed to pictures being run backwards," said Mr. Ashbarrel, "and those of us who have so often been annoyed by the operator's persistence in running pictures backwards will know that at least they have a great producer championing their cause.

"Pictures run backwards," continued Mr. Ashbarrel, "are injurious to the business. It ruins the projecting machine. We have got to combat this terrible evil relentlessly.

"I may say," he modestly went on, "speaking as I do as the greatest producer of modern picture drama in the world, that I have spent many days and weeks trying to solve the question whether the blonde or the brunette makes the best box office girl, and like questions that have been agitating our exhibitors. Another detriment I am trying to overcome is a very vital problem for the exhibitor, namely, warts. Should the wide-awake theater manager employ ushers troubled with warts? I expect to expatiate on this subject later."

From this one may gather that Mr. Ashbarrel has his nose to the ground, so to speak. The history of his advent in pictures is interesting. Just prior to his connection with the film industry he was engaged in the slaughter business with the firm known as The Stigma O. Ashbarrel, Uncle & Co. Slaughter House. Here it was he learned to shoot the bull and stick the cow for the food market. He knew the business thoroughly and thus was well equipped for the film industry, then in its infancy (which some say it still is). A young friend of Mr. Ashbarrel's and himself agreed to pool their savings of three hundred dollars and open a moving picture theater. So young Ashbarrel put in his dollar and seventy-five cents with his friend's money and the first picture theater in Calcutta, Arizona, was formally opened to the public. Floral offerings from friends filled the crude lobby. Later it was discovered that one of the florists had unwittingly delivered a wreath inscribed "Rest in Peace." Those were the early days of pictures and Mr. Ashbarrel employed one of the slaughter house men to operate the machine at night after a hard day's work; but, as the operator dropped off to sleep regularly at 8.30 o'clock, it was necessary to get a night watchman to run the picture.

Ashbarrel in those days sold tickets, ushered, played the piano and swept out the place (not at one and the same time, however, even as clever as he is). It wasn't long until he gave the slaughter house to his sister for a birthday present and confined all his future efforts to the pictures. He opened six more theaters and bought his partner out for thirty-six dollars and a one-lunged buzz wagon. That year he took in twelve thousand dollars and most of the people who came to see his pictures. He economized at every point. Many times he wore one shirt for three weeks. Even now he says, the habit of thrift remains with him. Mrs. Ashbarrel, during the course of the war, will buy only four sets of furs a week. He says that it is only one example of what some women will do to help win the war. To resume:

Five years later he opened his first studio as an independent producer. We all remember his first one-reeler, entitled "When Flea Meets Flea. 'Tis Then the Bulldog Scratches." A rip-roaring comedy of domestic life. This was followed by regular weekly releases, such as "The Patch on Papa's Pants Is Loose Again" and "Since Casey Put Bi-chloride in Wifie's Tea."

With the success of these pictures he doubled the capacity of his studios and bought out three other going concerns and incorporated them under the present name, "The Colossal Corporation of Animated Picturization."

Now he does nothing but twenty and fifty-reel features.

"My great ambition," he said as I arose to go, "is to eventually see every operator wearing red flowers on his suspenders."

Plans Popularity Contest by Exhibitors

General Manager Grant Advocates Scheme to Bring a Thousand Visitors to Boston Exhibition.

A POPULARITY contest to be conducted by moving picture exhibitors throughout the country is the plan of Exposition Manager Samuel Grant to get wholesale publicity and make the National Exposition of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League of America, to be held in Boston July 13 to 20, a big success.

Mr. Grant outlined his plan at the regular meeting of the Massachusetts and Rhode Island Branch of the league at its meeting at headquarters, 127 Pleasant street, and immediately received the hearty approval of Greater Boston and New England exhibitors.

This plan, if carried out, will bring over 1,000 or more young visitors to the exposition, and will provide an endless amount of publicity in every large town and city in the country. Mr. Grant's plan would give the national exposition a boost that would make the Boston exposition "the greatest ever."

Mr. Grant's plan as explained to the exhibitors is that they would each conduct a popularity contest to run about three months in their local theaters and send one or more, or even 10 and 15 in the larger cities, to the exposition as the theater's guests.

"Think of the publicity you can get on such a proposition as this," declared Mr. Grant. "There is not a local newspaper in the country but what would give hearty co-operation to this plan. Your patrons will enter the contest and the standing of the contestants thrown on your screen from time to time will be eagerly watched.

"The exposition this year takes place at an unusual time and under unusual conditions. We are at war. It will take some unusual stimulus to put the exposition over in the way it has been done in the past. By this publicity stunt I believe the whole country will become interested and thousands upon thousands will be eager to attend the national exposition of the moving picture industry.

"It is something the exhibitors owe themselves to do their bit in this respect. The more attention they can attract to the national exposition the more the public will be attracted to the moving picture theater. We must all do our part. This is a matter for the individual exhibitor to put up to himself and ask the question if it is not his duty to himself to boost the exposition and make it a huge success. I am sure his answer will be an emphatic 'Yes.'"

Mr. Grant explained that he has arranged for hotel accommodations for all the guests the exhibitors will want to send to the exposition. The Copley-Plaza hotel alone, he said, had 1,000 rooms which he could reserve. He also has the support of every hotel in Boston.

Mr. Grant said that forty live members of the Massachusetts and Rhode Island branch will finance the exposition in Mechanics' Hall.

B. H. Cornell, in the absence of the president, called the meeting to order and Ernest Horstmann presided. Lee A. Ochs, national president of the league, spoke at length on the subject and aims of the United Picture Theaters of America, to combine the exhibitors into a direct distributing agency with the producers to reduce the high cost of distributing film which now prevailed, he said, in the industry.

WILLIAM COURTLEIGH, JR., DIES IN PHILADELPHIA.

Pluro-pneumonia caused the death of William Courtleigh, Jr., in Philadelphia on Wednesday, March 13. He was taken ill while playing with Lou-Tellegen in "Blind Youth." The body was brought to New York the next day and funeral services were held Friday afternoon in the Campbell Funeral Church. The deceased was the son of William Courtleigh, at present playing in "Tiger Rose" t the Lyceum Theater, New York. He was twenty-six years of age and left a wife.

Some of the young actor's best work was done for the screen, one of his latest characterizations being in support of Norma Talmadge in "By Right of Purchase."

Capital Film Company Formed in Indiana

Ike Schlank Elected President—Concern Will Have Offices in Indianapolis.

IKE SCHLANK, of New York City, was elected president and general manager of the Capital Film Company in Indianapolis, Ind., recently incorporated under the laws of Indiana, at a meeting of the directors of the concern in Indianapolis. He succeeds William H. Miller, of Flora, Ind., who was elected president at the first meeting of the directors several days ago. Mr. Schlank is an experienced motion picture man, having been connected with the establishment of a number of film exchanges in the United States and Canada. The concern has opened offices on the Thirteenth floor of the Merchants' Bank Building and will begin operations in a few weeks.

St. Louis.—Sam Werner, formerly manager of the Unicorn Film office in St. Louis, has been made a director of the newly formed $2,500,000 Capital Film Company, incorporated recently in Indianapolis. The company announces that it will produce and distribute short subjects and has a number of stars under consideration with whom some dickering as to contracts has already commenced. The company opened offices in Indianapolis for the purpose of organization.

George V. Moss, of Frankfort, Ky., has been selected as general counsel for the company. The backers of the new corporation, chartered under the laws of Indiana, are bankers and business men of Indiana towns.

The officers of the company are: Ike Schlank, president; L. E. Barnes, of Crownpoint, Ind., vice president; C. J. Daugherty, also of Crownpoint, secretary. The directors of the company are: Messrs. Schlank, Barnes, Daugherty, Werner, O. W. More, of Indianapolis, and Ben Reingold, of Chicago.

A site for a studio and manufacturing plant is now under consideration by the company, according to Werner. He states that exchanges and branch offices are to be organized in all the large cities from coast to coast.

Essanay Preparing Large Subjects

Has Obtained Rights to Several, Which Will Be Released Without Regard to Schedule.

GEORGE K. SPOOR, president of Essanay, in speaking of the conditions of the film trade, said: "The film business now is in a transitional stage. This, in my opinion, is due partly to the natural development of the industry and the new demands that are constantly being created and partly to the abnormal conditions of a country at war.

"But there is no question that there is a real field for good pictures. Manufacturers need only to adapt themselves to the new conditions. Essanay has been watching these conditions, and it believes it has anticipated them.

"It is my belief that the successful pictures of the future will be produced more on the line of theatrical productions. That is, the manufacturer will hunt for the story of exceptional merit, select capable players, not necessarily what are generally called stars, but first-class actors.

"Essanay now is working on this plan. It has obtained the rights to several large productions and is now preparing them for release in the near future. The company will not attempt to adhere to a strict release date for program houses, except in its shorter subjects. Its features will be released from time to time as completed.

"I believe that under this system Essanay will be enabled to produce still greater pictures, giving the most careful attention to detail required by a finished production. The company now is preparing to make additions to its staff to carry out this plan, which has been laid out for months ahead."

SURPRISE PARTY TO C. B. PRICE.

The salesmen of the New York Triangle Exchange gave a surprise party in honor of C. B. Price, the sales manager, on Tuesday evening, March 12. Mr. Price was carried off to the Columbia theater and then to a beefsteak dinner. The conspirators planned the event to show Mr. Price, who is a well-known official of the Film Club, that he was a regular fellow even though their boss. Those present on Tuesday evening were A. F. Smith, O. F. Woody, R. D. Burdge, J. Vergroslich, H. Hummell, F. H. Price, E. Wells, S. Schussel, E. Roos and C. Miller.

Falling Walls Kill Eleven in Theater

Nearly One Hundred Injured When Fire Ruin Alongside Kentucky House Collapses.

ONE of the worst tragedies that has occurred in a moving picture theater for several years happened in Winchester, Ky., on Saturday evening, March 9, shortly after the 7.30 o'clock show had started in the Pastime Theater. A large portion of an adjoining brick wall caved in, falling on the roof of the theater, which collapsed. Eleven persons were killed and approximately one hundred injured when the steel roof, rafters, etc., fell over part of the house. On the Thursday prior to the accident a fire gutted the adjoining building occupied by the French Hardware Company. The walls were deemed unsafe, and much talk was heard concerning them, but no orders of any kind were issued by the authorities, even though a section of the walls fell earlier in the afternoon. A high wind was blowing all evening, and resulted in the loose wall collapsing at a time when the house was packed with the usual Saturday evening crowd, including many women and children.

The Pastime theater is a brick building, two stories in front and one at the rear, or across the stage and extending back nearly midway of the house. The falling wall fell over the one-story section, which immediately let go under the tons of brick. The killed are placed at eleven.

About twenty-five persons were reported as seriously injured, with three not expected to recover. Harold Spieth, an operator at the theater, and Louis Speevack, a drummer in the orchestra, were among those reported seriously injured.

As usual more persons were injured in the rush for the front exits, due to the rear exits having been cut off, than were injured by the actual falling of the roof. About 200 persons made a mad dash to the front of the building, many returning to aid in getting the others out, while women dashed wildly about, and unutterable confusion marked the time between the accident and the arrival of the police reserves and fire department. The calling of the latter added to the general confusion, as a mad crowd rushed to the scene from all over town.

The walls of the theater did not collapse, but the cause came from the outside entirely. The weakened wall should have been pulled down before the fire department left the fire two nights prior, or else notice should have been issued to close the theater, the management of which cannot be held responsible if the authorities placed an O. K. on the premises through not issuing a warning. A lot of talk has been heard already concerning the placing of the blame, but nothing has been done.

Messrs. Bloomfield & Minor, operators of the theater, stated that Councilman Wheeler and Mayor Scrivener investigated the walls in the afternoon prior to the tragedy and said they appeared to be safe. Later Councilman Wheeler stated that he thought the walls would be safe except in case of high wind.

Julius Steger Joins International

Becomes Producing Director for Hearst Organization, Which Will Resume Making of Photoplays.

DURING the past week negotiations have been pending between the International Film Service, Inc., and Julius Steger, and on March 15 contracts were signed whereby Mr. Steger, at the end of the month, will be the producing director for that corporation.

For more than a month it was rumored that Mr. Steger would become affiliated with either one of two large film organizations other than the International. It therefore comes in the nature of a surprise that he has accepted the offer made to him by the vice president and general manager of that company, C. F. Zittel, acting on behalf of W. R. Hearst.

Under the terms of this agreement Mr. Steger will supervise the productions of the International from the point of the selection of stars and stories to the point of completion of each picture ready for exhibition. The International, desirous of assuming Mr. Steger's contract with Anna Case, will therefore exploit the prima donna in a series of photoplays to be made under the personal direction of Mr. Steger under a separate arrangement made between the International and Mr. Steger and his business associate, Joseph M. Schenk.

In a conference between Mr. Hearst, Mr. Zittel and Mr. Steger, it was decided to extend the agreement over a period of years.

Mr. Steger has been a well-known figure on the American stage for more than two decades and has established a reputation as actor, singer, stage director and more recently as a producer of high-class photoplays. The best-known pictures directed by him are "The Prima Donna's Husband," with Holbrook Blinn; "The Libertine," with John Mason and Alma Hanlon; "Redemption," with Evelyn Nesbit and her son Russell Thaw; "The Law of Compensation," with Normal Talmadge, and "Just a Woman," by Eugene Walker, featuring Charlotte Walker, which will be released within two weeks by the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation.

Gunn to Support Bessie Barriscale

CHARLES GUNN, famous both on the stage and the screen, has just been engaged as a member of the Paralta company to appear regularly in Paralta Plays as leading man. For his first picture he has been assigned to the support of Miss Bessie Barriscale in the production of "Patriotism." Mr. Gunn has for the past five years been prominent as a screen player, although his professional work on the stage dates back to eighteen years ago when he became a member of the Alcazar stock company of San Francisco.

With the old Alcazar Company, Mr. Gunn appeared strangely enough in the same cast of a great many plays with Bessie Barriscale and Howard Hickman, who were also appearing at that time in the Alcazar Stock Company. He also appeared in plays with James K. Hackett, Max Figman, Nance O'Neil and other stars of prominence. His first start professionally was in San Francisco, although he has appeared as leading man in stock companies in New York, Pittsburg, St. Paul, Minneapolis, Baltimore, Des Moines, Spokane and in other stock organizations throughout the Eastern States and along the Pacific coast.

Charles Gunn.

His first appearance in motion pictures was with the Thanhouser Company in New York about five years ago when he played in one of Sir Conan Doyle's stories which that company was then producing. Following this engagement Mr. Gunn became leading man with the Universal company and later joined the Ince forces, in whose pictures he appeared for a long period of time. Another interesting fact is that under Ince management he again met Bessie Barriscale as a member of his own cast when he appeared with her in "Three of Many," which was directed by Reginald Barker, who is now also engaged at the Paralta Studios.

Mr. Gunn has been playing in Triangle pictures and was a star with that organization until he left it to join Paralta. His role with Bessie Barriscale in "Patriotism" is that of John Hamilton, a wounded American soldier, who is being cared for on the Scotch estate of "Sir Angus Cameron," where Miss Barriscale as "Robin Cameron" is turning over her home as a hospital.

"JIMQUIN" DIDN'T.

James Quinn, better known perhaps as "Jimquin of L. A.," was mentioned as having reproduced a picture of a contortion dancer with the inference that it was a picture of Mary Garden in a dance from Thais. He wires from El Paso, Texas, that he has no connection with any Los Angeles house and has not had for some months.

FRANK A. MACNEIL DIES OF HEART TROUBLE.

Frank A. MacNeil, who had charge of the wardrobe department of the Paralta Studios, in Los Angeles, California, died of heart trouble March 9. Mr. MacNeil was stricken while at work at the studios and died while being taken to his home. In addition to his wardrobe work Mr. MacNeil acted many character parts in the pictures. He was one of the most widely known and popular men on the coast, having appeared in the productions of practically all of the leading coast studios.

Associated Advertisers Hold Busy Session

To Aid Camp Training Activities Committee in Acquainting Soldiers With Coming Pictures.

THE presence of Sergeant Victor Shapiro, one of the stars in its service flag; the final adoption of a plan to assist P. A. Powers' campaigning activities committee; action looking toward meeting insidious German propaganda in this country, and the appointment of a committee to co-operate with the motion picture trade papers and to give them every assistance in the power of the association in the danger which threatens in the new zoning postage plan for magazines, made the regular meeting of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers at Keene's Chop House on March 14 one of the most important the association has yet held.

The guest of the luncheon and the principal speaker was Sergeant Shapiro, who was formerly in the press department of Vitagraph and the Frank J. Seng Enterprises. The former publicity man is now top sergeant of Company I, 306th Infantry, stationed at Camp Upton. It is no secret that the Metropolitan Division will soon be sent abroad. Sergeant Shapiro made this a farewell to all of his friends and former associates. He spoke at length on the evil effects of German propaganda.

A motion was passed instructing the secretary to send a letter to the editor of every screen weekly, calling attention to insidious propaganda, and asking assistance through the screen in stamping it out.

A report was made from the committee appointed to assist P. A. Powers' camp training activities committee, outlining a plan for supplying the weekly papers published in training camps with electros and reading matter for the pictures which are soon to be booked not only in the Y. M. C. A. and other halls, but in the new Liberty Theatres as well. The news that the Liberty Theatres were to be used was brought to the association by Herbert F. Sherwood, who was present at the meeting. The report of the committee was accepted, and the plans will be immediately adopted for putting into force a regular service from all of the publicity departments to the training camp papers.

The extreme danger which lies in the zoning plan of postage which threatens the magazines of the country was called to the attention of the association by Charles Barrell. This danger threatens particularly the trade papers which come under the same classification as other magazines, many of which will have to pay postage as high as fifteen cents to reach the Pacific Coast, if the Federal legislation which is under way becomes a law.

The danger to the trade magazines was so apparent to the association that a committee, with Mr. Barrell as chairman, was appointed to co-operate with the trade papers in the motion picture field and give them any assistance in the power of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers in meeting this threatened danger.

Crawford Livingston Is Thanhouser Head

Active Management of New Rochelle Plant Will Be Under W. E. Shallenberger.

THE Thanhouser Film Corporation has announced the election of the following officers: President, Crawford Livingston; vice-president, Wilbert Shallenberger; secretary, A. E. Jones; treasurer, W. E. Shallenberger. Board of Directors, Felix Kahn, Crawford Livingston, Wilbert Shallenberger, A. E. Jones, Gerald Livingston, W. R. Shallenberger and Jessie Bishop.

It was also announced, following the annual meeting of the organization, that W. E. Shallenberger, who is also president of the Arrow Film Corporation, would take over the active management of the studios at New Rochelle. At the present time the Clara Kimball Young Company is using the studios. None of the officials of the Thanhouser would state at this time who would use the studios following the departure of the Clara Kimball Young Company for the west, but it is understood that W. E. Shallenberger will shortly begin filming some big State rights pictures there.

The Arrow Film organization recently greatly widened the scope of its activities in the distribution field and especially so in South America and Europe. Mr. Shallenberger has contracted to produce a number of big State rights features, the interiors of which will be made at the Thanhouser studios. In addition, it is said, Arrow will begin the manufacture of special pictures for export to South America and Europe.

The Thanhouser Film organization has not done any active picture making for some time. Edwin Thanhouser, who took such an active part in its affairs, recently retired. Following the annual meeting the officials said the corporation was in A1 financial condition. The Thanhouser studios are among the best equipped in the country. Since they were first built some years ago the management has insisted upon keeping pace with the constantly changing improvements in equipment, and as a result the buildings have today every facility for the manufacture of motion pictures. During the past several years some of the most noteworthy productions shown throughout the country were filmed in the Thanhouser studios in New Rochelle.

For some time past rumors have been current that the Thanhouser studios were to be sold. One rumor had it that the United States Government had taken over the plant for manufacturing purposes, and there have been countless reports of various film organizations in the east buying the place. All of these rumors were denied by W. E. Shallenberger.

William H. Jenner

WILLIAM H. JENNER, manager of George Kleine's Chicago exchange office for four years, resigned that position Saturday, March 9, to accept a similar position with the Fox Film Corporation in Chicago. He entered upon his new duties Monday, March 11.

Mr. Jenner is well known among Chicago exhibitors, as he had five years' experience as an exhibitor before joining the Kleine forces. During that time he had charge of the bookings for the Vista, Shakespere, Marlowe, Munro, Windsor Park and Langley theaters, on the old circuit of the Aceo Theater Co., of Chicago, and his knowledge of what type of pictures would best suit the patronage of these houses was followed by pleasing success. His long stay with Mr. Kleine served to enlarge his acquaintance with exhibitors, not only in Chicago, but in the adjoining territory, while his own experience in the exhibiting field has enabled him to get the exhibitors' viewpoint in the important matter of bookings.

William H. Jenner.

Prior to his position with the Aceo Theater Co., Mr. Jenner was connected with Mort Singer as stage director for Henry Woodruff, when Madge Kennedy made her debut as leading woman for Mr. Woodruff in the musical farce, "The Genius." Bill Jenner taught Madge how to dance the numbers assigned her in that musical skit. The year before he joined the Singer forces Mr. Jenner was stage director for Harry Frazee.

As a mark of the esteem in which they held him the members of George Kleine's Chicago branch office presented Mr. Jenner with a handsome fountain pen, gold mounted, with his name inscribed, before his departure.

TWO MORE STARS TO FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY FLAG.

Two more stars have been added to the Lasky service flag, with the leaving of Haldale Garner and William Rose for military service. Rose, who has joined the photographic division of the army, will go to Columbia University for preliminary training. Garner, who has been connected with the Lasky laboratory department, has enlisted in the aviation corps, and will report at San Francisco.

MARSHALL NEILAN BACK IN NEW YORK.

Marshall Neilan, who has just completed the direction of Mary Pickford in "M'liss" for Artcraft, is in New York, where he will direct George M. Cohan in "Hit the Trail Holliday," adapted from the famous stage hit. Just how long he will remain and how many pictures he will do while in New York cannot now be said.

Censor Funkhouser Loses "The Spy" Case

Circuit Court of Appeals Denies Discretion Claimed by Censor, Holding His Judgment Is Subject to Review.

THE most important and far-reaching decision yet rendered in any court on Chicago ordinances, in connection with the censorship of moving pictures, was made in the United States Court of Appeals, seventh circuit, during the January session, this year, Circuit Judges Baker, Kohlsaat and Evans presiding. Circuit Judge Baker delivered the opinion.

The case was the City of Chicago vs. The Fox Film Corporation in the matter of "The Spy," which was refused a permit about eight or nine months ago by Censor Funkhouser and Chief Schuettler. Suit was brought by the film company against the city before Judge Samuel Alschuler, of the United States District Court, and he granted an injunction restraining the city from interfering with the showing of "The Spy" in Chicago. Censor Funkhouser and the City of Chicago then entered suit to have this injunction dissolved, the case being heard before Judge Alschuler, who requested the counsel for both sides to submit briefs at the hearing of the case on Friday, September 28. On Monday, October 8, after reading these briefs, Judge Alschuler refused to grant the motion of the city to dissolve the injunction, and the city was given thirty days' time within which to file an appeal. The decision which is the subject of this article was the result of the appeal made by the city in the Circuit Court of Appeals during the January session.

In the opinion of counsel for the Fox Film Corporation the decision establishes firmly two points in favor of the industry. First, the attorneys of the city have always contended that Second Deputy Funkhouser had a discretion in censoring pictures, and that such discretion could not be reviewed by a court, provided it was honestly exercised and free from fraud. This the United States Court has set at rest once and for all time. The court clearly held that Censor Funkhouser has no such discretion; that he must be the trier only, and that his judgment is subject to review in the same manner as any other person.

Second, Censor Funkhouser has always contended that in issuing a general permit (which would permit children as well as adults to see the picture) he had a right to consider the morality of the picture, from the point of view of children, and that if the picture was not moral from the point of view of the child he could refuse to give a general permit The court here again held directly to the contrary by stating that there is one standard of morality, and that in judging whether a picture is moral, etc., the old and young, wise and foolish, normal and abnormal—in fact, the entire community —must be taken into consideration.

Indeed, it is confidently believed by prominent legal talent that the decision in question will curtail to a very measurable degree the power which Censor Funkhouser has heretofore been exercising.

This decision is of such importance to the industry that it is given in full here, so that it may be embodied in the history of the industry and become accessible at any future time:

This appeal from an order refusing to dissolve a pendite lite injunction involves the construction and application of the following provisions of the ordinances of Chicago:

"Sec. 1627. If a picture or series of pictures for the showing or exhibition of which an application for a permit is made, is immoral or obscene, or portrays any riotous, disorderly or other unlawful scene, or has a tendency to disturb the public peace, it shall be the duty of the general superintendent of police to refuse such permit; otherwise it shall be his duty to grant such permit.

"Sec. 1 of the amendatory ordinance of July 2, 1914. That in all cases where a permit for the exhibition of a picture or series of pictures has been refused under the provisions of Section 1627 of the Chicago Code of 1911, as amended, because the same tends towards creating a harmful impression on the minds of children where such tendency as to the minds of adults would not exist if exhibited to persons of mature age, the general superintendent of police may grant a special permit limiting the exhibition of such picture or series of pictures to persons over the age of twenty-one years; provided such picture or pictures are not of such character as to tend to create contempt or hatred for any class of law-abiding citizens."

Appellants refused to grant a permit under Section 1627 for the exhibition of appellee's moving picture, "The Spy," but offered a permit "for adults only," under amendatory section 1.

From the pleadings and affidavits, the following may be accepted as the situation, pending final hearing: The photoplay depicts a young America's efforts to obtain in Germany the list of German spies in America, his capture, torture and death at the hands of a firing squad; there is nothing obscene or immoral; no portrayal of any riotous, disorderly, or other unlawful (noscitur a sociis) scene; nothing tending to disturb the public peace; but the action of the play where great drops of sweat stand out on the face and chest of the hero as he endures torture and faces death, is too harrowing, in the honest judgment of the city's administrators, for the sensibilities of minors; and for that reason, and that alone, the permit under Section 1627 was refused.

A pendente lite injunctional order will not be reversed unless there was an abuse of discretion; and this can only appear from an obvious misunderstanding of the facts or a palpable misapplication of well settled rules of law on the part of the trial judge. The only misapprehension we find in the case is that of the city's administrator with respect to the discretion committed to him by the ordinances. Section 1627 sets up a standard, but allows no discretion. If a photoplay conforms to that standard, "it shall be his duty to grant such permit." If it does not, he must refuse the permit. In deciding the question of fact the trier must of course take the viewpoint of old and young, wise and foolish, learned and ignorant; but a picture either is or is not obscene, by the one standard, including all the public. Amendatory Section 1 brings in the matter of discretion. If a permit under Section 1627 is refused, the administrator nevertheless "may grant a special permit," limiting the exhibition to adults. The discretion goes only to permitting a nonconforming picture to be exhibited to adults on the administrator's belief that such exhibition would not undermine the settled moral and peaceful character of adults. The harmful impression on the minds of children" must be an impression caused by the obscenity or other forbidden characteristic of the picture—not an impression which the administrator on non-legislatively defined grounds may deem harmful to them. Since Euripides' time it has been mooted in the dramatic and other arts how far the depiction of terror and anguish may properly be employed for the purification of the passions of the observer. If the glycerine tears and beads of sweat of the moving picture art are too horrifying for children, it was not for the administrator of these ordinances to say so; it must first be declared by the law-making body—if constitutional restrictions permit.

The order is affirmed.

Charles P. Schwartz and Herbert J. Friedman, of Chicago, were of counsel for the Fox Film Corporation.

Fake Interview Used as Boost by Contemporary.

I was somewhat surprised while in conversation with William H. Jenner about a week ago to learn that he was wholly ignorant of the fact that a trade contemporary, in its issue of February 23, had credited him with an interview under the heading "What Exhibitors Have to Say."

Mr. Jenner, at the time the interview was supposed to have been given, was manager of the Chicago branch exchange of the George Kleine System, and his name was signed to the article, every paragraph of which was carefully placed within quotation marks to show its genuineness.

Mr. Jenner most emphatically denies that he is responsible for the interview which appeared in the publication above his name.

"I never gave an interview on the subject," he said, with finality in the statement.

He explained that he reads all the trade papers, if he can spare the time, and especially desired to state that it is not his policy to declare in favor of any publication in particular, especially so out of consideration for the firm with which he might be connected at the time.

I wonder if all the breezy puffs published by our contemporary in its own support are similar bursts of "hot air!"

Mr. Jenner is now manager of the Chicago branch of the Fox Film Corporation.

Maurice Fleckles Resigns from Universal.

Maurice Fleckles, for some time past general manager of the state rights department of Universal, has severed his connection with that organization. He spent several days in the city last week and announced that he had organized a new film manufacturing company, which will be known as the Renowned Feature Film Company. This company will release a feature every month, Mr. Fleckles states. He also gave out that he has already sold all the state rights in the west for these features and that he expected to sign contracts for the remaining territory within the next sixty days. It is understood that work has already been started on the first production.

Julius Stern Posts Himself on Popular Comedy.

Julius Stern, general manager of the L-Ko Company, whose product is distributed through Universal, was in Chicago nearly all of last week. While in the city he interviewed several of the prominent exhibitors to gain first hand information as to the type of comedies demanded by fans at the present time. Mr. Stern then returned to New York, where he expects to remain for a short time in conference with the leading heads of Universal, after which he will leave for Los Angeles.

Rita Jolivet Speaks at Naval Training Station.

Rita Jolivet, who came to the city last week to be present at the premier presentation of "Lest We Forget," spoke to the sailors at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station, Great Lakes, Illinois, Friday, March 8, and showed the film to them. At the matinee and evening showings of "Lest We Forget" at the Ziegfeld, Sunday, March 10, Miss Jolivet collected $219 for the tobacco fund of the Daily News for soldiers and sailors.

Carl H. Pierce, of Paramount, Touring Country.

Carl H. Pierce, special representative from the Famous Players-Lasky New York office, who is touring the large cities of the country in the interests of "The Blue Bird," based on Maeterlinck's story of that title, was in the city Wednesday, March 13, to give an advance showing of the film to the press, exhibitors and educational parties. Mr. Pierce has visited Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Dayton, Columbus, Cleveland, Detroit and Minneapolis, and left for Kansas City after the Chicago presentation.

Le Grand Theater Changes Name to Acme.

The Le Grand theater, 5241 North Clark street, this city, has been remodeled, redecorated and rechristened, under new ownership, and opened its doors Saturday, March 9, as the Acme theater. Harry Miller, who has managed the Boston, Rose and Alcazar theaters, in the "Loop," is the present owner, but he will not sever his connections with the three houses just mentioned.

State Rights for "The Birth of Democracy" Sold.

Frank Zambreno, president, and M. J. Mintz, manager of the Unity Photoplays Company, have high hopes over the prospects of "The Birth of Democracy," the state rights for which they have purchased for Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin. This feature is issued by the Export and Import Film Company, and was made in Italy.

Harold Lockwood Goes to Los Angeles Studio.

Harold Lockwood, Metro star, spent Monday and Tuesday, March 11 and 12, in the city, on his way from New York to the Coast, where his future pictures will be made. Mr. Lockwood will have his own studio at Los Angeles.

Lee Ochs and Mrs. Ochs in Town.

Lee Ochs, accompanied by Mrs. Ochs, came into the city Thursday, March 14, and at the time of writing, Friday, March 15, he is holding his first meeting with exhibitors in the Hotel Sherman, in the interests of the United Picture Theaters, Inc.

KENTUCKY'S SUNDAY SHOW AMENDMENT READY.

The Sunday closing amendment to the old blue law, to permit the theaters of Kentucky in the first, second and third class cities to operate on Sunday, is expected to be brought up for action within the next few days. The Louisville Exhibitors' League, representing the local exhibitors and those out through the state, has done some excellent work in this connection. The local league appointed a committee composed of L. J. Dittmar, Fred Dolle and Dennis H. Long to take up the matter with the exhibitors of the state. Letters were sent to every exhibitor, calling upon these men to do their "best" in the way of getting their legislative representatives to vote in favor of the measure. With the strong endorsement of the exhibitors and many individual patrons it is believed that the law will be amended and that one trouble in the leading cities of the state will be over.

Co-operation Up at Charlotte Convention

Plans for New Booking Office Are Under Discussion—Many Look on Scheme With Favor.

PERCY W. WELLS, president of the North Carolina Exhibitors' League, and Louis Goodman, general manager of the Howard-Wells Amusement Company, have gone to Charlotte for the meeting of the league, called to perfect plans for the establishment of a cooperative booking office to serve North and South Carolina from a central office at Charlotte.

Full working plans will be made public at this convention and will undoubtedly bring out some unique and radical features to simplify dealings between exchanges and exhibitors and make for satisfactory dealings from both sides. Since the first announcement that such an organization was being formed applications for entry have been coming to Mr. Wells' desk daily both from exhibitors and from various state rights and other exchanges handling productions through this territory.

No opposition to the plan has developed so far, although the Paramount salesmen have intimated that they are forbidto recognize any such organization, and Fox, Vitagraph and Select exchanges are also supposed to have similar instructions from their home offices.

Charter for the booking company has already been applied for and it will open for business shortly.

Miranda to Leave World Film

THOMAS N. MIRANDA has resigned from his position as assistant to the director general of the World Film Corporation, and will leave that company March 30. Mr. Miranda came to the World Film with William A. Brady to be its advertising manager, but the veteran theatrical producer soon recognized his executive ability and dramatic sense and a few months later appointed him as his assistant and right-hand man, which position he held throughout Mr. Brady's regime with the World.

Thomas N. Miranda.

There was no part of the industry that escaped his observation. Aside from a general supervision of the cutting, construction and factory work, he personally titled all regular and special pictures released by the World since May, 1916, and, co-operating with the untiring Brady, enabled the World to reach the enviable position of being twenty-five pictures ahead of release dates.

Mr. Miranda is a college man with considerable writing experience and a fund of first-hand knowledge on various subjects. When asked regarding his future plans, he said:

"It is not easy to sever relations with Mr. Brady and suddenly decide your future. He was the fairest, squarest, most appreciative and most thorough worker it has ever been my pleasure to know. He spared no efforts to give me the benefit of his knowledge, and I have learned the game from the ground up. I have several offers, but I am not going to undertake anything which does not make use of the knowledge I have gained, and with the commendation of a man like Mr. Brady to back me up I am sure that I shall not be long in finding 'the big thing' which requires a 'big man' to fit it.

DRUMMOND VISITS NEW YORK.

W. E. Drummond, exhibitor and state right man of Knoxville, Tenn., has been visiting New York for the purpose of getting a line on the market. Besides operating two houses in Knoxville, Mr. Drummond has a long string of features which are in fairly good demand in his territory. He reports that the severe winter weather closed many houses in the south, but that the approach of spring has given business a boost and he looks for a speedy return to normal.

Paralta to Build Elaborate Studio

Plans Accepted for New Plant, Which Will Be Opposite the Present Location at Clune's Studio.

PLANS have been accepted by Carl Anderson, president, and Robert Brunton, manager of production, for the fine array of buildings that the Paralta Plays, Inc., will erect on the north side of Melrose avenue, between Van Ness and Bronson. These buildings will cover ten acres of the eighty-acre tract controlled by the company.

The plans for the buildings, some of which have already been constructed or are under way, include covering nearly every foot of available ground space of the ten-acre tract with permanent structures of brick and cement, including administration buildings, a cafe, dressing-room buildings, five glass-inclosed stages, property buildings, warehouses, carpenter shops, garages and other necessary structures, each of which is to follow out the scheme of systematic arrangement designed to produce the best results in the making of pictures.

The buildings of the permanent plant will be across the street from the Clune studios, 5300 Melrose avenue, which are now occupied by the Paralta company. Centered as they are in a compactly planned group, the permanent buildings of the studio plant will serve as the hub of the studio grounds, to be utilized for the construction of large settings of buildings, street and replicas of entire towns if necessary for use in productions.

This expansion of studio properties is made necessary by the enlarged scope undertaken by Paralta, which produces not only the Paralta plays, but also do work for other independent film-producing companies, which, though separate in organization from the Paralta company, enter with it into the plan for centralized co-operative production activities.

Immediately facing on Melrose avenue will be the central administration building, flanked on either side by the buildings of the scenario department and the cafe. Behind these structures is to be a brick property building, one-half of which has already been finished, separated by a central archway leading back to the five steel and glass-inclosed stages, each of which measures 60 by 150 feet. These stages are to be higher than any other glass stages in use, this being done to arrange for better manipulation of the light-diffusing system and to make possible the suspension of certain scenic effects from the supporting girders in the top of the structures. One of these glass stages is now complete in every detail.

A novel feature of the long cement dressing-room buildings which will take up almost the entire eastern side of the stages is a greenroom which will offer an ideal meeting place and clubrooms for the personnel of the official organization and professional forces engaged at the studio.

The plans also take into account the laying out of formal gardens at the front of the studios and also a laboratory building, a building for wardrobe, one for draperies, one for plaster and woodworking, stockroom, mill, garage, scene-painting docks, paint and paper-hanging buildings and an electrical shop and power building.

Activities of Haworth Pictures Corporation.

The past week has brought forth developments in the organization of the Haworth Pictures Corporation, which is to feature the Japanese star, Sessue Hayakawa, in independent productions.

Francis J. Hawkins, general manager of the company, and Mr. Hayakawa have decided upon the first story to be put in production under the working title of "Butterfly's Son." The story is a sequel to that of "Madame Butterfly," and was written by Mr. Hayakawa and scenarioized by Francis Guihan. The locale of the play is first laid in Japan and then transferred to America, where the story reaches its dramatic climax.

At the present time Mr. Hawkins and Mr. Hayakawa are engaged in deciding among the numerous applicants for the directorship and cast of the company.

Long Beach's Liberty Up-to-Date House.

A representative of the World spent a most interesting evening recently visiting the Liberty theater at Long Beach, which is owned and managed by O. Hoyt of that thriving tourist city.

The Liberty seats nine hundred persons. The term "intimate" can be most appropriately used in describing its various attractive features from the lobby to the stage setting.

Manager Hoyt, in Left Foreground, and Attaches of Liberty Theater, Long Beach, California.

Manager Hoyt, through unflagging endeavor, has raised the standard of his service until his clientele have been educated to realize that an hour spent at the Liberty will always pay ample returns in the form of cinema entertainment. The interior of the house is harmoniously dceorated in the style of Italian Renaissance, with gray as the dominanting color motif. The lighting system is exceptionally well arranged and it is the only theater in the town which can boast of a pipe-organ.

The house's attaches, which number eighteen or nineteen, are thoroughly drilled by Mr. Hoyt in that most essential thing, courtesy. Mr. Hoyt is indeed most successful as a manager of children's matinees. Every Saturday morning his house is packed to capacity by the children who come as much for Mr. Hoyt's fatherly lectures as for the children's plays which he flashes on the screen for their amusement. At each morning matinee there is admission charge for the children, with the parents admitted free.

A noteworthy advertising stunt originated by Mr. Hoyt is his Kid's Red Head Club, which comprises sixty-seven members, all of whom are admitted free to the theater.

In addition to the Liberty theater Manager Hoyt is also in charge of the Rialto and the Columbia theatres of the same city.

Production Starting at Universal City.

Extensive production activities have been resumed at Universal City, under the direction of Henry McRae, who is in charge of the West Coast productions of the company. By Monday ten companies were hard at work, producing three serials, six dramatic photoplays and one Lyons-Moran comedy. Douglas Gerrard is to direct Franklyn Farnum in "His Arcadian Wife," a typical Farnum story, in which Priscilla Dean will be seen as the co-star of the smile king.

Mary MacLaren, who gained fame through her work in the Lois Weber productions, starts work under Ida May Park. "The Honorable Billy" is the working title for Miss MacLaren's first picture, and Mabel Trunelle, former leading woman with Edison, will have an important part. This will be Miss Trunelle's first work on the West Coast, although she is well known in the East.

Carmel Myers is again donning the grease paint as the star of "My Parisian Sweetheart." She will be directed by Joseph De Grasse. Edwin August is to be the featured leading man, and Lon Chaney and Fred Montague have also been picked for the cast.

Robert Leonard is directing Mae Murray in a new heart-interest production, "Danger—Go Slow."

Monroe Salisbury, under the direction of Elmer Clifton, is to be starred with Ruth Clifford in "Silent Smith," a drama of the great out-of-doors. Clifton has assembled a well-balanced cast headed by Betty Schade, Alfred Allen and Sam De Grasse.

Juanita Hansen is starting on a thrilling new serial, "Pleasure Island," which Ben Wilson is directing. The story is by Frank R. Adams, and Walter Woods wrote the scenario. Jack Mulhall shares headline honors with Miss Hansen. Other noteworthy members of the cast are Charles Hill Mailes, Joseph W. Girard, Harry Dunkinson and Helen Wright.

Hill and Camby Behind New Company.

The Associate Authors' Film Company is the name of a new producing company just formed in Los Angeles for the purpose of releasing features on the open market. Wycliffe A. Hill, formerly of the Corona Cinema Company and author of "The Curse of Eve," and Robert Camby, well known in local publication circles, are actively behind the project. Associated with them are several other Los Angeles men, among whom is a well-known factor in the film business whose interest will for the present be silent.

According to Mr. Hill, productions of the Double A Company will be confined to original photoplay stories dealing with big vital themes. It is stated that a new and novel release plan which has been highly approved by buyers of independent features will be inaugurated.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

William Farnum began the making of a new photoplay for William Fox almost immediately upon his arrival at the West Coast studios at Hollywood. His director, Frank Lloyd, had everything prepared for his return.

Henry B. Walthall's next picture to be produced at the Paralta studios will be an Alaskan story written by Monte M. Katterjohn. Bertram Bracken has been engaged to direct the feature.

* * *

Secretary McAdoo has written a special invitation to Douglas Fairbanks to tour the country in behalf of the third Liberty Loan campaign, and the acrobatic star is now working day and night in his studio concluding his picture, "Mr. Fix-It," so that he may undertake this patriotic commission. Neither rain nor darkness is permitted to interfere with progress on this picture, which is being made under the direction of Allan Dwan.

* * *

Joseph J. Dowling, Paralta character actor, has been elected president of the Paralta studio branch of the War Savings Society, the organization of which was effected March 5, when John T. McBean addressed the entire studio forces, called for a special meeting on one of the stages at 8:30 A. M. Jean Hollingsworth was elected secretary and Reginald Barker as a member of the county executive committee, to meet with the other representatives of War Savings societies planning to further this branch of war work in Southern California. Every member of the Paralta organization, including the actors and actresses, laborers and members of every department will be a contributing member of the society.

Jacques Jaccard, director of serials, has abandoned one of the biggest salaries at Universal City and enlisted in Uncle Sam's service as a buck private at $30 a month.

* * *

Katherine MacDonald, who has just completed two pictures playing opposite Douglas Fairbanks, has already started on a production in which she will play William Hart's sweetheart.

Resigning an important position on the scenario staff of the Triangle Film Corporation, Verne Hardin Porter, writer and editor, will be in exclusive charge of the motion picture rights for all of the Mary Roberts Rinehart stories. Porter has closed a deal with the publishers of the Rinehart material whereby he will dispose of it to the film producers.

Clifford P. Butler, identified with the Metro Pictures Corporation both in New York and the West since its organization, has been made manager of Metro's Hollywood studios, filling the vacancy caused by the recent departure of Clark Thomas.

It is announced semi-officially that activities are resuming at Universal City, and that Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Company, is about ready to leave New York and come West to see about a number of things—among them the return to the Universal studio of several of its best directors.

* * *

Margarita Fischer and her American company, under the direction of Lloyd Ingraham, has completed her fifth production of the present series, entitled "The Primitive Woman." Henry Albert Phillips is responsible for the story, which was adapted to the screen by William Parker. The story provides Miss Fischer with another high-class comedy drama role. Upon the completion of "The Primitive Woman," work was immediately started on "A Square Deal," due to the fact that the continuous rainy weather considerably delayed production activities of late.

* * *

Frank Keenan has commenced production on a feature for Pathe at the Paralta studios in California, under the direction of Ernest Warde. Several well-known players have been engaged to support Mr. Keenan, including Jack Gilbert, Al Ray and Roberta Wilson.

* * *

Theodore Marston, formerly Pathe, Vitagraph and Universal director, is in Los Angeles on a vacation tour of the Coast, and was a welcome visitor to the local offices of the Moving Picture World. Mr. Marstor having become enamored with this climate may locate here and form a producing organization of his own.

* * *

No longer able to restrain their feeling of admiration and that clubby feeling for William S. Hart, Company C, One Hundred and Fifteenth Field Signal Battalion, has elected the famous actor as Big Brother. A smoker is to be given by the military organization in honor of the new relation on March 6, and while Mr. Hart will not be able to attend in person, the boys will be able to enjoy thoughts of him while consuming the very excellent smokes which he is contributing.

* * *

The Pathe-Astra Film Company will do its producing at Universal City, arrangements having been completed by President Gasnier with Carl Laemmle's local representatives. George Fitzmaurice, for a long time a Pathe director, will be in charge, and Fannie Ward, now here, will be the star for the initial production.

Abrams and Schulberg on Tour

Famous Players-Lasky Representatives Will With S. R. Kent Divide Territory of Entire Country.

THE administrative bureau of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has started to put into effect the policies of promoting the relationship between exhibitors and that company, and of obtaining a better understanding of purpose between these two factors, which the bureau has been advocating since its recent inauguration. This fact is contained in the announcement that Hiram Abrams and B. P. Schulberg have undertaken a national tour for the purpose of meeting exhibitors of Paramount and Artcraft pictures in all the important centers of the country, in order to devise means of closer co-operation. Abrams and Schulberg leave New York tonight for the first stages of the trip.

Coincident with the announcement that the first direct step to bring the exhibitor closer to the company has been taken comes the information that the administrative bureau has engaged S. R. Kent, one of the best known of the younger sete of film executives, as a special representative from the home office. Mr. Kent will also take part in the tour. The country has been so divided that each one of the three will personally visit one-third of the United States before the tour is completed, all three keeping in close touch with each other so that an almost daily comparison of results can be maintained. The individual itineraries assign the Pacific Coast and the territory from San Francisco to Denver to Abrams, the territory from New York to Dallas to Schulberg, and the section from Denver to Chicago to Kent.

Howells to Represent "National" Abroad

Will Handle All Pictures Controlled by the F. N. E. C. Excepting the Chaplin Series.

FOR the past five years David P. Howells, president of David P. Howells, Inc., has been exporting films to foreign countries. During that time he has made three trips through Australia and New Zealand and last year went twice through the Orient visiting India, Java, Malay States, China, Japan, the Philippines and Hawaii each time. Before the war he traveled through practically all of Europe

David P. Howells.

Since his entry into the film business he has represented foreign exhibitors in the selection of a great number of pictures for their respective territories.

Mr. Howells' experience has convinced him that the only successful way to market films in foreign countries is to have an intimate knowledge of the tastes of the people. This must be gained by personally visising the countries, talking with the picture showmen and coming in contact with the people themselves. His plan of foreign marketing has proved so successful that he has been chosen by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit to invite the exhibitors outside of the United States and Canada to share in its new system of purchasing pictures. Mr. Howells was one of the first to realize that the great importance of the motion picture industry would compel the adoption of more businesslike methods in dealing with foreign markets.

He is a firm believer in the system initiated by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, which, in his opinion, offers a solution for most of the evils and disadvantages under which the exhibitors in foreign countries are now compelled to operate.

After considerable difficulty, Mr. Howells has secured a passport to visit Great Britain, France and Spain, where he will arrange with exhibitors in those countries for the formation of an association with some of the biggest and most progressive exhibitors in America for the purchase of their pictures.

On his return he intends to visit the countries of Latin America for the same purpose.

Mr. Howells will handle abroad all pictures controlled by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit with the exception of the Chaplin series, the foreign rights on which were secured by William Vogel, of New York, sometime ago.

Anglo Secures Foreign Rights for Pyramids

Will Handle Entire World Exclusive of United States and Canada—First Four of Series Completed.

ACCORDING to an announcement from Arthur M. Werner, of the Pyramid Comedies, Inc., the entire world's rights for Pyramid Comedies have been purchased by the Anglo Film Agencies, Limited, of London, England. The contract extends for a period of five years and covers the entire output of twenty-four pictures a year.

"The circumstances leading to the closing of this contract have been the source of considerable gratification to myself and my associates," says M. Werner. "In view of war conditions we believe that light comedy, with snap and life and lots of pretty girls would be an appropriate offering to the public, and we entered into a contract with Ray Hughes, a well-known comedian on the vaudeville stage, to play the leading parts.

"Four pictures were exhibited in London theaters and proved so popular that a cable was sent to Mr. Wild to endeavor to secure the world's rights, exclusive of the United States and Canada.

"We have not yet settled our method of distribution in the United States and Canada, but we will probably dispose of the output here on the basis of territorial franchises."

American Films in Foreign Markets

Cromelin Denies That Foreign Supremacy of American Films Is Due to War.

PAUL H. CROMELIN, president of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, has issued a significant statement on export conditions. He says there that the lead American films have taken in the foreign markets will not end with the war, as has been predicted.

"American films are not leading in foreign fields simply because foreign producing companies have had to reduce their producing activities through the war," states Mr. Cromelin. "The reason for our ascendancy is that our producers have been studying the demand of the international movie fan as against that of the national one. Once upon a time we produced with mainly our own country in view, but then our directors woke up to the fact that the likes and dislikes of the foreign picturegoer was to be considered. We started studying those likes, and the result is that our films today have real international appeal. That is why they are now so strongly planted in the foreign field.

"American producers, guided by the financial return of their export sales, are going to keep on making the pictures of international appeal. Mere ending of the war isn't going to change this determination. Why, then, should we look for a drop in the sale of American film abroad when peace shall come? There isn't a single, solid reason for believing in such a change.

"As far as the production volume of European films in war times goes, there is a general mistaken belief. There has been some reduction to this volume, but European producing has not stopped by any means. There have been plenty of good productions from the European field, and they have been circulating in the foreign field. The lead that American pictures have attained in those fields is due directly to their quality and their world appeal. The only thing that can lose America this lead after the war is a distinct drop in this quality and appeal."

Mr. Cromelin announces that the Inter-Ocean has placed the World and Paralta full release program in almost every foreign country, and that brisk sales are reported on "Whither Thou Goest," "Today," "Mad Lover," "Hunting Big Game in the Fozen North" and "The 13th Labor of Hercules," for which the Inter-Ocean is the foreign distributing agent.

Among the Exporters.

Luis O. Tornero, representing the Arrow Film Corporation, Times Building, New York, has sailed for Buenos Aires with the object of establishing direct relations between his firm and the South American renters and exhibitors. He carries with him several copies of the following productions, the foreign rights on which are controlled by the Arrow company: "The Eyes of the World," "Ramona," "Weavers of Life," "The Deemster," "Woman's Law," a Peggy Hyland production and 12 two-reel Jester comedies. In sending a representative to South America acquainted with the language and customs of the people, the Arrow has made a move in the right direction.

Joseph R. Miles and E. S. Manheimer, the veteran New York exporters, have joined hands for the purpose of exploiting big feature films in the Spanish and Portuguese-speaking markets of the world. They will open the campaign with "Tarzan of the Apes," the rights of which for Latin America they have recently acquired, and will shortly send a general representative to the South with the object of selecting and appointing agents in the most strategical centers.

The Lander Film Co., Ltd., of London, wishes to represent in Great Britain an American house capable of supplying regular programs. It is also interested in purchase of rights on special features.

The Rita Jolivet Film Corporation, of New York, offers the Latin American rights on "Lest We Forget" in the May issue of Cine-Mundial, which was issued on March 20.

"A Woman and the Law," the latest Fox feature starring Miriam Cooper, will create a sensation abroad, and particularly in South America. It is nothing more nor less than a screen version of the famous De Saulles case, and, as the slayer belongs to one of the aristocratic families of Chile, the success of the picture in the southern republics is bound to break all records—providing, of course, that the local authorities do not step in and bar its exhibition, as the Latins are rather squeamish in questions of this nature.

William Vogel, president of Vogel Productions, Inc., is about to close a contract for the rights on the forthcoming Chaplin pictures in Spain and Portugal.

Rojas, Randall & Co., Inc., 26 Beaver street, New York, will distribute "Aislelite" outfits in the Latin American markets. These lighting equipments, which are unknown in the above-mentioned territories, are manufactured by the Brookins Company, of Cleveland, Ohio. The deal was closed through J. M. de Aragon, manager of the Film Department of Rojas, Randall & Co.

News from Foreign Markets.

There was a decrease of 20% in the importation of film in Spain during 1917 as compared with 1916. This estimate is not based on official figures, which cannot be obtained while the war lasts. It is based on the private trade showings given by the importers, which indicate a general stock of 2,270,000 metres (about 6,810,000 feet) on the assumption that the usual three copies were imported of each subject.

In Barcelona 1,500,000 metres were released to the public, and 326,000 in the rest of Spain.

There are about 420,000 metres of film waiting for release, which may be divided as follows:

40	1,500-metre subjects, 3 copies.....	150,000 metres
90	750 to 1,250-metre subjects, 2 copies.....	120,000 metres
60	400 to 600-metre subjects, 2 copies.....	60,000 metres
215	150 to 250-metre subjects, 2 copies.....	90,000 metres
	Total stock	420,000 metres

As Barcelona absorbs a weekly release of about 30,000 metres (90,000 feet), there is enough film in the exchanges for fifteen weeks.

Casanovas y Pinol, Barcelona, are distributing Essanay and Mutual Chaplins in Spain and Portugal.

J. B. Turull Fournols, of Barcelona, handles the distribution of Nordisk and Soenska pictures in Spain and Portugal.

Carlos Vasseur, general representative in Spain and Portugal for the Western Import Co., of New York, is no longer operating an exchange for the distribution of Triangle Pictures. Vilaseca y Ledesma, with headquarters in Barcelona, are handling this end of the business.

"Jimmie Dale, or the Grey Seal," was released three weeks ago in Mexico and, according to reports from local sources, it will soon take its place among the most successful serials exploited in that market. The Mexican rights on this picture were bought by Rafael Cruz Blanco, of Cuba and Mexico, through the Piedmont Film Corporation.

The sale of pictures on the states right plan has been started in Spain, with this difference—instead of selling by states, the sales are made by provinces.

Information received at the office of Cine-Mundial from Guillermo Mata A. & Co., of Guatemala, some of the biggest renters and exhibitors in Central America, does not bear out the news published by the New York daily papers on the recent earthquake. It is true that the Colon Theater was shaken to its foundations and is practically in ruins, as the photograph reproduced on this page indicates, but there was absolutely nobody in the building when the seismic disturbance took place. Mata & Co. also state that the eight motion picture houses in Guatemala City were totally destroyed.

Pairoa & Herrera, of Santiago, Chile, are distributing on that market the following American productions: "The Red Mask," 16-episode Universal serial with Grace Cunard and Francis Ford; "What Will People Say?" with Olga Petrova; "Hereditary Passions," "Damaged Goods" and "The Iron Claw."

Helen (Baby) Osborne, the little Pathe star, is getting a great deal of publicity throughout Chile. Some of the daily papers have even published leading articles on her personality.

Gaumont Company to Release on State Rights Basis

Two Issues Each Week—"News" Will Be Issued Every Tuesday and "Graphic" on Fridays.

THE Gaumont Company states that after giving the matter serious consideration, in future it will release its productions through independent exchanges. The announcement that this great motion picture company, which has more than forty branches throughout the world, will hereafter sell its output in the open market should be welcome news to state right buyers in all sections of the country.

As soon as it was learned that the news service of the Gaumont Company, with the value of its world-wide affiliations, was to be withdrawn from program booking and released semi-weekly, letters and telegrams from independent exchanges demanding this service began to pour into the Flushing office.

Beginning March 28, the Gaumont news service will be released twice a week, the Gaumont News every Tuesday, and the Gaumont Graphic every Friday. The news reels will be edited by Pell Mitchell, who made the Gaumont-Mutual Weekly so successful. Mr. Mitchell is an old newspaper man who has surrounded himself with a staff of cameramen who also served an apprenticeship on the daily papers, as he believes that the best training for gatherers of real live news.

The entire staff of cameramen who have served the Gaumont Company for so many years in the United States and all over the world has been retained. The Gaumont Company, pioneer in the making of news reels, announce that they will inaugurate many long-planned improvements.

Superfeature and Foursquare in Deal

Foursquare Pictures and Superfeatures, Ltd., of Canada, have joined forces in a campaign which bears every evidence of having a most important bearing upon the motion picture situation north of the United States border.

By the terms of a contract drawn a few days ago, between Foursquare Pictures and Superfeatures, Ltd., of Canada, the entire Foursquare product is to be handled in the Dominion by the latter concern. The contract formerly existing between Foursquare and the Metro Film Service, of Canada, having been dissolved.

In speaking about the new arrangement General Manager Charles L. Stevens, of Superfeatures, Ltd., said: "I have known Mr. Hoffman for many years, and we shall work together for the common welfare, striving always to secure motion picture merchandise which our patrons will want to book, and which the exhibitors' patrons will want to see."

Wolfberg Secures Clune Features.

Harris P. Wolfberg, one of the best-known state right buyers in the country, recently came to New York in order to look over the field and secure big features for handling in his territory. One of the results of this trip has been the purchase through the Arrow Film Corporation of the western Pennsylvania and West Virginia rights to W. H. Clune's feature productions "The Eyes of the World" and "Ramona" for the Harris P. Wolfberg Attractions, Pittsburgh, and he is making special preparations for handling these pictures in that territory.

The two Clune productions have been meeting with an unusual amount of success throughout this country and Canada, according to officials of the Arrow organization, because of their universal and popular appeal.

"I have been much gratified," said W. E. Shallenberger, "at the remarkable business 'The Eyes of the World' and 'Ramona' have been doing. Distributors tell me the rebooking averages on both are unusually high. In many states where the pictures are being exhibited as road show attractions with special musical, lighting and other effects performances have been repeated again and again because of the demand."

Welch and Scott in "Reclaimed."

Niles Welch and Mabel Julienne Scott will be co-starred in "Reclaimed," the production now being filmed by the Harry McRae Webster players, based on a new story by Richard Carroll. This production, which was originally scheduled to be made at Hudson Heights, New Jersey, has been transferred to the Standard Studio in Yonkers, account of transportation difficulties due to unfavorable weather conditions.

The past week has been a busy one for Mr. Welch, as, not only were a number of important scenes for "Reclaimed" filmed, but with his wife, Dell Boone, he visited Camp Upton and entertained the soldiers with jokes, songs, and stories of his film experiences at Camp Joseph E. Johnston last year. The five-reel Metro production, "Her Boy," in which Mr. Welch was featured with Effie Shannon, was also shown, and was well received, the officers commenting favorably upon the correctness of the military details of this patriotic picture.

In "Reclaimed," Miss Scott, who plays opposite Mr. Welch, is cast as a little Mexican waif who develops into a charming and beautiful personality under the good influence of a young American. The production is being personally directed by Harry McRae Webster, well known in the motion picture field.

McLean Appears in "Moral Suicide."

One of the prominent players in the Graphic Film production "Moral Suicide" is Jack McLean, who enacts the role of Waverly Covington. Mr. McLean has been a well-known juvenile for many years. He played one of the leading parts in Charles Dillingham's production of "Watch Your Step" for a year, and also the juvenile lead in "Hate," "Life's Destruction," "His Destiny," "At Bay" with Florence Reed, and "The American Maid" with Edna Goodrich. In "Great Expectations" he played the part of Herbert Pocket and has appeared with Pauline Frederick and many other noted stars of the screen. As Waverly Covington in "Moral Suicide" Mr. McLean portrays the difficult role of a young fellow slightly unbalanced mentally from excessive study.

Fourth Episode Shows Von Rintlen.

The fourth episode of "The Eagle's Eye," released March 18, deals with the beginning of the career of Franz Von Rintelen, now in the Atlanta prison, and is said to further show the means adopted by the German government to hamper the Allies, regardless of the neutrality of this country.

This episode, entitled "Von Rintelen—The Destroyer," treats of an attempt made to burn the stockyards in Jersey City while great numbers of horses and cattle were corralled there awaiting shipment. Von Rintelen was of a rougher type than the others already introduced in this serial, and is shown as surrounding himself with desperados and criminals and prepared to accept orders of any kind. The secret service was arrayed against this gang, and there are said to be plenty of thrills and intensely dramatic scenes.

Incidentally this episode provides opportunity for enhancing interest in the romance of Harrison Gray portrayed by King Baggot, and Dixie Mason (Marguerite Snow). Dixie's efforts in thwarting the Huns places her in a position that convinces Grant that she is in league with the German plotters and spies.

Lubin Forced to Abandon Tour.

Due to the sudden death of a member of his family, Herbert Lubin was obliged to cut short the trip upon which he and Arthur H. Sawyer embarked two weeks ago for survey of the state right field throughout the country. Mr. Lubin returned to New York on Monday, and reports that he found conditions throughout the South to be normal in every respect despite various statements to the contrary.

Mr. Lubin states that an important announcement pertaining to their future plans would be forthcoming within a few weeks. It is understood that he has been working quietly with his partner for some time on the consummation of a new scheme in the field of production.

Lynn S. Card Touring Canada.

Lynn S. Card, general sales manager of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, is making a tour of Canada to complete the assembling of his distributing forces. Mr. Card will also interview exhibitors in that territory in order to establish closer relations between the Hall organization and the showmen of the Dominion. With the expansion of the exchange system of the Superfeatures, Ltd., through which U. S. productions embracing "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," "Those Who Pay," "The Belgian" and "Just a Woman," recently purchased from Julius Steger and his associates, this concern announces it is now enabled to give Canadian exhibitors a highly efficient service, both in the handling of film and co-operation in exploiting productions released by the concern.

Not the least important of the matters to which Mr. Card will give his attention while in Canada will be the advertising campaign recently launched in that country in behalf of U. S. productions. Newspapers and billboards in all parts of the Dominion are being utilized in a comprehensive effort to herald the U. S. subjects, and everything that may aid the exhibitor in this line will be done.

Unusual Combination in Fifth Petrova Production

Talented Quartet Composed of Ralph Ince, Director; Olga Petrova, Star; Gertrude Atherton, Author; and Mary Murillo, Scenario Writer; Responsible for "Patience Sparhawk."

THE fifth production of the Petrova Picture Company, work on which will be commenced within a short time, will, aside from the popularity of the book, "Patience Sparhawk and Her Times," on which it is based, be marked by an unusual combination in regard to the author, director, scenario writer and star. A unique feature in this connection is the fact that of the four, three are women who have achieved prominence in their respective lines of endeavor, Ralph Ince being the only male member of this quartet.

Gertrude Atherton, author of the novel, is conceded to be one of the leading American writers, of the present generation. Her stories have appeared in a number of magazines, and she has to her credit many "best sellers," including "Towers of Ivory," "The White Morning," "The Conqueror" and "The Aristocrats." "Patience Sparhawk and Her Times" is considered by many to be her greatest work.

The scenario writer who has been selected to adapt this story is Mary Murillo, one of the foremost continuity writers of the motion picture field, and who is responsible for the scenarios of some of the most prominent feature productions within the past year, including "Cheating the Public," and who was also instrumental in bringing to the screen, for the Fox Film Corporation, the fairy tales, "Jack and the Beanstalk," "Babes in the Woods," and others. She has also written other stories for Madame Petrova, as well as for Clara Kimball Young, Theda Bara, William Farnum, and several other film stars.

The star—Madame Olga Petrova—is so well known in the industry that a resume of her past work is superfluous in the present instance. As is well known, she is now the head of her own personal production organization, and is said to be one of the highest salaried artists in the world. Since the formation of her own company four feature productions have been finished, all being handled by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. She feels that in "Patience Sparhawk" she has found an ideal part for her interpretation, and it is said that an extraordinarily large sum was paid by the Petrova Picture Company for the rights to this production.

Ralph Ince, who will direct the production, has just completed Madame Petrova's fourth picture, "The Great Star," and is well known as a producer of screen successes, having been one of the early directors of the Vitagraph organization, making the first three and five reel pictures released by this concern. He was responsible for Anita Stewart's introduction to the screen, and since leaving Vitagraph he has a number of independent successes to his credit.

The executives of the Petrova Picture Company have expressed themselves as looking forward to remarkable results from the picturization of the book in question, together with the combination afforded by star, author, director and scenario writer.

Stockey Sells Rights on "Ignorance."

P. J. Stockey, general manager of state rights department of the United Business Association of Pennsylvania, has been in New York for several days, where he sold New Jersey and Greater New York rights on "Ignorance" to Henry A. Gilmore, 130 West Forty-sixth street, New York City.

In connection with this sale Mr. Stockey stated:

"We employed a David Simon to handle this picture, but he closed a deal without our consent to another prospective buyer and he is no longer connected with us. We have now, however, straightened out the tangle, and Mr. Gilmore now is the sole owner of 'Ignorance' and will exploit it in a first class way.

"We are handling this picture ourselves in Pennsylvania and Ohio and it is making a big hit. It played to enormous business for a week recently at the Minerva theater, Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh."

Mr. Stockey will leave the Cleveland office of the U. B. A. exchange, 224 Columbia building, March 25, 1918, for a trip through the west in the interests of his pictures. He announces that he will have two more pictures ready shortly for state rights sale.

W. H. Chief Issues Statement

Tells of Hart Feature Reissues—Now Handled by This Organization.

AN official of W. H. Productions Company speaks encouragingly of film trade conditions throughout the country. He stated that according to reports from all the exchanges handling W. H. product, which to date includes the two-reel Harts, the three feature Harts, viz., "The Two-Gun Man" in "The Bargain," "The Bandit and the Preacher" and "The Hell Hound of Alaska," also the twenty-eight Mack Sennett Keystone Comedies, that they were successfully exploiting these features not only to their own advantage, but also to that of the exhibitor, and that the entire world rights have now been disposed of on the present Hart reissues. The statement further says: "There seems to be a question in the minds of some as to reasons for the success in marketing this large number of subjects within such a short time. The three pictures featuring William S. Hart, and produced by Thos. H. Ince, are three of the best pictures that Hart has ever appeared in, and were produced by the New York Motion Picture Corp. in 1914-15.

"Mr. Hart was not known to the picture-going public at that time. Desiring to make a reputation, and the work being new and fascinating, he therefore put his heart and soul into it, and these productions in turn put him on the map. W. H. Productions Company saw the possibilities in reissuing features that made stars famous.

"These reissues were sold by us within a period of two months to the keenest and most reliable independent exchange men in the country, and they in turn are now successfully booking these box-office features to the leading exhibitors. Good judgment, proper exploitation and fair prices put these excellent pictures over. W. H. Productions Company, from its inception, inaugurated a Service Department for the benefit of the exchanges and exhibitors. Complete advertising and exploitation campaigns have been devised for each individual production, and these campaigns have materially assisted both Exchanges and Exhibitors to secure maximum results.

"We are about to release a series of five of the greatest Bessie Barriscale pictures. These productions will have exceptional box-office values because they lend themselves easily to extraordinary publicity and advertising possibilities."

Goldberg Cartoons in Motion Pictures.

Under an arrangement recently made the cartoons of Rube Goldberg, whose work has appeared in the New York Evening Mail, and has been syndicated through a large number of newspapers throughout the country, will be animated and presented in motion pictures, to be released by Harry Grossman of 729 Seventh avenue, New York. Preparations are under way for the presentation of Mr. Goldberg's well known creation, the twins "Mike and Ike, They Look Alike," to appear in single reel comedies, to be released one each week.

In addition, it is announced that the work of this cartoonist will be a feature of the Sunday editions of the Hearst newspapers.

West Declines English Offer.

Billy West is said to have been approached by a promoter who claims to represent English film producers with a proposition to appear in a series of five-reel comedies, with a guarantee that his yearly income would not be less than fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. West, who is under contract to Nat H. Spitzer, of the King-Bee Films Corporation, for five years, has declined the offer.

Four Petrova Productions Completed.

With the completion of work on "The Great Star," Madame Olga Petrova's fourth picture, the half-way mark in the production of eight features for First National Exhibitors' Circuit, which the Petrova Pictures Company agreed to make during the coming year, has been reached, and Madame Petrova has gone to Palm Beach to enjoy a vacation before commencing work on her fifth picture—"Patience Sparhawk."

When announcement was made a few months ago that Madame Petrova had formed her own company for the production of features in which she would be starred, and that she would have her own studios, and all work would be under her supervision, it was freely predicted that the venture would be a failure. However, the first two—"Daughter of Destiny" and "The Light Within"—have been favorably received throughout the country; while the third and fourth—"The Life Mask" and "The Great Star"—have been shown to the First National Exhibitors, who have expressed their satisfaction.

Jester Making Four More Comedies.

With the completion of "The Wrong Flat," the fourth Jester Comedy, featuring Twede Dan, work has been commenced on the next four, which will constitute the June, July, August and September releases, and it is announced that the same policy will be followed in their production; that is, to have clean and interesting stories, with wholesome comedy and slight touches of drama.

Pina Menichelli, "The Soul of a Vampire" (Raver).

Arthur F. Peck, of Sterling

Facts Regarding His Activities in Motion Picture Field—Issues Statement on Present Conditions.

THE name of Arthur F. Beck, President of the Sterling Pictures Corporation, has been prominent lately in concluding a number of big deals for the acquisition of independent feature productions. All of these are to be offered to the independent exchangemen of the United States and Canada under the Sterling System, explained in our issue of March 16.

Mr. Beck was, first, an independent exhibitor; he then operated exchange offices handling independent films released by the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company, in Indianapolis, Cincinnati, Louisville, Evansville, Dayton and Rock Island; he then conducted offices for the Universal in St. Louis, Kansas City, Oklahoma City, Wichita, Memphis and Little Rock for three years. Later he came to New York as General Manager of the Mutual Film Exchanges, and then joined Art Dramas, after which he became President of the Sterling Pictures Corporation. Mr. Beck organized and became the first President of the F. I. L. M. Club of New York.

Mr. Beck states: "During my twelve years' experience in the motion picture business, I have never seen a year go by that did not bring wails of woe from people in the business that the industry is in a chaotic condition. I am thoroughly familiar with the situation throughout the entire United States at the present time, and I can safely state that the independent exchange man who has conducted his dealings along conservative lines is in very excellent spirits. I am willing to sink or swim in the independent sea, and if it never looks any worse than it does at the present time, I am satisfied to venture out without life preservers."

The Sterling Pictures Corporation are shortly to announce a new series of big productions that they are obtaining for independent distribution.

"The Grain of Dust" for Leon Netter.

In connection with his recent announcement of the acquisition of "Carmen of the Klondike," "Who Shall Take My Life" and "The City of Purple Dreams," Leon D. Netter advises that he has also secured rights to the Crest Picture "The Grain of Dust," featuring Lillian Walker, and that it will be handled in Ohio and Kentucky through his Masterpiece Film Attractions' offices in Cleveland and Cincinnati.

Goldburg to Handle Rialto-De Luxe Productions

One Feature Will Be Released Each Month on State Right Basis, Commencing April 1—Dramatic and Literary Successes Picturized.

JESSE J. Goldburg, state right distributor, has signed a contract with a prominent producing concern to release one feature, five reels or longer, each month for one year, the first to be released April 1. The productions will be known as Rialto-De Luxe Productions, and each will be an adaptation from a dramatic or literary success. The first three are now complete, and the fourth is in process of manufacture. The first is an adaptation from a popular novel, the second and third are based on two plays that have appeared on Broadway within the last five years, and the fourth is a sensational drama that had its vogue on the stage in London and New York for a long time.

Mr. Goldburg will be the exclusive sales and exploitation representative, and the pictures will be handled on a state right basis. Although no public announcement has been made of the issuance of these releases, yet, through correspondence, a little more than one-third of the territory of the United States has been closed. The franchises contain a provision guaranteeing the high character of the productions.

Mr. Goldburg states: "As a result of my tour of the United States, recently completed, I feel that the time is ripe for a steady and consistent line of attractions that meet the present-day demand of the independent distributing field."

The territorial divisions of the United States and the percentages allotted to each territory applied to the Rialto De Luxe Productions is said to be radically changed from the commonly accepted method heretofore followed by independent distributors.

Maytrix Buys "Zongar" for New York.

The Greater New York and Northern New Jersey rights of Bernarr Macfadden's thriller, "Zongar," have been purchased by Maytrix Photo Plays, Inc., with headquarters on the eighth floor of the Godfrey Building. Within the next fortnight the firm's booking plans will have been completed, and the Macfadden feature will be an Eastertide attraction in many of the local houses.

Maytrix Photo Plays, Inc., is composed of S. B. Kramer, who was affiliated with Universal for three years, and William Lewis, an experienced salesman. In addition to "Zongar," starring George Larkin, the firm is also handling "Humility," featuring Betty Brice and Murdock McQuarrie, and "When Destiny Wills," featuring Grace Davison and Melbourne McDowell. They will also be interested in the handling of the famous Rube Goldberg animated cartoons.

Prosperity Trip by Spitzer.

Nat H. Spitzer, vice-president and sales manager of the King-Bee Films Corporation, left last Monday on the "Twentieth Century" bound for Hollywood. He will stop off at the various exchanges handling the Billy West Comedies to congratulate them personally on the success achieved with this brand of two-reelers.

Upon arrival at Hollywood he will meet Louis Burstein, president of the King-Bee Films Corporation, and both will return to New York together.

Publishers to Push the Song "Mickey."

Following the announcement that the song "Mickey" will be vigorously exploited in connection with the Western Import Company's picture with the same title, featuring Mabel Normand, the publishers, Daniels and Wilson, Inc., advise they have arranged for store and decorated window displays in the Kress, McCrory, Woolworth and Kresge syndicate stores, as well as in department stores, also that they will run ads in the bulletins of music jobbers, such as Plaza, McKinly, Enterprise, Crown and Forster which reach several thousand dealers in the United States and Canada.

The publishers will also use an illustrated cut of "Mickey" on the back of all of their future publications, which will advertise the photoplay as well as the song, and many thousand pamphlets are being printed to be sent out in all of their letters, statements, etc., and dealers will be supplied so that they can use them in like manner. Daniels & Wilson, Inc., also advise that "Mickey" is the feature song in their professional, band, orchestra, player-roll and phonograph departments, and they will circularize the entire trade at least twice a month from now on with advance information. It is expected that in this manner, every city, town and hamlet in the United States will be reached before the release of the picture.

Triangle Special Nearing Completion.

Triangle Film Corporation announces that the special feature entitled "The Servant in the House," is nearing completion. It is said to be one of the most ambitious productions that has ever been attempted under the new régime of the Triangle Film Corporation.

Director Jack Conway declares the continuity on Charles Rann Kennedy's play, the work of Lanier Bartlett, is one of the finest he has ever seen, and believes it will be of tremendous help in making the picture a masterpiece.

Working with Conway on "The Servant in the House" are some of the most talented artists in the Triangle playing forces, including Jean Hersholt, as the servant. Jack Curtis, an experienced character man, as the Drain Man, and Harvey Clark as the high churchman. Claire Anderson is cast as the Drain Man's wife. Others who have important parts are Zenaida Williams, Edward Piel, Anna Dodge and little Barbara Connolly.

Steiner Makes Flying Trip.

Mr. William Steiner, of the Jester Comedy Company, has returned to New York from a flying trip to Syracuse, Buffalo, Cleveland, Detroit, Chicago and St. Louis.

He expects to leave again in a few days on a trip in connection with Jester Comedies that will carry him straight through to the Pacific Coast.

Scrantonia Photoplay Corporation Making Comedies

Will Release Two One-Reel Comedies Each Month, Featuring Chinese Actor —Jesse J. Goldburg Is Sales Agent.

WITHOUT the advanced publicity that usually heralds a new photoplay producing concern, the Scrantonia Photoplay Corporation has been quietly producing comedies for several months, and has now announced a program of releases of one-reel comedies, to be issued two each month, commencing April 1. Jesse J. Goldburg will act as exclusive sales and exploitation agent, disposing of the releases on a state right basis.

The first six pictures are completed, and are entitled "The Chinese Musketeer," "Feet and Defeat," "Cheerful Liars," "Hate and Fortune," "Parson Pepp" and "The Ring and the Ringer." These comedies are said to be of an unusual order, refined in nature, yet possessing novelty, and that particular stress has been laid upon a refined idea of humor.

One of the novel attributes is the featuring of Charles Fang, reputed to be the only Chinese comedian in America, and to possess an unusual and infectious smile. And while his work carries with it the mannerisms of the Orient it also has a distinctly American flavor.

Charles Fang was born in San Francisco in 1893, and attended a Chinese private school until he was nine years old, completing his education in Canton, China. Returning to San Francisco he appeared in vaudeville for two years, making his debut in "A Night in Chinatown." In motion pictures he has played in productions of Kalem, World, Fox and Metro companies, appearing with Bushman and Bayne, for the last named organization, in the serial "The Great Secret."

Others in the cast include Paul Panzer, well known to motion picture audiences; Jules Cowles, Irene Boyle, Anna Seacomb and Baby Ivan. Charles R. DeBarge is the managing director.

Arrangements are announced by which all Foursquare Pictures will be handled for the Dominion of Canada by Superfeatures, Ltd.

"Crucible of Life" at Camp Upton.

At a recent special performance at Camp Upton, Yaphank, Long Island, a showing of the General Enterprise production, "The Crucible of Life," was shown to the soldiers, and as a result of the enthusiastic reception Colonel George Vidmer, of the 306th Infantry, requested that they be allowed to keep the print until the remainder of the soldiers had a chance to view it. This request was gladly acceded to. This picture contains many views of army activities, and in order to further assist in war work the General Enterprise forwarded to the Division of Pictorial Publicity of the Bureau of Public Information at Washington a still picture, showing Grace Darmond as the Goddess of Liberty, surrounded by various representatives of the Allies in uniform, with request that it be put to any patriotic purpose possible.

Take Action to Prevent Delay to "Eagle's Eye."

Watterson S. Rothacker, of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Co., was a visitor in Ithaca, N. Y., where The Whartons are producing "The Eagle's Eye," by William J. Flynn, former chief of the U. S. Secret service. Mr. Rothacker went to Ithaca from Chicago to confer with The Whartons and make provision for the quick printing of all episodes of the serial, so that no traffic congestion might result to the detriment of the distribution of any of the installments. At the conference such provisions were made that all the Foursquare Exchanges through which the serial is being distributed are assured of having their prints well ahead of their release dates.

Star Appears in Picture and Play at Same Time.

Simultaneous with the appearance of Elizabeth Risdon in the featured role in "Mother," the George Loane Tucker production handled by General Enterprises, at the New York theater on March 14, this young woman is also appearing on the stage of the Park theater, another Broadway house, in "Seven Days' Leave."

Miss Risdon's versatility is admirably shown in these two productions, as in "Mother" she is shown in the make-up of a wrinkled and gray-haired woman, while in "Seven Days' Leave" she has an ingenue role. A box party has been arranged in Miss Risdon's honor by several of her friends, who, after viewing her performance on the screen, will witness part of the performance in which she is appearing in person at the Park theater.

Royce Shallenberger to Handle "Souls Redeemed."

Royce Shallenberger, who recently left New York to join forces with C. C. Hite in the distribution of pictures in the Middle West, has bought the Michigan rights to the Edward Warren production "Souls Redeemed." Mr. Shallenberger is the youngest brother of W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation.

RAPF ANNOUNCES TWO PLAYS.

The "Accidental Honeymoon," Starring Robert Warwick, and "Struggle Everlasting," Featuring Florence Reed.

HARRY RAPF announces release on states right plan of two feature productions, "The Struggle Everlasting" and "The Accidental Honeymoon." The first will be "The Struggle Everlasting," in which Florence Reed is starred, supported by a Broadway cast, including Milton Sills and Irving Cummings. It is based on Edwin Milton Royle's play of the same title, which was staged in New York by the late Henry B. Harris and had an extended run. The release date has been set for April 1.

"The Accidental Honeymoon" is Robert Warwick's last production prior to his enlistment in the services of the U. S. A. It was written and directed by Leonce Perret and again offers Elaine Hammerstein as support for Captain Warwick.

It was upon the completion of this picture that Warwick notified Mr. Rapf, president of the Robert Warwick Film Corporation, of his intention to serve his country, and arrangements were made for the dissolution of the company bearing his name, with which Warwick had a lucrative contract, with 65 weeks longer to run. Mr. Warwick was also under contract with A. H. Woods to appear in a stage production. Director Leonce Perret is said to have supplied a breezy story tingling with the romance of youth, decidedly original, and Mr. Warwick has a distinctive role, as it is the first time he has appeared in a comedy. Mr. Rapf has set April 10 as the release date for "The Accidental Honeymoon."

WHAT THE PICTURES ARE DOING.

Reports from Exhibitors and Exchanges Regarding State Right Features.

FOURSQUARE exchange managers and several theaters, including the Stanley and the Eighty-first Street in New York, report that the first installment of "The Eagle's Eye," released in New York, Boston and Chicago territories this week, "went over great" to packed houses. Manager Shackman of the Eighty-first Street says, in addition to his usual patrons, it brought many from outside territory.

Magnet Film Exchange announces that the manager of the Eighty-first Street theater, New York, was so pleased with a week's showing of "The Two-Gun Man" in "The Bargain" that he has booked the second Hart feature handled by W. H. Productions, "The Bandit and the Preacher," for a week's run, beginning April 1. They also advise that there is a big demand for the Mack Sennett Keystone Comedies.

* * *

W. E. Drummond of Special Features Company, Knoxville, states he has been successful in booking "The Bandit and the Preacher" and "The Hell Hound of Alaska" in many of the leading theaters in his territory, and is enthusiastic over results so far obtained.

* * *

Benjamin Friedman, of the Friedman Film Corporation, states that for several months prior to his securing rights to the Hart, Fairbanks, Keenan and Talmadge re-issues, handled by Hiller & Wilk, he has had inquiries from exhibitors for these pictures and looks for record-breaking bookings.

* * *

W. E. Shellenberger of Arrow also advises that "Today" played a week's engagement at Strand theater, Buffalo, creating a great deal of favorable comment, and that same reports were made regarding runs at Strand, Washington, Victoria, Wilmington and Hippodrome, Baltimore.

Keeney's Second Production

Based on Story by Guy Bolton, Author of Successful Musical Plays.

SINCE it became known that Guy Bolton, author of "Oh! Boy!" "Oh! Lady! Lady!" and other stage successes, had turned his hand to scenario writing, much interest has been aroused in the probable results of his venture in the new field. As already announced, his first production, "Marriage," has been accepted by Frank J. Keeney, who has engaged for the picture an all-star cast, headed by Catherine Calvert, who also starred in the first Keeney picture, "A Romance of the Underworld," soon to be released. She will have the same leading man, that is, David Powell, who formerly played leads for David Powell.

Mary Pickford, Edna Goodrich, Ann Murdock and Olive Tell. The remaining members of the cast are new. Among them are Thomas Holding, who played opposite Madame Petrova in four of her principal pictures and also opposite Pauline Frederick; and Walter Hiers, who has supported Ethel Barrymore and Marguerite Clark.

In line with his policy of having other beautiful women in addition to the star, Mr. Keeney has engaged Miss Hazel Alden, who is of a distinctive blond type and who has won popularity as a member of western stock companies and also appeared in Christie Comedies. Another member of the cast is Ida Darling, well known on the stage and screen, who played the wife, opposite John Mason, in "Common Clay," and for a time was a member of the Famous Players forces.

The picture will be under the direction of James Kirkwood and all of the interiors will be made in the Keeney Studio at 134th street and Park avenue. It will probably be necessary for the company to travel for considerable distances to get some of the exteriors.

Unique Sets Used in "The Wrong Flat."

In filming "The Wrong Flat," the fourth Jester Comedy, featuring Twede Dan; it was necessary to construct many unique sets, including balconies, orchestra and stage of a famous old theater, which illustrate the extremes to which it is necessary to go in the production of modern motion pictures. This picture is now complete, and will in a few days be sent to the exchanges handling Jester Comedies for their inspection and opinion pursuant to William Steiner's "show you" policy.

Screenings of the April release, "All For Her," are also being conducted at the present time in exchanges throughout the country.

Many First Run Houses Book "Tarzan of the Apes"

Ninety Prints Necessary—Twenty-one for New York City Alone—Unique Publicity and Advertising Aid Prepared by First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

THAT first-run houses are always ready to accept pictures of merit and that almost every high-class film theater in the country is open for pictures of sufficient pulling power is attested by the bookings on "Tarzan of the Apes," announced for release Easter Sunday, March 31.

The Isis theater, Denver; Circle theater, Indianapolis; Victoria theater, Philadelphia; Globe theater, Boston; Tivoli theater, San Francisco; Marcus Loew's New York American, Victoria, Greeley, West End, Palace, Boulevard, Fulton, Delancey Street, Royal, Orpheum, Avenue B, Warwick, Circle, National and ten others; William Fox's Academy of Music, Riviera, Audubon, Folly, Riverside, Washington, Star, Crotona and five other houses; B. S. Moss' Hamilton, Jefferson, Prospect and other theaters; Poli's Bridgeport, New Haven, Waterbury, Springfield, Meriden, Hartford and Worcester, and Proctor's circuit; Turner & Dahnken's houses in the Far West and the principal theaters at Portland, Seattle, Washington, Wilmington, Baltimore, Richmond, Milwaukee; the Strand, Minneapolis; the Metropolitan, St. Paul; the Victoria, at Wilmington; Webb's theater, Newark and Trenton, St. Louis, Omaha, Kansas City; Madison theater, Detroit; the Davidson theater, Milwaukee, and seventeen other houses of first-run calibre will show this picture during the first two weeks in April.

It is announced that twenty-one prints will be required for first-run bookings in Greater New York alone, and for the entire country, instead of sixty prints, as at first thought necessary, ninety will be used. This is said to exceed the number used on any production thus far released to motion picture theaters.

The First National Exhibitors' Circuit have arranged for the following novelties: Several live apes have been contracted for, and will be rented to the exhibitors. Large quantities of heralds, depicting the ape stealing the baby from the cradle, have been published, and will be furnished at a rate lower than the usual one-color throw-away. Cards in twelve styles are being distributed, and can be used in follow-up style. Unusual lobby display of papier mache plaques, such as characterized the Broadway theater during the run of the picture there, are in abundance, and will be loaned to the theaters at a low figure. Stuffed lions and tigers and apes and gorillas will be hired out for lobby display. Campaign books are being distributed, and attractive display books are on the press and will follow; while the lithographic posters, which attracted such attention in New York, are being sent to all exchanges for use by the theater owners throughout the country.

Ivan Announces New Policy

Will Release Feature Production Each Month—First Three About Ready.

IN accordance with the new policy inaugurated by I. E. Chadwick, executive head of Ivan Film Productions, this organization will in future release one feature each month. The first three pictures are practically ready and are the work of Directors Lawrence Humphrey and Grandon respectively.

Rights to "Life or Honor?" which will be the first release under this new plan, were recently shown to a few buyers, and, although still in an unfinished state, in addition to the sales for New York, New Jersey and New England reported in our last issue, rights have also been disposed of for Indiana, Missouri and Kansas to V. H. Hodupp, Incorporated, of Indianapolis; for California, Nevada and Arizona to M. & R. Feature Film Exchange of San Franciso, and for the state of Ohio, to Ohio Ivan Film Distributors of Cleveland.

"Life or Honor?" was produced under the direction of Edmund Lawrence and is said to be a drama of mystery and thrills, in which extraordinary situations are introduced in connection with a "detective" plot; and this picture, as well as the other two referred to above, is announced as differing from the Ivan productions of the past.

Jewel Takes Over Julian's "Kaiser."

JEWEL Productions, Inc., has purchased the world's right to "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," from the Renowned Pictures Corporation. The latter organization originally acquired the production from Rupert Julian, who produced it and also appeared in the title role.

The transfer of rights goes into immediate effect, and for the remainder of its run at the Broadway theater the production will be sponsored by Jewel. The latter organization is also planning to present the picture in Boston, Chicago, Philadelphia and Los Angeles, San Francisco and other large cities for initial showings within the next thirty days.

New York City has given "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," a remarkably enthusiastic reception. The publicity given the picture by the newspapers reviewers, plus the "stunts" put over by the house management, have caused the theater to hang out the S. R. O. sign every day since the opening.

All Jewel offices have already received their prints of the subject, as well as all the advertising props that have helped put the subject over in New York.

Distribution of Gerard Picture Undecided

The success of the Gerard photoplay "My Four Years in Germany," at the Knickerbocker theater, has exceeded anticipations and seats are stated to be available eight weeks ahead.

The method of further exploiting the picture in other parts of the world besides Broadway, New York, has not yet been selected. The decision arrived at will be announced later.

The company owning and operating the production feel thay have a unique and great money making picture and thus are under no necessity to hasten in disposing of any of the rights.

"His Daughter Pays" (Piedmont).

A film version of the famous play "La Baccarat," by Frederick H. James, has just been completed by Piedmont Pictures Corporation under the title "His Daughter Pays." It tells the story of a diplomat, the father of two daughters, who, when on the point of selling secret information to the enemy of his country, refuses to do so and has his eldest daughter abducted. She becomes a dancer in a Paris cabaret, and the safety of his youngest child is threatened.

It is said that one of the features is the performance of twelve Oriental dancing girls who appear in a Turkish scene.

The role of the daughter who becomes a dancer is taken by Gertrude McCoy, well known for her work in many Edison productions, and other features. Pauline Curley, who is seen as the younger sister, has appeared in Goldwyn and Metro productions, also in "The Fall of the Romanoffs." Charles Graham assumes the role of the grief-stricken father, while Henry Sadley appears as a Paris gambler and Barry Whitcomb as a Turk.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

Brunet Talks of Pathe Policies Under His Administration

PATHE policies under the administration of Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager, include comprehensive plans for the world-wide distribution of quality productions through the international organization of Pathe Freres. The outstanding feature of the plans for the American market is the announcement that four serials in addition to "The House of Hate," the current serial release, will be issued in 1918. Under the direction of Charles Pathe a new standard has been set for serial productions, and Pathe's continued photoplays of the future will be of a quality never before attempted.

Pathe production is under the control of Ferdinand Zecca, director general of productions, under the new administration.

"It is our idea to have the name of Pathe asociated with quality productions only," said Mr. Brunet. In other words, when a picture is released under the trade mark Pathe, we want the exhibitor to know it is a good picture.

"Charles Pathe was the first to realize the opportunities of world-wide distribution. Under his policy, the cost of the negative is divided among the exhibitors of all countries instead of being charged, through high rentals, against a proportionately few of those who show the picture. Wherever there is a motion picture theater a Pathe representative can be found. Pathe has agents in every important motion picture centre of the world. In the United States we have thirty exchanges. We are well organized in Canada and Mexico. Our South American activities are centered in Venezuela, Chile, Peru, Bolivia, Brazil, Argentine, Uruguay and Paraguay.

"Steadily this world-wide distributing organization has been perfected, and now Pathe is organized in Russia, Algeria, South African Republic, West Indies, Australia, New Zealand, Tasmania and the adjoining islands in the Pacific, Spain, Italy, Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Switzerland, Bombay, Singapore, Manila, Batavia, Shanghai, Hong Kong and Japan. France is the headquarters of the Pathe organization.

"This organization, under one central control, enables Pathe to throw open the markets of the entire world to the producers of good pictures.

"This policy of 'quality pictures only' applies to serial program as well as to features," Mr. Brunet stated. "'The House of Hate,' the first serial released in 1918, sets a new standard for production, cast and story. Production is actively under way on a new serial to follow 'The House of Hate.' It is understood this is a new type of Western story, written by Gilson Willets, author of 'The Double Cross,' produced under the supervision of the Astra Film Corporation."

"House of Hate" Going Strong.

"The House of Hate," Pathe's new serial, starring Pearl White with Antonio Moreno and a big cast including Paul Dillon, Peggy Shaynor, opened on the 10th to a larger total of advance collections than any former Pathe serial. Actual figures, according to a statement from the Pathe offices, point to this serial as the biggest drawing card the company has put out. "The House of Hate" is playing in a record-breaking number of theaters in New York City, including the Mayer & Schneider Circuit. The picture will also be seen at the Boligini Circuit. The picture is running at the Grand Opera House, Twenty-third street and Eighth avenue. This theater seats 2,000.

Billie "Sculps" as Well as Knits.

Miss Billie Rhodes, camera comedienne and holder of the motion picture knitting record for spinsters, having completed eleven sweaters and twenty-seven pairs of socks for soldiers, goes in for clay modeling in some of her more reposeful moments. Miss Rhodes' most recent achievement in that line was a clay model of herself in the act of knitting a sweater, and as several of her friends complimented her on the statuette she had it mounted on a pedestal, just to prove that she could "sculp" if she happened to feel in a molding mood.

Notes of Paramount Players.

Elsie Ferguson and Maurice Tourneur, her director, accompanied by the players in the cast of "A Doll's House," have left for Maine, where exterior scenes in the famous Ibsen story will be taken.

The title of Marguerite Clark's picture, on which she is now working, might have been "Rich Girl, Poor Girl" instead of "Rich Man, Poor Man," for in the story Miss Clark experiences poverty and riches. J. Searle Dawley, who is directing the actress, says: "This will make a splendid vehicle for Miss Clark, as it permits the portrayal of scenes in the first part of the picture which make her diminutiveness especially effective, and in marked contrast with the serious dramatic moments which take place when she becomes older."

W. L. Abingdon, an actor who has been prominently identified with the stage of America and England for more than forty years, has been engaged for the part of General Zariskene, Chief of Police of Petrograd, in "Fedora," the Paramount picture, starring Pauline Frederick in Sardou's famous play.

Wallace Reid and Ann Little, directed by Donald Crisp, have begun work on "Believe Me, Xantippe," the production taken from the well-known Harvard prize play, and which had such a successful run in the eastern theaters a few seasons ago. In this picture Miss Little returns again to cowgirl rig in her role of a Colorado mountain maiden, while Mr. Reid, as the clubman who goes west on a wager, is cast for an entirely agreeable part.

The rain still continues intermittently, and as a consequence the companies at the Lasky studio are mostly working indoors. George Melford is rounding out "Sandy," with Jack Pickford and Louise Huff, which will soon be finished.

Commodore Blackton has begun work on "Missing" with interior scenes. James Young is directing. Sylvia Breamer and Thomas Meighan have two of the principal roles.

Jack Holt will probably go back to the Thomas H. Ince fold for a western picture.

New Story from Triangle Winner.

Triangle is producing a two-reel comedy written by Mrs. Kate Corbaley, author of the $1,000 Triangle prize story, "Real Folks." The subject is "Mr. Briggs Closes the House." In the cast are Edwin Brady, Myrtle Rishell, Anna Dodge, Fred Mack and Frank M. Caffrey.

Earle to Lavish His Art on Second Nazimova Picture

MME. NAZIMOVA'S second great screen play to be presented by Metro will be dignified by the most artistic treatment known to the world of motion pictures. The aid of motion painting, the discovery of Ferdinand Earle, has been invoked in preparing for the screen this new production, in which the great Russian star plays the part of a gypsy princess. Mr. Earle, who has studied long with such renowned artists as Whistler and Bouguereau, is an artist-pioneer who believes that the same results can be attained on the screen that are obtained in the sister arts by Edmond Dulac Bakst and Urban. Maxwell Karger, himself an artist and always interested in new art-forms, has given Mr. Earle an opportunity to develop his ideas at the Metro studio, and the new Nazimova picture will profit as a result.

As a sort of pictorial interlude, Mr. Earle will show the development of a celebrated resort of wealth and fashion from earliest times. Its splendid tropical solitude, before the arrival of man, is first pictured. The scene changes as if by magic throughout the succeeding stages of evolution, giving full value to the natural beauties of the place, up to the fulfillment of its destiny as a garden-spot of earth. Nazimova herself figures in the closing views. Art-titles have also been made by Mr. Earle, for the entire production, paintings in harmony with the accompanying scenes having been made for the purpose.

Mr. Earle has been obliged to turn inventor at various times since he began his researches in the new art, which he calls motion painting. Among other things he has invented a dual exposure camera, which takes two separate exposures simultaneously on one film. Technical details are many in connection with the work, but to those who view the finished result on the screen, the final effect is the principal thing. The effect is whatever the artist wants it to be, either exterior or interior, and it changes as rapidly and as often as he wants it to. The whole process sounds like magic, and the effect is indeed not unlike magic, for the artist is able to give the appearance of stars shooting in space, of Father Time unveiling the varying seasons in succession, or of order coming out of chaos in a representation of the world's beginning. These have the actual appearance of reality, but are nothing more nor less than an unusual and extremely clever use of paintings. The artist has been obliged to experiment with different pigments, oils and surfaces in order to obtain something that will photograph in the way he wishes. The intricacy of the process protects him, because he might explain practically every detail of the proceeding and still run no risk of having his work duplicated.

Exchanges Get Two Capitols

Goldwyn Sends to Branches Its Initial Parsons Comedies.

FINAL arrangements have been completed by Goldwyn for the distribution of Capitol Comedies, starring "Smiling Bill" Parsons. Prints of the first two releases, "Billy's Predicament" and "Bill's Baby," have been shipped to Goldwyn branches throughout the United States and trade showings will be had at an early date.

Goldwyn believes that the demand for clean, interesting comedies, trading on the foibles of human nature and devoid of slapstick, is greater at this time than ever before and expects the Parsons comedies to fill an exhibitor need. Each runs about 2,000 feet. One will be released every other Monday, beginning with "Billy's Predicament" at a date shortly to be announced. Exhibitors desiring to book the first year's output, or twenty-six comedies, will be given the preference in placing of contracts.

Believing that there is not a heavy demand for the usual accessories in the showing of two-reel comedies, Goldwyn will issue but two posters for these productions—one one-sheet and one three-sheet. Special attention has been given to the selection of the material for these, however, and unusually attractive paper has been prepared.

"Smiling Bill" Parsons, star of Capitol Comedies, is a film magnate by persuasion, but a comedian by birth. As president of the National Film Corporation he is one of the owners of "Tarzan," a feature picture just concluding a long and profitable Broadway run. He engaged himself as star of his own comedies when he couldn't find a man fat enough and bald headed enough and jolly enough to visualize the character he had in mind.

Parsons will play the same character in all of the comedies, though each is built on a story separate and distinct.

High Lights in "Ordeal of Rosetta."

"The Ordeal of Rosetta," which Alice Brady is now making for Select, is marked by a number of interesting details of direction, in which Emile Chautard and his assistant, Albert Lena, are achieving noteworthy results.

This picture calls for an interior in a theatrical agency, to which comes Alice Brady as Rosetta Gelardi with a manuscript she has typed at the Stenographers' Bureau, where she is employed. In looking about for a model for this set Mr. Lena visited the offices of a well-known theatrical agent in New York, and found it admirably suited to his purpose. Accordingly, before the opening of the office one morning, Mr. Lena photographed the premises and took exact measurements of the various rooms, all of which he reproduced for the agent's office set in the photoplay.

For the Long Island home of the author hero of the story was taken the gorgeous mansion which is the pride of Ramsey, N. J. The grounds about the house were used for the water scenes, the bridge scene, the driveway and the automobile scenes, reproducing the elaborate surroundings of a palatial country estate.

In this picture Alice Brady plays a dual role—the innocent, sweet Rosetta, and her long lost twin sister Lola, who has fallen into evil ways and whose misguided attempts at revenging Rosetta's imagined jilting lead to tragedy.

Take Trip South for One Scene.

Goldwyn's "The Splendid Sinner," in which Mary Garden makes her second screen appearance, is replete with modern military atmosphere. Much of the action takes place in a Belgian chateau transformed into a base hospital, where Miss Garden is serving as a nurse. Anders Randolph, who plays a German officer, is seen on the film astride a spirited horse in a scene where the trees and fields are unmistakably those of midsummer.

As the production was actually filmed during the Northern winter, it was necessary for Director Edwin Carewe to take Randolph and David Abel, the cameraman, for a pleasant jaunt to Savannah to "shoot" the single scene. And the purpose was served when Randolph mounted his charger, cantered away, then back to the camera, the simple action consuming but five minutes. On the screen scarcely five seconds of the incident are shown.

Scene from "An Alien Enemy" (Paralta).

Louise Glaum Completes Her Initial Paralta Play

LOUISE GLAUM'S first production, which has been made since her connection with Paralta Plays, Inc., has just been completed at the studios of that company in Los Angeles, and only twenty-six working days were engaged in the filming. In spite of some cloudy weather and a rainy week, besides other unavoidable delays, the production has been finished within its schedule and without sacrifice from the standpoint of dramatic excellence.

There are many features of especial interest attached to Miss Glaum's first Paralta production, the most important one being that it will place her in a new field of drama, which has for its scope straight dramatic acting and which releases her from the cramped confines of seductress characterizations.

The title of her first Paralta play is "An Alien Enemy," and was written by the Paralta staff author, Monte M. Katterjohn, who also appears in the screen version. The theme is one of timely appeal, dealing with international intrigue and the world's powerful and little known military intelligence system, whose giant arms are ever reaching secretly to every branch of human endeavor. Thrilling scenes, ranging from intense emotional portrayal, in which Miss Glaum holds the center of interest, to big ensemble scenes, where real United States troops are seen marching through the streets of a French village, feature the production throughout.

While having a background of the great war, "An Alien Enemy" is distinctly not a war play, but one in which human emotion is the main element. Miss Glaum appears in a role in which she is enabled to display her remarkable powers of heavy emotional acting. Miss Glaum will be supported in "An Alien Enemy" by Thurston Hall, as leading man, and Arthur Allardt in the heavy role. The remainder of the cast of supporting players includes Joseph J. Dowling, Charles Hammond, J. Morley, Roy Laidlaw and Clifford Alexander.

The production was staged under the direction of Wallace Worsley.

Big Trio for General's "Shame."

Next to its "punch" as an intensified social problem in dramatic form, the stars, direction and story merit are being presented by General Film Company as the outstanding features of the John W. Noble production of "Shame." The three persons chiefly responsible for the screen perfection of "Shame" are Director Noble, Zena Keefe, the star, and Niles Welch, the leading man.

Inasmuch as all three names have a big advertising value, General Film believes that "Shame" will be one of the most successful feature productions launched in many months.

"Queen of the Sea" Released in May.

"Queen of the Sea," which Annette Kellermann made for William Fox, has a tentative release for May 5. In magnificence of setting, beautiful photographic effects, and dramatic interest "Queen of the Sea" is said to excel "A Daughter of the Gods." Many of the scenes were made at Bar Harbor, Me., last summer and society people took the liveliest interest in the activities of the motion picture stars.

Hazel Washburn in Graphic Pictures.

In Hazel Washburn, now appearing in productions of the Graphic Film Corporation, Ivan Abramson states that he has a "find," as she is possessed of great beauty, talent and personality, to which is added the characteristic of hard, conscientious work and strict attention to detail. While still a little girl—she is still in her teens—she showed ability for character portrayal and amused her family and friends by imitating persons in the neighborhood. This practice has proved valuable to her in bringing out fine points of character creation and individual idiosyncrasies.

The Graphic Film Corporation announce that Miss Washburn will appear in pictures in which the parts are written especially for her so as to afford an opportunity for her talents.

Tully Story for May Allison.

Metro Pictures Corporation has purchased from May Tully an original screen story for the use of May Allison. Miss Allison will begin work on the production as soon as she completes her present Metro picture, "Social Hypocrites," a screen version of Alicia Ramsey's successful drama, "Bridge," which is being directed by the celebrated Frenchman, Albert Capellani.

Goldwyn to Distribute Three Productions by Selexart

GOLDWYN Pictures Corporation announces the closing of a deal whereby exhibitors throughout North America are to be offered three big motion picture productions from the studios of Selexart Pictures, Inc. Their excellence is such that Goldwyn has no hesitancy in proclaiming them money-makers for theaters everywhere. Though release dates have not been announced it is probable that the first production, "Blue Blood," starring Howard Hickman, will be ready for trade showing within a fortnight. "Blue Blood" is from the story by J. Grubb Alexander and Fred Myton and was directed by Elliot Howe.

Howard Hickman needs no introduction to American motion picture audiences. Originally an actor of the spoken stage, he began his career in a Bernhardt company and then played in repertoire with Melbourne McDowell. His first screen work was with Universal, from which he went to Lasky, where he appeared in "The Sin Ye Do" and "The Female of the Species." For Triangle-Ince, "The Snarl" was his most important work. Of late he has been a player with the Paralta Company. Rhea Mitchell and Howard Hickman are co-starred in "Social Ambition," the second of the Selexart productions. This is from the story by W. W. Wing and was directed by Wallace Worsley. Miss Mitchell, too, began her career on the legitimate stage. She played in stock at the Alcazar, San Francisco, and later was seen throughout the country on the Orpheum Circuit. She has appeared on the screen for the New York Motion Picture Company in "Three Musketeers," for the American in "Sealed Lips," "The Great Stanley Secret" and "Gilded Youth," and in "Whither Thou Goest." In recent months she has been a featured Paralta player.

Miss Mitchell is starred alone in "Honor's Cross," the last of the group. The picture, directed by Mr. Worsley, is from the story by H. B. Daniel.

The Selexart productions will be booked entirely apart from Goldwyn Pictures, though Goldwyn customers will be given the preference in contracting for the group of three specials.

Big Warship on Brady Film

"Stolen Orders" Has Notable Backgrounds, Including Dreadnought.

AMONG the many interesting and unusual scenes in "Stolen Orders" William A. Brady's spectacular picturization of the famous Drury Lane melodrama, "Sealed Orders," and the first of the series of big feature productions announced by Mr. Brady at the time he severed his connection with the World Film Corporation, are those taken on board a United States man of war. These are especially unique and interesting at this time when the eyes of the world are focused on our fighting ships. It is not permitted to mention the name of the battleship which will be shown on the screen in "Stolen Orders" nor its location at the time the scenes were photographed. Suffice it to say that it was somewhere in America, and that episodes of intense dramatic interest were filmed on its deck.

The entire personnel of the crew, officers and men alike in large number, aided in their enactment, lending not only atmosphere but absolute realism as a background for the action in which Kitty Gordon, as the wife of an Admiral of the American Navy, George McQuarrie as that Admiral; Carlyle Blackwell, as a young naval officer, and June Elvidge and Montague Love figure prominently.

"Stolen Orders," for whose presentation Mr. Brady enlisted the services of six stars, including little Madge Evans, promises many extraordinary features, and Mr. Brady shortly will inaugurate an extensive advertising campaign in its behalf.

Clover Comedies Begin April 2.

The first of three Clover Comedies being produced at the Denver studios of the National Film Corporation for General Film distribution has been completed. "Bud" Duncan, of "Ham and Bud" fame, and Dot Farley, the popular star of a dozen popular comedy brands, and "Kewpie" Morgan are featured in this series of one-reel laugh-makers. The first three subjects announced are "From Caterpillar to Butterfly," "Rip Roaring Rivals" and "The Wooing of Coffee Cake Kate." The initial subject will be released April 12, and other subjects will follow a week apart.

Bud Duncan is the former teammate of Lloyd V. Hamilton in the Ham and Bud Comedies. Miss Farley is well known as the brilliant comedienne of many Keystone, Universal and Sunshine Comedies.

General Names Ten "Slim" Comedies.

General Film Company begins with the current week the distribution of a series of reissues of the popular Essanay Snakeville Comedies of a few years ago. These one-reel subjects, featuring the antics of Slippery Slim, will appear once a week. The first ten subjects announced are:

"The Snakeville Fire Brigade," "The Snakeville Sleuth," "Slippery Slim and the Fortune Teller," "Slippery Slim and the Green-Eyed Monster," "When Macbeth Came to Snakeville," "Slippery Slim and His Tombstone," "Slippery Slim and the Impersonator," "When Slippery Slim Met the Champion," "Snakeville's New Waitress" and "Slippery Slim's Dilemma."

New Blue Ribbon Feature Combination.

A new Blue Ribbon feature combination, composed of Gladys Leslie and Edward Earle, is announced by Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company. They have already begun work in "Ann Acushla," an Irish drama from the pen of Paul West, which is being produced under the direction of William P. S. Earle.

Miss Leslie has been under the direction of Mr. Earle ever since she joined the ranks of Vitagraph stars more than six months ago, and this will be the fourth five-reel feature in which she has appeared.

Edward Earle recently scored a success in the group of one-reel comedies, in which he was directed by Graham Baker, with Agnes Ayres appearing opposite him. Previously he had appeared as the star of two Blue Ribbon features—"For France" and "The Blind Adventure."

In addition to his work before the camera, Mr. Earle has devoted himself to writing, and he was co-author with Graham Baker of most of the new Vitagraph comedies.

With Miss Leslie and Mr. Earle in "Ann Acushla" there will appear a number of other Vitagraph favorites, including Julia Swayne Gordon, "Mother" Mary Maurice, Charles Kent, William Dunn and Betty Blythe.

Vitagraph Reissues Drew Comedies.

The week of March 11 marked the return of Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew to the Vitagraph program, that being the date set by Albert E. Smith, president of the company, for inaugurating the Drew reissues which were announced by him a short time ago. Henceforth these one-reel comedies, which started the Drews on their wonderfully successful screen career, will be issued weekly. Thirty-five subjects, supplying releases for as many weeks, already have been chosen for reissue.

The March Drew releases as announced by Vitagraph are as follows: March 11, "Their First Quarrel"; March 18, "A Telegraphic Tangle"; March 25, "His Wife Knew About It."

"The Purple Lily" (World).

World-Pictures announces a change in the title of the picture to be released on April 23, in which Kitty Gordon is the star. During the working period this picture has been known as "Devil's Dice," but the title has now been changed to "The Purple Lily." Director Kelson selected an excellent cast to support Miss Gordon.

Director Vale Goes to Florida.

Montagu Love, Barbara Castleton, Director Travers Vale and their company left for St. Augustine March 13. The purpose of the trip is to shoot a single scene of the first Castleton-Love World production, "The Swarmi." This particular scene requires a setting of peculiar mystic beauty, and the director decided the backgrounds of Florida alone would suffice.

Kerry Again in Talmadge Support.

In "Good Night, Paul," the rollicking farce success, being made for the screen for Select by Constance Talmadge, the star is again supported by Norman Kerry as her leading man. Kerry's first opportunity to play leads with Miss Talmadge came in her recently completed Select picture, "Up the Road with Sallie."

Big Campaign for Serial

Universal Designs Many Advertising Aids for "The Lion's Claws."

BOOK With Your Eyes Open will be the battle cry of the Universal salesmen in handling the forthcoming serial, "The Lion's Claws." And, backing up its salesmen, Universal has devised a most comprehensive campaign, got up with the express purpose of helping its representatives convince the trade, and the trade in turn to convince the public, of the newest U. serial's box office and production quality.

That "The Lion's Claws" will prove the most successful serial ever produced by Universal is confidently believed by the officials of that organization. This feeling of optimism is based upon the reception accorded "Liberty" and "The Red Ace," Marie Walcamp's previous serial vehicles. It is declared that the quality contained in the episodes that have already been produced is also responsible for much of this enthusiasm upon the part of Universalites. Harry Harvey, who has directed several of the most popular "to-be-continued" stories, is directing "The Lion's Claws."

In line with the "Book With Your Eyes Open" slogan the Universal advertising department has worked up a comprehensive campaign book which teems with valuable advertising suggestions. Complete campaigns have been worked up for exhibitors. These are mapped out clearly.

Universal has always prided itself upon the fact that the campaigns worked up for use by the exhibitor are thoroughly practical. The teaser ads contained in "The Lion's Claws" campaign book are excellent examples of the producing company's work in this direction. A feature that every exhibitor will instantly appreciate is the flexibility of this campaign. The owner of the small town theater will find it just as easy to put it to work as will the proprietor of the big downtown house.

Exhibitors who are strong for player and trade mark cuts, have been provided with an unusually wide variety of them for use in connection with this serial. The experience gained by Universal in the years it has produced continued screen stories is utilized to good advantage in the preparation of this particular form of advertising matter.

The titles under which the first four episodes of this serial will be issued are Episode 1, "A Woman's Honor"; Episode 2, "Beasts of the Jungle"; Episode 3, "The Net of Terror"; Episode 4, "A Woman's Scream." April 1 sees the release of the first chapter.

Clara Kimball Young Going to Coast With Company

Select Star and Party Travel From Chicago in Special Pullman—Will Produce on Estate She Has Rented.

WHAT with working to complete "The Reason Why," her next Select production, and preparing for a trip to the West, Clara Kimball Young is a busy person. The completion on time of "The Reason Why" is assured. Under the direction of Robert G. Vignola, the filming of the picture is progressing satisfactorily. March 24 is the date set for Miss Young's departure. A special compartment Pullman has been chartered to take the company from Chicago to California.

Miss Young has leased the estate of Thomas Thorkildsen near Hollywood. This estate consists of twenty-four acres, is equipped in the most modern style, and contains every accessory a director could desire. At this place, and in the studio in Hollywood, which she has rented, Miss Young will produce "The Claw," by Cynthia Stockley, which has been adapted for her use on the screen by Charles E. Whittaker; and "The Savage Woman," the adaptation of which was made for the screen by Katherine Stuart from the French novel, "La Fille Sauvage," by Francois Curel.

In the large party which will accompany Miss Young will be the star's father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Edward M. Kimball; Harry I. Garson, Miss Young's business manager; Robert G. Vignola, director, and William J. Scully, his assistant; Louis J. Physioc, cameraman; Jack Voshell, technical director; Teddy Butcher, studio manager; and Jack Boland, assistant.

In the party also will be Milton Sills, Norman Selby, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Mortimer and Arthur Edeson.

What Fox Stars are Doing

George Walsh Back at Work After Mending Three Ribs.

WITH most of the stars in the eastern studios of William Fox completing their productions last week preliminary work was started on several new photoplays. George Walsh, who broke three ribs in a fall in a cross country run after making "Jack Spurlock—Prodigal," began work at the Kalem studios at Cliffside, N. J. The working title of the production is "440 at Fort Penn." The cast has not been completed yet. The new play is said to afford Walsh an opportunity for his breezy style that appeals to picture goers.

June Caprice, who had been enjoying a rest after making "A Camouflage Kiss," started work on a new play which has the working title of "Blue Eyed Mary." Harry Millarde finished cutting the film in "A Camouflage Kiss."

Virginia Pearson rested last week after making "A Daughter of France." Edmund Lawrence has finished cutting this film. The action in "A. Daughter of France" is laid in a French chateau back of the German lines.

After finishing "The Debt of Honor," her first production for William Fox, Peggy Hyland began last week on exterior scenes on a new play which has "Peg of the Pirates" as a working title. Miss Hyland's director is O. A. C. Lund.

Richard Stanton finished cutting "Rough and Ready," the William Farnum de luxe production. This is the production made by Mr. Farnum before he left for the coast. Many of the exterior scenes were made in the Adirondack Mountains and the snow scenes are said to be fine specimens of film photography.

R. A. Walsh enjoyed a brief vacation after finishing "Woman and the Law," which had its premiere at the Lyric theater in New York City. This is the play based on the De Saulles case. He is now working on a scrpt for a new play.

In the west coast studios Gladys Brockwell has started work on a new play with the tentative title of "Miss Past, Miss Present." "The Honeymooners" is the working title of a new picture which Jewel Carmen is making. Jewel Carmen takes the part of a bride. William Farnum has begun work on a new de luxe production under the direction of Frank Lloyd.

Catalina's Pirate Caves Shown in Metro's "Treasure"

EDITH STOREY and her strong supporting cast in "Treasure" have resumed work at Metro's west coast studios at Hollywood after several days on location at Catalina Island, where some wonderful exteriors were photographed. The island is famed for its scenic grandeurs, among them being any number of picturesque coves, with cliffs rising sheer from the water's edge.

Thrilling episodes on a motor boat figure in several of the tense dramatic moments in "Treasure," which is an original story from the pen of Leighton Osmun, of the Metro scenario staff. In some of these scenes Miss Storey has a splendid chance to display her skill and extraordinary daring as a swimmer.

The plot of "Treasure" has to do with an exciting quest for gold which was sunk when an old trading ship went down. The wreck is washed ashore by a violent windstorm and disclosed after years. A woman and a man, from differing motives, are drawn to the treasure trove, and after many conflicts and adventures find enduring love.

Mr. Osmun, in collaboration with Albert Shelby Le Vino, adopted "Treasure" for the screen. Frank Reicher directs Miss Storey, who has been surrounded by an exceptional supporting cast which includes Lew Cody, Lewis Willoughby, Josef Swickard, William De Vaull and Toto De Crow.

Orientals Visit Pauline Starke.

Pauline Starke, featured player in the recent Triangle picture of New York gang life, "The Shoes That Danced," is a favorite with Japanese film fans. She was visited at the Culver City studio last week by a delegation of Oriental educators, who had admired her screen work and were anxious to get a "close-up" of her in real life.

Irene Hunt Tries Scenario Reading.

Irene Hunt, of the Triangle playing forces, has always had literary ambitions, and has met with no little success as a short story and scenario writer. Her ambition is to become a "sob-sister" on a metropolitan paper. Miss Hunt is now spending her spare time as a scenario reader.

Five All-Star Pictures Is Metro's Offering for April

METRO will release five All-Star Series pictures in April with Harold Lockwood, May Allison, Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, Edith Storey, and Bert Lytel as the stellar players, in the order named. The releasing of the productions introducing May Allison and Bert Lytell as Metro stars in their own right will furnish two important incidents of the month.

Harold Lockwood heads the list with "The Landloper," which will be offered the first week. This picture was directed by George Irving, and is a screen version of Tolman Day's romantic story of the same name. Fred J. Balshofer made the screen adaptation. "The Landloper" presents Lockwood as a bright, energetic young American in a role rich in opportunities. The story is a romantic drama with a picturesque leading figure, Pauline Curley appears in the leading feminine role.

May Allison makes her debut as a Metro star in her own right in "Social Hypocrites," which will be released on April 8. This screen version of Alicia Ramsey's stage play, "Bridge," was directed by Albert Capellani, who also wrote the scenario in collaboration with June Mathis.

Miss Allison is supported by an all-star cast headed by Henry Kolker. Then there are Joseph Kilgour, Frank Currier, Marie Wainwright, Ethel Winthrop and Stella Hammerstein.

"With Neatness and Dispatch," starring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, is the release for April 15. This picture is a screen version of Kenneth L. Roberts' story of the same name. June Mathis and Luther Reed prepared the scenario and Will S. Davis directed the picture. Mr. Bushman plays Paul Donaldson, a virile American youth who is mistaken by Beverly Bayne, who plays Geraldine Ames, for "Slim" Keegan, a crook. In the cast are Frank Currier, Hugh Jeffery, Ricca Allen, Sylvia Arnold, Augustus Phillips, Arthur Housman, Adella Barker and Sidney D'Albrook.

Edith Storey is the star in "Treasure," which will be released April 22. Leighton Osmun is the author of the story, and he and Albert Shelby Le Vino prepared the scenario. Frank Reicher directed. This picture displays Miss Storey's best abilities, both as an actress and sportswoman. Lew Cody is Miss Storey's leading man. Lewis Willoughby, an English actor, makes his American debut.

Bert Lytel makes his Metro debut in "The Trail to Yesterday," which is scheduled for release on April 29. This western drama is an adaptation by June Mathis of Charles Alden Seltzer's novel of the same name. Edwin Carewe, assisted by his brother, Finis Fox, directed the production. Lytell plays a typical manly Western hero, who is an expert rider and all-round athlete. Anna Q. Nilsson is Mr. Lytell's leading woman. Harry S. Northrup, Metro's favorite villain, is in the cast, as are Ernest Maupin, John A. Smiley and "Danny" Hogan.

Thus will Metro serve showmen who depend upon this service for important factors in their entertainments.

Kellermann Picture Praised.

"A Daughter of the Gods," the spectacular film extravaganza, is meeting with the same success and is being greeted with the same enthusiasm abroad that has characterized its exhibition throughout the United States, according to an announcement from the William Fox offices. The "picture beautiful" has had extended engagements in most of the countries on the Continent, as well as in Japan, China and Australia, and is now running in Spain.

King Alfonso and Queen Victoria were present at a private showing in Madrid of the million-dollar production and paid a splendid tribute to this magnificent photoplay in which Annette Kellermann starred.

Triangle Activities

William Desmond at Work on "An Honest Man," a Robin Hood Story.

ACCOMPANIED by Francis McDonald, Joe King, Margery Wilson and a score of Triangle players, Director Raymond Wells spent several days last week at the Los Angeles County Jail, doing location work for "The Finger Print," a screen adaptation of John A. Moroso's story, "In the Spring."

Director Frank Borzage, who directed Desmond in this last subject, "Society for Sale," is supervising "An Honest Man," in which Desmond is seen as a sort of modern Robin Hood who believes in taking from the rich and giving to the poor. Mary Warren again will be seen as his leading woman.

Director Harry Edwards has started work on a two-reel comedy entitled, "Their Neighbor's Baby." Ray Griffith, Rae Godfrey, Charles Doran are included in the cast, as well as Fritzie Ridgeway, who was conscripted from the dramatic forces to be a comedienne pro tem.

Triangle Director Cliff Smith and his western company, headed by the "cowboy star," Roy Stewart, are working on the finishing scenes of "Paying His Debt."

Director Thomas N. Heffron and company have been working in the little village of Norwalk, Cal., for several days doing location work for "The Lonely Woman," a new Moroso play, with Belle Bennett in the title role.

Viola Dana Rides at Night.

A gallop by night on a Kentucky thoroughbred will test the horsemanship of the little Metro star, Viola Dana, in "The Night Riders," now under way at Metro's west coast studio under the direction of John H. Collins, its author.

A hurdle over a rural toll-gate is one of the interesting moments in the ride. Luckily, Miss Dana is thoroughly at home on a horse and her activities while mounted are practically limited only by the scenario writer. Albert Shelby Le Vino, head of Metro's western scenario department, has adapted "The Night Riders" for the screen.

Curwood Story Leads Universal for Week of March 25

A STORY by James Oliver Curwood, with whose work both screen fans and readers of magazines are familiar, heads the list of Universal products scheduled for release during the week of March 25. The production, which is in five reels, is entitled "The Girl Who Wouldn't Quit," and is founded upon Curwood's magazine story, "The Quest of Joan." Louise Lovely is supported by a strong cast, which includes Philo McCullough, Charles Hill Mailes, Gertrude Aster, Clyde Benson and H. A. Barrows. Edgar Jones is responsible for the direction. The story tells of a girl's search to run down the man who brought about the life imprisonment of her father, falsely accused of murder, and sentenced as the result of circumstancial evidence. A mysterious chest contained in a storage warehouse and subsequently sold to the highest bidder contains the evidence which would free her father. In her effort to investigate the contents of this chest the girl experiences some exceedingly thrilling adventures.

The Nestor release for the week is entitled "Nothing But Nerve," and presents Gale Henry, former Joker Comedy star. Milton Sims, Charles Hefly and Evelyn Selbie appear in support of Miss Henry. The plot centers about a couple who borrow a house in which to entertain an aunt to prove to her their worthiness to inherit her fortune. Of course the owner of the house makes an unexpected return with all of the attendant complications which such a layout would bring in its reckless trail.

The L-Ko releases a Mack Swain two-reel L-KO Komedy entitled "Sherlock Ambrose." It is all about a hobo who is mistaken for a detective and who plays the part even to the recovery of a stolen ring through no fault of his own.

This week brings the release of Animated Weekly No. 17, Screen Magazine No. 64 and Current Events No. 46. It also heralds the closing of the successful serial, "The Mystery Ship," which features Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber. The eighteenth and last chapter is entitled "The Fight in Mid-Air," and brings the culmination of its romance of treasure seeking and spy detecting to a successful finish. It also shows a battle between aeroplanes and the destruction of one of them.

"The Bull's Eye," in which Eddie Polo is doing such good work, reaches its eighth episode during the week. This episode is entitled "Dynamite."

The Finley Nature Special concludes the program and is combined with a split-reel comedy cartoon. The Finley picture is entitled "Wild Fowl Nurseries in Southern Oregon" and the cartoon "How Mr. Noodle Went to a Masque Ball."

Select Gets Another Stage Success.

Select Pictures has added another to its growing list of screen adaptations of recent stage successes by acquiring the film rights to "A Pair of Silk Stockings," Cyril Harcourt's well-remembered comedy hit. The story was acquired as a starring vehicle for Constance Talmadge, who will be presented in the piece by Lewis J. Selznick. The comedy was produced in New York by Winthrop Ames at his Little theater, after it had scored a pronounced hit in London.

Bookings on Hodkinson-Paralta Service Cheer Officials

WE are supporting our claims with some pretty solid facts," remarked a member of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. You may probably notice that we are claiming that we are offering a going and profitable business to whatever exhibitors enter our co-partnership plan as outlined by Mr. Hodkinson.

"This fact in itself is something unique in the world of films and is, we claim, one fact that distinguishes our enterprise from all other propositions now on the market. The solid facts that we refer to are the big bookings that we have been taking recently on Hodkinson-Paralta Service. In Chicago a large portoin of the Ascher Brothers' circuit and also a number of the bigger houses controlled by Lubliner & Trinz have contracted for our entire output.

"In the North the Butterfield circuit, controlling houses in Saginaw, Kalamazoo and Flint, are also showing Paralta Plays. Way down in the sunny South the Saenger circuit, operating in many of the most important towns in the southeastern section, have contracted en bloc for the Hodkinson Service. Mr. Hammell, of the New York General Film office, just brought us in the other day a very satisfactory booking over the Meyer and Schneider enterprises on the east side, which will bring Kerrigan, Barriscale and Walthall back to their many admirers in this section of New York, and it will not be violating any confidences if I tell you that we expect to make a very interesting announcement in reference to our first run in New York, upon which we have been working for some time.

"On the coast, of course, with Mr. Roth's tie-in, and Messrs. Greves and Ellison in Denver, the situation is very much easeir, and these gentlemen will undoubtedly show Paralta Plays in their houses, which are among the best in each locality concerned.

"We feel that the exhibitors at large will agree with us that offering them a co-partnership in a business which already has its product placed in houses of the nature of those described above and many others is an entirely different proposition from being asked to take part in a scheme which may exist only on paper."

Fox and Fisher Confer

Producer Calls Attention of His Directors to Initial Speed of Cartoons.

FOLLOWING a conference between Bud Fisher, originator of the Mutt and Jeff animated cartoons, and William Fox, who is to release these productions to exhibitors, Mr. Fox announced his intention of having all his directors see the Mutt and Jeff pictures with a view to obtaining suggestions on methods of developing and sustaining action. It is Mr. Fox's opinion that Mr. Fisher has mastered the difficult art of getting his story started at the very jump and of eliminating everything from the film that does not contribute materially to the development of immediate interest.

The conference between Mr. Fisher and Mr. Fox probably was the last they will hold prior to the cartoonist's departure for Europe. "We analyzed carefully and in detail all of the releases that Mr. Fisher has prepared for the next two months," said Mr. Fox. "We found every one of these measures in all respects up to our standard and that there were very few cuts or other changes which could be made to the improvement of the productions. The first release, 'The Decoy,' will be ready for exhibitors March 24.

"The pictures are only 500 feet in length, but I am prepared to guarantee that they consists exclusively of laughs. That which I like best about the productions is that Mr. Fisher knows when he is through and stops right there. The average is about 500 feet, and if any of them run any longer there is justification—there is more than 500 feet of fun."

"The Hillcrest Mystery" (Pathe).

Irene Castle makes her next appearance on the screen in "The Hillcrest Mystery," a Pathe Play written by Ouida Bergere, directed by George Fitzmaurice and produced by Astra, with illustrated titles by Hy Mayer. The release date is March 24 and the cast is Irene Castle, Marion Sterling, J. H. Gilmour, her father; Ralph Kellard, Gordon Brett, Wyndham Standing.

The story teems with action, suspense and intrigue, with a touch of war color.

Impressive burial services for the first American soldiers who died in action in France are shown in Screen Telegram No. 5, released March 18 by Mutual. They show the trenches where the first Yankees feel as well as the services behind the trenches.

The reel includes shots taken during Douglas Fairbanks' initiation of Screen Telegram at Thauman's new million dollar picture palace at Los Angeles, Fairbanks turned out to help the Graumans put over the first release and as part of the evenings festivities walked on his hands across the porch of the entrance.

Scenes from France picture the new French heavy guns in action. At the University of California the young men students are training for war, and one of the most unusual of their training stunts is picking up marbles with their toes to cure flat feet. Six foot huskies make an amusing sight juggling pebbles with their tootsies.

"La Tosca" Coming March 25.

The Famous Players-Lasky film version of Victorien Sardou's world famous "La Tosca," to be released as a regular Paramount picture, it is announced, presents a most elaborate screen translation, which has been done from a scenario by Charles E. Whittaker. Arranged from the opera, with as little change as possible in the story, this subject should be a big dramatic success for the star.

In this production Miss Frederick makes her debut as a "dare-devil" when she makes a sensational fall of thirty feet from a parapet of the fort into the water in the death scene. This incident follows the killing of her lover, Mario, by the firing squad after Tosca has stabbed Scarpia, the chief of police.

Four Bluebird Companies

Officials Name Leading Players, Who Will Make Forty Pictures Annually.

AN important change has been made in the line-up of Bluebird stars and productions. Starting with the week of April 8 the players who will appear regularly in Bluebird are Carmel Myers, Franklyn Farnum, Ella Hall, Ruth Clifford and Monroe Salisbury. The last two play opposite each other and therefore are to be regarded as one unit.

Therefore, there will be in the future four regular Bluebird companies, instead of the greater number that has turned out the features released by this organization heretofore. These companies will provide at least forty of the fifty-two releases for the year. Other stars, however, will occasionally appear on the Bluebird program when their productions are of the quality and standard demanded by the officials of that organization.

Priscilla Dean and Louise Lovely are stars who will provide two of the extra features required to round out the full year's Bluebird output.

As they appear in the order of their release, April's Bluebirds are "Fast Company," featuring Franklyn Farnum, scheduled to be issued on April 1. "The Red, Red Heart" is the release for April 8. This production features Monroe Salisbury and Ruth Clifford, and was directed by Rupert Julian. Louise Lovely makes her appearance on April 15, when "A Rich Man's Darling," one of the most amusing comedy dramas released by Bluebird in months, is released.

"The Two Soul Woman," considered by Bluebird officials a powerful feature production, is the release for April 22. The story is by Gilett Burgess and originally appeared in book form under the title of "The White Cat." Priscilla Dean enacts the title role. April 29 sees "The Wife He Borrowed," a five-act drama in which Carmel Myers is featured. The story is by Blair Hall. Harvey Gates is responsible for the screen adaptation, while Stuart Paton directed the picture.

W. H. to Issue Five Barriscales.

Following the release of "Satan's Pawn," the first Bessie Barriscale picture released by the W. H. Productions Company, it is announced that this company will issue five additional features in which Miss Barriscale is starred.

"Satan's Pawn" is an adaptation from a play, and was produced by Reginald Barker under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince.

Paramount Lists Laughmakers from Sennett Studios

THE next Paramount-Mack Sennett Comedy is entitled "Those Athletic Girls," and will be released March 25. The picture was directed by Edward Cline under the personal supervision of Mack Sennett, and the leading role is played by Louise Fazenda, supported by F. B. Cooper, Glen Cavender, Ethel Teare and Laura LaVarnie. The scene of the comedy is laid in a girl's boarding school. There is an indoor baseball game, a pillow fight, a fire in the dormitory, which is extinguished by the girls, who attire themselves in firemen's apparel and do effective work with the big hose.

Two Paramount-Mack Sennett comedies will be offered to exhibitors during April —"Friend Husband" on the 8th, and "Saucy Madeline" on the 15th. Both pictures are typical subjects from this studio.

"Friend Husband" tells the story of complications that arose when a young husband learns that a wealthy uncle whom he has never met is about to visit him, and has promised to bestow $10,000 upon his nephew's baby, which unfortunately does not exist. Wayland Trask, as the young husband, makes strenuous efforts to borrow an infant for the occasion. Charles Murray, as the neighboring bachelor, lends his assistane, and Teddy, Wayland's faithful dog, also kidnaps a baby. In the cast are Mary Thurman, Gene Rogers, Harry Gribbon, Earl Kenton and Laura LaVarnie.

"Saucy Madeline" presents Polly Moran in the title role. She has a jealous husband, who conducts a bowling alley. Ben Turpin gets a job in the bowling alley, and becomes involved in painful complications with his boss. One of the most amusing incidents in the picture is a bowling match between Ben and the boss. Ben has fixed the bowling balls to do his bidding, and their antics create the laughs. Amazing scores are made. The cast includes Charles Lynn and Richard Jones. The latter also directed.

The "Cast-off" Is Well Liked.

Foursquare exchange managers report that "The Cast-off," with Bessie Barriscale, directed by Raymond B. West, is being viewed with the utmost satisfaction by theater managers in their territories.

Myrtle Lind and Pauline Stark Trianglers for March 24

IN the society-comedy, "Nancy Comes Home," which is scheduled as the first release on the Triangle March 4 program, Myrtle Lind of Triangle-Keystone fame appears in her first dramatic lead. The play, which Robert E. Hill scenarioized from B. D. Garber's story, is a satire on parental repression showing that too stringent methods in handling young girls serve only as a boomerang which strikes the parents as well as the children. Jack Gilbert has appeared in thirteen Triangle successes. The supporting cast also includes Myrtle Rishell, Anna Dodge, Percy Challenger and George Pearce. An elaborate cabaret scene was staged under the direction of Jack Dillon.

As the heroine of "Innocent's Progress," the second release of the week, Pauline Starke is featured in her third straight dramatic role under director Frank Borzage. "Until They Get Me," and another, "The Shoes That Danced," a March release, were her former vehicles. Miss Starke is cast as Tessa Fane, a little orphan who is reduced to the most abject misery by a crusty old aunt. Jack Livingston is Carey Larned. His last appearance was in "The Hard Rock Breed." Lillian West, recently seen in "A Soul in Trust" and "The Gown of Destiny," is cast as Madeline Carson. Alice Knowland, Charles Dorian and Graham Pette complete the cast. It is said that remarkable lighting effects were obtained by Director Frank Borzage and Cameraman Pliny Horne in this picture.

"A Safe Danger" is the two-reel Key-stone the 4th. Chris Richards is the ambitious crook and jewelry salesman whose slippery fingers stray out towards loose jewels and hearts. Rae Godfrey is the beautiful girl he would wed. When a jewel enters the ranks of the missing suspicion points its deadly finger at Chris. The lively chase leads back to the jewelry store where Chris accidentally becomes the hero, capturing a gang of burglars in the most novel style.

"The Ordeal of Rosetta" (Select).

Alice Brady's Select production, on which this star and her company are hard at work under the direction of Emile Chautard, and the working name of which was "The Phantom Feud," has received as its definite title "The Ordeal of Rosetta." The present name is more indicative of the action of the picture, which tells the story of an Italian-American stenographer of gentle birth and breeding.

In addition to Crauford Kent and Ormi Hawley as leads for Miss Brady, as announced heretofore, the cast includes Maude Turner Gordon, well-known character woman; Henry Leoni, with a rich experience from musical comedy, the legitimate drama and the screen; Hazel Washburn, Edna Ellwood, Peggy Elmer, Mrs. Shannon, George Henry, Austin Miller, Ed Burns, Jack Burns, Carl Le Viness and Joseph Berno.

National Billboard Advertising for "A Pair of Sixes"

THE latest George K. Spoor production, "A Pair of Sixes," is being shown to the trade. Many advance bookings already are reported from the George Kleine releasing exchanges. The picture, as is stated in a review on another page, is taken from the stage production of Edward Peple, and features the Essanay comedian, Taylor Holmes.

The release date has been set for April 1, but there are several advance bookings in the larger cities, so that the play will be shown the latter part of March.

In this production Mr. Spoor is adhering to his policy of a national billboard advertising campaign on each feature subject, and the twenty-four-sheet posters now are to be seen in all large cities.

Other Essanay releases for the month of March include the Broncho Billy one-reel, reissue western dramas, which began March 1, to be sent out one a week for ten weeks. Two Chaplin comedies are also being put out—"The Tramp" and "His New Job." New prints and new paper have been made up on these releases.

The short subjects being released through the General Film Company include "Wild Algy of Piccadilly," "All Stuck Up," "The Lie That Failed" and "The Jazbo Sheriff." These are all comedy releases. "The Lie That Failed" features Virginia Valli and Robert Conness. Don Barclay, the famous comedian of the Ziegfeld Follies, takes the leading role in "All Stuck Up."

On March 23 Essanay will begin the issuance of new prints on many of its famous Snakeville comedies. In these appear the well-known comedians: Victor Potel, Margaret Joslyn, Harry Todd and others. They will be released through the General Film Company.

Quaint Costumes in "Social Hypocrites."

QUAINT costumes of the good old days of 1870 were revived recently for picturesque scenes in "Social Hypocrites," in which May Allison will make her debut as an individual Metro star. This screen version of Alicia Ramsey's stage play, "Bridge," is being directed by Albert Capellani, who wrote the scenario in collaboration with June Mathis.

All the costumes of the players were in strict accordance with the period when the events depicted in the scene took place. The women wore the dresses of the so-called bustle period, with full skirts and long trains. These dresses were made especially for this production by the Metro costume department. Each dress contained from twenty to twenty-five yards of watered and brocaded silk. The actresses wore their hair in high pompadours, with fetching back curls. The men players were garbed in swallow-tailed coats and long, side-buttoned stone comedy scheduled for the week of trousers, with old-style foot straps. Their vests were double breasted, and wing collars, together with bow ties, completed their attire. They also wore the conventional wigs of days gone by.

The scenes took place in the palatial parlor of the Mountstephen mansion in England. This set was one of the most complete and elaborate ever built at the Metro studio.

The characters in these 1870 scenes are played by a different set of players from those who portray them throughout the remainder of the picture. Pauline Welch, well known as a vaudeville headliner, plays the young duchess, who is afterward portrayed by Marie Wainwright. Fred Radcliffe, who has been seen in many Metro pictures, appears as young Fielding, the role which Frank Currier later interprets.

"Social Hypocrites" will be released as a Metro All-Star Series picture, with beautiful May Allison in the stellar role of Leonore Fielding.

Tom Mix Puts on Dress Suit.

Cowboys in dress suits figure largely in "Western Blood," a new play of the wild west, which Tom Mix has finished in the west coast studios of William Fox. In the play Tex, which is the character played by Mix, sends to a clothing house that advertises and gets dress suits for all his cow punchers. He has just returned to his New Mexico rancho from Los Angeles, where he has noticed that dress suits go with fashionable social affairs.

"This is one of the funniest plays Mix has ever made," is the announcement from the Fox offices. "The cowboys squirm and do all sorts of impossible things in their dress suits." "Western Blood" was directed by Lynn Reynolds. It will be one of the late April releases.

"A Self-Made Lady" (Fox).

The latest Sunshine Comedy release by William Fox is "A Self-Made Lady." It is all about a she crook who was sentenced to seven days in prison, but through a slight error was behind the bars for seven years. When she gets out she wants to go straight, but the crook won't let her. The Lehrman police romp through the picture in characteristic style; automobiles dash recklessly over cliffs; a swimming tank is utilized to speed up the fun and it is claimed that the two-reeler can well be called a rip-roaring comedy triumph. Dot Farley, Bobby Vernon and Ed Kennedy keep the mirth at high pitch from start to finish.

"Her Husband's Wife" is another recent Sunshine Comedy release. In this picture also the fun is fast and furious.

Trench Scenes for Screen

Current Events No. 44 Has Views of Americans at Front.

MOTION pictures of Pershing's boys in the first line trenches in France, made by military photographers of the photographic division, Signal Corps, are the main feature of Universal Current Events No. 44. The pictures were released to Universal Current Events by the Committee on Public Information through the American Red Cross, and are official.

The scenes open with the departure of the boys, wearing their "tin trench derbies" from the little French village in which they were billeted. No waving flags or blaring bands mark their departure, but there is a grim seriousness in their marching and preparation. The audience is shown how the Yankees are transported to the communicating trenches, which zigzag to the advanced lines. Motor trucks loaded with soldiers scurry along the roadways, much of the time under the fire of German batteries. These trucks stop at the communicating trenches and the doughboys have to "hoof" the rest of the distance below the level of the ground.

Like prairie-dog villages are the dugouts in which troops occupying the trenches live. Current Events shows them built into the sides of hills, with board-bottomed trenches leading out of them and "Sammies" off duty loafing about pending their next tour.

Some idea of the danger the boys are constantly under is borne home to the spectator when pictures of lads wearing gasmasks entering the trenches are shown. Other scenes show the soup-bearers with their great cans of hot "slum" passing through the underground lane on their way to serve the lads holding the first lines. Then come views of soldiers under fire, ducking below the parapet while shells whiz past overhead and a scene of a sniper in an advanced trench, watchfully waiting for the appearance of a spiked helmet.

The pictures finish with scenes of Red Cross workers passing through the trenches in search of wounded, and stretcher-bearers carrying to an advance dressing station the first case of gas poisoning. The scene then shifts to an American Hospital back of the lines, where the wounded rest pending removal to a base hospital somewhere far out of the fighting zone.

There are other stirring war scenes contained in Current Events No. 44, including a stirring artillery battle.

Lyons and Moran Back with Universal in One-Reelers

AFTER an absence of several months, Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran return to the Universal program commencing April 8. These popular comedians will appear weekly in a new series of single reel productions, which will be released under the brand name of Lyons-Moran Star Comedies.

The return of Lyons and Moran will be hailed by exhibitors as a real event. Their popularity has grown steadily during the five years they have appeared under the Universal banner and right now is at its height. It is decalred that fourteen pictures have already been produced and are ready for release.

The first Lyons-Moran subject is entitled, "A Pigskin Hero." It is considered one of the funniest pictures in which the two former Nestorites have appeared. As in all the comedies to be released under the new brand everything suggestive of the slapstick brand of humor has been avoided. Instead, situations, acting and story have been relied upon to furnish the comedy element.

According to the story, the town of Rushville is all excited over the football game to be played that day between its rival teams, the Bear-cats and the Carnations. Word reaches the latter team that Spike Hennessey, a famous quarterback, is to be a ringer on the "Bear-cats" team. That's the beginning. We are not going to spoil the story by telling it.

A Western with a Society Touch.

A Western drama de luxe is "Heart of the Sunset," Rex Beach's latest picturization of one of his own novels, soon to be ready for distribution by Goldwyn as a Rex Beach special. If the term "Western drama" conjures up a picture of frowning six-shooters, lariats, sweating horses and cowboys covered with alkali dust disregard the Western tinge and give attention for a moment to the de luxe angle.

In "Heart of the Sunset" you will see Ed Austin and his bride, Alaire, owners of thousands of acres of valuable Texas and Mexican grazing land and cattle enough to cover them all, in their sumptuously furnished ranch home.

Summer resort bathing scenes, another novelty for a Western drama, are to be found in "Heart of the Sunset." Some of the comedy relief action is laid on the beach at Corpus Christi, Texas, where damsels in one-piece suits afford a not unpleasant visual relief from sombreros and "chaps."

Lick Prints Booklet on Photoplayers.

"Biographies of Prominent Photoplay Players" is the title of a twenty-eight page booklet published by the New theater, Fort Smith, Ark., of which C. A. Lick is the manager. There is nothing pretentious about its dull-coated buff paper and clean typography, but it is attractive in appearance. Arranged in alphabetical order are short, sketchy biographies of sixteen prominent Triangle and Paramount favorites, including Olive Thomas, Douglas Fairbanks, William S. Hart, Alma Rubens, William Desmond, each with a quarter-page cut of the subject. The last four pages are given over to an interesting talk on the philosophy of the exhibitor, who entitles it "New Theater Service Codes."

Farnum De Luxe Is Released.

William Farnum's last production in the East, "Rough and Ready," completed just before the Fox star's return to California, is announced as the next Standard Picture release.

"At our offices," says Mr. Fox, "we speak of 'Rough and Ready' as the hundred per cent. box office production. "All the world loves a lover, especially a fighting lover, and it is in this role that Mr. Farnum appears in a tremendously interesting story. The subject also marks this popular actor's return to the 'blue-shirt' character he does so well—the type of portrayal which brought him chief fame before 'Les Miserables.'"

Activities at Goldwyn's Studios at Fort Lee

WITH the return to Fort Lee of Madge Kennedy, the beginning by Mae Marsh of a new production and the impending return from Florida of Mabel Normand, activities at the Goldwyn studios took on an added aspect of bustle last week.

Madge Kennedy, star of "The Danger Game," by Roy Somerville, scheduled for release April 7, came back to the studio after an illness of a week.

With the completion of "The Face in the Dark," to be released April 21, Mae Marsh will at once begin work on a production which has not yet been given a title, from the story by Edith Barnard Delano entitled "When Carey Came to Town." It will be directed by Hobart Henley.

Mabel Normand, who had been in Florida with George Loane Tucker and several players making revisions in "Joan of Plattsburg" to conform with a Government request that certain military material photographed at the great training camp be eliminated, has returned. A few more interior scenes remain to be made and the picture has been tentatively scheduled for release May 6.

Goldwyn assures exhibitors that the picture has been improved by the changes that are now being made under Mr. Tucker's expert guidance.

Edward Dillon, whose capable direction of Madge Kennedy in "Our Little Wife" promised great things for "The Danger Game," was to be seen hobbling about the studios early in the week. Mr. Dillon slipped on the icy pavement and broke an ankle early in the progress of the Madge Kennedy play and Harry Pollard was engaged to take his place.

Gloria Swanson Dives Into Harbor.

Gloria Swanson, former comedy queen, had to learn the art of swimming and diving before she could accept her first part in a Triangle drama soon to be released, entitled "Smoke." Many of the water scenes in wich she appeared were filmed at night and the first one called for a dive of fourteen feet into the cold black water at San Pedro. All the preparatory "stunts" by Miss Swanson had been done in a swimming pool, and she was a bit timid when called upon to make the big dives before the camera, but having recovered from the first shock of the fourteen foot plunge she informed Director Jack Conway that she was prepared to try anything in the aquatic line.

Eight Five-Reelers on the Triangle April Schedule

WESTERN narratives, society dramas and mystery stories are listed on the Triangle April schedule, which, the Triangle Distributing Corporation announces, will include eight five-reel features. In accordance with the policy of the Company magazine and novel material has been utilized for the program to a marked degree, and the recent Triangle output bears the stamp of contemporaneous fiction.

Heading the list April 7 is "The Love Brokers," with Alma Rubens in the stellar role, this story being a screen adaptation of "Another Foolish Virgin," by W. Carey Wonderley, author of the recent Triangle feature, "The Marriage Bubble." The Beaux Arts section of New York provides the locale of the story, which portrays the adventures of Alma Rubens, a song writer. In the supporting cast are Texas Guinan, Lee Hill, Joe Bennett, Betty Pearce and George Pearce. E. Mason Hopper directed "The Love Brokers."

"The Boss of the Lazy Y," the second release of the week, is a screen adaptation of Charles Alden Seltzer's novel of the same name, and features Roy Stewart in the title role. The story deals with an ancient feud which exists between two families, and the struggle of the two sons of the respective factions for the love of one girl. Cliff Smith handled the megaphone. The supporting cast includes Walt Whitman, Josie Sedgwick, Graham Pette, Frank McQuarrie, Aaron Edwards, five-year old Frankie Lee, William Ellingford and Bill Patton.

April 14.—"The Law of the Great Northwest," by Ralph Westfall, for many years one of the daring officers of the Northwest Mounted Police, is released for the first part of the week. The author collaborated with Director Raymond Wells in producing this picture. Many real Indians were secured. In the cast are Margery Wilson, William V. Mong, William Jefferies, William Dyer and Eugene Corey.

"Who Killed Walton?" which follows, was adapted from Norman Sherbrook's magazine story, "The Veil," a mystery story within New York political circles. J. Barney Sherry appears as the typical ward politician of the "Old Guard." "Who Killed Walton?" serves as a vehicle to introduce a new leading woman, Mary Mersc will portray an attractive young novelist caught in the web of a ruthless artist's trap and saved from disgrace by a ward politician after her reformer fiance has abandoned her.

April 21.—A story of the New York underworld, "The Finger Print," heads the April 21 schedule. This is an adaptation of the magazine story, "In the Spring," by John A. Moroso. It deals with the Italian Underworld and shows the inner workings of the police system in the days before the Rosenthal murder. Joe King plays opposite Margery Wilson.

William Desmond has the featured role in the second release of the week, an English society drama entitled, "Society for Sale," a romantic play of life in the exclusive circles of London, with Desmond as a young aristocrat, who suddenly finds that he has squandered his fortune and must work for a living. Gloria Swanson helps him solve his financial difficulties. A fashion show is one of the features of this production, at which Miss Swanson, as a manikin, wears many attractive costumes. Frank Borzage is credited with the direction.

April 28.—Another Morosco play, "The Lonely Woman," dealing with the question of circumstantial evidence, is scheduled as the opening feature for the week with Belle Bennett in the title role. Working with Director Thomas N. Heffron are Anna Dodge, Alberta Lee, Nellie Anderson, Lee Hill, Percy Challenger, John Lince and Walter Perkins.

Roy Stewart has a dual role in the concluding picture for April, which is entitled "Paying His Debt," an adaptation of "The Derelict." The supporting cast working with Director Cliff Smith in this new western includes Josie Sedgwick, five-year-old Dixie Doll, William Ellingford, Walter Perkins, William Dyer, Arthur Millett and Harry Yammamoto, who has a comedy role as a Chinese cook.

Animated Cuts Out War Horrors.

A definite stand against the showing of war horrors in the Universal Animated Weekly Current Events and the Screen Magazine, has been taken by Jack Cohn, Managing Editor of these three Universal film publications.

Letters received from parents and other relatives of the boys abroad, are said to have caused Universal to arrive at its decision. Such scenes as the burial of American soldiers on foreign soil, etc., are sure to prove harrowing to the dear ones of our troopers and to class them what are perhaps needless fears.

Bee Hive Indeed Busy.

Bee Hive Exchange, New York, reports good business with King-Bee Comedies. James Mendleson, manager of sales for Brooklyn, has closed bookings for the following houses: The Linden, Whitney, Strand, Duffield, Eden, Colonial, Avon, Hamilton and Century. N. J. Swarttz, in New Jersey, has closed for a week's run at Fox's Terminal theater, Newark; also bookings for the following houses: City, Atlantic Gardens, Winter Garden, Casino Playhouse, Orient, Walton at Elizabeth, Proctor's at Plainfield, Lyric and Majestic in Paterson, and Rialto in Union Hill. Julius Singer closed with Kieth's Greenpoint for a three days' run.

Fast Work by Norma Talmadge

Star Makes Trip to Saranac Lake and Then Departs for California.

EVENTS moved rapidly in the life of Norma Talmadge, Select Pictures star, during the last week. Arriving in New York from a protracted stay in Palm Beach, she packed away her chiffons and foulards and other tropical finery, brought to light an array of furs and took the train for Saranac Lake.

At Saranac she was joined by Roland West, who will probably direct her new Select production, "De Luxe Annie," by Cameraman Ed. Wyard, and by Eugene O'Brien, who has been Miss Talmadge's leading man in all of her recent screen successes, and who will again play opposite her in this next picture.

The action in "De Duxe Annie," it may be recalled, passes from New York City, where the play opens, to the Adirondacks. There is much traipsing around in deep snow and in hard winter weather—and there is the big and thrilling escape-over-the-ice scene. It was to get this material that Miss Talmadge and her director and leading man went to Saranac; and get it they did—despite the fact that discouraging conditions were encountered.

Just one day Miss Talmadge had allowed for the taking of the scenes, so quick work was in order. By dint of hard labor it was all accomplished, and at the expiration of the twenty-four hours Miss Talmadge returned to New York. Within a few hours from the time she arrived in New York Miss Talmadge boarded the train for the west, where she will make a brief visit.

Chapin Series End in April.

The three concluding chapters of the Paramount-Benjamin Chapin series of "The Son of Democracy" will be released during April, including "Down the River," issued on the 1st of the month, an exciting story of Abraham's Lincoln's life as a young man, when he starts down the Mississippi River on a flat boat and becomes involved with northern slave dealers; "The Slave Auction," released April 8, showing Lincoln's first glimpse of the slave market and his efforts to combat the sort of slave traders who were despised nowhere more than among southerners themselves, and "Under the Stars," a powerful drama of patriotism, with intimate scenes of Arbaham Lincoln amid crises similar to those now confronting the United States, released April 15.

"A Daughter of France" (Fox).

Virginia Pearson in "A Daughter of France" is the current special feature release of William Fox. It is described as a play that will stir patriotism. The scene of the play is laid in a French chateau behind the German lines. Miss Pearson plays the part of Louise de Ciron, a French girl filled with love of her native land. She refuses to flee before an invading horde of Huns.

In the cast are Herbert Evans, George Moss, Anthony Merlo, Maud Hill and Naida Gary. The story is by Benjamin S. Kutler and Betta Brouli and the scenario by Adrian Johnson. It was directed by Edmund Lawrence.

"Mr. Fix It" Is Next Fairbanks.

Douglas Fairbanks' next photoplay for Artcraft will be entitled "Mr. Fix It," from a story written by Allan Dwan, the supervising director. It will be released in April. Fairbanks will be seen in a novel character creation as the expounder of the theory that happiness is a habit and comes only to those who afford happiness to others. The scenes are located in the home of wealthy residents of New York.

In the supporting cast are Marjorie Daw, Wanda Hawley, Catherine MacDonald, Frank Campeau, Leslie Stuart and Fred Goodwins.

Pathe Active East and West

Frank Keenan, at Paralta Studio, Playing Mathias in "The Bells."

PRODUCTION of Pathe Plays starring Frank Keenan, Bryant Washburn, Bessie Love and Fannie Ward continue at high speed in Los Angeles. At the Paralta Studio Mr. Keenan is playing the role of Mathias in "The Bells," in which Sir Henry Irving was seen and known through the English-speaking world. Lois Wilson has been engaged as leading woman and Ed Coxen as leading man.

Bessie Love is playing a poor little girl's part again in "A Little Sister of Everybody," by William Addison Lathrop, produced under the direction of Robert Thornby.

Bryant Washburn is at work in a comedy melodrama of the borderland, the working title of which is "The Range Rider." Rhea Mitchell is his leading woman. Helen Dunbar, one of the best known character women, has been engaged for an important part in this picture, produced under the direction of William Worthington.

At Universal City Fannie Ward is now making "A Japanese Nightingale," from William Young's novel, under the direction of George Fitzmaurice. Mr. Fitzmaurice is acting as supervising director of all the Pathe Astra activities centering in Universal City. L. J. Gasnier, president of Astra, has wired him to begin production on a serial by Gilson Willets, the working title of which is "Hands Up."

Meanwhile, at the Astra Studio at Jersey City, work is progressing rapidly on the closing episodes of the Pearl White serial "The House of Hate," with Antonio Moreno.

"The Life Mask" Released March 18.

The release date on "The Life Mask," Mme. Petrova's third picture made under her own management, has been set by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit for March 18. An ingenious mystery story in six reels, adapted to the screen by Mrs. L. Case Russell, it was directed by Frank Crane, and shows the Polish star in a strong emotional role against a background that shifts rapidly from the higher social circles of New York to the colorful atmosphere of Spain.

Hart Completes "Selfish Yates."

William S. Hart has completed "Selfish Yates," which is to be his offering via Artcraft, following "The Tiger Man." The role of a thoroughly selfish man is a unique one for big-hearted Bill Hart, but in the end he redeems himself, and through love of a girl finds that a man may be happiest when he seeks happiness through another's good. This picture is probably the most unique in conception of any that has been written for the Ince star, and is by C. Gardner Sullivan. Hart directed it himself. Hart's popularity seems to be steadily increasing.

Studios Complete April Releases for Mutual Schedule

MUTUAL'S schedule of April feature releases includes productions from the studios of the American Film Company, Inc., William Russell Productions, Inc., and the Empire All Star Corporation, starring William Russell, Ann Murdock, Mary Miles Minter and Margarita Fischer.

They have been produced under Mutual's policy of close adherence to the public demand, Mr. Russell's first production from his own studio having been started after a trip on which the star personally interviewed exhibitors, salesmen and exchange managers to ascertain the popular taste in picture entertainment. Mutual is adhering strictly to its policy of producing its features in five reels.

Mary Miles Minter will be seen in "A Bit of Jade," released April 1. This is an exotic mystery story, built around the disappearance of a rare Hindu necklace, which is said to possess a potent charm. The play, which was scenarioized by Karl Coolidge from a widely read story of Mildred Cary Graham, is replete with tense and dramatic situations, and is said to be a grateful vehicle for the beautiful little star.

Margarita Fischer, in "Primitive Woman," released April 8, will be seen in a character different from anything she has recently done. Elemental woman in a twentieth century setting is the theme, and the play is said to possess the elements of strength and originality.

Ann Murdock, the popular Broadway ingenue, who has been appearing in photodramas of Charles Frohman stage successes, has completed "The Richest Girl," released April 15. David Powell, the noted young actor, who has supported Miss Murdock in "The Impostor," "Outcast," "Please Help Emily" and other screen successes, will again play the lead.

William Russell, the athletic star, is putting the finishing touches on his first production, made by his own company, William Russell Productions, Inc. This picture is "Hearts or Diamonds," and will be released April 22. Mr. Russell is enthusiastic over the results of his initial effort in production, and believes it will even surpass "The Midnight Trail," "In Bad," "New York Luck" and "Snap Judgment."

The play is an adaptation of the famous novel "Adrienne Gascoyne," by the celebrated William Hamilton Osborne. The story concerns the operations of a gang of international diamond thieves with whom Adrienne Gascoyne, a beautiful young woman, becomes involved.

Miss Charlotte Burton, who has appeared in several Russell successes, will play the lead. The cast includes Carl Stockdale, John Gough and Robert Klein. It was produced under the direction of Henry King.

Doings at Diando Studios.

Joseph Van Meter has been appointed manager of the Diando Film Corporation plant at Glendale, Cal., succeeding Norman Manning, who has been placed, on Diando's recommendation, with Louis Gasnier as west coast representative.

Stuart Payton is to direct the new Pathe serial, "The Wolf-faced Man," to be made by Diando.

George Larkin, who will be leading man in this serial, has arrived in Los Angeles.

"Dolly Does Her Bit," a five-reel Baby Marie Osborne feature, has been completed by Diano, and plans are under way for the production of "The Soul of a Child." In the completed subject many children from the homes of Southern California were used in the cast.

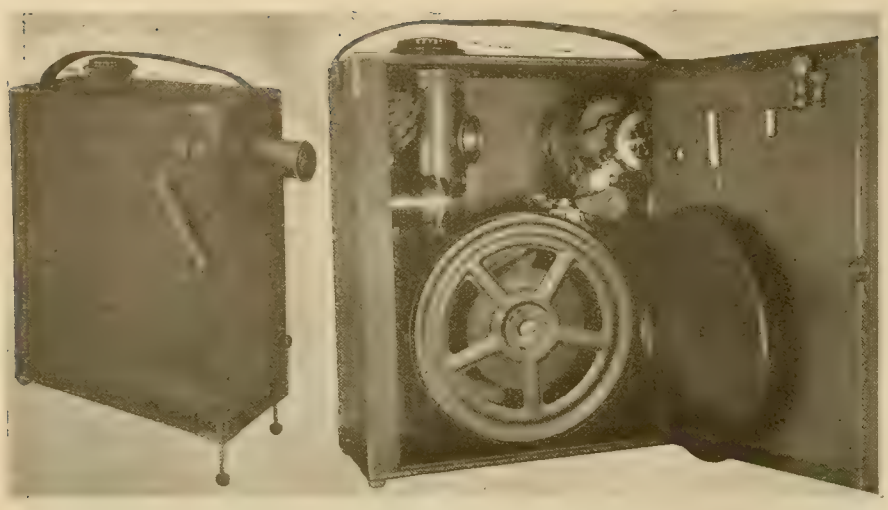
Something in This Story Sounds Like a Liberty Bond

FOR the first time since the old days of the two-reel film thrillers Mary Pickford started on a new picture before completing her current production. For several days she was working with Director William D. Taylor on "How Could You, Jean?" while completing the final scenes of "M'liss" under Marshall Neilan's direction.

It was a novel experience for the actress, but it was made necessary by a mysterious message which she received from a member of President Wilson's cabinet. Although the affair is maintained a secret more or less, it is understood it means a trip to Washington upon the completion of "How Could You, Jane?" and probably a month's retirement from camera work while Miss Pickford is engaged in some task for Uncle Sam.

"How Could You, Jane?" is expected to be a record production in time consumed on its filming, and it will show Mary Pickford in an entirely new characterization. The photoplay is an adaptation by Frances Marion from the novel by Eleanor Hoyt Brainerd, just published.

When Director Taylor began casting for "How Could You, Jane?" he discovered that the famine in juveniles was never more keenly evident than at present. Upon seeking assistance in New York he received word that all the desirable juveniles were either unavailable because of present employment, or in the army. The California studios were again combed to find some one for the leading male, but without success. As a consequence the production was started without a leading man.



Exterior and Interior Views of American Projectoscope.

American Projecting Company Prompt in its Deliveries

REPRESENTATIVE business houses all over the country are adopting the American Projectoscope, the portable motion picture projection machine, as a merchandising medium, according to reports received from the American Projecting Company's executive offices in Chicago.

Quantity production on these projectors is now possible, since the Chicago factory within the past few weeks has considerably increased its capacity and is now in a position to fill orders practically as fast as they are received.

President Samuel S. Hutchinson of the American Projecting Company, who is also president of the American Film Company, Inc., says: "We are now filling orders promptly and despite the fact that the daily orders are showing a steady increase, I believe the factory will, from now on, be able to keep abreast of the orders. The delay which hampered us for a time was due to the lack of the necessary dies, jigs, automatic machines, etc., which made much handwork necessary in completing machines. These tools are now all available and our present plant is proving highly efficient in every respect.

"Orders for American Projectoscopes are being received from a most gratifying type of purchasers. Big business houses all over the country are adopting the American Projectoscope as a medium for increasing the sales of their product, being quick to realize the wonderful opportunity it offers for presenting their goods to prospective customers in a convincing manner, by showing them pictures of the product in the making—factories actually in operation—and the use of the product by the consumer.

"Film companies, film stars, film editors, music cue writers, directors and exhibitors are finding this portable projection machine just the thing for their use, since it permits them to stop the film at any point and examine it closely for details that are easily overlooked when a print is run in a large projection room with the ordinary standard projectors. The American Projectoscope is also proving exceptionally valuable to the busy exhibitor, who can now examine film in his own private offices for cut-outs, etc., while his large projection machines are in use.

"We have prepared descriptive booklets fully explaining how the American Projectoscope is adaptable to every need and will be glad to mail them to any one who will write to the offices of the American Projecting Company, 6235 Broadway, Chicago."

Mastercraft to Start "The One Woman."

WORK on the first Mastercraft production, "The One Woman," adapted from the novel of the same title by Thomas Dixon, will probably be commenced at the Paralta studios in Los Angeles this week. Harry Chandlee, who has written the continuity of the picture, is now on his way to California, where he will confer with F. Eugene Farnsworth, in charge of the western activities of Mastercraft, and Reginald Barker, who is to direct the picture. Work will be commenced immediately.

The cast is already practically completed. However, it is known that Lawson Butt, an English actor of prominence, will appear in one of the principal roles; while Clara Williams is to portray another of the outstanding parts.

The Mastercraft Company has made arrangements with the National Drama Corporation, which controls the rights of Thomas Dixon's books, for the screen production of the majority of that author's most successful novels. Mr. Dixon himself is deeply interested in the project, and is devoting much of his time to the literary end of the business.

Record Booking Price

San Francisco's Strand to Pay $3,500 for Fortnight Run of Chaplin.

TURNER & DAHNKEN, who hold the franchise in the First National Exhibitors' Circuit for Northern California and Nevada, report that they have arranged to release seven of the new series of Chaplin comedies through the Strand of San Francisco instead of the Hippodrome, as originally announced. The Hippodrome will have first run of "A Dog's Life," carrying out the provisions of their contract with Turner and Dahnken, but after that the picture will be shown at the Strand, together with all forthcoming Chaplins.

It is understood that the Strand executives handed over a bonus of $5,000 in cash to the managers of the Hippodrome to secure their rights in the series, and that they are also paying a rental price of $3,500 for two weeks' service on each picture.

This figure is supposed to establish a record price for two-reel comedies in any part of the world, and is a significant commentary upon Chaplin's popularity on the Pacific Coast, where he is said to possess the largest clientele per capita of any film star.

"Alimony" a Strong Attraction.

"Alimony," the six-part feature which was released by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit about February, is proving one of the biggest box-office attractions of the current season, according to carefully tabulated lists of exhibitors' box office receipts.

Released about the first of the year without unusual advance advertising or insistent claims for originality of theme, lavishness of production, etc., "Alimony" has captured the public favor wherever shown, and in some of the big houses on the First National Circuit has set a record.

There is another confirmation of the theory that a stirring story, acted by a well-balanced cast and directed by a man who knows his business, will please the public and make money for any exhibitor who exploits it in the right way. The eight principal players in "Alimony" did not jointly demand as much salary for their services as is ordinarily paid one single star of the highest candle-power.

William Fox Will Present Theda Bara in "Salome"

WILLIAM FOX is to present Theda Bara in "Salome." Work on the production has been completed in the West, the negative has been shipped to New York and a private showing of the print has been given by Mr. Fox.

The splendor of the East, the pomp and power of a mighty military kingdom, scenes from the Bible, intrigues of a lavish court, ambition, love, jealousy, and the purifying influence of a noble sacrifice for a great cause—all these have been woven into this spectacular Theda Bara super-production. The accuracy and artistry in the representation of ancient Judea, which was builded anew for this film, are notable. The settings and the costumes are as exact and as faithful to the period they represent as persistent research could make them.

The picturesque times of the Herodian dynasty offer opportunities for Miss Bara. Nothing was spared to put into this film play every dramatic and spectacular effect that is known to the scenic art.

The scenario is based principally on the works of Josephus. It was decided not to adopt Oscar Wilde's version centering around Salome's dance and the delivering of John the Baptist's head because it was not suited to accurate presentation on the screen. The result of following historical lines is a spectacle-drama that not only will appeal to scholars and students of the Bible, but will thrill and inspire every man or woman who is moved by pageants, stage pictures and great passions, days and events in human life.

Goldwyn Using Food Trailers.

In accordance with the request of the Food Administration future Goldwyn Pictures will carry trailers urging the public to save foodstuffs. This is in line with previous Goldwyn efforts to further the Government's program in its campaign of war savings education.

Following are a few of the Food Administration's slogans that will be used on trailers with Goldwyn Pictures:

Keep the home fires burning, but don't cook so much on them.

Bread and guns will beat the Huns.

Win the war with bread and lead.

Soap is made from fat. So don't waste soap, for Germany has got to be cleaned up.

To give our boys in France a good square fighting chance we'll send the wheat and meat no matter what we eat.

Every vegetable on the table means a Hun on the run.

The food you save in the kitchen goes to the soldiers' mess at the front.

We can spare our Allies' share for "Over There."

Trade News Brevities

New England Film Trade Notes of the Week

Burglars Enter Theater in Springfield, Mass.—Mayor Peters of Boston Forbids Showing of "Nation" Film—Camp File Film Makes Hit.

By R. D. Howe, 80 Summer Street, Boston, Mass.

Theater in Springfield Burglarized.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.—Burglars gained entrance to the fine Fox theater on Main street, and blowing open the safe, got away with between $800 and $1,000 in cash. They gained entrance by the fire escape, tore down portiers and rolling the safe into the corridor, wrapping it to muffle the sound of the explosion. All the doors were tied with ropes to prevent interruption. No one in the vicinity of the theater heard the explosion and it was not until the theater was opened the next day that the theft was discovered.

Mayor of Boston Bans "Nation" Film.

An attempt to show "The Birth of a Nation" again in Boston, was prevented by Mayor J. Peters. The first showing of this picture about three years ago at the Tremont theater aroused a great controversy. The matter reached the State Legislature so bitter was the protest of the colored citizens of the city. Finally some of the objectionable parts were deleted and the film was shown for months at the theater. This was Mayor Peters' first cancellation of a proposed film production in this city since he became mayor this year.

"Remaking of a Nation" Makes Hit.

The Boston Women's club had a special public performance in Symphony Hall on Saturday night, March 16, of the Paramount six-reel feature, "The Remaking of the Nation." There was a crowded house. The proceeds went to the Camp Community Fund and the War Service Committee work.

The Paramount company is to be congratulated on the excellence of this picture for war propaganda work. The film shows camp life and living conditions at Camp Sherman, Chillicothe, Ohio, where 40,000 men are in training for the army. The film shows the arrival of the recruits, their work in training, their physical examination, and the sports indulged in during recreation periods. Men are shown laying out and digging trenches, engaged in skirmishing advancing "over the top," throwing bombs and operating the newer types of machine guns and rifles under the direction of American and French officers.

Mrs. Carroll Praises Pictures.

Mrs. Alice Rice Carroll, New England manager of the United States government war films, made an address before the Massachusetts Teachers Federation in this city, in which she boosted the moving picture as a means of teaching health and hygiene. Her address was very instructive and she was given a warm reception by the teachers. "As a book should be read for its value, so should a picture be shown for what it teaches," Mrs. Carroll said.

Miss Schwartz to Join Federal Film.

Miss Bertha Schwartz, assistant to Mrs. Alice Rice Carroll, New England manager of the government war films, is enjoying a ten day vacation in Montreal. On her return to Boston she will accept a new position as assistant manager of the Federal Film corporation of this city.

J. J. Dervin Made a Sergeant

Camp Devens, Mass.—John J. Dervin, formerly a salesman in the Major Film Company, has been appointed a sergeant in his company.

Globe Showing Illiodor.

Herbert Brenon's "The Fall of the Romanoffs," with Illiodor, is attracting much attention at the Globe theater, being put on with excellent accessories to large audiences. The Globe has been putting on all of the biggest productions released during the last few years.

Newark News Letter

By Jacob J. Kalter, 25 Branford Place, Newark, N. J.

Goodwin Theater Changes Hands.

NEWARK, N. J.—The Goodwin theater, 863 Broad street, has been purchased by Moe M. Kridel. This theater is in the heart of the city, near the Four Corners. It was owned by the William Y. Webbe Company. and managed by Mrs. L. H. Webbe. The house was devoted to high-class productions, but Mr. Kridell intends to show even better features than heretofore. His new policy will be effective beginning March 18. Mr. Kridell was formerly manager of the Fox Terminal theater, 84 Park place, and prior to that he managed several theaters in New York and Brooklyn.

Freedman Files Empire Theater Name.

Bayonne, N. J.—Benjamin Freedman and Henry R. Grossman have filed the Empire theater as the trade name of the show-house situated at 978 Broadway, Bayonne.

Exhibitor in Bankruptcy.

Leonard H. Fentzlaff, of East Orange, who until recently operated a moving picture theater at 47 Dodd street, Bloomfield, has filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy in the United States District Court. The petition, which was referred to Referee George W. Porter, shows liabilities amounting to $1,170 and assets of $45.

Recruiting at Strand Theater.

In conjunction with the showing in Newark of the "Unbeliever" during the week of March 11 a recruiting campaign was conducted by the United States Marine Corps. The office was in charge of Sergeant Thomas V. Green, and it is said the campaign was fruitful to a satisfactory degree. A detachment of United States Marines was in attendance, and proved a valuable aid to the picture. Ray McKee, star of the picture, appeared personally Thursday evening.

Newark Enforcing Minor Law.

Because Morris Feldman, owner of the Grand Palace theater, 305 Market street, Newark, allowed six boys under sixteen years of age to attend his show without a guardian he was Thursday fined $50 by Judge Quigley in the First Precinct Court. It is the intention of the authorities to enforce the law which prohibits theater owners from admitting children under sixteen to performances without being accompanied by some guardian, and the exhibitors have been so warned.

Benefit for French Wounded.

A moving picture benefit will be held March 18 at the Robert Treat Hotel, Newark, under the auspices of the American Fund for French Wounded. The pictures were taken by French army photographers.

Artfilm Studios Appoint Agent.

Trenton, N. J.—The Artfilm Studios, a corporation chartered under the laws of Ohio, have appointed Willis P. Bainbridge, of 704 American Mechanical Building, as its New Jersey agent.

Plaza Filed as Trade Name.

Jersey City, N. J.—Robert A. Bulman and Margaret E. Bulman have filed the Plaza theater as the trade name for their house, located at 517-519 West Side avenue.

Local Film at Bijou.

Orange, N. J.—Local actors and actresses will be screened next week on the stage of the Bijou theater, to appear in a play to be exhibited at the theater the week after. Manager Hoffman originated the idea, which is an innovation in Orange.

Philadelphia News Letter

By F. V. Armato, 144 North Salford St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Good Business Picture Shown.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—A motion picture entitled "A Business Story," showing that guessing in any line of trade is certain to lead to failure, and that well planned methods invariably lead to success, was shown last week to 300 employees of the N. W. Ayer & Son, advertising agents, of this city. The film was made by the Essanay Company, and is prized very highly as an educational picture.

"House of Hate" at the Grand.

Manager Wegerford of the Grand Opera house, Philadelphia, presented the first showing of "The House of Hate," in conjunction with six acts of vaudeville. As an added feature Pathe's serial proved a big success.

Wilkes-Barre Savoy Rebuilding.

Wilkes Barre, Pa.—M. E. Comerford, who controls a chain of theaters throughout Pennsylvania, stated that the Savoy in Wilkes-Barre is undergoing extensive alterations. When finished the theater will be practically rebuilt, and one of the most beautiful theaters of the state.

F. W. Buhler Announces Films.

Frank W. Buhler, general manager of the Central Market Street company, announces that in addition to the feature production "Cheating the Public," there will be presented the first episode of "The German Curse in Russia" and which will be shown for the first time in Philadelphia. Nazimova's first Metro special release has also been booked for a two weeks run.

Plans Central Film Building in Buffalo

F. I. L. M. Club Listens to Suggestion of Real Estate Men Who Would Like to Prepare Exclusive Exchange in Center of City.

By Joseph A. McGuire, 152 North Elmwood Avenue, Buffalo.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—At the last meeting of the Buffalo F. I. L. M. Club a representative of a local real estate agency submitted suggestions as to the possibilities of opening an exclusive film exchange building in Buffalo. Two locations were mentioned, one in the Spaulding building at Main and Terrace streets and another in a building near Pearl and Seneca streets.

If either structure is selected it would have to be entirely remodeled to conform to the local fire ordinances in regard to the storing of film. Fireproof vaults, inspection rooms and various other facilities would be installed. The speaker suggested that a site would be chosen and such improvements would be made, provided enough of the Buffalo exchange managers would agree to take up quarters in the proposed building.

The present leases of some of the exchanges are of short duration, it is said, and it might be arranged that the long-term leases could be transferred to other tenants. It has been the dream of many in the film trade that this city might have a new film building some day. If a brand new structure for that purpose is not possible at the present time, then a remodeled building, with up-to-date facilities, would be welcomed. Local and out of town exhibitors would be especially delighted if they could avoid the present method of "shopping around town" for their film and, instead, concentrate their transactions in one building.

Charles A. Taylor, manager of the Pathe, was appointed chairman of the transportation committee of the club. This committee will confer with the general agents of the express companies to bring about a prompter shipment of film.

Lenten Business in Buffalo Good.

"Exhibitors report that their Lenten business has been better than they expected," said T. C. Montgomery, manager of the Triangle, Buffalo. "The reason given is that many were kept away from the theaters many times during the past three months of severe weather."

New Buffalo Theater Company Formed.

The Olympic Theater Operating Corporation of Buffalo, capitalized at $75,000, has been chartered to operate moving picture houses. The incorporators are Morris Slotkin, Robert L. Himes and Mathew W. Weimar of this city. The Olympic interests conduct the Olympic and Lyric theaters in Buffalo.

Plan Theater Chaperones for Children.

A Parents' and Guardians' Club has been organized by Matt Whitham, manager of the Allendale moving picture theater, Buffalo. The purpose of the organization is that children may be accompanied by elders to the Allendale's Saturday matinees. A grown-up, accompanied by two youngsters, will be admitted free to the Saturday afternoon performance. Manager Whitham is issuing passes to those being enrolled in the club. The youngsters must pay the regular admission.

Al Sherry Takes Charge of the Arcadia.

Al Sherry is the new manager of the Arcadia theater, Buffalo. This house plays vaudeville and moving pictures. On a recent evening Mr. Sherry gave what he termed "an honorary military souvenir" to each patron. The gift provided a means of keeping a record of a soldier boy's activities. There were blanks in which the mother or father of a soldier could write in the name of the youth, his company, commander and other data. His photograph could also be inserted. The Arcadia is an East Side district, in which hundreds of young men have joined the colors. The souvenirs were therefore in great demand and their distribution not only helped the attendance but also made many new friends for the house.

Shea Amusement Co. Consolidates.

According to certificates filed in the county clerk's office, Buffalo, the Shea Amusement Co., organized in September, 1905, has taken over the Shea Theater Co., organized in August, 1915, and the Shea Hippodrome Co., organized in August, 1915. The certificates of merger are signed by Pliny B. McNaughton, president of the Shea Amusement Co. The certificates of merger state that all the stock of the Shea Theater Co. and the Shea Hippodrome Co. is owned by the Shea Amusement Co. and that the purposes for which the corporations were formed are identical. Shea's Hippodrome, one of the largest and most elaborate moving picture houses in the country, and Shea's vaudeville theater, favorably known from coast to coast, are connected with the merger.

"The Unbeliever" Shown to U. S. Marines

The Buffalo branch of the George Kleine System screened "The Unbeliever" at Shea's Hippodrome Monday morning, March 11, for the benefit of the U. S. Marines in this city. They were well represented among the spectators. Officers and their wives from Fort Porter, Buffalo, and from Fort Niagara and other members of the army and the navy were present. Several leading citizens also attended. This picture was produced by Thomas A. Edison, in co-operation with the U. S. Marine Corps, and was warmly applauded at the screening. Manager Franklin of the Hippodrome took good care of his distinguished guests. It is expected that "The Unbeliever" will be shown in Buffalo in about a week.

Interesting Bison City Notes.

M. E. Donelon, manager of the Gowanda, N. Y., opera house, was a Buffalo caller.

"We play the Goldwyn, Select, Triangle and other features," said Mr. Donelon. "The attendants and other employees of the Gowanda state hospital and of the J. N. Adam hospital nearby are among our patrons. Sometimes we furnish pictures for entertainments at these institutions."

An overheated oil stove started a blaze in the bookkeeping department of the Mutual exchange, Buffalo, Monday morning, March 11. All the records of the exchange were in the safe, as usual, and were unharmed. Typewriters, adding machines and furniture were among the articles damaged. The loss is estimated at $500.

W. A. V. Mack, Mutual manager, recently visited Mr. Fay, who has taken over the Avon theater, Rochester. The house has been renamed the Fay theater.

H. Lorence, former Mutual salesman, has been promoted to corporal. He is in the quartermaster's department at Camp Upton.

I. Wiatrowsky, formerly night shipper for the Mutual, is a member of Uncle Sam's ordnance department. He was home on a furlough for a few days and called on his friends at the Mutual headquarters.

J. A. C. Kendal, with the Vitagraph exchange at Cincinnati, visited Dayton for the past week and while here closed several contracts for Vitagraph pictures.

It is rumored the Bijou theater at Piqua is to be closed. I would suggest changing the name.

Dayton News Letter

By P. J. G., Dayton Correspondent.

To Open Auditorium Theater at Tippecanoe.

TIPPECANOE, OHIO.—Bennet and Partlow, two of the most successful small town managers in this section of Ohio and who at present manage the Majestic theater at Tippecanoe, Ohio, are to open the Auditorium there with a seating capacity of 1,200 people. The co-managers visited the offices of the Miami Valley Exhibitors' League in Dayton recently. They were sent away with best wishes for continued success by all members present at the time of their visit.

Interesting Dayton Pick-ups.

The official headquarters of the Moving Picture World are hereafter to be at 206 Rauh building. Welcome film men.

George Oxrider, at the Peoples, used one of the Metro emergency shows last week stored at the League rooms through the courtesy of L. C. Pollack.

The Indianapolis papers spoke much of Hewitt H. Thomas, who was recently signed by Mark Gates as musical director of the new Dayton.

One thing L. C. Pollack is noted for—service. Pollack was in Marysville, Ohio, on a recent morning. While there he received a wire that a film at Athens, Ohio, one hundred and twenty-five miles away, was needed at the Alhambra theater at Newark, Ohio. He started from Marysville Thursday morning for Athens, Ohio, to get the picture. The film was needed in Newark for showing at a matinee starting at 1:30 p. m. Friday. After reaching Athens, Ohio, he left for Newark, equally as far, and arrived at 10:30 a. m. Friday, three hours previous to the show.

John Siefert promises a new five thousand dollar Symphony organ for the Ideal. This house should step up a notch with better music.

E. J. Bauman, with McMahon and Jackson exchange, at Cincinnati, was in Dayton four days recently and registered at the League rooms. He is spending an extra amount of time with the Arbuckle comedies handled by the exchange. The Pastime theater at Columbus will use the comedies first-run, two days at the Knickerbocker theater. The Ideal gets the Arbuckle comedies first run in Dayton (not to be confused with the newer Paramount comedies). Other houses where bookings are placed include the Dreamland, Akron, Ohio; the Strand, Canton, Ohio; the Schade theater, Sandusky (a beautiful theater which I have visited on several occasions); The Putnam theater, Marietta; the Alhambra, Newark, and the Southern, Columbus, recently converted from stock policy to pictures by Harry Hart, formerly of Cincinnati, and who managed several theaters at that town.

Harry Shoup, manager of the Mall theater, Sidney, Ohio, reports good business at this house.

The Jewel and Colonial theaters at Troy, Ohio, have booked McMahon and Jackson's Arbuckle comedies.

J. A. Conant, Gustave Kinzler and James Hamilton motored to Piqua a few days ago to visit managers there.

B. F. Chase, with the Pathe exchange, was in Dayton for a few days getting acquainted with local managers. I missed Mr. Chase, but hope to see him next time.

Manager Gordon of the Gordon opera house at Middletown, Ohio, booked the Pathe program for presentation at his house, states the energetic Jim Hamilton.

I talked to P. A. Weaver of the Grand theater at Miamisburg, Ohio, by long distance telephone last week. He manages the house with his brother, H. E. Weaver. Mr. Weaver told me business was a little dull for the present, but he thought it would pick up within the next few weeks. The Grand plays Paramount, Artcraft, Select and Mutual pictures. The house seats three hundred. Calls are always welcome from Miamisburg. Mr. Weaver, call early and often.

Cleveland News Letter

Cradley Coal Company's Show a Success.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.—The United States Coal company is having much success with its theater which was erected at Bradley, Ohio, for the benefit of their employees.

H. E. Willard, of the coal company, in speaking of the theater said: "The employees of our mines had no place of recreation, so we built the theater, not to make any money out of it, but simply for their benefit. Of course, we charge admission but the money we take in would not pay half of the expenses, as there are only 1,500 people there."

The theater seats 300 and is open every day but Sundays. The Victor Film Service, Cleveland, is furnishing a Universal program of pictures for this theater.

Irwin Hirsch an Able Triangle Manager.

We print herewith an excellent picture of Irwin Hirsch, manager of the Cleveland Triangle offices, who has been working for some time perfecting the system and organization of his exchange. Mr. Hirsch came to Cleveland from New York, although he previously had had experience in this city, having been assistant manager of the World.

The personnel of the employees of the exchange follows:

Walter Brandt, assistant manager and publicity representative; Harry Decker, city salesman; Morris Safier, eastern Ohio salesman, and Dave Kline, western Ohio salesman; Moe Koppelman, booker; Miss D. Siegel, assistant booker; E. Vanderhoff, bookkeeper; Tillie Rosenbaum, stenographer; Belva Mack, assistant bookkeeper; E. H. Kingman, in charge of poster department; Charles Wing, film shipper. Inspectors are Zennith Adams, Edith Adams, and the Misses Clark, Kelley and Rowan.

Has Salesman Ask for Back Advertising

All roadmen of the Standard Film service, Cleveland, have been instructed that when they call upon a theater manager they must investigate the delay in return advertising matter, if any, and all advertising matter so found must be shipped back immediately.

The Standard, like other film companies, has suffered greatly the last year because of the carelessness of many exhibitors who do not return advertising matter promptly and they hope to remedy the trouble by having their roadmen look up missing advertising matter.

Longer Runs Coming Into Favor in Toronto

Out of Total of Twenty-two Houses, Five Kept Features All Week of March 11—Seven Changed Bills Only Once—Double Features in Montreal.

By W. M. Gladish, 1263 Gerrard Street, East, Toronto, Ontario.

TORONTO, ONT.—Of twenty-two Toronto theaters advertising film attractions for the week of March 11, five were presenting the feature for a one-week run. These included the Royal Alexandra, at which Fox's "Les Miserables" was being given as a road show; the Regent theater, showing "The Floor Below," with Mabel Normand; Allen theater, "Headin' South," with Douglas Fairbanks; His Majesty's theater, "On to Berlin," with George Walsh; Loew's, "Diamonds and Pearls," with Kitty Gordon, and Shea's Hippodrome, showing William S. Hart in "The Bargain."

Seven other theaters changed their programs twice during the week. These houses were the Strand, Oakwood, Red Mill, Madison, Garden, Colonial and Empress. Nine theaters made changes three times during the six days, while one theater—the York—had a new bill every day. The following six features were shown at the York theater during the week: "Bawbs of Blue Ridge," "Stolen Honor," "The Burglar," "Our Little Wife," "The Manxman" and "The Wooing of Princess Pat."

It is interesting to note that several Montreal theaters resort to the plan of providing double feature bills. During the first week in March the St. Denis theater, Montreal, presented Kitty Gordon's "Vera the Medium" and Kerrigan's "The Turn of a Card" together at three shows daily, including Sunday. The Regent theater, Park and Laurier avenues, Montreal, also presented Tom Mix in "Cupid's Round-Up" and Alma Ruebens in "I Love You" on the same bill. It is also interesting to note that the Regent of Montreal held a special show on Friday, March 8, to celebrate the theater's second anniversary. Tickets were sold in advance for the special performance.

Montreal Adopts Stringent Bill Posting Rule.

The bill posters of Montreal will no longer have everything their own way as a result of the adoption of a stringent by-law by the Montreal City Council, which prohibits them from pasting posters on any private property without the written consent of owners, and from pasting up public property, including sidewalks, without a license from the city. No posters can be placed on poles, and all illustrated posters must be censored by the Superintendent of Police before they are exhibited to the tender view of the public. It is now even a crime to slop a little paste or glue over the sidewalk in affixing the paper to billboards.

Loew's Montreal Theater Slandered.

Somebody started a nasty rumor around Montreal that Loew's new theater in that city was not safe. Manager Mills disregarded the talk until it became too serious, after which he secured special reports from the local fire chief, the contracting firm, Building Inspector Chausse, R. A. Brassard, a well-known local achitect, and others to the effect that the big building was sound and flawless. The officials mentioned made independent examinations of the structure, which has been in operation since November 17 last. Their reports were all very favorable, whereupon Manager Mills used half-page space in the local dailies to allay the feelings of patrons. The newspapers also made comment in the editorial columns regarding the reports. The statements of the building experts were quoted freely.

L. E. Quimet Gets British War Films.

L. E. Quimet, president of the Specialty Film Import, Lt., Toronto, Canadian distributors of Pathe releases, has secured the exclusive Canadian rights to distribute the weekly news films of the British War Office of London, England.

Glad Hand and Pleasant Word Help Theater.

Manager Morris of the Temple theater, one of Toronto's suburban houses, has made a success of the theater by being friendly. He makes it a point to make an announcement at every performance regarding any changes in arrangements and regarding future programmes. He also tries to be friendly with all regular patrons. The theater was a losing proposition before he took hold of it, but now it is one of the best paying outlying houses of Toronto.

Manager Thomas Not Coming to Toronto.

It is now stated that Manager Thomas of the Strand theater, Omaha, will not come to Toronto to become supervisor of the Regent theater, Toronto; St. Denis, Montreal, and the Flower theater, Ottawa. Thomas recently visited Toronto to discuss matters.

Garden Theater, Toronto, Reopens.

A notable event in Toronto moving picture circles was the reopening of the Garden theater, 290 College street, on Monday, March 11, under the management of Harvey E. Stonge, formerly manager of the new Oakwood theater, Toronto. The house had been redecorated, new lighting effects installed and other improvements made. The Garden theater held a high place among local film theaters four or five years ago, but it experienced several changes of management and of fortune in the meantime.

Sets Aside a Night for Comedies.

The Tivoli theater, St. Catherine and Bleury streets, Montreal, recently put on a funny stunt, literally speaking. Wednesday evening, March 6, was advertised as a "Special Comedy Night," and no less than six reels of comedies were screened at each performance, in addition to the regular show, the feature of which was "I Love You," with Alma Ruebens. A huge crowd of both grown-ups and children gathered. The event will be repeated.

A. B. Webster Dies in Toronto.

A. B. Webster, owner and manager of the large suburban moving picture theater at Beech avenue and Queen street, Toronto, died on March 6 after an illness of three years. Although suffering for this period, the deceased retained active interest in his business until the last. He left two sons, now with the Canadian army in France, and one daughter. The theater was built under his own direction in 1913.

MORE DAYTON, OHIO, JOTTINGS.

Included among the recent salesmen in Dayton was J. A. Conant, with Select. The writer noticed Conant in one of the prominent restaurants for the mid-day meal arm in arm with Teddy Chifos. If J. A. didn't convince Teddy Select had the best on the market the writer is mistaken. Conant talked while Teddy enjoyed it. Enjoyed what? you ask. In answer I will say J. A. Conant is an interesting talker.

Although a year old "War Brides" went over big at the Elite for two days recently, Al. Kinzeler arranged special music for the film with one of Dayton's most prominent soloists as a special added attraction. The soloist made a hit and Al. informs me he is to duplicate the affair in the near future. Donwtown managers please notice.

Film Man Writes rrom Front Line in France

E. W. Friedman Still Enjoying Occasional Copies of Moving Picture World and Would Like More—Wants to Hear from Old Friends.

By Kenneth C. Crain, 307 1st Nat. Bk., Cincinnati.

CINCINNATI, O.—One former film man who is doing his bit in France addressed a letter to the Cincinnati correspondent of this paper recently, indicating that he still picks up an occasional copy of the World, and that he is interested in film matters. This letter came from E. W. Friedmann, who was formerly with the Paramount organization, and later with "Civilization" as Ohio publicity man. Mr. Friedmann says: "I thought I would drop a line to you to advise you and numerous exhibitors throughout Ohio, principally the central and southwestern portion, that my memories are in the Buckeye State, regardless of the fact that I am within hearing of the big guns of the front and can see the flash of the rockets at night. I have been in France some time with the Ordinance Corps of the Army, and have decided that there are many things harder than to convert an exhibitor to service he is not using. I would like very much to hear from some of the many exhibitors whom I have met in Ohio, and my wishes for a prosperous 1918 are with them. If it is possible would like to receive the World occasionally." Mr. Friedmann's address is Ammunition Park, A. E. F., Care Chief Ordinance Officer, France.

W. S. Wessling Honored by Cuvier Press Club.

At the annual election of the Cuvier Press Club, the Cincinnati organization of newspaper men and other good scouts, which probably has more members than any other club in Cincinnati, W. S. Wessling, manager of the Pathe branch, was elected a member of the board of trustees, winning out, with his fellow-members, over some warm competition furnished by the other candidates. In the organization of the news administration which followed, Mr. Wessling was appointed as a member of the entertainment committee for the year.

Felix Mendelsohn Heads World Film Office.

Felix Mendelsohn, for more than a year a member of the World Film at Chicago and elsewhere, has come to Cincinnati as manager of the local office, arriving in time to take the office over from Stanley W. Hand, the retiring manager, who immediately left for Boston to take up new work. Mr. Mendelsohn has moved his family to Cincinnati, and declares that he is going to be a fixture in the Queen City.

Saturday Morning Show for Children.

Youngstown, O.—The management of the Dome theater has tried the experiment of a Saturday morning show, from 9.30 to 11.30, for school children exclusively, the first program consisting of the Famous Players release of "The Seven Swans," featuring Marguerite Clark. The film was unusually well suited to a program for children, and the performance was a decided success.

Andrew Nordmeyer Killed by Burglars.

On the evening of March 5 two desperadoes broke into the meeting of a Newport building-and-loan association, across the river from Cincinnati, and killed two of the directors, one of whom was Andrew Nordmeyer, president of the association, and owner of the Hippodrome, the largest moving picture house in Covington. Mr. Nordmeyer was 63 years old, and was instantly killed as he was attempting to protect the funds of the organization of which he was the head. His wife, five sons and a daughter survive him. One of his sons, Frank, was present at the time of Mr. Nordmeyer's death. The Covington Chief of Police, who was a member of the Association, was also on the scene, and although himself wounded, replied to the fire of the attackers with such effect that he killed one of them. It is believed that the suspects subsequently arrested are the guilty men, and they have been removed from Cincinnati to Covington. The Hippodrome, Mr. Nordmeyer's theater, was erected several years ago by him on the site of some flour mills which were destroyed by fire, and which he owned

Clyde Carson Buys Chippewa Theater.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—The H. J. Hirsch Real Estate Co. announces the sale of the Chippewa theater, Broadway and Chippewa street, to Clyde Carson for $35,000. Carson will continue to operate the theater as a motion picture house through the summer. The house will be under the active management of Joseph J. Walsh. Extensive alterations are being made on the structure which is already one of the prettiest and most commodious houses in the city.

Broadway Family Theater Changes Hands.

Edward Bergt, a well-known St. Louis politician has purchased the Broadway Family theater and will operate it in the future.

Uses Acetylene on Lightless Night.

Dave Russell, manager of the Park theater, has found a way to light up his theater on lightless nights. He purchased a large acetylene tank and placed it to one side of the front of his theater. By means of an arc lamp he has showered the facade of his theater with a flow of light that is dazzling, and uses no fuel in so doing. Many of the exhibitors have planned to copy Russell's idea.

Mauri Stahl Joins Perfection.

Mauri Stahl, lately of the General office here, has joined Manager Burhorne's staff at the Perfection office.

Don Barclay Sees Himself in Film.

Don Barclay, who hailed originally from St. Louis and who won considerable fame this year as chief comedy man with Ziegfeld's Follies, was in the city with the show during the week and took advantage of an offer as "invited guest" to a private showing of one of his films at the private show-room of the General Film Company. The picture was an Essanay comedy. Most of the exchange managers of the city were on hand.

Sensible Admission Prices in Louisville

Downtown Houses Raised to Fifteen Cents Last Summer, Now the Suburban Theaters Are Coming Into Line with Increases.

Ohio Valley News Service, 1404 Stark Bldg., Louisville, Ky.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—It is interesting to note that Louisville admission prices are now getting well lined up, and that the public is paying the price. Louisville always was a ten-cent city, but last September the downtown houses got together and jumped the price to fifteen cents. Then the war tax resulted in another five-cent raise sixty days later. Up to that time prices had been the same for suburban and downtown houses, but the suburban houses figured that they could not get the advance, although they always had got the same price as the downtown houses. They judged that the heavy attendance of juveniles and parents would be curtailed at the suburban houses, but this has proven erroneous. Fifty per cent. of the suburban houses have now gone to fifteen cents for night shows, and it is believed that they will all be getting fifteen cents for adults and ten for children within a short time.

J. M. Wentzel, of the Norman, has been charging fifteen cents for adults and children two to three nights a week, and believes that it is just as easy to get the price. Manager Nadorf, of the Hilltop, has been getting ten cents for week days and twenty cents on Sundays. The public is prosperous at this time, and willing to pay the price. It is also seeking diversion, and no time is like the present for getting the increase.

Many Film Men Serving at Camp Taylor.

Quite a number of former moving picture men are now stationed at Camp Taylor, Louisville, one of the big training cantonments. Among these are Capt. Richard Travers, formerly the Essanay star. William Howard, at one time assistant manager of the Cincinnati World Film office and later manager of the Minneapolis Metro office, is a private, but has recently entered the Officers' Reserve Training School. Lee Bloomfield, connected with the Pastime theater of Winchester, which was recently wrecked by a falling wall, is another private who has been at the camp for some time. The Broadway Amusement Enterprises of Louisville also have some four of their young men in service, and have been figuring on running up a service flag. Many more picture men are at the camp, several having been reported some time ago.

Harry Burgie Smiles in Louisville.

Harry Burgie, the smiling traveling representative of the Pathe company, was recently in Louisville. Mr. Burgie was at one time with George Kleine, later with the short-subject department of the Paramount, but has recently taken charge of the Kentucky-Tennessee district for the Pathe people. Mr. Burgie recently booked the Pathe features with the Alamo theater of Louisville, the first to be shown featuring Fanny Ward in "Innocent." Mr. Burgie has a captivating smile, which is a great asset to him and which has resulted in his close friends almost forgetting his proper handle in referring to him.

Manager G. A. Bleich Tireless in Service.

Owensboro, Ky.—Manager George A. Bleich of the Empress, Grand and Queen theaters has completed a successful drive in the sale of soldiers' "Smileage" coupon books, having acted as chairman of the Owensboro campaign committee. Mr. Bleich has just received an appointment from the Eighth Federal Reserve District Board as publicity director of Davies County in the Third Liberty Loan Bond sale campaign, this being largely due to his fine work in connection with the Smileage campaign. Mr. Bleich is a tireless patriotic worker, and has lent assistance wherever possible.

Thrift Stamps as Bonuses.

The National theater of Louisville has been one of the very first to undertake a thrift stamp saving plan. The company has announced that a National Economy Stamp will be given with each seat sale at twenty-five cents, these stamps being worth 2½ cents. For ten of these economy stamps the theater will give out one thrift stamp and thrift cards will be provided.

Indianapolis News Letter

Circle Theater Entertains Newsies.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.—The Circle theater was host to several hundred carriers of the Indianapolis News and their mothers Saturday, March 9, at a special motion picture party, arranged by S. Barrett McCormick, manager of the theater, for the Indianapolis News Carriers' War Savings Thrift Club, which is said to be the largest stamp organization in the country.

The mothers of the newsboys have also organized a thrift stamp club, and they were the special guests of Mr. McCormick at the party Saturday. The large audience, which filled the lower floor of the theater, thoroughly enjoyed the special performance of Douglas Fairbanks in "Headin' South," and showed their appreciation in a way that would have gladdened the heart of the redoubtable Doug if he had been there himself instead of in pictures. Motion pictures showing the news carriers gathering at the Circle theater at one of Mr. McCormick's previous parties were also shown on the screen.

Edwin Booth Called to Colors.

Edwin Booth, who has been manager of the Alhambra theater, one of the Barton and Olsen motion picture theaters in this city, for the last two years, severed his connections with the theater Saturday, March 9. Mr. Booth, who is of draft age, has been placed in Class A 1.

He has been connected with the Alhambra since October 30, 1915, and prior to that time managed several suburban moving picture houses in Indianapolis. His personality and good business judgment have made him one of the most popular theater managers in the city.

Prior to his going into the army Mr. Booth will close up his business affairs with other concerns with which he has been connected. Messrs. Barton and Olson have not yet named his successor.

Auditorium Theater to Go.

South Bend, Ind.—The Auditorium theater building, in the heart of the city's business district, and one of the oldest of South Bend's landmarks, has been sold by the Studebaker Vehicle Company to George A. Robertson, a member of the dry goods firm of Robertson Brothers of this city. The consideration, it is understood, was $215,000.

The theater was formerly a dramatic house, but during the last few years has been devoted to motion pictures. It has a seating capacity of 1,500, and is one of the most profitable amusement enterprises of the city. Mr. Robertson has announced that as soon as the leases expire the building will be dismantled and converted into a store room for the use of the firm.

Government films, picturing various methods of preparedness for the war, here and abroad, were shown to capacity crowds at the Auditorium on Friday, March 8.

New Theater Company in Milan, Ind.

Milan, Ind.—The Empire Theater Amusement Company, a newly organized concern of this place, has been incorporated under the laws of Indiana, with a capital stock of $5,000. The directors are Thomas H. Thompson, John R. Pate, John H. Bergdoll, Ivor Fuller and William H. Wilson.

Nelson Theater Again Bright.

Logansport, Ind.—The Nelson theater of this city, which has been closed for the last few weeks, was reopened last Monday under the management of George K. Brown of Kankakee, Ill. Manager Brown says he intends to run a combination vaudeville and motion picture program, giving a change three times a week. He will donate next Sunday's receipts to the Logansport soldiers' fund.

Film Trade News of the Week in Detroit

Interesting Notes of Changes in the Local Distributing Offices and Theaters—Film Boys in the Service—Business Items.

By Jacob Smith, 718 Free Press Building, Detroit, Mich.

A. S. Hoganson Will Conduct the Stratford.

DETROIT, MICH.—Arthur S. Hoganson, recently with the Dawn Masterplay Co., and formerly manager for theatres operated by the Kunsky Enterprises in Detroit and the Gilligham & Smith theaters in Grand Rapids, has been appointed manager of the Stratford theater, Dix and Ferdinand avenues, Detroit, taking hold March 17th. He succeeds E. V. McGrath who has been in charge since the theater opened and who will shortly announce a new connection.

S. Ludwig Opens Exchange.

Another new film company has established itself in Detroit—we refer to the Victor Film Co., operated and managed by Samuel Ludwig, of Milwaukee. He has opened offices at 602 Film building, and is offering to Michigan exhibitors three W. S. Hart features: "The Two Gun Man in the Bargain," "The Bandit and the Preacher" and "The Hell-Hound of Alaska." In addition he has "Beware of Strangers." He has already taken quite a number of bookings.

William Steiner Visits Detroit.

William Steiner, who produces the Jester comedies, was in Detroit on March 9th conferring with Dave Mundstuk, of the Strand Features, who has the Michigan selling rights. While here the first two were given a private screening.

Begins News Weekly in Detroit.

The Metropolitan Co., 23 East Elizabeth street, Detroit, operated by M. S. Bailey and M. J. Caplan, both of whom are popular in the film business, are making a weekly news reel of current events, ranging from 500 to 800 feet. It is called The Detroit Free Press Current Events, being made in co-operation with that morning newspaper. The news-reel is to be sold to exhibitors, and among those who have contracted is John H. Kunsky for his chain of theaters.

Exchange Named Federal Film.

The Federal Film Co. is the name finally decided by R. K. Schallenberger for his Detroit exchange. He has opened permanent offices at 201 Film building. The first picture he will offer is "Souls Redeemed."

Manager Almart Studies Army Methods.

G. L. Almart, office manager and assistant to General Manager H. A. Ross, of the Paramount Artcraft exchange in Detroit, has tendered his resignation and has gone to the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor for special training in the ordnance department, American Army. Mr. Almart preferred an enlistment rather than wait for the draft. He has been with Paramount for nearly three years, starting in originally as general assistant and later doing the booking.

D. Leo Dennison Back in Civil Life.

We have just received word that D. Leo Dennison, who has been with headquarters detachment, ammunition train at Camp Lee, Petersburg, Va., has received his discharge on account of his physical condition. Mr. Dennison was formerly with Paramount at Detroit and Pittsburgh, and now that he is back to civilian life, we understand he will again affiliate with the film business in some capacity.

Where Film Boys in Khaki Are.

Just a line about the Michigan boys in the service: Floyd S. Wadlow, of the Virginia Park, now in the aviation corps, has been promoted to first sergeant and transferred to Rantoul, Ill.; Paul Kreps, formerly with Vitagraph and now at Waco, Texas, was a Detroit visitor last week; Lou Cohen, of the Coliseum theater, Detroit, is now somewhere in France; Ray Serble, formerly at Marquette, is somewhere in France; E. R. Paul, formerly with Pathe, is with the American Expeditionary forces in France.

Regent Expected to Open April 1.

Bay City's newest theater, The Regent, will open about the first of April. Fred Williams will be the general manager. The Regent is to be a beautiful house seating about 1,500. A contract to show Goldwyn pictures has been signed.

Exit the Woodward Theater.

The Woodward theater, Detroit, will quit on May 1st owing to the lease having expired and the further fact that a mercantile structure is to be erected on the property. However, the Woodward Theater Co. will still have five theaters as their new house on Woodward near Henry street, will open early in April. The other theaters operated by this company, are the Rosebud, Comique, LaSalle and Grand Circuit.

Detroit Business Notes.

J. E. Flynn, the new Goldwyn manager in Detroit, reports that he feels confident 100 per cent. of the Michigan exhibitors who originally signed for the first thirteen Goldwyn pictures will renew their franchise. "We have already re-signed quite a number of the biggest exhibitors and more signing up every day," he said. "Exhibitors have made good money with most of the Goldwyn pictures from what I can learn, and as the entire program is getting better and stronger, exhibitors are in a happy frame of mind and will surely want the future productions, which I am assured from the home office will be of the very best."

Mr. Bolster, of the Goldwyn staff and who recently returned from Australia looking after the export business, was a Detroit visitor for a few hours on March 12.

Doc Gallup, general manager of the Delft Theaters, Inc., of Marquette, is on a short trip through the middle west. He spent a few days in Washington on personal business and expects to stop off at Detroit on his way back to Marquette.

March is proving a big month for William Fox productions. The month will represent five full week runs on Fox pictures. For instance, the Regent will have run "The Spy" and "Treasure Island" each a full week; the Miles theater "A Daughter of the Gods" being the first time at popular prices; the Washington will have run "Du Barry" and "Les Miserables." Field Carmichael, local Detroit manager for Fox, says the exchange is doing by far the greatest business in its history.

"Eagle's Eye" serial is going over in Michigan with a bang, according to the booking sheets at the Foursquare exchange. Hustling Joe Horwitz reports that the very best houses in each town are signing up. In Detroit nearly 50 contracts have been taken, and last week Charles Seaman, of the Gilligham & Smith theater, booked it for the Majestic and Strand houses in Grand Rapids.

The Madison theater, Detroit, has contracted for the Benjamin Chapin pictures of the life of Abraham Lincoln now being released through Paramount exchanges. A private showing to 1,500 teachers and school children was given at the Madison Saturday morning, March 9th, the first four chapters being exhibited. They proved extremely interesting and pleasing. The first part was shown as a regular added attraction at the Madison, starting March 17th, and a new part will be shown each week until the whole series is concluded.

Crescent Amusement Company to Build

Nashville, Tenn., Will Have a Handsome New Theater for Pictures and Vaudeville —Will Cost About $100,000 and Seat 2,500 Persons.

By J. L. Ray, 1014 Strohlman Bldg., Nashville, Tenn.

NASHVILLE, TENN.—Plans are now being drawn by the Crescent Amusement for the erection of a handsome vaudeville and moving picture theater in the heart of the film district on Fifth avenue, North. Long-term leases have been taken on the property, and the building will be modern and fireproof in every particular. Plans are being drawn by Marr & Holman, leading Nashville architects.

The specifications as outlined call for the last word in theater construction. The building will be entirely of steel and concrete, and will contain, in addition to the large orchestra floor, two balconies and a mezzanine floor, which will be equipped with loggias and private boxes. Its entire seating capacity is placed at 2,500, being by far the largest in the city.

A stage will be constructed, and will be of greater dimensions than any now in Nashville, being equipped with a screen, as well as the latest electrical effects. There will be a fireproof drop, made of sheet steel and operated by electricity, so arranged that it will immediately close and separate the stage from the audience in an emergency.

The structure will be heated by huge fans and concrete ducts, and during warm weather a refrigerating plant will keep the building cool. There will be ladies' waiting rooms, with maids in attendance, and men's smoking rooms.

The interior decorations will be of Adam design, finished in ivory and gold, and the lighting system will be operated with concealed reflectors, none of the fixtures being exposed. The exterior of the building will be of tapestry brick and cream glazed terra cotta, with a marquise across the entire width of the front.

The property on which the building is to be built has been controlled by the Crescent Amusement Company for a number of years, and plans have been made on previous occasions to erect some kind of theater. The new house will represent an expenditure of approximately $100,000, and will be one of the South's most pretentious amusement palaces.

It is planned under the present arrangement to run both pictures and vaudeville, with prices ranging around ten and twenty cents.

Nashville Theater Man Returns.

Nashville, Tenn.—Roy C. Shelton, formerly manager of the Strand theater in Nashville, has returned to the city after having been a moving picture director in the North some months ago, and later in the real estate business in Miami, Fla. Mr. Shelton opened the Strand in Nashville nearly four years ago, and made it a success from the beginning. He came back to Nashville as a natural result of the city's new prosperity, and while nothing has been said thus far it is rumored that he may again enter the picture game.

Dallas News Letter

By Douglas Hawley, Times-Herald, Dallas, Texas.

West Texas Still Needs Rain.

DALLAS, TEX.—It's dry in West Texas yet, but conditions are improving. Some good rains have fallen in several sections, and as a result there is a much better feeling among exhibitors. This is the report of G. W. Thornton, Vitagraph representative in West Texas. "Expectation now is that much of the wheat, believed dead, will sprout and make a fair crop," he said. At Ranger, Tex., however, and two or three other points, it's still dry. They're paying six-bits a barrel for water, and a fellow who asks for a bath in a barber shop gets nothing but a haughty stare. Baths are practically unknown.

Two Division Managers Visit.

Division Manager H. E. Lotz of the Triangle at San Francisco visited Manager Diaz Callahan of the Dallas branch during the week of March 10. Mr. Lotz is greatly pleased with conditions in Texas, and said as much.

C. E. Tandy of Famous Players-Lasky, was another division representative in Dallas recently, calling on Manager Harry Owen. Because of the burning of the Hulsey Queen theater at Dallas some months ago, Paramount releases, so far as Dallas is concerned, are at present rather late in comparison with other cities, but are rapidly catching up.

Many Texas Folk at Saenger Reunion.

At least two Texas folk were present at the reunion of the Saenger Amusement Company "family" held in New Orleans recently. General Manager E. V. Richards, Jr., presided and those present included Raymond Elder, Houston; Mrs. Eva Vernon, Texarkana; Howard Swain, Shreveport, La.; Jack Manning, Monroe, La.; Simon Ehrlich, Shreveport; John Jones, Pensacola, Fla.; Noble Hearne, Alexandria, La.; E. M. Clarke, Natchez, Miss.; L. J. Pico, Vicksburg; Arthur Tobias, Jackson, Miss.

The Pictures in Dallas Theaters.

The Talmadge sisters—Constance and Norma—appeared in new releases in two Dallas theaters during the week beginning March 10. Hulsey's Queen offered "Scandal" and "The Secret of the Storm Country" was the week's opener at the Old Mill. Pickford in "Amarilly of Clothes Line Alley," the Artcraft, took the week-end at the Old Mill and the "Submarine Eye" released through the F. N. E. A. was booked to follow immediately. Fairbanks in "Headin' South" played to excellent business at the Old Mill through four days of the previous week. The Pathe release "The German Curse in Russia" opened the week at the Washington, following a successful run of the Vitagraph "The Other Man," and was followed by the World release "The Cross Bearer."

Manager Cliff Reid of Mutual is highly pleased with the first releases of the Screen Telegram in Texas theaters, including the Old Mill at Dallas. It's a hard matter to get something new in a news film, but the impression of "something different" seems to have gone out in the Telegram. Mr. Reed has added another salesman to his Texas force.—W. H. Godby.

First Chaplin in Texas This Month.

Manager Morrow of the Texas F. N. E. A. announces the forthcoming release, late in March, of the first Chaplin comedy made at the new studios, under the title "A Dog's Life." Texas has been eagerly waiting the new production. Its first release will be at the Hulsey Texas theaters.

Fox "Cleopatra" Begins Long Run.

Unmolested, despite efforts in that direction, the Fox "Cleopatra," with Theda Bara in the title role, continued the second week of its two weeks run at the Hippodrome, Dallas, March 10-16. The picture opened to capacity houses. The censor, Mrs. Ethel Boyce, passed it on a private screening, after making some ten cuts. Upon its being shown, however, a protest was filed by the Methodist city mission board. The censor, joined by Manager Arthur Claire, immediately called for a review by the appeals board. That body ruled that the picture was all right and could continue.

New L. & A. Theater Nearly Ready.

El Paso, Tex.—The new L. & A. theater, under construction here for Lewis and Andrae, is rapidly nearing completion. The new house will be operated by Messrs. Lewis and Andrae, in addition to their present Grecian theater. The L. & A. will be one of the handsomest places in the southwest. The Goldwyn "Four Below" with Mabel Normand, opened to excellent business at the Grecian on March 10, its first release in Texas.

S. D. Walton Takes Charge of Majestic

Austin, Tex.—S. Drake Walton has succeeded Marvin Holden as manager of the Majestic theater here. Mr. Walton has been in New York for the last two years, studying music, but has decided to desert an artistic for a commercial career. The theater is owned by a local stock company.

THEATER NOTES ACROSS NEBRASKA.

DAVID CITY, NEB.—W. W. Hughes, owner of the Community and Lyric theaters has been offered a position by the government, as manager of one of the Liberty theaters at an army cantonment, but was unable to accept.

Hebron, Neb.—Manager Fetterman, of the Elite theater, has a strong following because he identifies himself with all civic movements. When the local Boy Scouts started their thrift campaign, it was inaugurated with a day of special shows at the Elite. The film "Knights of the Square Table," was shown. On another day he had the high school seniors, faculty and basket ball teams as his guests at a showing of Mary Pickford in "Fanchon the Cricket."

Wynot, Neb.—O. W. Holmes has sold the Star theater.

Items of Interest in Dakotas.

Williston, N. D.—John Snyder, proprietor of the Lyric theater, being in the next draft, has been negotiated for the sale of that house.

Leads, N. D.—C. E. Lyons has purchased a moving picture theater at Aitkin, Minnesota.

Hot Springs, S. D.—The lease on the Grand theater has been taken over by Mrs. Ruth Wright.

Rapid City, S. D.—It would pay managers to keep a birthday book if many persons are of the same inclination as A. Lehman, a patron of Dreamland. Upon his seventieth anniversary he took seventy children to the local theater.

Rapid City, S. D.—The high school needed funds for the publication of the Pine Cone, the annual. The Elks raised the money by putting on "Jack and the Beanstalk," as a benefit.

Cheyenne Notes of Trade

By John C. Fleming, Box 273, Cheyenne, Wyo., With the Wyoming Tribune.

New Associate Manager for New Atlas.

CHEYENNE, WYO.—R. V. Davis, of Denver, has been appointed by the Swanson Nolan Film Company of that city to fill the capacity of associate manager for the New Atlas theater here, acting in harmony with Walter Bradley, owner, who takes active management for his interests. Mr. Bradley recently won possession of the Atlas by a court decision after exciting times in taking over of the property from the Moore & Greaves Amusement Company, who were in possession.

$100,000 Theater at Casper.

Casper, Wyo.—The long-felt want in Casper of a first-class theater is being filled by the plans of a new project, which will cost $100,000 and be one of the finest theater buildings of its size in the West. The new theater will have a seating capacity of 1,400, and work will be started inside of thirty days. Casper is the "oil city" of Wyoming.

Worland Theaters Consolidate.

Worland, Wyo.—The Family theater and the Elk theater have been consolidated, and photoplays will hereafter be shown at the "New Elk," while the Family theater is being remodeled into a dance hall. Percy Edwards will manage the new show-house.

Name Chosen for New House.

Manager Todd, for the Moore & Greaves Amusement Company, Cheyenne, has announced that the new theater, in the course of construction, will be known as the Princess, after the name of the other houses of the Moore & Greaves Company in Denver, Colorado Springs and Pueblo.

Popular Pictures Shown Past Fortnight.

Douglas Fairbanks, in his latest picture, "Headin' South," pleased Cheyenne theatergoers more perhaps than any other picture here in the past fortnight. Theda Bara in "Cleopatra," which was shown at fifty and seventy-five cent houses, was one of the big attractions of the period, and enjoyed crowded houses during its two-day run. Other pictures which were met with enthusiasm are "The Man Without a Country," Mary Garden in "Thais," "The Sirens of the Sea," Jack Pickford in "Huck and Tom" and Marguerite Clark in "Bab's Matinee Idol."

In Wisconsin.

By F. H. Madison.

Milwaukee, Wis.—Manager Perry, of the Strand theater, made the announcement that he will donate his theater and film, to Milwaukee children any time he has a good children's picture, and W. A. Dudley, assistant business manager of the Evening Wisconsin, will co-operate in arranging a children's party. As a premier they put on "Little Red Riding Hood," which was viewed free by 2,000 school children.

Wisconsin Jottings.

By F. H. Madison.

Kaukauna, Wis.—Clelland & Conkey, who recently purchased the Bijou theater from Nugent Bros., are re-building the structure which was damaged by fire.

Soldiers Grove, Wis.—Chris Halverson has sold his moving picture show to Clarence Errickson, who will operate it three nights a week.

Black River Falls, Wis.—The moving picture theater here has been sold to Fred O. Dressel and J. Boch.

Lancaster, Wis.—Luverne Heil has sold his interest in the moving picture theater here.

San Francisco's Jewel Theater Reopens

Awkward Leasing Arrangements Had Been Cause of House's Closing—Now Brightens with a Second Run of "Birth"—Will Follow Old Policies.

By T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—After having been closed for several days, owing to financial entanglements, the Jewel theater has been reopened, and a special return engagement of "Birth" is being featured. This picture was shown here for two weeks, and the return engagement will probably be for this length of time. It is stated that some of the troubles which led to the recent closing of the theater are due to the fact that the interests which operate the house have not leased it direct from the owners, but through a third party, who installed the seating facilities. Following "Birth" it is planned to conduct the house as formerly, and some minor changes are being considered in the lobby arrangement.

New Exchange Incorporated.

The Sunset Film Corporation, San Francisco, Cal., has been incorporated, with a capital stock of $50,000, by J. L. Lazarus, Leo Weinberger and E. Thrane. Quarters have been fitted up on the second floor of the Eilers' Building, on Market street, and bookings are being made on "Redemption" and on the Hart and Fairbanks reissues. The latter were to have been handled by the All Star Feature Distributors, Inc., but the arrangements to this end failed at the last moment. A branch of the Sunset Film Corporation is to be established at Los Angeles under the management of Ed Watson, formerly with the Triangle in this city, and for a short time with the Fox exchange.

"The Planter" Makes Great Hit.

A decided hit was made at the Kinema theater, Oakland, Cal., with "The Planter," this having been shown for a full week to crowded houses. Manager Emil Kehrlein, noted for his advertising work, quite outdid himself in putting on this production, and set a new record for publicity efforts and for novel stage effects. A booklet, with a cover suggestive of the novel itself and containing pictures of scenes from the film, with descriptive matter and a photograph of the author, was distributed during the week before the presentation, and the local Ad Club and commercial bodies observed "The Planter" luncheons in honor of the author, Herman Whitaker, who makes his home here. The newspaper advertising struck a new note for Oakland, two-color work being used for the first time in connection with moving picture publicity. The services of a singer were used to excellent advantage in the screening of the picture, the song being rendered with the song scene on the screen. As this scene was, of course, far too short a loop was used, making the rendition of the song especially effective.

Federal Film Distributor Visits Coast.

Charles P. Watson of New York, director of distribution for the film division of the committee on public information, is in San Francisco to organize California for the exploitation of moving pictures, showing all phases of war activities. Not only will arrangements be made for the displaying of films, but moving pictures will be made, showing the part California is taking in war work. The films will be sold to the State Council of Defense at cost, and this body is expected to rent them at a price to return the investment.

Mutual Service in Demand.

Mutual service has recently been contracted for by several leading district houses in San Francisco, and is now better placed than ever before. The Wigwam theater has secured a second run for the Mission District, and will start the service with "The Planter." The Verdi theater, in the North Beach district, has also booked this service, and will likewise present "The Planter" as the opening attraction. The Princess theater, in the Fillmore section, will commence Mutual service with this production, and the New Polk theater, on Polk street, will commence showing Mutual pictures on April 1.

Mothers Compile White List.

The Berkeley Federation of Mothers' Clubs is compiling a list of moving picture theaters which display films that come up to their standard of excellence. All parents will be urged to allow their children to attend only such theaters as receive the endorsement of the federation.

Secures World's Right to Film.

George Chamberlain, of the Independent Film Exchange, 124 Golden Gate avenue, San Francisco, has purchased the world's rights, all prints and negatives of the Evans and Sontag picture, "The Folly of a Life of Crime." This picture was made at Oroville, Cal., under the direction of George Sontag, who also took a part in the production. It illustrates the career of the famous bandits, Chris Evans and George Sontag, who terrorized California and other western states in the early nineties. New titles are being made, and following the reassemblying of the picture state rights will be sold, or the attraction booked on a percentage basis.

T. & D. Activities.

A. M. Bowles, formerly an Alameda County exhibitor, has joined the selling force of the Turner & Dahnken exchange at San Francisco, and will assist Manager E. M. Asher both locally and on the road.

The Kinema theater, Fresno, Cal., has contracted to take all of the productions handled by the Turner & Dahnken exchange and the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

The fashion show at the San Francisco and Oakland T. & D. theaters was held during the week that local merchants were observing the spring opening event, and proved to be good drawing cards.

San Francisco Newslets.

Irving Lesser, manager of the Los Angeles branch of the All Star Feature Distributors, Inc., was a recent visitor at the San Francisco headquarters of this concern.

E. H. Emmick, of the Peerless Film Service, San Francisco, recently made a flying trip to the Los Angeles branch.

Joe Goldberg, of the local Bluebird office, San Francisco, is making a road trip, the second one since coming to this city.

H. H. Hicks, manager of the San Francisco office of the Select Pictures Corporation, left recently to cover the territory north of this city by auto.

Glenn Hurst, of Hurst Brothers, Reno, Nev., made a business trip to San Francisco recently.

The Oregon building on the exposition grounds has been opened as a billiard room, moving picture theater and soft-drink parlor for enlisted men.

Sam H. Levin has awarded contracts for the erection of the steel work on the theater to be erected at Clement street and Ninth avenue.

Northern California Briefs.

Sacramento, Cal.—The Grand theater, with a seating capacity of 1,000, has been opened by Parsons & Stoll.

Sacramento, Cal.—N. Thornton has disposed of his interests in the Victory theater and has gone to San Francisco to seek a new location.

Colusa, Cal.—C. C. Kaufman, who conducts the Gem theater, is planning to erect a larger house.

Oakland, Cal.—The Orpheum theater will remain open during the summer season instead of closing, as has been the custom.

Fresno, Cal.—A Robert-Morton Symphonic Orchestral organ will be installed in the Kinema theater.

Des Moines News Letter

By J. L. Shipley, 615 Locust Street, Des Moines, Ia.

Eleanor Betts Visits Des Moines.

DES MOINES, IA., recently entertained a motion picture actress of considerable renown in Eleanor Betts. Miss Betts, who lived here for several years before moving to California, appeared in the role of Pet Bettany in "Empty Pockets," and was also cast for the role of Viru Bowa in another Brenon production, "The Fall of the Romanoffs." Miss Betts visited the office of the A. H. Blank Enterprises, which controls the Brenon features in this territory, and stated that she might return to Des Moines to be present during the showing of the "Fall of the Romanoffs" at the Garden theater sometime in April, in which event she will appear personally at the theater during the run of this picture.

Ted Bryant Back from Camp Dodge.

Oelwein, Ia.—Officials at Camp Dodge decided that Ted Bryant, manager of the Orpheum theater, Oelwein, Ia., would do more actual service by managing his theater than as a candidate in the trenches. He was rejected on account of a slight physical disability, and will return to Oelwein, where he will again take up the management of his theater. Before leaving for home Mr. Bryant shopped at the various exchanges in Des Moines.

Yale Photoplay Buys "Raffles."

Stanley J. Mayer, of the Yale Photoplay Company, Des Moines, Ia., announces that his concern has secured the rights on "Raffles" for this territory, and is making preparations for the spring drive on this subject. Mr. Mayer is also installing a projection room adjacent to his office, which he will use for screening his own productions, and will also rent to the other exchanges around Des Moines at a nominal fee for showing their pictures. It is a plan that film salesmen will be glad to take advantage of.

Manager Skirboll Makes Improvements.

Manager Billie Skirboll, of the local Des Moines Metro exchange, has remodeled his office at 920 Walnut street and also redecorated it so that the premises present a spick and span appearance. Under the new arrangement the visitor is greeted by an information clerk, and passes back to the cashier, the booker, and finally to the manager's office.

Manager Miloslowsky Taking Rest.

Manager J. Miloslowsky, of the Palace and Family theaters, Des Moines, has returned from Rochester, Minn., where he was given a thorough examination by the Mayo Brothers. Mr. Miloslowsky has been in ill health for some time. A complete recovery has been prescribed for him. He has gone to Waukesha, Wis., to take the cure and a thorough rest. During his absence the theaters are under the able management of Mrs. Miloslowsky, who is proving a most successful exhibitor.

Brief Notes of Iowa Exhibitors.

Walter F. Davis, manager of the Herrold theater, which adjoins Camp Dodge, is building a new lobby, which will be one of the most artistic in this section. Although the theater was opened a few months ago Mr. Davis has been making constant improvements, and one of the features of the new lobby will be a fountain and hanging baskets, with growing flowers. Mr. Davis has become very popular with the soldier boys at the camp, and his theater is doing a splendid business.

Fred Schlosser, auditor of the Kansas City office of the Kansas City Feature Film Company, has been spending several days in the Des Moines office of that concern, assisting in the installation of new accounting methods.

The local Jewel office monopolized downtown business during a recent week. "The Man Without a Country" enjoyed a most wonderful five days' run at the Casino, while the Garden theater did an enormous business on "The Price of a Good Time."

Visitors at the Des Moines exchanges during the past week include: Mr. W. S. Mart of the Strand theater, Grinnell; H. P. Marckres, Rex theater, Perry, Ia.; Ed Awe, Strand theater, Ft. Dodge, Ia.; Harry DeBaggio of the Star theater, Colfax, Ia.; J. Ruskin, O. H. Adel, Iowa, and Cecil Whitner of the Lyric theater, Valley Junction, Ia.

The A. H. Blank offices are getting ready for a big campaign on "Tarzan of the Apes" and "The Fall of the Romanoffs," the First National Exhibitors' Circuit attractions, which they will distribute in Iowa, Nebraska and Kansas.

S. S. Schwarz, of the A. H. Blank Enterprises, is the first of the local golf bugs to brave the weather and play his first game. With the snow barely off the ground Mr. Schwarz is out at the Waveland links at least two mornings a week, whaling on the greensward.

A. Reidner Takes Theater at Ottumwa.

A. Reidner has purchased the Orpheum theater at Ottumwa from Mark Angell. Mr. Angell has retired to his farm in Wisconsin.

Portland, Oregon, Censors Renew Activities

Rose City Film Inspectors, After Year of Quiet, Become Aggressive—Police Take Film—Posters and Photographs Under Fire.

By Abraham Nelson, 601 Journal Building, Portland, Ore.

PORTLAND, OREGON.—About one year ago Mayor H. R. Albee turned over the reins of the city givernment to Mayor George L. Baker. The wise men of Portland's theatrical world hoped that the persecutions of the photoplay industry would end and that frenzied censorship as it had been practiced during Mayor Albee's term of office would be a thing of the past. However, recent events denote that the radical "blues," whose activities along ultra-purity lines were matter of common knowledge in the realm of theatricals and moving pictures the nation over, have gotten the ear of our esteemed mayor and he is taking them seriously.

The pro-censorship activities of recent moment date back only a few weeks. The censors had a meeting in the city hall and promulgated a new set of rules. One of these was that war pictures must be put to the censor board and cannot be finally passed by the regular viewers. Accordingly the viewers refused to pass "The German Curse In Russia." They said the vivid scenes of fighting in the trenches and the dead must come out. The board viewed the film and passed it with minor eliminations.

The Liberty theater booked "Empty Pockets." The viewers refused to pass it and the Liberty management arranged for another picture, when the board let it go through with expurgations.

Then at noon on Thursday, March 7, Mrs. E. B. Colwell appeared at the Majestic with a police officer and ordered House Manager H. D. Green to surrender the comedy then showing at the theater, "Her Husband's Wife." The officers took the film to the station and at the time of this writing the film had not been returned to the Fox Film Corporation, although demand had been made therefor. The reason for the seizure of the film was that the eliminations ordered by the censors had not been made. The film had been showing at the Majestic five days and no notice had been given the Majestic management that the censors' orders had not been complied with until the seizure, according to House Manager Green. Manager-owner Parker, although having no actual knowledge of the facts of the case, was arrested for violation of the city ordinance.

Vaudeville May Be Censored.

Mrs. E. B. Colwell, secretary of the censor board, is said to have discussed with certain theatrical managers, the feasibility of censoring vaudeville as well as pictures. It is understood that she desires to have the vaudeville censorship come under the same head as the picture censorship.

At a recent censor board meeting in the City Hall, Mrs. Colwell reported that several viewers had resigned because they "had been subjected to the indignity of viewing films at a big downtown theater in a basement when the janitor's bed had not been made up and was all ruffled."

New Theater Opens at Hood River.

March 7 marked the opening of the new Liberty theater at Hood River, Oregon, by Art Kolstad, owner of the Gem and Electric theaters. The Liberty seats about 800. It was opened with "Joan the Woman" and a tremendous crowd was on hand for the initial performance. The Portland exchanges had a delegation present for the event, among the members being Sol Baum, C. M. Hill and W. L. Loudy, and several others.

Gus Hager Gets Promoted.

Arrangements have been made for the transfer of Gus Hager, the genial manager of the Butte Universal office, to the Denver and Salt Lake territory, where he will succeed Ed Armstrong. C. C. Challew, now manager for Jewel Productions in Butte, will be promoted to manager of the Butte Universal office.

Al Rosenberg to Be in Charge at De Luxe

Al Rosenberg will be in charge of the new Portland exchange for the De Luxe Feature Film Company. He has been in town getting the quarters on Burnside street in shape and purchasing office equipment.

Service Film Company Enlarges.

The Service Film Company has purchased the Theater Supply Company of Seattle and has moved the stock of that concern to Portland. W. A. Stone reports that he will establish a branch in Seattle within sixty days. The Service Film Company recently acquired the exclusive Pacific Northwest agency for the de luxe model motiograph.

Jewel Makes Analysis.

Dean Collins, publicity manager for the Film Supply Company and Jewel Productions, Portland, Ore., has prepared an analysis of the business done by Jewel which shows that in 100 towns, mostly over 5,000 population, Jewel pictures have averaged 4 to 7 bookings.

Spokane Film Men Organize Screen Club

Social Body Formed by People Interested in Picture Productions—Will Have a Special Room at the Transportation Club.

By S. Clark Patchin, E. 1811 Eleventh Avenue, Spokane, Wash.

SPOKANE, WASH.—Spokane's newest social organization—the Screen Club—is composed of persons interested in moving picture productions. It was formed in the dining room of the Spokane Transportation Club, Merrian Building, upon invitation of J. Don Alexander, president of the Titan Film Corporation. Luncheons are held daily except Monday.

Arrangements have been made with the Transportation Club whereby a room, to be known as the Screen Club room, will be reserved. Membership will be open to moving picture actors, directors, architects and others directly connected with picture productions. With three producing companies now organizing in Spokane the club is expected to grow in importance as the staffs of these companies are completed.

Manager Cohn's Liberty Theater Staff.

Manager Sam W. B. Cohn, of the Liberty theater, Spokane, Wash., prides himself upon the service rendered patrons of the theater by his service staff. The staff includes the ushers, all uniformed; also the ticket takers, two colored boys who keep scraps of paper and other matter off the velvet rugs of the Liberty, and last, also least in size, is "Rabbitt," a little colored boy, on the right of the illustration, who is holding the "E" and the period. The cut gives a good idea of the displays and the ticket booth at the lobby entrance of the Liberty. The ushers wear gray uniforms, and the colored boys red ones. Little "Rabbit" has the duty of opening the door for patrons to enter or leave the theater, and recently, when "The Whip" was shown, he was attired in a gay colored jockey suit during the presentation. He always wears the smile shown in the picture, one that Sapolio will not wash off, and is the most widely known colored boy in Spokane.

Spokane Brevities.

Jesse Crawford, who was organist at the Clemmer theater in Spokane for about two years, has been chosen organist at the new $1,000,000 Grauman theater at Los Angeles, Cal., according to word which just reached Spokane.

Sam W. B. Cohn, manager of the Liberty, presented Douglas Fairbanks, in the "Modern Musketeer," to capacity houses. Mr. Cohn scored so well with his war drama, Nazimova in "War Brides," that he has arranged to present the Goldwyn special, "For the Freedom of the World," beginning March 14.

"MY FOUR YEARS IN GERMANY."

Screen Version of Ambassador Gerard's Book Valuable Historical Document That Should Be Seen by Everyone.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

IN "My Four Years in Germany" the screen presents a valuable historical document that recalls with clearness and unflagging interest the causes that prompted Germany to plunge the world into the present conflict. The book, written by Ambassador James W. Gerard, is a statement of facts, and the picture, which has been made from it by Charles A. Logue, who is responsible for the scenario, is not a photoplay, but a fascinating and impressive telling of the blackest pages of history.

Starting with Mr. Gerard's arrival at the German Imperial Court, July 3, 1913, and his presentation to the Kaiser, the picture follows the important events that came under the personal observation of the American representative down to the time when he was given his passports after the declaration of war between Germany and the United States. This resume of the influences that brought America side by side with the Allies should be seen by every one. Its chief merit is its authenticity. It reveals the German emperor and his advisers in their true light—a lot of ruthless savages, whose lust for conquest has made them lower than the beasts.

On its technical side "My Four Years in Germany" is a credit to every one connected with its production. The scenario is skillfully devised, and the mistake has not been made of caricaturing the German officials. They are shown in many unflattering moments of their lives, but all of these actions are public knowledge. The choice of material introduces just enough of the horrors of war, the rape of Belgium and the fighting in the trenches when Uncle Sam's boys reach France to balance the mental picture, and the history of events is brought to a strong finish by showing how the United States answered the Kaiser's slur that Americans would not fight.

"Won't fight, eh?" exclaims one subtitle. And then regiment after regiment comes tramping along, gaily on its way to the front. The body of spectators that doesn't let loose a wild cheer at this incident is not comprised of real Americans.

Two examples of grim humor will arouse great expressions of appreciation. The first incident reveals the German emperor and his chiefs sitting around a table, with a map of the United States in front of them, busily engaged in dividing up this country between Mexico, Japan and Germany, the latter country getting the lion's share. The incident then fades into a scene showing a band of common crooks dividing the spoils of a robbery, the Kaiser and his gang being the thieves. The same incident shows an American soldier in the trenches fighting singlehanded. He disposes of five of the enemy, then starts for number six and gets him, after exclaiming, "I promised Dad I'd get half-a-dozen!" William Nigh has directed the picture excellently and plays a small part with equal skill.

The cast is up to all requirements. It is distributed as follows: Ambassador Gerard, Halbert Brown; Sir Edward Goschen, Williard Dashiell; Kaiser Wilhelm II, Louis Dean; Crown Prince, Earl Schenck; Von Hindenburg, George Riddell; Prince Henry, Frank Stone; Bethmann-Hollweg, Karl Dane; Foreign Minister von Jagow, Fred Hern; Zimmermann, Percy Standing; Grand Admiral von Tirpitz, William Bittner; von Falkenhayn, Arthur C. Duvel; Aimee Delaporte, Ann Dearing. Assistant director, Clifford P. Saum; cameraman, Rail B. Schellinger; technical director, John D. Schulze. The picture is presented by the "My Four Four Years in Germany" Company.

"MORAL SUICIDE."

Graphic Film Shows Seven-Reel Production on Problem of Evil—Some Tremendous Situations.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THERE is a worth-while story in Ivan Abramson's recent picture, "Moral Suicide," released in seven reels by the Graphic Film Corporation; but it is hindered from being fully effective by a long and confused introduction, and most of all by the use of trivial and unimportant things that at times almost excite a smile. However, these melodramatic touches and incidents that carry what may be termed a popular appeal make it an easy picture to watch. That it is entertaining after the first reel, is sure, and it will probably win a good measure of popularity.

The story, dealing with twilight experiences and the morbid disintegration of two characters, is quite sane and wholesome in its own viewpoint. There is nothing in it to give offense. The interesting thing about the story is that the father, ably played by John Mason, who commits moral suicide in his dotage by marrying an adventuress (pictured with intelligence and discretion by Leah Baird), brings down to destruction with him a weak-minded son. The first shows a senile will growing flabby through self-indulgence and the other a will at best struggling between reality and dreams and needing help left to stumble into the pit of complete madness. The relationship between the adventuress and this boy is the most interesting side-light in the picture and is a piece of very effective screen work. There is, strange to relate, a happy ending to all this.

The cast includes Claire Whitney, Alan Hale, Sydney Mason, Hazel Washburn, Jack McLean, William Lampe and Annie Luther. They all do commendable work without especially brilliant moments or noticeable failure, except that Anna Luther makes the daughter of the moral suicide indulge in too monotonous tears. It gets over as pettish rather than as sorrowful, because it wholly lacks the romantic touch and excites no pity.

"A PAIR OF SIXES."

Merry Farce-Comedy by Essanay in Which Taylor Holmes and Excellent Cast of Funmakers Delight.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

ALMOST promising successor to "Ruggles of Red Gap" is "A Pair of Sixes," also by Essanay. Founded on Edward Peple's farce of the same name, "A Pair of Sixes" in films is not so broad as the play in farcical types, and the nearer approach to normal action makes the characters much more acceptable as seen on the screen.

The plot of this farce-comedy is strikingly original; or, at least, it so appeals to me. T. John Boggs (Taylor Holmes) and George B. Nettleton (Robert Conness) are partners in the Eureka Digestive Pill Company, a very prosperous concern. But the partners are always pulling in opposite directions, because of jealousy. The crisis finally comes when a prominent prospective customer declines to do business with "a firm of maniacs." It is then that the firm's lawyer suggests a way out by dealing each a hand of poker, the winner to run the business for a year and the loser to be his servant for that period. The man doomed to act as servant must serve with respect, each infraction of the rule to cost him $100. Furthermore, should either party or his wife reveal the nature of the agreement he is to be fined $5,000. The cards are dealt, the discards are made and at the close Nettleton is winner with a pair of sixes.

Poor Boggs, as butler at the Nettleton home, is in most humiliating plight, especially as his fiancee, Florence Cole (Alice Mann), has been invited by Nettleton to his home. Florence and Mrs. Nettleton (Edna Phillips Holmes) are very dear friends, and when all the conditions of the agreement are borne in mind, especially that of strict secrecy, under a penalty of $5,000, it can be seen that Boggs is very much of a martyr. This martyrdom is made still more acute by the love which he stirs in the breast of Coddies (Maude Eburne), maid of all work in the Nettleton household, and Boggs' suffering in this respect causes the heartiest merriment in the entire six parts of the production.

It is almost needless to say that the T. Boggs Johns of Taylor Holmes causes continuous merriment when he holds the screen. In the love passages with Coddles it is a toss-up whether the latter or Boggs is the more mirthful. Maude Eburne has left a landmark in her impersonation of Coddles, her characterization being a perfect study of a most peculiar, whimsical type.

Robert Conness as Nettleton, Alice Mann as Florence Cole and Edna Phillips Holmes as Mrs. Nettleton contribute their full share to the merriment of the production.

L. C. Windom is to be complimented for fine direction and Charles J. McGuirk for his snappy adaptation.

The release will be made April 1 through the George Kleine System.

"THE WAY OUT."

Carlyle Blackwell and June Elvidge in World International Romance of Fair Quality.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

FINDING "The Way Out" in the five-part World international romance of that name does not lead the spectator through any new paths; but Jack O'Mara, the author of the story, manages to sustain the interest for those who are satisfied not to question the motives of the picture too closely. The romance starts in the United States when Robert Barr, a newspaper writer, falls in love with Alice Thornton, the daughter of a socially ambitious woman, who is clever enough not to openly oppose the match. Discovering that her husband, while on a trip to France, contracted a bigamous marriage and that he left a daughter, Mrs. Thornton sees a way out of her difficulty.

Marcelle, the half-sister, who is sent to America, is taken to Barr by Mrs. Thornton, and the young man is told her story. He is also asked not to let Alice know the facts in the case, as she reverences her father's memory. Barr promises, and a position is found for Marcelle. While trying to make things pleasant for his sweetheart's sister the newspaper man compromises himself innocently, but Alice believes the worst of him. The match is broken off, and Alice sails for France with her mother. Here the heroine meets Count de Jouiville and marries him. Barr and Marcelle also arrive in France. The game of cross purposes is finally straightened out by the Count dying from a wound received in battle after being carried from "No Man's Land" by Barr, who had joined the American Ambulance Corps. Matters are explained to Alice, and she and Barr are married.

The scenario was made by Clara S. Beranger, and the production directed by George Kelson. Jacques Monteran was the cameraman. The atmosphere is always reasonably well sustained.

The acting is the best feature of the picture. June Elvidge plays Alice Thornton with all the attractiveness demanded by the character, and Carlyle Blackwell is a good looking and earnest Robert Barr. John Bowers as the Count, Muriel Ostriche as Marcelle, Kate Lester as Mrs. Thornton, Jack Drumier as La Roche and Marie Pagano as Claudine are the other members of the cast.

"WILD YOUTH."

Five-Part Screen Version of Parker Novel Produced By Blackton Reveals Strong Story.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

SIR GILBERT PARKER'S brain children are generally worth knowing. The titled novelist creates characters that are alive and constructs his plot in a straight line. "Wild Youth," a five-part Paramount screen version of Parker's story of that name, is no exception. Produced under the supervision of J. Stuart Blackton, with Louise Huff, Theodore Roberts and Jack Mulhall in the leading parts, the picture is an interesting reflex of human existence, and the doings of its characters are consistent with what is known among the experts as correct motivation.

No unnecessary complications—that sure indication of a weak plot—interfere with the steady march of events, so far as the story proper is concerned. The director has thought fit to run a thin stream of allegory through the picture, by showing a classic youth and a flock of Greek maidens dancing in a leafy glade of a flower-bedecked meadow at certain intervals. This is to typify the spirit of Youth. Some persons will find the device pleasing; others will consider it out of place in a realistic drama such as "Wild Youth."

The story is simple but tense. Joel Mazarine, a morose and violent old man, has married a girl young enough to be his daughter. Louise, his wife, has been forced into the match, and the pair have grown to hate each other. The arrival of Orlando Guise and his mother in the neighborhood supplies the third member of the familiar triangle. Orlando and Louise are attracted by the equality in their ages, and old Joel's jealousy prompts him to do the very things that bring the two young people nearer together. Orlando is accused by the old man of having stolen his wife, when the young fellow does not know she had left her husband. He finds her and she goes back to Joel. Orlando has threatened the old man for his treatment of Louise, and when Joel is found strangled to death the young fellow is accused of the murder. A Chinese servant is the real culprit, a desire to serve Louise and also to right his own wrongs being at the bottom of the crime.

It is in the working out of the theme that the author discloses his knowledge of life and his familiarity with the art of the story teller. George H. Melford, who directed the picture, has accomplished his task with understanding, and has had the help of an unusually able cast. Louise Huff as Louise Mazarine, Theodore Roberts as Joel Mazarine, Jack Mulhall as Orlando Guise, James Cruze as Li Choo and Adele Farrington as Mrs. Guise are the principals. Paul Perry was the cameraman.

"AN AMERICAN LIVE WIRE."

Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature Taken From O. Henry Story Has Complicated Plot.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

AN O. Henry story is sure to contain a surprise. The Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, "An American Live Wire," has one—the plot is not up to the O. Henry standard. There is too much shifting of interest, and the situations do not always ring true. The author starts things going in the United States, but soon sends his hero to South America, where the American live wire is in great danger of losing all his electrical force of character.

Willard Geddie, having been told by the mother of the girl he admires that she wants her daughter to marry a wealthy man, accepts a job as consul at Coralio and imagines he is falling in love with a native of the country, a Spanish maiden whose father was born in Ireland.

Willard allows matters to drift along until stirred into action by the arrival of his old sweetheart in that part of the world and the attempt of the president of the country to decamp with all the cash in the treasury and an American opera singer.

The absconding president of an American insurance company, accompanied by his daughter and followed by a detective, is as anxious to get into the country as the other swindler is to get out of it. The detective gets the two thieves mixed, arrests the South American president and smuggles him, the stolen money and the vocal person out of the country and lands his capture just where the animated portion of it wants to go—in the United States. The other absconder commits suicide. Willard takes the insurance company's money back to its owners and marries his first love.

Earle Williams plays Willard Geddie. The part has no strong situations, Geddie's affairs being pushed into the background by the introduction of the rival absconders. The actor makes the most of his opportunities. Grace Darmond, Hal Clements, Miss Toner, Orral Humphries, Margaret Bennett and Malcolm Blevins are members of an adequate support. Tom Mills directed the picture. Aside from the yacht episodes, the production is well made.

"THE BELL BOY."

Fatty Arbuckle in Two-Part Hilarious Acrobatic Comedy Released By Paramount.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

IT takes two reels to hold the Paramount-Arbuckle comedy, "The Bell Boy," but no one will realize this from watching the picture. Fatty Arbuckle and his two limber assistants, Buster Keaton and Al St. John, have a new helper in keeping things moving, a big white horse that furnishes the motive power for an ancient street car and the hotel elevator. The four-footed comedian also takes part in building up the lively and laughable finish.

Located in the village of Ouchgosh, most of the action centers around the Elkhead Hotel, the guests at that hostelry being treated to more excitement in ten minutes than they would find in a New York hotel in ten days. The arrival of a pretty manicurist turns the entire hotel force into rivals for her favor.

After an unbroken string of amusing stunts done with the neatness and dispatch that always characterize an Arbuckle comedy, Fatty hits upon a plan to win the lady and cover himself with glory. He persuades his rivals to pretend to rob the local bank and arranges to catch them in the act. Fate takes a hand, however, and gives a dash of realism to the situation that more than doubles Fatty's portion of renown. A gang of honest-to-goodness burglars break into the bank ahead of the fake thieves, and Fatty and his assistants round them up and reap a substantial reward.

Fatty Arbuckle is a living example of how to be nimble though fat, and his fertility of invention supplies him with the right piece of business for every situation. Al St. John as the hotel clerk, Buster Keaton as the assistant bell boy and Alice Lake as the manicurist are a trio whose acting ability is equaled only by their disregard of life and limb.

"THIEVES' GOLD."

Harry Carey Again Appears in Familiar Universal Role of "Cheyenne Harry."

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

A CHARACTERISTIC Western story has been supplied for this new "Cheyenne Harry" episode, which is adapted from a tale by Frederick B. Bechdolt. It provides Harry Carey with a series of situations that will appeal to his admirers. He is supported by a pleasing cast. Vester Pegg appears as Curt Simons, an outlaw, who once more lures Harry from the straight path and gets him into fresh difficulties. Molly Malone is sweet and attractive in the role of the girl, as usual. Others who appear are John Cook, L. M. Wells, Harry Tenbrooke and Martha Mattox.

The story opens with Harry in charge of a ranch belonging to a relative of the girl, Alice Norris. He is anxious to get out and see more of life and finally consents to go with his friend, Curt, to Douglas, Ariz. Curt has recently come, as a refugee, from across the Mexican border, where he was sentenced to be shot. Curt prevails upon Harry to join him in stealing some gold, destined for certain parties in Mexico. They hold up the messengers and get the gold, but Harry breaks with Curt when he finds the theft has been committed in Arizona instead of Mexico, as he thought. Harry is arrested and later pardoned, and he then shoots Curt.

There is the usual love story. Harry rescues the girl from a runaway, but she refuses to wed him when she believes him guilty of the holdup. Later events induce her to change her mind. The Western settings are attractive all through this number.

"THE WINE GIRL."

Carmel Myers Featured in Bluebird, with Attractive Southern California Locale.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

HARVEY GATES and Stuart Paton wrote and directed this number, the story being located for the most part at a vineyard, some thirty miles from San Francisco. Later scenes occur in the city itself. The narrative is quite obvious in certain respects, and for this reason lacks any particular suspense. It has, however, a neat surprise at the close, which brings it up to a strong finish.

The characterizations are generally pleasing. Carmel Myers is attractive, as usual, in the role of the Italian girl, Bona. Her father, Andrea, the owner of the rich vineyard, is portrayed by Rex de Roselli, who plays the part with quiet conviction. A. E. Warren, as Chico, member of an Italian society, passes without question in make-up and costume, and handles his role well. Kenneth Harlan makes an agreeable hero, and Katherine Kirkwood plays the mother acceptably.

The vineyard settings are attractive, and photographed with the smooth, even effect for which the Bluebirds are famous. The story would have stood a more definite pull upon the interest through the opening reels, and there seemed to be many opportunities for stronger dramatic development. The love affair was long in maturing, and was handled without any particular degree of conviction when it came.

The plot concerns an American youth who falls in love with the daughter of an Italian. His rival, Chico, blackmails the girl's father, and tries vainly to get the girl. The father is supposed to be murdered, but turns up unexpectedly at the close.

TRIANGLE PRODUCTIONS.

"Faith Endurin'," Five-Part Western Featuring Roy Stewart, and "The Answer," Seven-Part Program Picture, with Alma Rubens.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

"Faith Endurin'."

O. HENRY at his best might have laid out the plot of "Faith Endurin'," a five-part Triangle western photoplay fashioned from a story by Kenneth B. Clarke and featuring Roy Stewart. The picture gives the impression that its different events are the result of cause and effect and nothing has been inserted because the author couldn't think of anything better. To use a localism, the spectator seems to be "settin' in" at a series of real happenings, and his interest in them is greatly heightened in consequence. Added to this is a skillful blending of romance, daring, quick wit and humor. Good acting and direction complete a combination that puts "Faith Endurin'" among the "best sellers" of the screen.

Jeff Flagg and his chum, Jim Lee, begin their friendship when Jim rescues Jeff from two thieves, who are trying to make him give them the combination of the safe in a railroad station. The robbers have him bound and are burning his arm in order to make him speak. Jeff carries the scar until supplied with another one by his partner. Having fallen in love with a pretty girl and being anxious to save her brother from a charge of murder, Jeff arranges things so that suspicion points to him. He then runs away. Posters are sent out describing him, the chief mark of identification being the scar on his arm. He arrives in the town where Jim is sheriff. Neither of the men show any signs of recognizing the other. When a third party charges Jeff with being the fugitive, Jim draws his revolver and shoots his friend in the arm, completely destroying the telltale scar.

There are other well-thought-out situations in the story, and the hero comes to a most satisfactory understanding with his sweetheart, Roy Stewart has the personality and artistic resource to make Jeff an upstanding, straightforward human whose grit and quiet humor are a continual joy. W. A. Jefferies is as admirable a foil as Jim, and Fritzi Ridgway as the girl is a good and sufficient reason for Jim's infatuation for her. Joe Bennett, Edward Brady, Walter Perkins, Graham Pette and Walter Perry complete the cast. Cliff Smith more than holds up his end of the work and has given the picture a number of striking long shots. Photographed by Steve Rounds.

"The Answer."

The future of "The Answer" is problematic. This seven-part Triangle picture, written by E. Magnus Ingleton and directed by E. Mason Hopper, is in a class by itself. It scorns all laws of dramatic construction and the plot meanders around like the continuity of an English three-volume novel. Its author is evidently more concerned in putting over his views on the social unrest question than in telling an entertaining story. There is too much explanation and too little action and the denouement is not at all convincing.

Another drawback to the story is its characters; most of them are not normal human beings and have distorted views of right and wrong. Under such conditions anything like an intelligent presentation of the merits of Socialism is out of the question.

The human interest centers in a young girl from the submerged tenth who marries a man whose one desire is to help the downtrodden. A fanatical friend helps him to establish a home for the unfortunate, and a wealthy young woman becomes interested in the work.

Warfield and his wife go to England to obtain possession of a large estate left by the man's mother. Whereupon Mrs. Warfield succumbs to the lure of luxury and refuses to sanction her husband's philanthropic desire to dispose of his inheritance and turn the money over to his socialistic work in America. Warfield is about to return without his wife, when the fanatical friend arrives on the scene, learns how matters are and puts an improbable dramatic punch into the proceedings by killing Mrs. Warfield and jumping off a London bridge. Warfield returns to the United States and marries the young woman who has always been used to wealth.

The details of production have not been neglected, and the picture is well acted. Alma Rubens has but little to do as Lorraine Van Allen. Claire Anderson as Goldie Shepard, Joe King as John Warfield, Francis MacDonald as Guido Garcia, and Dean Hersholt as Goldie's father are the other members of the cast. A. Nagy was the photographer.

"ALL FUR HER."

Twede-Dan Comedy by the Jester Company—Fair Specimen of Famous Farce Comedian's Work.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE fresh element in the usual farce comedy of the day is hard to define, and it isn't because there is no fresh element, for many of them are distinctly entertaining and have a good deal of freshness. The new Twede-Dan comedy by the Jester Company was decidedly amusing to this reviewer, who had for a long time, so it chanced, seen no picture by the famous funny player who used to delight us years ago under the comical nom de theater of Tweedle Dum.

The entertainment doesn't come wholly from the player, variously amusing as he is, for I have seen during the past ten years more than one offering by him that was no laughmaker chiefly for the reason that it lacked a good scenario. The scheme of this picture, "All Fur Her," gives the player a good chance to make laughs, yet at first glance it seems built much like other comics that have not got over. It has much of the usual swat-him-with-a-broom stuff that may get across in some places, yet can hardly be expected to make a reviewer "bust himself."

Beside these things the picture has scenes of the simplest and most elemental humor that please because they are pointed and really mean something. How Twede's wife robs his pockets and his experience at the fur counter on bargain day are among the best of these. The scene in the barroom, too, has meaning, as also has the scene around the pool table. There are many other things with a point found in this film, and as ofter happens in farce comedies of the day, there are things that seem quite pointless. The reviewer has given up wondering why people like these things. That many do is true, but I believe that even though some people like then few really prefer them. I have watched where the best laughs come and would confidently vote for the more pointed comedy incidents. This is somewhat aside from this picture, which will be deservedly a popular offering.

"THE CURSE OF IKU."

Strong Japanese-American Subject, in Seven Reels, Distributed by Kleine.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS subject, of Essanay make, is big with atmosphere and story interest. It exerts a strong appeal and reveals some interesting sidelights on Japanese home life and customs. A large and thoroughly competent cast has been employed, more than half of which are capable Japanese performers. The settings include street and home scenes in Japan and exquisite glimpses of Japanese gardens.

Frank Borzage plays a double role, the first that of Allan Carroll, who was rescued from drowning on the rugged shores of Japan. These scenes occur fifty years ago. Later he appears as the grandson, Allan Carroll III. O Mio San is played by that remarkable little Japanese performer, Tsuru Aoki. She appears first as a girl in Japan, who falls in love with Allan Carroll, whom she calls her "White God," since her first vision of him is caught while he is taking a bath. The third principal is Thomas Kirihsia, whose rendering of the Japanese villain, Iku, is a noteworthy performance.

The plot is an unusually absorbing one. The first Allan Carroll barely escapes with his life after being entertained in Japan in one of the forbidden cities. The original Iku has built up a false story to the effect that he is the father of O Mio San's child. Later, in America, Allan Carroll III and Iku III meet. The latter kidnaps an American girl to whom Carroll is engaged, and takes her to Japan. Carroll follows and eventually recovers the girl, after several tragical occurrences.

Blair Coan directed this unusual subject.

"BY RIGHT OF PURCHASE."

Norma Talmadge Has Congenial Role in Five-Part Select Picture Presented by Joseph M. Schenck.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

A BRIDAL trip on a yacht that has an abrupt ending is the big situation in "By Right of Purchase," a five-part Select Photoplay, starring Norma Talmadge. The story is interesting and the spectator will be anxious to learn the outcome of a marriage where the husband knows that his wife does not love him and he has asked for three years in which to win her affection. At the end of that time, if she so elects, the wife is to have her freedom restored to her. In the meantime the couple are merely to live as friends.

Margot Hughes, whose mother is socially ambitious and anxious to have her daughter make a wealthy marriage, consents to become the wife of Chadwick Himes, although she is in love with Dick Derwent. Her first night on board her husband's yacht, Margot locks herself in her own stateroom, but a severe storm frightens her so that she opens the door into Himes' stateroom and begs him not to leave her while the tempest without rages. Finding that the elements are not the only tempests beyond his control, he orders the ship back to port. The couple live most unhappily until Margot discovers that Derwent is a worthless young scamp. She then commences to realize that her husband is much the better man. But he has given up all hope of winning her. Believing that she has left him for good, Himes boards his yacht and starts on a long and lonely cruise. That night he goes into his wife's stateroom and finds her waiting to tell him she knows her own heart at last.

The production does its share in bringing out the points of the story. It was directed by Charles Miller. Norma Talmadge finds the role of Margot a congenial one. She gives the character the necessary touch of sincerity and refinement. Eugene O'Brien as Chadwick Himes, Ida Darling as Mrs. Hughes, William Courtleigh, Jr., as Dick Derwent, Charles Wellsley as Donald Nugent and Florence B. Billings as Madge Sears furnish a superior grade of support.

"THE BRASS CHECK."

Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne in Seven-Part Detective Story Produced by Metro.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE title of the seven-part Metro production "The Brass Check" relates to a baggage check which is the means of turning the son of a powerful trust magnate into an amateur detective and sending him on the search for a young inventor who has been shut up in a private asylum because he will not turn over an invention to the trust. The inventor's sister is also instrumental in effecting his rescue, and this brings her in contact with the wealthy amateur detective.

Mutual attraction terminates in a wedding, and everything is straightened out to the satisfaction of all parties concerned. The sister gets into the asylum as a nurse and her future husband manages the same thing by passing himself off as a chauffeur, after he is mistaken for an escaped lunatic from another asylum and dragged inside by four husky keepers.

Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne are the stars of "The Brass Check." As the amateur detective the male featured player appears in his favorite role of a vigorous son of wealth who is always ready to tackle any sort of odds—the bigger the better—and to lend a humorous touch to the proceedings by his coolness and nerve in moments of danger. Beverly Bayne acts the inventor's sister with her usual success in the role of a high-spirited young girl, and the rest of the cast is satisfactory.

The production is adequate. The exteriors are all winter scenes, many of them full of quiet beauty.

"LOVE ME."

Dorothy Dalton in Paramount Picture Acts Sorely-Tried Young Wife.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

WRITTEN by C. Gardner Sullivan, "Love Me," a five-part Paramount Production, supervised by Thomas H. Ince, is a careful working over of well-tried material. As Maida Madison, a western girl, who marries a wealthy young chap from the east, Dorothy Dalton plays an unsophisticated young wife who is sorely tried by her husband's family, until she saves her sister-in-law from disgrace at the risk of her own reputation. The woman who goes to a man's apartments late at night to shield another woman from the consequences of folly, or worse, is a familiar figure in stage and screen fiction, but there is no denying the effectiveness of the situation.

The story is coherently told and moves along at reasonable speed until near the finish. Here the action is too deliberate and can easily be anticipated by the spectator.

"Love Me" makes a novel start. It opens in a western mining town, and the heroine is introduced as a civil engineer in charge of construction work. Clad in a mannish, but becoming, get-up, Maida Madison is bossing the job to every one's satisfaction when Gordon Appleby, a member of an exclusive Philadelphia family, arrives from the east. He also is an engineer, and his admiration for his fellow-worker ripens into love. The two are married and return to Philadelphia. Here the breezy style of the young wife shocks her new relatives, and they betray themselves as a set of snobs. Gordon stands by his wife, however, and she wins them all over by making the above-mentioned rescue of the family honor.

Dorothy Dalton is hardly the type for so ingenious a heroine, but acts with sincerity, her own charm of person standing her in good stead. Jack Holt as Gordon Appleby, William Conklin as Rupert Fenton, Dorcas Mathews as Eunice, Melbourne MacDowell as Grant Appleby, Elinor Hancock as Mrs. Appleby and Robert McKim as Mortimer Appleby give the star excellent support. Roy William Neill directed the picture, and John Stumar was the cameraman.

One Judge Brown Story and Three O. Henry Adaptations.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

"The Rathskeller and the Rose."

WHILE "The Rathskeller and the Rose," a two reel Broadway Star Feature, is interesting it lacks the appeal characteristic of the majority of O. Henry's stories. A country girl runs away to town, and achieves success as an actress. A struggling actor desiring a part in her company visits her home town, absorbs local color, and on his return brings a faded rose from the girl's mother, and poses as one of her country neighbors with such success that the girl cancels all engagements and returns home. Then the actor decides to follow her. Adele De Garde is attractive as the girl, Posie Boggs, and Evart Overton as the actor. The remainder of the cast consists of Arthur Donaldson, William Cross, Jr., and Kate Jepson.

"By Injunction."

This two-reel O. Henry tells the story of a wanderer who stops at a ranch. He makes good, marries the owner's daughter, and is sent to the city to dispose of some cattle. Urged by the villainous foreman he gambles and loses the money. He then goes West and strikes it rich in mining. Deciding to bring happiness to children at Christmas he sends some friends to round up a number of little ones. They are unsuccessful, and in desperation kidnap a particularly bad boy who proves to be the hero's own son. Then a reconciliation takes place between his father and mother. Chet Ryan gives a good performance of the man, Buck Lumsden, and Patricia Palmer is appealing as the neglected wife, while W. L. Rodgers is well cast as the villain. The boy also does his work well. From a standpoint of interest and appeal it is hardly up to the standard of other issues of this series, although the action is brisk, and the finish is in the nature of a surprise.

"The Song and the Sergeant."

A vaudeville act which falls flat after starting off with great promise furnishes the theme for this two-reel O. Henry story. No one is able to ascertain the cause, and after the cast creates so much disturbance in a restaurant that they are arrested and taken before the police sergeant his judicious questions enable the police matron to fathom the mystery; that is, that the situation where the star always breaks down and weeps is due to the fact that the leading man is in love with her, and is trying to show it in his singing. The story is lighter, and, while well acted, is not very interesting or convincing, and lacks the usual appeal of this series. Alice Terry appears as the girl, Stanley Dunn as her lover, Templer Sax as the author, Joseph Donahue as the sergeant, and Jane Jennings as the police matron.

"Thief or Angel."

A considerable portion of this Judge Brown story is taken up with what is virtually pure milk propaganda, and the director appears inclined to stress this to the detriment of the story, which deals with a situation where a girl of the tenements, finding that she will no longer be able to get pure milk free for her neighbor's children, starts a "bottle gang" and steals the milk from more fortunate people. On being brought before the judge all is explained, and she is allowed to go free. Ruth Hampton gives an excellent characterization of the tough boy, but the boy who is cast as her brother is inclined to overact his part. Charles Richards appears as the settlement doctor, and W. T. Horn as the judge.

"WHEN A MAN'S MARRIED."

S. Drews Score Again in Metro Comedy Presenting Interesting Period in the Life of the Minors.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

ONE of the best of the Metro-Drew comedies in which a period of the early married life of Polly and Henry Minor reveals an amusing situation that will no doubt be recognized in a familiar way by many in the audiences which will view the picture.

As the story runs, Henry Minor, after marriage, makes a desperate effort to play the role of the model husband who stays at home every evening. Finally the fireside ties begin to weary Henry, and he becomes exceedingly uneasy. One day, invited by his old pals to come back and be one of them at the club, he calls up Polly and tells her that he will be detained downtown on business. Meanwhile, Polly is flashed on the screen in the act of eulogizing Henry and his virtues.

The amusing part of the situation reveals the fact that Henry, finding himself unutterably miserable in his old haunts, and wondering why Polly's voice over the 'phone sounded so cheerful when he told her that he would not be home early, makes his escape. He arrives home in a repentant mood, which gives the story a very amusing ending.

"THE GIRL AND THE JUDGE."

Fine Adaptation of Clyde Fitch Play for Mutual Features Olive Tell.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

A GOOD situation is presented in the former Frohman stage success, "The Girl and the Judge," by Clyde Fitch. John B. O'Brien has staged the production with Olive Tell in the feminine lead and David Powell playing opposite her. Kleptomania is the problem of the play, which, however, is not dealt with as a problem, but as the pivotal point of the story's romance. The picture presents the human side of one of life's difficult situations which are brought about through the afflictions of others. It is a nicely set, well-dressed production, in which a fine dramatic interpretation of the subject is given. Olive Tell plays a role somewhat different from any in which we have seen her, and interprets the character of the unfortunate daughter of wealth whose mother is a kleptomaniac in a charming and realistic manner.

As the story runs the young daughter of the Stantons becomes engaged to a young man of wealth who is considered a fine catch. A newspaper expose of the fact that Mrs. Stanton has been found shoplifting reveals the true nature of her daughter's fiance, who promptly breaks off his engagement with the girl. A situation arises after Mr. Stanton has been forced into bankruptcy in which the girl, believing her mother to have again been guilty of stealing, tries to shield her by pretending that she is the thief. The close of the story shows her betrothed to the judge who tries her case and her mother exonerated from the supposed theft.

General Film Company.

RATHSKELLER AND THE ROSE (Broadway Star Features).—Adele De Garde and Evart Overton are the leading players in this two-reel offering based on a story by O. Henry. It is interestingly told, and deals with a country girl who, after making a hit on the stage, is so affected by the tale told by an actor posing as a former neighbor in order to get a job in her company that she goes back home, and he, of course, follows. Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

BY INJUNCTION (Broadway Star Features).—Chet Ryan plays the lead in this two-reel O. Henry story, which, from a standpoint of interest and appeal, is not up to the standard of this series. As Buck Lumsden, he leaves his wife after losing her father's money at cards, makes good, and, in trying to bring happiness to some children at Christmas, a boy is forcibly brought to the celebration, and proves to be his own son. Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

CHECK YOUR HAT, SIR? (Essanay).—In this comedy, which is the best of the recent series, Don Barclay is featured, and there are a number of laughable situations in a restaurant, particularly a dance with a fat woman, and a good scene dealing with the sugar scarcity. It is of the knock-about type, and should please the average audience.

THIEF OR ANGEL (Judge Brown Story).—This two-reel picture deals to a large extent with the necessity of pure milk for babies, and is somewhat lacking in the human touches of boyhood which characterize the earlier Judge Brown stories; but it gives Ruth Hampton opportunities for good characterization as a tough boy. Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

THE WINE GIRL, March 25.—A five-reel subject, written by Harvey Gates and directed by Stuart Paton. Carmel Myers, Rex de Roselli, E. A. Warren, Kenneth Harlan and Katherine Kirkwood are in the cast. The story concerns an American youth who falls in love with the daughter of an Italian vineyard owner. His rival is the leader of a band of Italian blackmailers. The number lacks dramatic strength, but has a surprise finish and is well presented. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

Famous Players-Lasky Corp.

LOVE ME, March 18.—Dorothy Dalton is the star of this five-part picture, written by C. Gardner Sullivan and produced under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince. A western girl marries a wealthy young chap from the east and his family make her life miserable until she saves her sister-in-law from disgrace. Fairly interesting. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

WILD YOUTH, March 18.—Taken from a story by Sir Gilbert Parker and featuring Louise Huff and Theodore Roberts, this five-part picture has a strong plot and is excellently acted. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

THOSE ATHLETIC GIRLS (Paramount-Sennett), March 24.—Louise Fazenda as the comic janitoress of a girls' college takes part in a wild and wonderful baseball match, the two nines being composed of the Sennett girls and a remarkable hound. Other stunts of an amusing nature occur at frequent intervals. F. B. Cooper, Glen Cavender, Ethel Teare and Laura LaVarnie are useful members of the cast. The finish is a scream.

THE BELL BOY (Paramount-Arbuckle Comedy).—Fatty Arbuckle, assisted by Buster Keaton and Al. St. John, keep up an uninterrupted fire of fun through this two-part comedy. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

Graphic Film Corporation.

MORAL SUICIDE (Graphic Film Corp.).—An Ivan Abrahamson picture in seven reels. It doesn't stick closely to its central story and has a confused introduction. Story has many excellent situations and is exceedingly well played for the most part. It will probably prove amply popular, for it has been built for the average spectator and has a happy end that is surely out of keeping with the real story. We review it at more length elsewhere in this issue.

Greater Vitagraph, Inc.

AN AMERICAN LIVE WIRE, March 18.—An O. Henry story, this five-part picture divides its scenes between Central America and the United States. The plot is melodramatic. Earle Williams and Grace Darmond head the cast. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Jester Comedy Company.

ALL FUR HER (Jester Comedy).—A two-reel Twede-Dan comic picture with much good stuff in it, though it is of the usual rough farce and knock-about kind of picture. It will make laughter and is sure to be welcome with the many. We notice it at more length elsewhere.

George Kleine System.

A PAIR OF SIXES (Essanay), April 1.—This production can be commended as a highly enjoyable farce-comedy. Taylor Holmes and Maude Eburne are the leading laughmakers, and other strong contributors are Robert Conness, Alice Mann and Edna Phillips Holmes.

THE CURSE OF IKU (Essanay).—A strong seven-reel subject, produced by Blair Coan, with Frank Borzage, Tsuru Oaki and Thomas Kirihsia in the leading parts. The story is an absorbing one, enacted by Japanese and American players. The settings, most of which are in Japan, are delightful. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

BRONCHO BILLY'S CLOSE CALL (Essanay).—A comedy number, featuring G. M. Anderson, Marguerite Clayton and others. The story is simple but laughable. Broncho Billy marries the girl and later a rumor gets about that she is entertaining another man. The camp is thrown into an uproar, but it develops that the man is only her brother.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

THE BRASS CHECK, March 11.—Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne are the leading players in this five-part picture, which shows the efforts of an amateur detective to help the brother of the girl he loves. There are a number of handsome winter scenes. The picture is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

A WOMAN'S PERFIDY (Pathe), March 24.—Episode No. 3 of "The House of Hate." The "Hooded Terror" breaks out twice in this number, in the home of Pearl Waldon, in the latter instance threatening Pearl's life and also killing a man. Naomi Waldon, Pearl's cousin, seeks to interfere in the love affair between Pearl and Gresham. She is successful in this and causes an estrangement. The instalment closes with Gresham under suspicion of being the "Hooded Terror." A well-constructed and intensely interesting number.

LET'S GO (Rolin-Pathe), March 24.—A one-reel comic, featuring Harold Lloyd, Harry Pollard and Bebe Daniels. There is not much plot to this, but it is filled with laughable small business. Harold appears as a flirtatious clerk at a soda fountain, who falls in love with a girl whose father opposes the match. This has a number of laughable moments.

PESTS OF OUR FRUIT TREES (Pathe), March 24.—A tinted half-reel which has instructive as well as entertainment value. It gives close-up studies of various members of the caterpillar family which feed upon the leaves of fruit trees. The web nests made by these creatures are also shown.

ARACHON (Pathe), March 24.—On same reel with above, another scenic of the "Picturesque France" series. This, also in tints, gives numerous views taken at the famous French summer resort, with a number of scenes taken at the beach, in which fashionable women appear. It makes a very pleasing subject.

Renowned Pictures Corporation.

THE KAISER (Renowned Pictures Corporation).—A seven-reel subject, by Rupert Julian and E. J. Clawson. This is a study of the life of Germany's tyrant, both in private and public, in its relation to the present war. The scenes are said to be historically accurate and picture a strong, dramatic series of events in a commendable way. The picture is one that will give a better understanding of the "beast of Berlin" and strengthen the arm of the forces opposed to him in the present war. Reviewed at length in last week's issue.

Select Pictures Corp.

BY RIGHT OF PURCHASE (Select).—This five-part picture is another case of won at last. THE ANSWER, March 17.—A seven-part feature on the regular program, the story deals with a social question. Alma Rubens is the principal player. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

FAITH ENDURIN', March 17.—A splendid western story with Roy Stewart in a most likable and human characterization. In five parts. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

Universal Film Mfg. Company.

CURRENT EVENTS NO. 43 (Universal), March 1.—War topics of interest preponderate in this diversified number. British recruits leaving Chicago for the front, training American "Jack Tars," the war stamp campaign, military review in Chicago, and other subjects are included. The number closes with newspaper cartoons.

CURRENT EVENTS NO. 44 (Universal), March 8. First vote of a woman 102 years old, mayors of fifty cities organize to fight fires, the anti-U-boat campaign, scenes from the Franco-British front and cartoons from great newspapers are included in this entertaining number.

ANIMATED WEEKLY NO. 15 (Universal), March 13.—War scenes lead the interest in this topical number, which pictures a new steam gun that will fire 33,000 shots a minute. Ball playing by Pershing's men is another good feature. The number closes with cartoons by Hy Mayer.

THIEVES' GOLD (Universal Special), March 18.—A five-reel subject, based on a story by Frederick R. Bechdolt, featuring Harry Carey as "Cheyenne Harry." The number is a typical one of its kind and will please observers. The plot does not differ essentially from the average Western, but contains considerable action of a melodramatic sort. Molly Malone appears as the girl. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

NOTHING BUT NERVE (Nestor), March 25.—A comic number, by Tom Gilson, featuring Gale Henry and Milton Sims. The latter appear as a rough but well meaning married couple, who go to call on the husband's wealthy aunt. Some amusing scenes occur at the dinner table and elsewhere, but the aunt firmly decides to love them in spite of their odd ways. This is a characteristic and enjoyable subject of the type.

SHERLOCK AMBROSE (L-KO.), March 27.—A two-reel comic, featuring Mack Swain as an immigrant who is mistaken for a detective by the president of a school for girls. He finds a diamond ring lost by one of the girls and is duly rewarded. Some very funny spots crop up in this number, which is quite enjoyable.

DYNAMITE (Universal Special), March 30.—Episode No. 8 of "The Bull's Eye." Another stirring number, which witnesses Cody's escape from Sweeney's gang, after leaping from the moving train. A search for the murderer of Mr. Clayton is renewed. Later, after a gun fight between Cody's and Sweeney's men at the ranch house, Cody surrenders in order to save Cora from peril. The scenic effects in this are very pleasing and the action exciting.

THE MYSTERY SHIP (Universal Special), March 30.—This is the 18th and final episode of this highly interesting adventure serial. It pictures an aeroplane battle between the U. S. aviators and the spies, which is very well pictured. The Mystery Man is rescued from the debris of his ruined headquarters. The secret of his identity is made clear and brings the mystery to a logical and satisfying conclusion. Betty and Gaston bury their old feud and decide to marry.

World Pictures.

THE WAY OUT, March 25.—June Elvidge and Carlyle Blackwell are featured in this five-part photoplay, which tells the story of an international romance and is well played by the entire cast. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

"NANCY COMES HOME."

Triangle Presents a Comedy Drama of Everyday Life—Founded on B. D. Carber's Story—Scenario by Robert F. Hill. Photographed by Steve Norton—Directed by Jack Dillon—Released March 24.

Cast.

Mortimer Worthing.....George Pearce
Mrs. Mortimer Worthing...Myrtle Rishell
Nancy Worthing.....Myrtle Lind
Clavering Hayes.....Eugene Burr
Mrs. Jerry Ballou.....Anna Dodge
Jerry Ballou.....Percy Challenger
Phil Ballou.....Jack Gilbert
Stillson.....J. P. Wild

The Story: Upon the return of Nancy Worthing from private school she finds to her dismay that her parents are so busy socially that they cannot devote any time to her. Piqued, she decides to enter social life herself, and obtains money to secure the proper clothes by pawning some of her mother's jewels and an expensive coat. A shooting affray occurs at the restaurant where she has gone and her escort—her father's chauffeur—wrests the pistol from the hand of the assailant. He is suspected as a gunman and arrested. Arraigned on the shooting charge the chauffeur is found to have in his possession a girl's bag in which are two pawntickets. The robbery at the Worthing home is discovered, and just as the detectives are connecting the chauffeur with the crime Nancy confesses. It then develops that the chauffeur is the son of a prominent family, and the dilemma in which the two young people have been placed starts a romance which leads to happiness.

Feature These Players: Myrtle Lind as Nancy Worthing, Jack Gilbert as Phil Ballou.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Boarding School Life Filled Nancy's Pretty Head With Strange Notions.

Nancy's Ideas of a Wonderful Time Upset the Whole Family. Chauffeur Drives Millionaire Bride to His Own Wedding. Cabaret Life Nearly Cost Boarding School Girl Her Liberty. "Just for Fun" Nancy Robbed Herself, but Paid the Penalty. How Another Rich Girl Fell in Love With Her Father's Chauffeur. Young Millionaire, Disguised as Chauffeur, Wins Pretty Girl Bride.

Stunt Suggestions: The feature does not apply itself readily to stunts. A street wanderer, in automobile toggery, might carry a card on his back: "I'm the Chauffeur Who Drove a Millionaire's Daughter to My Own Wedding and Made Her My Happy Bride. It was a great adventure. See it in moving pictures at (name of theater and date)." When "Nancy Comes Home." Printed cards might be distributed: There will be a high time at the (theater and date) when "Nancy Comes Home." You better be there. Don't miss it.

Advertising Aids: One each one, three and six-sheets. Heralds in rotogravure. Lobby displays, 11x14 and 22x28. Slides. Electros and mats. Press sheet.

"NAUGHTY, NAUGHTY!"

Thomas H. Ince Presents Enid Bennett in a Comedy-Drama by C. Gardner Sullivan—A Paramount Picture Directed by Jerome Storm; Photographed by John Stumar—Released March 25.

Cast.

Roberta Miller.....Enid Bennett
Matthew Samps.....Earl Rodney
Prudence Sampson.....Marjorie Bennett
Judith Holmes.....Gloria Hope
Adam Miller.....Andrew Arbuckle

The Story: Roberta Miller returns from New York to her small-town home in the Middle West. She left a quaint ginghamed youngster and returned a smartly gowned, wise young person with three bulldogs. Roberta, much bored at the too-even tenor of her way in Lillyville—that's the name of Roberta's home town—decided to reform the place, to conform with her wishes rather than reform herself to conform to the town's wishes. A certain young man, her sweetheart and the editor of the local news sheet, was one of the strictest of the strict in the community, and Roberta's efforts to remodel him are funny. She succeeds and not only convinces the church people that they ought to sanction dances, but that they ought to provide them as a means of entertainment for their young people within their very gates.

Feature These Players: Enid Bennett as Roberta Miller, Earl Rodney as Matthew Sampson.

Program and Advertising Phrases: She Went Away in Ginghams and Came Back in Silk.

How "Near to Nature" Dancing Awakened a One-Horse Town.
How One Girl Rejuvenated an Old Fashioned Community.
Where Did the Church Deacon Get His Cocktails?
Just Because a Girl Wears Smart Gowns is She Naughty?
When Lillyville Saw the "Spring Dance" the Old Town Turned Over.
To the Pure All is Pure—Even "Next to Nothing" Stage Dancing.
High School Girl Graduates Dancing in Two Ounce Costumes Shock the Church Deacons.
Her Trip to New York Changed Her from Ginghams to Silk Attire.
Highlights of Breezy Comedy Reflecting Life in a Small Town.

Stunt Suggestions: Attach to ½ yard of chiffon a card reading: "Costume worn by High School Girls in the Spring Dance that Shocked a One Horse Town Into Realizing Its Own Shortcomings. One Incident in 'Naughty, Naughty!' at the (name of theater and date.)" Distribute these for window showings, etc. Hook up a display of light and airy dresses for your dry goods stores with window cards: "Smart Clothes Like These Reformed a Wicked Old Town When Worn by the Beautiful Girls in 'Naughty, Naughty!' (name of theater and date.)"

Advertising Aids: Two designs, each one, three and six-sheets. One 24-sheet. Rotogravure. Photos, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x29. Ten cuts each on star and production. Advertising layout mats. Slides. Press book.

"LA TOSCA."

Adolph Zukor Presents Pauline Frederick in Victorien Sardou's Masterpiece—Scenario by Charles E. Whittaker—Directed by Edward Jose—A Paramount Picture Released March 25.

Cast.

La Tosca.....Pauline Frederick
Baron Scarpia.....Frank Losee
Mario Cavaradossi.....Jules Raucourt
Cesare Angelotti.....Henry Hebert
Spoletti.....W. H. Forestelle

One of the most popular of all operas is Sardou's "La Tosca." It tells the story of the young singer who avenges her lover's torture and the insults to herself by stabbing old Baron Scarpia, chief of police, and then, finding that her lover has actually been shot in spite of a promise to the contrary, leaps to her death from the parapet of the castle of St. Angelo, Rome.

Feature: "The stage classic made famous by Sarah Bernhardt and Fanny Davenport faithfully portrayed by Pauline Frederick."

Program and Advertising Phrases: La Tosca: First a tragedy of the stage; next a grand opera and now the most gripping of all screen dramas.
Written by Victorien Sardou for Sarah Bernhardt. Made famous in America by Fanny Davenport. It will live for ever in Pauline Frederick's artistic screen portrayal.
Farrar, Fremstad, Cavalieri and Mary Garden made the Opera Famous in America. Pauline Frederick records the drama in lasting form.

Stunt Suggestions: Only the most dignified appeal should be made in behalf of this great work of the stage and screen. Possibly the most interesting adjunct would be a window display of rare candlesticks. Advertise for contributions to a "Loan Exhibition" of candle-sticks. Give credit on plainly lettered cards to those who contribute. Hook the display with a good story in the local papers. Street stunts are not to be considered.

Advertising Aids: Two designs each one, three and six-sheets. Rotogravure, Photos, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Ten cuts each of star and play, one to three columns wide. Advertising layout mats. Slides. Press book.

"INNOCENT'S PROGRESS."

Triangle Presents an Exciting Melodrama, Starring Pauline Starke, in the Vicissitudes of a Country Girl Who Ventures Into New York Life—Scenario by F. S. Beresford from Frances Quillan's Story—Directed by Frank Borzage; Photography by Pliny Horne—Released March 24.

Cast.

Tessa Fayne.....Pauline Starke
Madeline Carson.....Lillian West
Aunt Lottie.....Alice Knowland
Carey Larned.....Jack Livingston
Olin Humphreys.....Charles Dorian
Masters.....Graham Pette

The Story: Rebelling at the drab existence which she is living in a small New England village, Tessa Fayne leaves for New York to try and locate the actor, who, while playing in the village, fell in love with her. To her astonishment she discovers when she reaches the big city that her actor friend is married. Disheartened and with only a few cents in her possession she is wandering aimlessly about when attacked by a night prowler. Carey Larned, a wealthy clubman, comes to her rescue, and leaves her in the care of Mrs. Madeline Carson while he goes West to regain his health. A few years later Carson returns and is surprised to find that the waif he befriended has blossomed into a beautiful and charming woman. He falls in love with her and eventually they marry.

Feature These Players: Pauline Starke as Tessa Fayne, Jack Livingston as Carey Larned.

Program and Advertising Phrases: "Rags Are Royal Raiment When Worn for Virtue's Sake."
The Way to Happiness Through Struggles and Privation.
True Love Leads the Way to Happiness.
The Lights of Broadway Dazzled the Country Girl's Eyes.
Rural Innocence Lost in the Labyrinth of a Great City Finds Happiness.
Only a Country Girl, but Sound to the Core, She Won Her Fight.

Stunt Suggestions: Have cards printed for distribution. On one side the name of Arnold Fuller, Leading Man, No. 1015 West Forty-fifth street, New York, City. On the other: "This card led Tessie Fayne into the dangers of a great city. Her true heart and resolute will brought her victory and happiness. See 'Innocent's Progress' at the (theatre and date). Every girl in town should know all about Arnold Fuller and his ilk."

Advertising Aids: One design each one, three and six-sheets. Special process art heralds. Slides. Lobby displays, 11x14 and 22x28. Electros and mats. Photos. Triangle magazine. Press sheet.

"THE WHISPERING CHORUS."

Paramount Presents Cecil B. De Mille's Vivid Realization of Perley Poore Sheehan's Dramatic Story of the Same Title in the All-Story Magazine—Directed by Cecil B. De Mille—Released March 25.

Cast.

Jane Trimble.....Kathlyn Williams
John Trimble, her husband,
Raymond Hatton
George Coggeswell.....Elliott Dexter
John's mother.....Edythe Chapman
Charles Barden.....John Burton
Tom Burns.....Parkes Jones
F. P. Clumley.....Tully Marshall
Chief McFarland.....Guy Oliver
Stauberry.....W. H. Brown
Channing.....James Neill
Longshoreman.....Noah Beery
Mocking Face.....Gustav Seyffertitz
Evil Face.....Walter Lynch
Good Face.....Edna Me Cooper

Directed by Cecil B. De Mille.

The Story: John Trimble has committed a defalcation and drops from sight, even his wife being ignorant of his intention. To more fully cover his tracks he arranges that the mutilated body of a man shall be passed off as his own. Later he is arrested and put on trial as the murderer of himself, and is recognized by no one but his mother, who dies of shock, after begging him not to reveal his identity as his wife has married the Governor of the State and is about to become a mother. In his cell Trimble hears the whispering chorus of conscience and his mother's voice and goes steadfastly to his doom that his wife may not further suffer from the result of his misdeeds.

Feature These Players: Kathlyn Williams as the young wife. Raymond Hatton as the husband. Elliott Dexter as the Governor.

Program and Advertising Phrases: A story of wonderful strength made real by a mastercraftsman.
One of the stories of the year.
Goes to death for murder of himself.
Pays with death the debt of his deceptions.

Stunt Suggestions: This subject does not present any easily worked stunts. It would be better to make heavier use of one sheets for window work, using a street wagon with some such lettering as "Paid death penalty as murderer of himself to save his wife from further suffering. The fiction sensation realized upon the screen by Cecil B. DeMille in the Whispering Chorus. (House and date.)" Hammer on the same suggestion in the newspaper advertising.

Advertising Aids: Two each one, three and six-sheets. One 24-sheet. Lobby displays 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Cuts from one to three columns on star and production. Advertising layout mats. Slides. Press book.

"A DAUGHTER OF FRANCE."

William Fox Presents Virginia Pearson in a Story of Love and War Behind the German Lines That Differs from the Usual War Play—Directed by Edmund Lawrence—Released March 24.

Cast.

Louise de Ciron.....Virginia Pearson
Rudolph von Korr.....Hugh Thompson
Fritz von Meyring.....Herbert Evans
Father Joseph.....George Moss
Marie.....Ethel Kauffman
Paul de Ciron.....Anthony Merlo

The Story: Louise de Ciron refuses to leave her chateau when the Germans come and presently the enemy have occupied the town Rudolph von Korr, in command of the troops, makes love to Louise, but she repulses his advances. Fritz, a Frenchman, seeks to take advantage of Louise while she is unconscious and is discovered and killed by Rudolph. Believing that Fritz was killed in the defense of her honor, Louise wounds Rudolph, but nurses him back to health in remorse for her action. Louise's brother, Paul, sends for her and this leads to a most unexpected climax.

Feature These Players: Virginia Pearson as the patriotic French girl. Hugh Thompson as the German captain.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Romance just behind the trenches.
Defies an army and wins.
She hated the Hun, but she loved the man as he was.
She would not retreat and she would not surrender.

Stunt Suggestions: For window work make large French flags of colored paper, and letter across them "A Daughter of France. She defied the German army—and won. The different war play. (House and date.)" These may be used in connection with stills, if desired. For the lobby letter a sign. "Would you have the nerve to stand your ground and defy an invading army? Virginia Pearson did in A Daughter of France, and won the victory against odds. Here today."

Advertising Aids: Two designs each one, three and six-sheets. Lobby displays 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Slide. Mats and press book free.

"BREAKERS AHEAD."

B. A. Rolf Presents the Metro Drama of the Sea and Shore Starring Viola Dana—Story and Scenario by Charles J. Brabin and H. P. Keeler—Photographed by John Arnold—Directed by Charles J. Brabin—Released March 25.

Cast.

Ruth Bowman.....Viola Dana
Eric Pixley.....Clifford Bruce
Captain Scudd.....Russell Simpson
Jim Hawley.....Eugene Pallette
Hiram Hawley.....Sydney Deane
Aunt Agatha Pixley.....Mabel Van Buren
Mike Burley.....T. H. Gowland
Eliza, the nurse.....Lorena Foster
Agnes Bowman.....Helen Jerome Eddy

The Story: A child is born to Agnes Bowman, sweetheart of Captain Jabez Scudd, a sea-faring man, while he is away on a trip. Through a newspaper error the marriage of the sister of Agnes is made to read that Agnes is the one who was married, and this so upsets Jabez that he does not return. Agnes dies when her child, Ruth, is ten years old, and she is left in the care of her aunt, Agatha Pixley, relatives refusing to have anything to do with a nameless child.

Jabez comes to the little town of Sandwich where Aunt Pixley and Ruth live, and learns that Ruth is his own child, but keeps it a secret. Ruth is in love with Eric Pixley, and they plan to get married as soon as Eric has been made first mate. Jim and Hiram Hawley own "The Wasp," and they hire Scudd as captain and Eric as first mate. Scudd refuses to run the boat on the rocks in order that the owners might get the insurance, so they employ Mike Burley, an unscrupulous seaman. But Eric prevents the disaster, and when "The Wasp" arrives safe the Hawleys discharge Scudd and Eric. Scudd confesses to Ruth that he is her father and she supplies him with the necessary money to buy "The Wasp." Eric is made first mate. Ruth in putting out a fire started on "The Wasp" by Jim Hawley, a rejected suitor, is almost smothered by smoke when she is rescued by Eric and her father. Ruth and Eric plan an early wedding as the picture ends.

Feature: Viola Dana, Dainty Queen of the Screen.

Advertising and Program Phrases: A Romance of the Sea and Shore.

Love Endures Through All Opposition.
How a Girl's Bravery Stilled the Tongue of Scandal.
The Storm-Tossed Sea Gives Up Its Secret and Crime is Avenged.
Waves of the Ocean Wash Clean the Heart of Love's Victim.
Loving Unwisely Brings Happiness After Due Penance.
Human Nature Runs True to Form by Land and Sea.

Stunt Suggestions: It would be easier to hook up this feature with advertising stunts along the Coast or in the Lake region than inland. It is a sea story, hard to attach to stunts, away from the water. Viola Dana is a pretty girl, with lots of pictures for lobby display and newspaper work.

Advertising Aids: Two designs each one, three and six-sheets. Lobby sheet. Press sheet. Filler sheet. Ten minute novel for newspaper work. Slide. Herald. Lobby displays 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Cuts.

"THE HILLCREST MYSTERY."

Pathe Plays Present a Mystery Drama of Tense Interest, Starring Irene Castle, Produced by Astra Film Corp. Story and Scenario by Ouida Bergere. Directed by George Fitzmaurice. Released March 24.

Cast.

Marion Sterling .....Irene Castle
Her Father .....J. H. Gilmour
Gordon Brett .....Ralph Kellard
Hugo Smith .....Wyndham Standing

The Story: As his patriotic bit Thomas Sterling, wealthy manufacturer, decides to donate his immense plant for the duration of the war to increase ship building. At a birthday party the Sterlings are giving their daughter Marion, Gordon Brett, secretary to Mr. Sterling presses his suit for her hand, and is successful. Shortly after the affair has ended Mr. Sterling is found murdered. When Gordon returns to the Sterling home to place in the safe the necklace which Marion had given him during the party he encounters the policeman left guarding the body. He manages to get away from the officer, and Marion hides him in the attic. An investigation reveals that Mr. Sterling was killed by two German spies, employed by Hugo Smith, one of Mr. Sterling's partners, in order that the plant might be kept from being turned over to the government. Gordon goes to serve his country, promising to return to claim Marion as his bride at the end of the war.

Feature Irene Castle, Widow of the Heroic English Aviator, Who Lately Met His Death Instructing United States Students in Aviation. The reference to both Mrs. Castle and her dead husband should be dignified and in good taste that no offense may be given in advertising.

Advertising and Program Phrases: This feature was filmed long before the distressing accident in which Vernon Castle lost his life.

One of the Most Baffling Mystery Plots Ever Screened.
Disclosing the Intrigue and Villainy of the Kaiser's Spies.
How an American Girl Baffled and Defeated German Hirelings.
Killing a Viper Warmed on the Hearth of American Hospitality.
Love Triumphant Against Intrigue and Villainous Odds.
The Greatest Feature in Which Mrs. Castle Ever Starred.
More Tense and Interesting Than Any Adventure Serial.

Stunt Suggestions: Center curiosity in the German Spy System. Frame in the lobby newspaper clippings of secret service activities. If you can arrange a board showing different styles of handcuffs placard them: "Clamping These on the Wrists of German Spies Was the Last Act in Fathoming 'The Hillcrest Mystery.'"

Advertising Aids: One one-sheet, two three-sheets, one six-sheet and one 24-sheet. Lobby displays, 11x14, both sepia and in colors, and 22x28. Slide. One-column cuts. Campaign book.

"THE HOME TRAIL."

Vitagraph Presents Nell Shipman in a Stirring Romance of the Rugged West —Released March 25.

Cast.

Clara .....Nell Shipman
Tom Evans .....Alfred Whitman
Blackie .....Joe Rickson
Elsie .....Patricia Palmer
Higgins .....Hal Wilson
Sheriff .....S. E. Jennings

The Story: Tom Evans, range boss of the Double X outfit, wins Clara, a school teacher despite the opposition of Blackie, his partner, who schemes to part the pair. Evans is called away, and Blackie prevails upon Clara to leave with him. Their plans are suspected by Elsie, the storekeeper's daughter, who secretly loves Evans. She warns him. Evans overtakes the runaways at a roadhouse, when Blackie escapes, his revenge complete. Evans returns home—a deputy sheriff—to wait for his revenge. Clara, an outcast, becomes an inmate of the roadhouse, and waits also for her reckoning with the man who ruined her life. Months later Blackie, now a stage robber, returns, and Clara, pretending friendship, sets a trap, getting word to Evans. There is a pistol battle, and again Blackie escapes, leaving Clara dead by his own bullet. Evans pursues Blackie to the desert, overtakes him, takes his horse, and leaves him perish of thirst. Evans returns to find Elsie waiting for him, and together they start out on a new trail.

Feature Nell Shipman as Clara.
Alfred Whitman as Tom Evans.

Advertising and Program Phases: "Be It Ever so Humble There's No Place Like Home."

The "Yellow Streak" Runs Before Courage and Bravery.
Brave Men Restored by Banishing Vice and Evil.
Left Alone on the Desert to Die, with Sin to Torture Him.

Frail Woman and Fond Heart United in the Rugged West.
How One Woman's Ideal Lived Up to His Measure.
Brave Hearts and True United by the Courage of Forgiveness.
Following the Trail of Happines Blazed by Love and Sympathy.

Stunt Suggestions: The story does not lend itself to street advertising. Make good use of newspaper advertising and press work furnished by Vitagraph.

Advertising Aids: One design each one, three and six-sheets. Window cards. Lobby displays, 11x14 and 22x28. Heralds. Slides. Plan book. Press sheet.

"THE LIFE MASK."

Petrova Pictures Present Mme. Olga Petrova in "The Life Mask," by the Author of "To M. L. G." Scenario by Mrs. L. Case Russell. Directed by Frank Crane. Distributed by First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Cast.

Anita Courtland .....Mme. Olga Petrova
Captain Hugh Shannon...Thomas Holding
Woodruffe Clay .....Wyndham Standing
Mrs. Helen Courtland...Matilda Brundage
Sarah Harden .....Lucille LaVerne
Richard Courtland .....E. J. Burnes
Florence Robert .....Christine Mayo
Lady Mendel .....Edith Hinckle
Lady Kathleen .....Gene Burnell

The Story: Succumbing to her stepmother's importunings that she marry according to her wishes, Anita Courtland becomes the wife of Woodruffe Clay, to whom her mother is heavily in debt. Anita loves Captain Hugh Shannon of the Foreign Legion, who is to sail for France in a few days, and she writes a note to him, breaking the engagement. Anita's life is one of misery, and as a result she becomes addicted to the sleep-walking habit. One morning her husband is found dead, and Anita, believing that she committed the crime while in a trance, leaves with her nurse—Sarah—for Spain. There she meets Hugh, on a furlough, and their love for each other flames anew. But their happiness is marred by an article in an American newspaper, which states that Anita is suspected of having killed her husband, and that an investigation is under way. The notice comes to Lady Mendel, who is sojourning in Spain with her daughter Kathleen. Lady Mendel takes advantage of the opportunity to blight the happiness of Hugh, whom she could not inveigle into marrying her daughter, by informing the Spanish authorities of the whereabouts of Anita. Anita decides to sail for America and give herself up when Sarah, her nurse, confesses that she poisoned Clay, for she could not tolerate the treatment he accorded his wife. As the Spanish officers are approaching Sarah takes poison and dies, and Anita and Captain Hugh at last come into that happines which should have been theirs from the beginning.

Feature Mme. Olga Petrova, Star of Stage and Screen. The Most Beautiful Woman in American Theatricals.

Advertising and Program Phrases: Mme. Petrova's Greatest Screen Success is "The Life Mask."

Stirring Drama of Love and Intrigue, Wonderfully Acted.
Solace Comes to Wounded Hearts When Love Finally Triumphs.
Hearts Break When the Toll of Avarice is Paid.
A Daughter's Sacrifice to a Mother's Craving for Society.
The Face of Infamy Hidden Behind "The Life Mask."
Deceit and Avarice Revealed When the Mask is Torn Aside.

Stunt Suggestions: Black mask and cowl, letter in white ("The Life Mask"), worn by a street wanderer. On his back have a sign: "Mme. Petrova, in 'The Life Mask,' at the (theater and date)." Use plenty of Petrova's pictures for lobby display. She's a beautiful woman, who knows perfectly well how to best display her personal charms before the camera.

Advertising Aids: Two designs in one-sheets. One each in three, six and 24-sheets. Window cards. Heralds. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. One three-column cut. Three each one and two column cuts. Thumbnail cut. Slides in three designs. Heralds. Press sheet.

Simplex

We all make mistakes----sometimes

When we had designed the Simplex we were rather proud of the job. Naturally.

So we showed the Machine to our friends in the industry. And of course we enjoyed their favorable comments, for these encouraged us as to the future.

We had done our best, and hoped to be rewarded for our efforts.

But there was one man in particular, an expert, by the way, who discouraged us. Said he: "That Projector of yours is all right, but the trouble is that it's too good. The motion-picture industry is young and crude and won't appreciate as refined a Machine as this is."

We didn't believe him. We believed that a Machine so much better from a projection standpoint was bound to be preferred by the Exhibitor.

Well, we needn't tell you who was mistaken and who was right. The events of the last few years have proven two things:

(1) If the Simplex had not been better to start with, and if the industry had been satisfied with what was then considered best, we would never have succeeded.

(2) If the Simplex had not kept better, and if the industry had not wanted the better all the time, we wouldn't now be building more high-grade Projectors than any other manufacturer in the world.

The success of the Simplex proves that the best is wanted, and that it pays

"THE WAY OUT."

World-Pictures Presents Carlyle Blackwell and June Elvidge in "The Way Out," a Drama of International Incidents. Story By Jack O'Mara. Directed by George Kelson. Released March 25.

Cast.

Alice Thornton.....June Elvidge
Mrs. Thornton.....Kate Lester
Robert Barr.....Carlyle Blackwell
Count Louis de Jouiville.....John Bowers
Marcelle Pinet.....Muriel Ostriche
La Roche.....Jack Drumier
Claudine.....Marie Pagano

The Story: A love affair exists between Alice Thornton and Robert Barr, a successful young journalist; but Alice's mother has other plans in view for her daughter. She wishes Alice to marry a title, but Mrs. Thornton is too wise to openly oppose the match between the young people. She works in the dark to bring about an estrangement between them, and to do this she takes Alice with her on a trip to Europe. There Alice finally marries Count Louis de Jouiville, and the ensuing complications are many and extremely interesting. The big climax of the picture occurs on a French battlefield, where Count de Jouiville and Barr meet under strang circumstances.

Feature Carlyle Blackwell and June Elvidge.

Advertising and Program Phrases: Love That Awakened After Marriage.
Mother's Pride Intrigues Against Her Daughter's Happiness.
Jealousy and Hate Submerged on the French Battle Front.
She Learned to Love the Husband Whom She Married in Pique.
Blind Jealousy Vanishes When Love's Eyes Are Opened.
Cowards May Not Live in "No Man's Land."
The Strength of Courage is Real Test of Love.
Married in Haste to Rejoice at Leisure.

Stunt Suggestions: Play up in newspaper advertising the popularity of the stars. As this is the story ending on the western battle front use photogravures and prints, illustrating war scenes, to decorate the lobby. Street ballyhoos are not suited to the picture.

Advertising Aids: Two styles each one, three and six-sheets. Free advance poster. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Two-color heralds. One and two column cuts. Slides. Press sheet.

"A PAIR OF SIXES."

Essanay Presents Taylor Holmes in Edward Peple's Stage Hit. Directed by L. C. Windom. Released Through George Kleine System Around April 1.

Cast.

T. Boggs Johns.....Taylor Holmes
George Nettleton.....Robert Conness
Florence Cole.....Alice Mann
Mrs. Nettleton.....Edna Phillips Holmes
Thomas J. Vanderholt.....Cecil Owen
Coddles.....Maude Eburne
Krome.....C. E. Ashley
Applegate.....John Cossar
Tony Toler.....Byron Aldenn
Sally Parker.....Virginia Bowker
Jimmie.....Tommy Carey

The Story: A unique method was agreed upon by T. Boggs Johns and George Nettleton, proprietors of the Digestive Pile Manufacturing Company, to put a stop to their quarreling. The scheme was to play a game of poker, the loser to act as servant to the winner for a year. If either member of the agreement reveals the circumstances of the pact he shall pay a fine of $5,000. Boggs losses, and he has to serve as butler in the Nettleton home. Florence Cole, his sweetheart, comes to the Nettletons for dinner, and is surprised to see Boggs acting as butler, but cannot learn what has brought about the change in his social status. Thomas J. Vanderholt, an attorney, in love with Florence, lets her in on the pact and also tells her that he drew up the plans. She denounces him, and, together with Boggs, plans revenge on Nettleton. Boggs arranges intimate tableau with the wife of Nettleton. This so angers Nettleton that he schemes to make Boggs the loser financially; but Florence declares that the pact is not legal, having been based upon a game of poker.

The Story: Eileen Homer, seeking to escape from the clutches of an Italian who thought she had been sent from heaven to take the place of his little dead son, fell down the fire-escape to the ground, striking her head on a stone. The blow rendered her unconscious, and when she came to sometime later at the hospital she found bending over her the same dear lady she had met at her home, and who, in a dream, in which the lady appeared as a fairy, had lured Eileen to sleep walking and from her home. Eileen was a poor, motherless little girl, and it was because she was so very anxious to secure a dear, kind mother for herself that she had taken such a fancy to this lady. And then, following the accident and Eileen's recovery at the hospital, Eileen was overjoyed to find that this

"THE GIRL WHO WOULDN'T QUIT."

Universal Presents An Exciting Melodrama, Starring Louise Lovely. Story By James Olive Curwood; Scenario By Doris Schroeder; Directed By Edgar Jones. Released May 25.

Cast.

Roscoe Tracy.....Henry A. Barrows
Joan (First Period).....Louise Lovely
Joan (Second Period).....Louise Lovely
Joshua Siddons.....Mark Fenton
Robert Carter.....Charles H. Mailes
Stella Carter.....Gertrude Astor
Joe Morgan.....William Chester
Jim Younger.....Philo McCoullough

The Story: Through intrigue Roscoe Tracy, superintendent of the Banff Gold Mine, is sentenced on circumstantial evidence, on a charge of murder and robbery, to life imprisonment. In her extremity Joan, his daughter, who is but a child, goes to live with Robert Carter, who had been mine superintendent, but who had been deposed for neglect by Joshua Siddon, the owner. Years later the Carters move to the city and Joan accompanies them. Joan received an anonymous letter telling her of a chest containing a note that would be of interest to her father. Carter, knowing the import of the note referred to, schemes to keep Joan from securing the chest, and it falls into the hands of Jim Younger, a wealthy youth, at an auction sale. A chase for the mysterious box follows, and Joan gets to Jim's bungalow before it is opened. The house is suddenly surrounded by sailors, some of whom enter and take away the box. Joan informs Jim, and he and his men intercept the marauding sailors as they are about to place the box on a boat. Their leader is unmasked as Robert Carter, and when the note is read Joan learns that he and the telegraph operator at the mine had planned the murder and also the evidence that convicted her father.

Cast.

Thisbe Lorraine .....Bessie Barriscale
Le Saint Hammond.....George Fisher
Ernst Faber .....Edward Coxen
"Tea-Cup" Ann .....Aggie Herring

The Story: Thisbe Lorraine, a young American writer, has lost faith in life and love since being made the victim of deception at the hands of a man she had loved while studying art in Paris. She comes to America, and becomes known in Bohemian circles as a girl whose life is bubbling with the champagne effervescence of nocturnal New York. In refined society she is admired as a famous and popular author. Her dual personality is never suspected. At a bal masque she meets Le Saint Hammond, a serious-minded painter, who sees in her a wonderful vision of love, and she goes to his home. He is purely business-like, but she scorches his soul with her burning passion. During the entire evening, even when she is leaving, she refuses to remove her mask. Later, in the role of a famous author, she meets Hammond again. He does not recognize her. Both fall in love, but Thisbe, whose faith in love has been wrecked, is afraid to love him. The events that follow, her struggles with her soul and the tortures of one

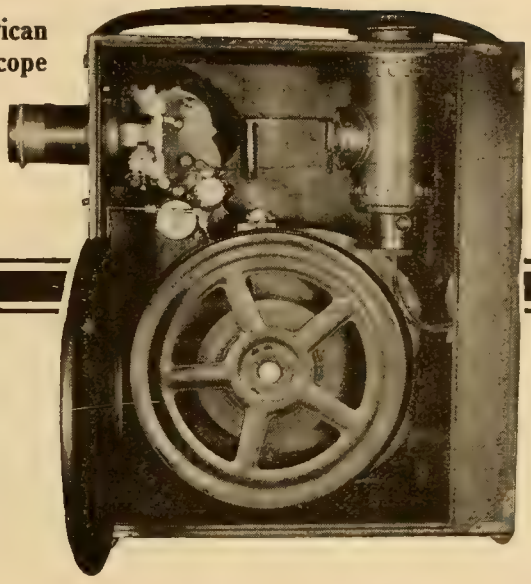
The American Projectoscope



Announcing

A New Portable Projecting Machine

For Showing Standard Sized Films

THIS announcement heralds the completion of a new and perfect portable motion picture projecting machine—the American Projectoscope. This new device is the result of more than three years of constant experimentation, improvement and refinement.

It takes standard sized film, and can be operated from any electric light socket (either direct or alternating current). It throws a perfect white light at a distance of five to fifty feet; permits the running of the film either backward or forward; will hold the film stationary on the screen like a stereopticon—without any adjustment. It weighs only 19 lbs.—you can take it anywhere. It will show films on any wall, shade or screen.

Built by Film Experts

The American Projectoscope was designed and constructed under the supervision of the technical experts of the American Film Co., Inc.—one of the oldest established film manufacturers.

It has undergone actual tests for more than a year and a half. More than a million feet of film have been projected through one American Projectoscope—without a break or tear.

It has received the highest endorsement from such a projection expert as Donald Bell, of Bell & Howell. Among the purchasers of this new portable motion picture projecting machine are:

G. Gennert, of New York City, Chicago and San Francisco.
Henry Disston & Sons, Philadelphia, Pa.
Hanson-Bellows, Co., Chicago
National War Council, San Antonio, Tex.
United States Naval Training Station, Great Lakes, Ill.
Square Turn Tractor Co., Norfolk, Neb.
A. B. Dick & Co. of Chicago—
And the British Navy.

Descriptive Booklet—Sent FREE

Write for descriptive booklet outlining the technical features of the American Projectoscope—showing how it can be operated either forward or backward; how the film can be held stationary on the screen and explaining its many other advantages.

Film manufacturers, executives, directors, stars, film editors, exhibitors, educational institutions, supply dealers, etc., are urged to write for a copy of this booklet. You should know about this remarkable new portable projecting machine and its numerous advantages. A copy of the booklet will be sent FREE on request.

Dealers and Jobbers: The American Projectoscope offers you an exceptional sales opportunity. Write at once for our DEALER'S PROPOSITION.

Film Companies will find the American Projectoscope especially valuable for use in executive offices—for showing the new prints as they arrive. Also for State Rights subjects, for cutting and editing. The outstanding feature of this machine for this work, is that the film can be held stationary on the screen at any point; and that the film can be turned either backward or forward, without adjustment.

Directors will find the American Projectoscope a great help in looking over the day's "shots;" in assembling, cutting and reviewing film. The film can be held stationary on the screen, thus permitting the checking of minute details.

Stars will find it pleasant to possess an American Projectoscope which they can operate themselves and use to inspect their own productions. It uses current from any electric light socket.

Film Editors will find the American Projectoscope of exceptional value in cutting and editing productions. You can stop the film anywhere and examine details. You can turn the film backward or forward, without adjustments.

Musicians can facilitate their work of writing music cues by the use of the American Projectoscope.

Educational Institutions will find the American Projectoscope valuable in class rooms. Educators will find this machine valuable in censoring films. It takes a full reel of standard size films and runs without interruption. IT REQUIRES NO APOLOGY.

Exhibitors will find the American Projectoscope valuable in examining films in their private offices, for cut-outs, etc., while their large projecting machines are in use.

Cast.

Bona.....Carmel Myers
Andrea.....Rex De Rosselli
Chico.....E. A. Warren
Frank Harris.....Kenneth Harlan
Mrs. Harris.....Katherine Kirkwood

The Story: Andrea Minghetti, through saving, has become proprietor of a large vineyard. He treats his niece, Bona, an orphan, cruelly, and makes her cook for the dozen Italian workmen he employs. Among them is Chico, the leader of a blackhand gang, whose business in Andrea's vineyard is to spy on Andrea. He determines also to get Bona as well as $10,000 of Andrea's cash. Frank Harris, a rich young man, on a dare, goes to work for Andrea at fifty cents a day. Bona's cooking appeals to him and he offers her a position in his mother's home, just as Chico springs his double demand on Andrea. When Bona learns that it is her cooking that Frank wants and not her she is much disappointed, for she thought that he loved her. Bona learns that she has inherited her uncle's fortune of $200,000, and Mrs. Harris is now anxious for her son to marry the young heiress. But Bona, who does not want to be married for her money, goes back to the vineyard where she finds incriminating letters from Chico. The police are informed, but Chico eludes them. Frank learns of Bona's whereabouts, and a fight with Chico wins for him the respect of the girl and the arrest of the blackhander. Then Andrea, who had played a trick on the blackhanders by going to Italy for a vacation until their demands had been forgotten, comes home and the murder case against the Italian falls flat.

"NEWMAN" Brass Frames and Rails
A FEW REASONS

why "NEWMAN" METAL FRAMES have been chosen by all the big circuits and best class of theatres.
1—Because the constant exposure to all sorts of weather conditions cannot affect "NEWMAN" NON-CORROSIVE METAL FRAMES.
2—Because of their richness in beauty and design, they liven the entrance and render the lobby more inviting than any other kind of frames.
3—Because they will outlast a dozen wood frames. They are practically un-wear-outable.

HEARST-PATHE NEWS NO. 21 (March 9).

Southampton, England.—First pictures of survivors of torpedoed transport Tuscania. Large crowds turn out to welcome the boys on arrival here.

Stockton, Cal.—Tanks have won great battles and tanks have won fame, but when this "monster" gets to the front—Oh! Heaven, have mercy! Subtitles: This one man landlubber could dance a jig in "No Man's Land." The adaptability of modern tractors is spectacularly demonstrated.

Seattle, Wash.—Arctic explorers have nothing on these adventurous hikers who braved the heavy snows high up in the Cascade Range.

Ashland, Me.—Wood for ships—for camps—wood for nearly all war operations, and lumbermen strive to meet the unusual demands. Subtitles: Cutting off the branches preparatory to removal. Portage Lake. The water is kept hot in winter by live steam to prepare the wood for the mill. Huge tractors facilitate the transportation of the cut logs.

London, England.—Not content with gaining equality with man in industrial life munition girls vie with him now in the field of sports.

New York City.—Did you pay your income tax? Booths are opened in all parts of the country to facilitate the filing of income tax schedules.

Universal Current Events.

ISSUE NO. 43 (March 1).

Recruits for British Army Leave Chicago for Camp.—Famous Canadian Kilties Band leads newly enlisted British subjects to Grant Park, where a "send-off" celebration is held prior to departure for training in Canada—Chicago, Ill.

Training "Jack Tars" to Man Our Merchant Marine.—The war will be won with ships, and while thousands labor day and night to build them these lads are being made ready to guide them—New York City.

84-Mile Gale Almost Blows Gotham Off Map.—Many killed and injured when terrific wind wrecks houses, capsizes wagons and whisks pedestrians about like straws—New York City.

Help Seal the Kaiser's Fate with War Stamps!—Vice-president Marshall, Champ Clark, speaker of the House of Representatives, and United States senators invest their quarters in Uncle Sam—Washington, D. C.

Boys of National Army Reviewed by Six Governors.—Chief executives of Illinois, New York, South Carolina, Arkansas, Minnesota and Iowa cheer troops from Camp Grant parading on the Municipal Pier—Chicago, Ill.

Tank Does Tango to Get Recruits for Uncle Sam—Like some prehistoric monster, the Britannia, veteran of many battles, ambles merrily about as star performer at recruiting rally.—New York City.

French Army in Italy Bags First Austrian Prisoners.—War-weary, hungry and dirty, 1,500 soldiers of the dual monarchy pass through collecting stations on the way to prison camps, to never again have opportunity to loot a village or wreck a church—Somewhere in Italy (Official French war film).

ISSUE NO. 44 (March 8).

Waits 100 years to cast her first vote. Mrs. Sally Gold, with 102 years to her credit, exercises the right of ballot in special Congressional elections at which women of the Empire City voted for the first time—New York City.

Mayors organize to prevent great fire losses. Carelessness and lack of preventive methods are largely blamed for more than $200,000,000 property loss in the United States during 1917.

Launch another unit in great anti-U-boat campaign. "War Mystery," the largest wooden steamship ever built, takes the water to serve the Allies in the British merchant marine—Somewhere in the U. S. A.

Franco-British shells shatter Hun trenches. Batteries manned by Tommies and Poilus at the point where the Anglo-French lines meet on the western front go into action to pave the way for an infantry attack—Official French War Film.

France honors dare-devil Foreign Legion. The Cross of the Legion of Honor is pinned to the standard of the famous regiment, an honor often sought but seldom received.

With our boys on the firing line (official U. S. War Film). Remarkable motion pictures of Pershing's lads in the front line trenches, the first ever shown in America, made by the War Department photographers under fire—Released by the Committee on Public Information through the American Red Cross.

WAR PRICES—Going Down
The well-known "Orpheum Collection" consists of melodramatic music almost exclusively, and is one of the best collections of agitatos, hurries, mysteriosos, short plaintives, etc., on the market. Particularly useful in serial pictures for bringing out the dramatic points. My last edition is printed from the same plates as the first, on a good quality of paper, and sells for these reduced prices: Piano (solo), 1st, 2d or 3d series, 35 cents each; Violin (1st, 2d or 3d series), 25 cents each; Cornet (1st, 2d or 3d series), 20 cents each; Flute, Clarinet, Trombone, Drums (1st or 2d series), 20 cents each.

Index to Reviews, Comments, and Advertising Aids on the Films

Appended is a list of subjects which have been released during the three months ending March 31, 1918, and upon the majority of which have been published reviews, comments, or advertising aids. This list is as accurate as it is possible to make it with the information that we have received from the companies whose productions are included. Should any of our readers detect errors, we shall be pleased to have our attention called to them so that we may correct our card index. The letter before the folio indicates the page where the review, comment, or advertising aids can be found. "R" stands for review; "C" for comment; and "A" for advertising aids. Where reference letter is omitted it signifies that none was published. Of the later releases where any or all reference letters are omitted it may be said that the missing information, or part of it, will probably be published in the next volume.

(N. B.—Comments or reviews of episodes of serials or series are indexed in connection with general title of such serial or series and not under title of each episode. Date shown for Pathe subjects indicates the week during which they were released. "S" indicates synopsis, publication of which has been discontinued.

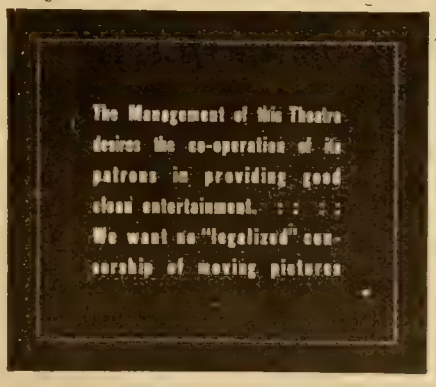
Educate Your Audience to Help Fight Censorship

Introducing a bill providing for the Censorship of Moving Pictures is a favorite indoor pastime in legislative halls throughout the country. Eternal vigilance is the price of the Exhibitor's mere safety if not his success.

Presented in the proper manner, the Censorship of Moving Pictures is just as obnoxious to the Exhibitor's audiences as it is to the Exhibitor. And public opinion aroused in behalf of moving pictures and against their unfair and discriminatory control is the surest weapon to defeat Censorship.



The Management of this Theatre
desires the co-operation of its patrons in providing good
clean entertainment.
We want no "legalized" censorship of moving pictures

We have prepared a series of nine different stereopticon slides which crystallize the argument against Censorship; one of the slides is shown herewith.

These slides shown repeatedly in any theatre cannot fail to influence public opinion in that locality against Censorship. They will line up the general public on the side of the Exhibitor.

You Ought to Be Showing Them Now! Legislatures Everywhere Are Convening

Set of Nine Slides, carefully packed, will be sent postpaid on receipt of $1.00

516 Fifth Avenue, New York City

WHY not address the moving picture exhibitor in the trade paper that he buys and reads? ¶You can print a sales message on a hand-bill and the arguments you offer why your goods should be bought will be just as strong in themselves as they could be printed in any other way. But the hand-bill has no standing in the eyes of the man that it reaches, and your sales message loses its punch because it is not received with an advance interest. ¶The MOVING PICTURE WORLD enjoys the highest standing as a medium for advertising in the moving picture trade. Born with the industry, it has progressed steadily with it, constantly playing fair with every person with whom it deals. As a result it has won the complete confidence of the trade. It is preeminently the publication that exhibitors buy and read. ¶It uses no reduced subscription bait to attract patronage. The MOVING PICTURE WORLD does not believe that exhibitors are interested in something cheap. Its aim has been to maintain the high quality of its service. The best available men in their lines conduct its various departments and "quality first" is the motto to which it subscribes.

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD

Is the One Sure Bet in the Moving Picture Trade Publication Field.
It is chockful of "Exhibitors' Helps" that Really Help
It Prints the News of the Industry----and its News Stories can be Relied Upon

"OVER THERE"

The dominant requirement in all things is EFFICIENCY; and to attain this means, in the highest degree, MERIT.

In France, Russia and Italy over 250 of our projectors are being utilized at the many bases of the Y. M. C. A.

Power's Cameragraphs are recognized as machines that stand the strain and give SERVICE; and over there, where the strenuous conditions demand STRENGTH as never before, they are faithfully
